But no one ever went around back quickly enough. They dawdled along looking over their shoulders while chauffeur and clerk unloaded the gaunt, reluctant frame from the car, held him upright like a doll, put his derby on his head where it sat at a crazy angle, then, one on either side, helped him up the walk. The children never went until they had seen his foot, jerking like a dancer's, negotiate the first step of his queer, lurching progress to the porch.

It was ironical, that question about Cynthia, coming just now. Amy realized that she had long had a sense of familiarity, when Joe began to grind his teeth and set his jaw, to bite the trim white mustache which made him look like a Man of Distinction, to fix his eyes in a piercing look of false sternness. Or was there a sameness about all drunkards who tried to look sober?

OFTEN Mr. Vernon had come home on foot. With moderate success he had kept from swaying and staggering. But his face! Try as he would to hold one fierce, noble expression, a host of others had flitted, like butterflies, across his features. He often stopped to talk to the little girls, and how extraordinarily funny he had seemed, until his loud, bright laughter became an unearthly sound with an existence independent of all humor and fun. Then the little girls scattered like leaves, scurrying from the changeling, no longer a father, but a stranger, as alien and queer as a gypsy. And inevitably, small boys, passing the Vernon house, remembered the unstrung, scarecrow walk. Without unkind intention, but with the child's natural translation of thought into motion, they had mocked his gait. Did children, Amy wondered, mock at Joe today?

"Poor Mr. Vernon," Amy's mother had said. "He's so often ill these days." So Cynnie came to play at Amy's where a child would not be frightened by a wild-eyed man slipping about the halls, mumbling in corners. When Amy was older, the illness was defined. "Cynnie's papa is a sad drunkard, but we must all keep it a secret from dear little Cynnie."

It is better to be a young June bug than an old bird of paradise. —MARK TWAIN.

Later, after Mr. Vernon had been carri to a drunkard's grave and the big house w gay again, there was the nameless cloud. C overheard whispers—too many mothers h ing their sons weren't really serious abo Cynnie.

Could it happen to her girls? Amy w dered, with a little shiver. Oh, no. Today p ple knew more about drinking. They didn believe it was inherited. In the old days th had waited for it to show up. They had g siped of bad blood behind Cynnie's back. it couldn't happen to Ruthie and Bet . . . a yet, that question, so terribly apt: "Wh ever became of Cynthia Vernon?"

AMY heard Olive's voice far off, while thoughts went on with Cynnie. Humiliat as this evening had been, it was serving a p pose, showing Amy a way. The harm to C nie had lain in the support of a myth. A must be strong and honest. She must talk Ruthie and Bet tomorrow . . . this week anyway, very soon. She would state the ca clearly, without excuses for Joe. Or might be better to wait until they asked her, shou some knowledge of Joe's state? Then quite calmly, "Why, daddy's just drunk, though it were a matter of course. Or that too bald? Better say, "Daddy's take little too much to drink. People do, you kn We're none of us perfect." Laugh it off, let them learn to face it honestly. Yes, remembrance of Cynnie showed her con sively that she must undo the harm alre done by her little lies—both to them an herself. She must teach them—it was a t nique, after all, like table manners—hov get on with Joe, what to expect. Now, w he began to slur his words, gesture, swag puff up, Amy would sit silent, outside family group. She knew that, afraid of lo control, she had tur into a granite-fa woman, cold and unlau ing, while Joe spread alcoholic warmth, his s timental palaver over young, leaving her Yes, in simple justice herself, the girls must be told the truth, m

But if they asked her how it had c about, what could she answer? Why ha happened so easily to so many of Joe's g eration? First there had been Prohibition everybody had drunk too much. That in their teens. By now the realists had ognized that with age their capacity diminished from tank to teacup, and fined themselves to an occasional bi But inevitably, a certain percentage of early drinkers were marooned—the bod the banquette, the foot on the brass rail, snatch of college song in the locker r Even now, in their late forties, one of t bits of flotsam might disappear—be away to take a cure, or join Alcoh Anonymous. But most of the flotsam on, too proud to admit they couldn't ha it, but never too proud to fall flat on faces. They lived in the Never-Never of unrelinquished youth. Curiously em rassing for their wives, Amy thought, marriage to a man twenty years one's ju

She turned her head and saw Joe la ously getting to his feet. His bones see loosely hinged, his joints unco-ordinated cept for the hand that held the glass. clutched it as though it were a life line h ing him in to the bar. As he stepped out, the ubiquitous, was at his side, taking glass, pushing him back into his seat.

"Excuse me," Amy said to Olive Ha "I want to talk to Biff about somethi She went into the dining room. "Pl Biff," she began, "Joe's had enough. Just get about the drink, won't you?"

He looked at her severely. "Who do think you are? His nanny?"

"Biff, if this were a bar, you wouldn't him another, and you know it."

"This is my house, and if a friend of wants a drink he can have it, see?"

Amy shrugged, and walked away. couldn't win. No one would help, ever.

She remembered the time Joe had tri cut down—not because he couldn't hand

(Continued on Page 134)

the delicate fragrance that makes you more enchanting

YARDLEY English Lavender

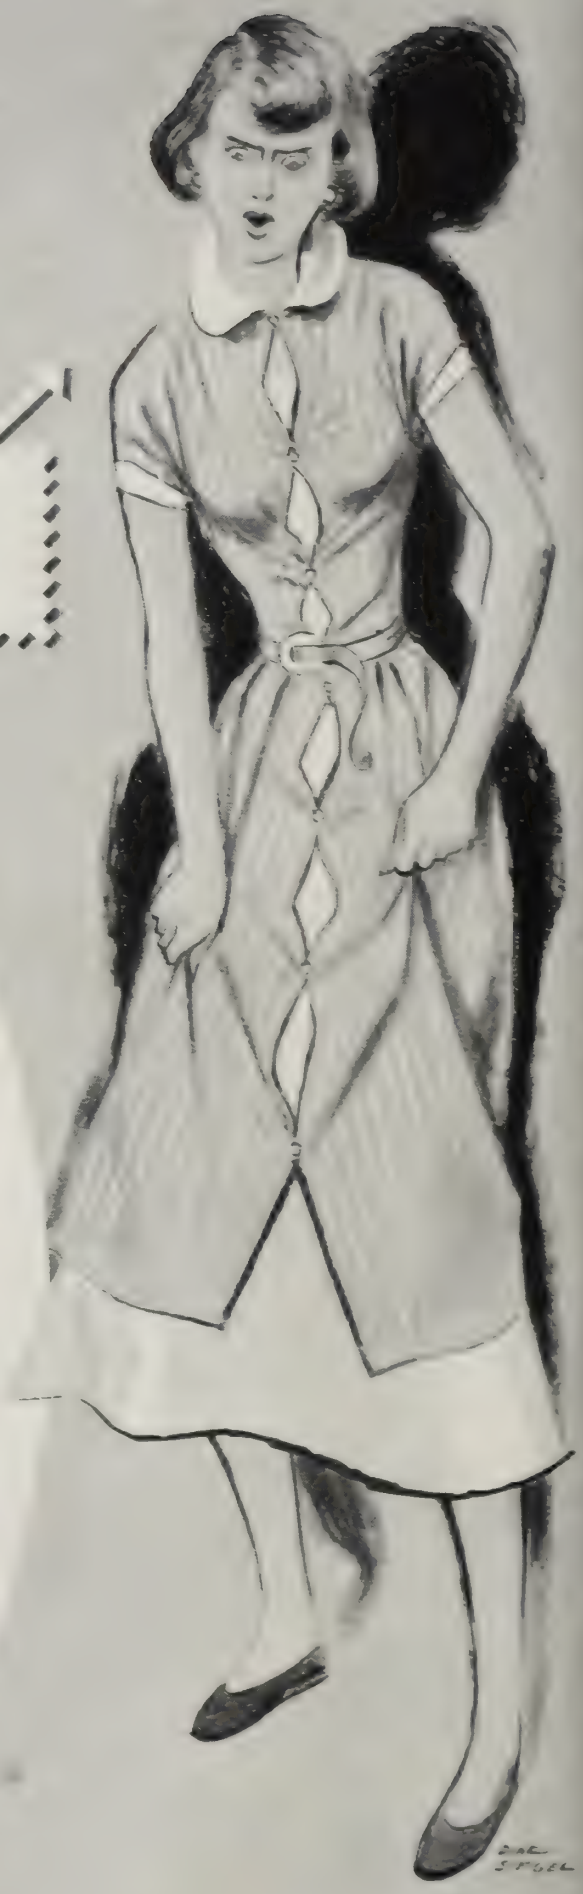
Yardley English Lavender, $5.75, $2.85, $1.75, plus tax



Yardley English Lavender Soap, 45c
Box of three tablets, $1.35

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

SUE INSISTED

MARY MISSED IT

Be sure you insist!

SUE, smart girl, saw a dress she liked. But before she bought it, she insisted on seeing the word "Sanforized" on the label. P.S. The good looks never shrank away.

MARY forgot to look for the "Sanforized" trade-mark. And her dress came out of the washtub with all its good looks shrunk away!

Make certain your cottons keep their fit through washing after washing. Insist on seeing the "Sanforized" trade-mark every time you buy.

The style will never shrink away from the dress with "Sanforized" on the label!

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE ⓡ MARK

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of the trade-mark "Sanforized" adopted by the Federal Trade Commission to identify fabrics which will not shrink more than 1% (warp and fabric) as measured by the Government test. Compliance with this test is required of all fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized."

(Continued from Page 130)

o, but because he had read an article ing it cost too much to get drunk. He had mined to set himself a limit, and he t actually refuse a drink the first time. he had only one "no" in him. Amy observed his alert, setter-on-the-point while he watched the next round being d and waited for the inevitable second ation, "Sure you won't change your ?" and the alacrity with which, like pty Dumpty, he tumbled off his wall. yone knew he was trying, but no one l help. It was a code: never take no for swer. It was a holdover from Prohi—he who didn't drink might criti-Get him drunk, too, or throw him out. ndly Amy crossed the room and, when a reached out and caught her arm, as ly sat down. It was Corinne Manley, g tall and cool and faintly superior, al-h her lovely face was delicately pressed reased with lines of anguish and disap-ment, her neck a little rigid from holding r pretty head. You can pick them out, thought, the drunkards' wives—the sour-expression, the disenchantment, the resig-of the dead.

ow's it going, dearie?" Corinne asked. h, I'm so bored!" Amy cried in a des-undertone. "I'm so bored! If I weren't ed to him I wouldn't go out with him on Can you imagine, Corinne, either of us g a date with them?" She looked around arry Manley and saw to her surprise he was perfectly sober. "I'm sorry, ne," she amended. "Harry looks all What happened?"

e's on the wagon," ne said in her cold, voice. "But it won't Remember the time himself on fire and himself to death? right abated—time, eat healer!"

njoy it while it lasts," aid.

I like to take the unity to get good rocked myself, but fundamentally ot immature enough to enjoy it any Do you hate yourself, Amy? I hate my-nd I hate Harry for maneuvering me is role—the patient Griselda, the for-g wife, the policewoman, picking up eces, wearing the pants. I'd like to be e myself for a change."

ff just asked me if I thought I was anny."

ff would. You ought to have seen him g it on Harry."

hat's got into Harry, Corinne? You finally get him to the psychiatrist, did rry? Don't be silly!" she exclaimed lly. "He'd rather take public treat-or VD than be seen going into a psy-ist's office. No. His first wife's in town. she lived here. She's the only living he'll stop drinking for—just to prove s wrong about him. He hates her very o. But for those he loves, or says he he dregs are good enough, every time."

enom, Amy thought, the hate, the ess of soul, the bad blood it all en-ed! It was written on their faces, too, nd Corinne's and the faces of all the freemasonry of drunkards' wives.

ast of air came from the Hunters' front nd a fresh-faced kid loped in, a little around the chin, all trussed up in his nner jacket. It was Ben Hunter, Biff's and the steady slave of Amy's Ruth. ighed with relief. Dancing class was Ruthie home. Give the child time to get to bed and fall asleep, and Amy get Joe home too. It had been easier hey were little, when bedtimes came Now she never knew whether they wake or not.

s Ben made his rounds and lingered to y about the dance. She tried to hold ere, to postpone the inevitable mo-hen he would seek out Joe. Ben wor-Joe. Joe had a way with boys, riding em, discussing hunting and fishing, never talking down. Joe held a grudge against Amy: she had never given him a son—another alibi for his drinking. She watched Ben cross the room to Joe, saw Joe bite his mustache fiercely as he drew himself to his feet. A fatuous smile lit up his face as he talked with Ben and Amy saw an expression of confusion appear on the boy's face. Then Joe made a wide, uncalculated gesture with his highball glass, catching a standing lamp. For a moment it teetered, then crashed, carrying Joe's glass and a small table with it.

THERE was a pin point of silence, and Amy put her hand to her throat and half rose. "Sit down, Amy." Corinne pulled her back. The silence merged into a staccato babble of conversation. There was a concerted movement of turning backs except in that small pool of disaster. Biff was there, crying heartily, "It's all right, Joe. Lamp's top-heavy. Always was." Unable to tear her eyes away, Amy saw Joe trying to get down on the floor to pick up the pieces. Halfway, he lost his balance and went sprawling. She could hear Ben's changing voice, saying, "Let me give you my arm, sir," and as he knelt beside Joe she could see the boy's face, shocked and a little hurt.

"I've got to get out of here," she whispered to Corinne. "Come with me, please." In Mabel's bedroom she looked at her devastated face in the mirror. "Oh, Corinne," she cried, "if it weren't for the children ——"

But she knew that was a lie. She'd stay to the bitter end. Why? Well, how else would she live, where would she go, what did women over forty do without their men? And she was tired, too tired ever to think about another marriage, too played out for another man to find her worth a passing smile.

"It's not the children, Amy," Corinne said. "You love the poor guy, that's why you stay. You're still thinking in terms of the Joe you married."

Corinne was right. She'd stay, always hoping, taking strength from any temporary respite, living along in her own hell, because she'd never be happy without Joe.

"I guess you're right. I guess we love them, Corinne. . . . What bad luck!"

"Not I, my girl," Corinne replied. "I don't care if Harry lives or dies. It's simple economics. He's led me a dog's life and I'm taking all I can get and sitting tight to cash in on that life insurance. Then watch me make up for it! Pull yourself together, Amy. Chin up. Make the gracious exit. Relax, dear!" Under the words the sarcasm lay heavy, for both of them, for all the battered sisterhood.

As Amy said her good nights everyone chattered too brightly, too casually, making allowances for Joe, saying, "What a guy!" as though he had been admirable. She thought her face would break, smiling.

The door closed on a chorus of good cheer and it was a relief to feel it solidly at her back, a wall between her and the running commentary. She could imagine the men saying, "If I were married to that sour face, I'd hit the bottle too." They never stopped to remember that her face hadn't been born that way. She shrugged. At least Corinne was there. Corinne would shut them up.

Biff drove the car under the porte-cochere. Joe swayed beside him with the car's motion, his hat slammed any old way on his head, like Mr. Vernon's.

"Just a little sleepy-bye, that's what he needs, Amy. Oh, no, fella, better let Amy drive," as Joe attempted to lurch over behind the wheel.

"Biff," she said, "I'm sunk about your boy seeing Joe this way. Fix it up with Ben, will you?"

"Ben?" Biff chuckled. "Amy, what's the matter with you? Ben's seen the crowd on a Saturday night. He won't think a thing about it."

Oh, won't he? she thought as she drove away. You fool! You don't even know your own kid. I saw his face. You didn't. It had done something to Ben, seeing Joe that way,

(Continued on Page 135)

If a man really loves a woman, of course, he wouldn't marry her for the world if he were not quite sure that he was the best person she could by any possibility marry. —OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES: The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table.

Chap-proof* your hands with TRUSHAY

BRIGHT, BRIGHT red for a tiny hat? It's fashion genius with a soft blue spring dress! But red chapped hands? It's fashion suicide! And so needless, now!

Even if you do dishes or brave wintry winds, you can keep your hands smooth and lovely with different Trushay.

For Trushay has a unique "beforehand" extra that guards against chapping. Yes, you can use Trushay two wonderful ways!

To soften and smooth. Just a few drops make your hands feel like satin! Use fragrant, creamy-rich Trushay any time.

To chap-proof. Smooth on Trushay before doing dishes, light laundry, or before going outdoors. As long as Trushay is on your hands, they're protected against water chap and weather chap!

For evening-soft hands all day long... begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

The lotion with the "beforehand" extra!

* Applied before exposure to hot, soapy water—or wind and weather—Trushay protects hands against the red, rough, dried-out condition known as chapping. When soap-and-water tasks are prolonged—or weather is severe—renew application at more frequent intervals.

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

BRECK PREPARATIONS GIVE YOUR HAI
CLEAN, FRAGRANT, AND LUSTROUS BEAUT

If your hair receives a professional Breck Treatment in a Beauty Shop, a Br
Hair Cream is used first – then a Breck Shampoo – and finally a Breck Hair Loti
To supplement this professional care, use a Breck Hair Cream, a Breck Shamp and a Breck Hair Lotion in your home. Breck Hair Creams, Shampoos, and H
Lotions have helped many men and women improve the appearance of their ha

Whenever you buy a shampoo or other preparation for the care of your hair, mention whether your h is dry, oily, or normal and you will be given the correct Breck Preparation for your hair condit

JOHN H. BRECK, INC. · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3, MASSACHUSET
CANADIAN ADDRESS 110 SLATER STREET · OTTAW

(Continued from Page 133)

g to set Joe on his feet, as though he a baby or a retarded child.

e was mumbling something out of the of his mouth. "What is it, Joe?" She led to herself like a trained nurse on a of half-wits, speaking clearly and dis- y.

e answer came from stiff, inarticulate 'Specting you to drink—nothing t' eat o'clock. What's ma'er 'th Mabel?"

wanted to shout a retort, but held her ompressed while an angry monologue ts staccato fury against her inward self, g him, reviling him, angry, contemptu- nd a little insane. It's always someone fault. You know that none of them eat till nine. We have to, because I'm afraid, why. . . . Alibi, alibi! But nobody else that alibi, nobody else gets falling-down . The fishwife words poured on and on gh her mind. How long could one hold ier one's immortal soul against this con- battery of hate?

pulled the car into the garage and d it with a jerk. "Better stay here, Joe. here until I get the outside lights on." unlocked the side door and swept in of him. As though he were a paralytic bled his hat and coat off and wavered ainly toward the sideboard, fumbling e decanter.

," she cried. "No, Joe! There won't be ore. I can't stand it. Mortifying me in of everyone, falling down ——" She d the flow of words, pushed them un- und where they bubbled up, obscene, l, unchecked. "You'd better go up."

rew himself up and made a ham-actor's umbling at her. Only the last word was "Madam!" He spat hatefully, as he red into the hall.

e girls are asleep," ispered. "Try to be ie."

urned and gave her l, a queer, twisted n which hate and shifted and fought for dominance. e began his tortuous, difficult ascent staircase.

Vernons had to put in an elevator she was thinking. She raised her eyes picture—the wild horse galloping its s rider on and on through the forest. ldn't afford an elevator. She looked into rary, her mind rearranging it into a m. We could put in a bathroom over

Jo was slamming his feet down on the . "Sh-h!" Amy hissed so loudly that he tated and looked down at her. He had up the second flight when he stag- and one long arm went up to steady ainst the wall. His hand clutched at ture frame with a scrabbling sound. was a sudden splintering and crash as ture of Mazeppa fell and the glass ed at his feet. Stupidly he regarded the ge, then looked down at Amy. She t was coming, the excuse, and she t she couldn't possibly bear it.

"I mn plaster!" The words twisted out of ith. "Knew it wouldn't hold."

were frozen there, he looking down, king up, their eyes fixed, locked to- n a surge of hate and disappointment se and eddied from the murky under- of consciousness. Amy stood with her ightly clasped beneath her chin. The ight have cut him. She felt herself be- hake, icy cold creeping upward from t. Joe turned and wove his way up- he glass crushing and splintering be- is shoes.

sound of an opening door froze her lity. Over the bleakness of her face d to draw down the mask of ma- calm, as she heard Ruthie's mules ng along the hall. Swiftly Amy l the stairs.

ddy!" she heard Ruthie's sharp cry. was an edge of panic. "Are you reached the top step. Ruthie stood in f her father, hands knotted on her breast as Amy's had been a few minutes before, face twisted into the expectancy of disaster.

Joe sagged against the newel post. He made a wide, unarticulated gesture toward the stairs. "Mazeppa," he said. "Didn't like th' dam' thing anyway." The beginning of an unhinged laugh rippled from his throat.

Taking the cue, Amy produced her own bleak laugh. "That darned picture! I'll clear it up in the morning. It's late, honey." She put her arm around Ruthie. "Sorry it frightened you. Go to bed and I'll come tuck you in, in a second."

"But, daddy," Ruthie said, "are you sure it didn't cut you? You look so—so funny!"

JOE clung to the newel post, rocking slightly as though he were on shipboard.

"Daddy's all right, darling." Amy tried to laugh again. "It just startled him. Run along, now." Why didn't the child go, for heaven's sake? Amy took Joe's arm. If he'd only move! Three steps to his room . . . if he could make it without lurching. Miraculously he did, and behind the half-closed door Amy busied herself, speaking in a bright social voice, all for Ruthie. "I'll get you some hot milk, darling. Gosh, what a narrow escape!"

Ruthie was still hanging about outside the door. Amy put her arm around her and they started down the hall. "But, mum, is dad all right, really? He looks so pooped."

"Pooped" was a good word, Amy thought viciously. I'll tell her how pooped he really is.

She drew a long breath. "Ruthie," she said, "daddy isn't himself. He's ——" Here it was—but she couldn't say the word. The old words came tumbling out. "Darling, it's nothing serious, really, but he just doesn't feel well—bad color, you know. All the older lawyers pushed themselves so hard during the war. He needs a rest."

"I know, mum," Ruthie agreed, and in the sweet reasonableness of her voice Amy perceived with shock that Ruthie did know. "He hasn't seemed just right. I suppose it's the strain and all. Lots of men seem sort of jittery and tired these days."

"That's it—fatigue. When he overdoes he's apt to have these—well, sick spells."

They stood, chattering inanely, like two women at a reception, rolling and whipping, embroidering with words. As Ruthie slid into bed, Amy leaned down swiftly to kiss the younger girl good night. Thank goodness, Bettina had slept through it! Softly, Amy closed the door.

Joe was sprawled on the bed, half undressed, breathing noisily. Amy went into the bathroom and scrubbed at her teeth and face and hands as though to wash off any vestige of association with him. When she was ready for bed she tiptoed barefoot down to the girls' room. She put her ear to the door, to be sure, doubly sure, that this hadn't hit Ruthie too hard, to make certain there were no secret tears. If there were, she must go in and comfort her.

She heard a burble of voices, Bettina's asking and Ruthie's answering. "Go back to sleep, Bet. It's nothing. Poor old Joe's just come in stinking again and pulled the picture of Mazeppa off the wall, and Amy's got that sour face on. But we're going to pretend now that he's just sick. She used to call it nerves or tired, but now he's sick, see?" said the bitter little voice.

"But why?" Bettina demanded. "Why do we have to pretend, when everybody knows poor old Joe's just a stumblebum? It's no secret. Why does Amy care?"

"Because she loves the guy," Ruthie retorted scornfully. "Ever hear of love?"

"It sounds sappy to me," Bettina said. "If that's love, deliver me! But I still don't see why it makes her want to pretend he's sick."

"Ah, my child," Ruthie said loftily, "that's the older generation for you. It would kill Amy if she thought we knew."

"Yep, guess you're right." Bettina yawned. "They just can't face facts, can they?"

THE END

The more you speak of yourself, the more you are likely to lie.
—JOHANN GEORG ZIMMERMAN.

59¢-1.35
25¢ and 10¢

P.S. Test FRESH yourself at our expense. See if FRESH isn't more effective, creamier, smoother than any deodorant you've ever tried. Only FRESH can use the patented combination of amazing ingredients which gives you this safe, smooth cream that doesn't dry out . . . that really stops perspiration

PHOTOS BY STUART

Each dish looks so appetizing, set out in true smörgåsbord style, that you don't know where to begin, and you end having some of everything!

Conversation Piece

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

Four or five hostesses pool their efforts, with small labor, impressive results!

I'M told that the smörgåsbord custom originated in Sweden as a community enterprise: when people gathered for a party, each woman brought her own special masterpiece, and all the dishes were set out together for everybody's sampling. Why not revive the custom here? If four or five hostesses pool their efforts, a most impressive smörgåsbord will result without anybody's being overburdened with work. And with the recipes I'm going to suggest, you can invite one or two more couples who will contribute nothing but their appetites and admiration.

In planning a smörgåsbord, the problem is not what to include but where to stop including. The choice of dishes is practically limitless. Not so one's capacity—and the criterion of perfection is not in numbers, but in quality. For our smörgåsbord I've chosen hot, bland, sharp and sweet foods which in combination provide a well-balanced meal. Opulent, yes, but any smörgåsbord worthy of (Continued on Page 138)

2 pounds of fresh-picked peas in every can t's a lot of garden-fresh peas for r money.

you planted peas in your own gar-, hoed them, sprayed them, picked n at exactly the right time, after ut 60 days you might get about 2 nds of peas from each 8 to 10 feet ow. You'd still have to shell and them.

Two pounds of fresh-picked peas sounds like big money's worth. But that's not the half of it. Green Giant Brand peas are grown from special seed and are "picked and packed at the fleeting moment of perfect flavor," when they're at their sweet and tender best.

Look to the Green Giant for something extra in eating pleasure.

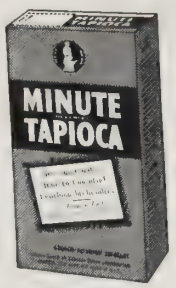
Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

Green Giant BRAND Peas

"Green Giant" and "Niblets" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © MVCCo.

sota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. Also packers of Niblets Brand whole kernel corn.

THE WORKS WITHOUT THE WORK!



(IT'S REAL MINUTE TAPIOCA—FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS)

CHEERY CHERRY TAPIOCA

½ cup sugar
3 tablespoons Minute Tapioca
¼ teaspoon salt
2½ cups cherry juice and water
1½ cups drained canned or quick-frozen pitted red sour cherries

Combine sugar, Minute Tapioca, salt, and cherry juice and water in saucepan. Place over medium heat and cook until mixture comes to a full boil, stirring constantly. Cool, stirring occasionally. Add cherries. Chill. Turn into sherbet glasses and serve plain or with whipped cream. Makes 6 servings. No ordinary dessert, this! It's a glorious concoction! Bound to bring compliments and huzzahs for the clever cook who makes it! And for all its luscious goodness — what could be quicker and easier to fix? Like all your wonderful Minute Tapioca desserts, it's mighty thrifty, too!

Memo to Brides! If you're a kitchen recruit—you may never have used real, genuine Minute Tapioca! (It was not available during the war years.) So get a box today! Minute Tapioca is the expert's answer to easy-quick wonder desserts—omelets and soufflés that don't fall—juicy meat loaves that slice like a dream and scores of other problem dishes!

A product of General Foods

FREE! WONDERFUL NEW RECIPE BOOK

MINUTE TAPIOCA, Department S, Battle Creek, Michigan

Please send me a FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca," containing over 50 recipes for creamy desserts—juicy fruit pies that don't run—fluffy omelets and soufflés—tender meat loaves that slice without crumbling—rich soups, stews, etc.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Offer expires Oct. 1, 1949. Good only in U. S. A. L39

HIP-O-LITE

The ORIGINAL Marshmallow Creme

Perfect Icing for Layer Cakes!

Also makes wonderful meringues and candies, and delightful marshmallow sauce for sundaes, gelatine, fruits, puddings. Grand substitute for whipped cream. Needs no melting. Ready to use. Stays fresh and creamy. FREE Recipe Book of deliciously "different" desserts. Write Hip-O-Lite, Dept. 449, St. Louis, Mo.

44th YEAR

Sell EVERYDAY CARDS

Have a BIG, EXTRA INCOME!

Just show stunning Everyday Assortments of Birthday, Get-Well, other Greeting Cards. Box of 14 charming folders sells on sight for you $1.00. As much as 50¢ per box is yours to keep! Other money-makers include Gift Wrap, Stationery, Name Imprinted Personal Notes. Send for SAMPLES ON APPROVAL TODAY!

PHILLIPS CARD CO., 542 Hunt St., Newton, Mass.

Get Samples on Approval

Be Sure it's a DAZEY

Form a DAZEY CHAIN of kitchen products

• CAN OPENER • KNIFE SHARPENER • JUICER
• ICE CRUSHER • BLEND-R-MIX • NUT CRACKER

(Continued from Page 136)

the name must be something of a spread, and this is really quite modest. It's a home version of the smörgåsbord one encounters in the better Swedish restaurants.

There will be three hot dishes—Swedish meat rolls, baked marrowfat beans and a casserole of salmon and oysters. I'd like to go into a description of these dishes as I list them, but I'd better step right along at a lively pace and save room for the recipes. For a cold, bland meat there will be jellied veal loaf with a garnish of radish roses and cucumber slices. The veal tastes like chicken—but I said I wasn't going to talk at this point and I'd better stick to that program. A big bowl of herring salad—indispensable—will be flanked by smaller dishes of stuffed eggs anchovy, pickled string beans with onion rings, shrimp vinaigrette and cheese. These five dishes take care of the salad and hors-d'oeuvre departments.

We must have fruit on our board, and a mold of pineapple, cranberries and apples will be just right. There will be sour cream to eat with it—the combination of fruit and sour cream is something I can't resist. For bread we'll have thin sandwiches of rye or pumpernickel and toasted rye wafers.

No smörgåsbord would be complete without at least one pastry, and I've held myself down to one, but it's a beauty—a Swedish tea ring as full as it will hold of candied fruit and nuts. This is not a real dessert, but it's dessert*ish*—and I think that's the right touch. A sweet, gooey dessert would be entirely too much.

Every item on this menu can be prepared in advance, and the hot food can be reheated at the scene of the party while the cold food is being arranged on serving platters. If there's food left over, it will keep beautifully. I like to have more than enough, in case people are extra hungry, but I don't like to waste a bite.

SWEDISH MEAT ROLLS

For the rolls you will need 3 round steaks cut ¼ inch thick, ½ pound lean pork and ½ pound veal ground together three times, and ⅔ pound salt pork in the piece. Lay steaks on a board, cut off fat, cover with heavy paper and pound them until they are as thin as they possibly can be without tearing. Cut steaks into strips about 2 inches wide and 5 inches long.

Put ground veal and pork into a bowl with 1 egg, 3 tablespoons chopped parsley, ½ clove garlic, minced, 1 tablespoon minced onion, 3 tablespoons bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon cream, 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper. Work with wooden spoon or your hands until mixture is blended and has a sticky consistency.

Remove rind from salt pork and cut into sticks about 4 inches long and ⅓ inch square. Spread slabs of steak with a layer of ground-meat mixture and place a stick of salt pork across each one, letting the ends of the salt pork project evenly beyond the sides of the steak slabs. Now roll firmly and fasten with toothpicks. Sprinkle rolls lightly with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Melt some butter or margarine in a skillet, add rolls and cook them to a rich golden brown.

Transfer rolls to a casserole, put a little more butter or margarine in the skillet and add ½ to 1 pound sliced fresh mushrooms. Cover, sauté 5 minutes and add 2½ cups consommé. Use canned consommé or make it with bouillon powder, cubes, or meat paste and water. Dissolve 5 tablespoons cornstarch in 1 cup cold top milk, add this to contents of skillet and stir constantly until thick and boiling. Add 1 tablespoon catchup and salt and pepper to taste. Pour this sauce over meat rolls, cover and bake in moderate oven, 350° F., until tender—about 1¼ hours. The meat will be very tender and the salt pork will help to keep it juicy.

The raw rolls can be prepared ahead of time and baked at your convenience, or the whole job can be done in advance ready for reheating. If there are any meat rolls left over, serve them the next day with rice or noodles.

BAKED BEANS

Soak 1½ pounds dried marrowfat beans overnight in cold water. Use pea beans instead, if you like them better, but I think

Best new food idea in years!

Delicious beef gravy in cans . . . ready-to-serve

Delicious brown beef gravy, all ready to serve, in cans! As good as any you ever made in your own roasting pan.

Meat, bread, potatoes, left-overs, economy foods . . . all taste better and look better with plenty of good rich gravy!

No mixing, no stirring! Just open, heat and pour. Keep a few cans handy. Costs pennies to serve . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

A LIFE-SAVER FOR MEAL PLANNERS

- Adds taste and glamour to economy foods
- Livens up left-overs
- Enriches slim meals
- Wonderful on bread for children's snacks

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

One of the famous Franco-American "Meal Makers" Spaghetti • Macaroni • Beef Gravy

Earn a

SINGING TEA KETTLE

THIS KETTLE is made of solid copper with sparkling chromium finish. The natural-finish copper bottom heats quickly and efficiently—2½ quarts capacity—and you won't burn your fingers on the cool bakelite handle. It's yours, if you send us two 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions, sold at the full U.S. price, $5.00 each, to persons living outside your own home. Your own or your personal gift subscriptions will not count.

We cannot accept cash orders for kettle. This offer good in U.S. only, until May 31, 1949.

Send names and addresses of subscribers, together with your name and address and remittance to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
842 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5

Made of really fine ingredients . . . seasoned to perfection . . . Kitchen Fresh at your grocer's.

IT'S AMERICA'S FAVORITE!

OTE: Do you like a touch of onion and gar-? Then get Miracle French by Kraft.

HASKO TRAYS

Add Joy to Days

hen good friends get together
th Trays and Tumblers win high praise... d Cheer in any weather.

ve time! Save work! Ease serving chores
d sparkle, smartness, zest!
Department, Gift or Jewelry Stores
ich feature but the best.

h HASKO Trays and Tumblers (with igns to match) are beautifully gift pack-d for getting or giving. Sold individually n combination sets.

SKELITE MANUFACTURING CORP.
pt. 120, 135 S. La Salle St., Chicago 3, Ill.

Hasko TRAYS AND ACCESSORIES

the big marrowfats are nice for a change. Drain off water in which they were soaked, cover with plenty of cold water and heat slowly to boiling point. Lower heat to simmer and cook, uncovered, until skins of beans will crack when you blow on them. After this stage is reached, cook 15 minutes more for luck.

Have ready 1 cup chopped sweet pepper, mixed green and red, if you can get the red, ½ cup chopped onion and ½ pound sliced bacon, the slices cut in half. Mix together ¼ cup dark molasses, ½ cup catchup, 1 teaspoon dry mustard, ⅓ cup light brown sugar, 2 cloves garlic, minced, 2 teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper and 2 cups boiling water.

Fill pot or casserole ¼ full of beans and cover with about ¼ of the chopped peppers, onions and bacon slices. Repeat these layers until pot is full, topping with bacon slices. Pour in molasses mixture and add enough boiling water to cover beans. Put on lid and bake in a slow oven, 250°F., until beans are tender—about 8 hours. During cooking add boiling water if beans become dry. Bake them the day before if you like; I think they improve with standing. Reheat in oven or in a pan of boiling water on top of range.

SALMON-AND-OYSTER CASSEROLE

Get 2 salmon steaks weighing about ¾ pound each, and 2 dozen oysters. (If fresh or frozen salmon isn't available, substitute a 1-pound can of red salmon.) Remove bones and skin from salmon and cut steaks into large bite-size pieces. Heat 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a skillet, add salmon chunks and sauté 5 minutes. Turn occasionally with a pancake turner, being careful not to break the chunks. Transfer salmon to casserole. I like to use a shallow casserole for this. Pick over oysters to be sure there are no bits of shell in them and drain in colander. Put a little more butter or margarine in skillet, add oysters and cook until their edges curl. Using a slotted spoon so that the juice will drain off, transfer oysters to casserole, alternating them with the pieces of salmon. Save juice in skillet to add to sauce.

In a saucepan melt 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, remove from heat, add 6 tablespoons flour and mix to a smooth paste. Stir in 2 cups milk, juice from skillet, ¼ pound American Cheddar cheese cut into small pieces, 1 teaspoon dried chervil, ½ teaspoon dried sweet basil, ½ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon lemon juice and 1 teaspoon gourmet powder or other Chinese seasoning powder if you have it. Cook in double boiler or over direct heat, stirring constantly, until sauce is thick and smooth. If you like, ½ cup sherry may be substituted for ½ cup of the milk. Taste for seasoning, especially salt, and add more if needed. Pour sauce into casserole. Don't stir, but take a knife and gently lift the pieces of salmon and the oysters so that the sauce will run down between them and be evenly distributed. Sprinkle 2 or 3 tablespoons grated cheese over the top.

This much can be done in advance. Half an hour before serving put the casserole in a moderate, 350°F., oven. Just before serving put under broiler for a couple of minutes to brown the top. Garnish with parsley and eat with delight. I've served this same mixture in scallop shells as the first course of a dinner. If you try that sometime, and I do recommend it, sprinkle the filled shells with a good coating of bread crumbs and dot with butter or margarine before baking.

> No man expects a great deal from marriage. He is quite satisfied if his wife is a good cook, a good valet, an attentive audience, and a patient nurse. —ANON.

HERRING SALAD

Get 2 salt herrings, remove heads, clean and soak in cold water at least 5 hours, and longer if they are very salty. Skin fillets and cut into small pieces. Put herring in a bowl with 2½ cups cubed cooked or canned beets, 1 cup cold boiled potatoes, diced, 1 cup finely chopped onions, 1 cup cubed raw apples and ½ cup pickled sweet gherkins cut into thin slices. Add 5 tablespoons to a thrifty KARO "meal-in-a-dish"

YEP . . . it's very easy to turn a modest ham cut into a glamor meal . . . the ham, sweet 'taters and apple rings take on a wondrous glaze with KARO, (see recipe below) . . . it makes 'em look as rich and appetizing as they really are . . . with the delicious flavor that only KARO gives to good foods.
Use KARO Blue Label or the maple-like Green Label...either one adds "the tempting touch." Just try it once, Folks . . . and you'll serve it often.

THE KARO KID

FREE! A brand new edition of 'KARO Kookery' ...new and unique recipes...up-to-the-minute ways to help you make many delicious dishes with KARO. Just mail a post card to KARO, Department F, Box 1542, Trenton, New Jersey.

BAKED HAM DINNER

2 to 2½ pound smoked shoulder butt or tenderloin
Whole cloves
1 cup KARO Syrup, Blue or Green Label
½ cup water
2 tablespoons vinegar
2 medium red apples
4 medium-cooked sweet potatoes

Stud ham with cloves and place in large shallow baking dish. Combine KARO Syrup, water and vinegar, pour over ham. Bake uncovered in slow oven (325°F.) 1 hour, basting frequently. Core apples and cut into rings, ¾ inch thick. Place apples and sweet potatoes in baking dish. Continue baking 30 to 45 minutes, basting frequently.

Note: Follow above recipe for slice of ham 1-inch thick. If a half or whole smoked ham is used, cook according to label directions. One to 1½ hours before ham is done, proceed as in above recipe.

KARO is available in 1½, 5 & 10 lb. sizes.

KARO is a registered trade-mark of the Corn Products Refining Co., New York, N. Y

Try these Heinz Recipes for Thrifty Meatless Meals

You eat better as well as spend less when you serve these delicious, well-balanced Lenten dishes made from money-saving, home-tasting Heinz Soups.

SAVORY BAKED LIMA BEANS

● Combine one 11-oz. tin of Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup, undiluted, 2 Tbs. minced onion, 4 cups cooked lima beans, drained (or 1½ cups dry lima beans), and salt and pepper to taste. Place in casserole. Sprinkle top with buttered bread crumbs. Top with onion rings, if desired. Bake 45 min. in moderate oven (350° F.). Serves 6. Here's a nourishing dish that costs little!

SCALLOPED MUSHROOM POTATOES

● Combine contents of a tin of Heinz Cream of Mushroom Soup, undiluted, ⅛ tsp. pepper and ½ cup milk. Pare and thinly slice 6 medium potatoes. Arrange in layers in casserole, with soup combination between layers. Cover. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 50 min. Remove cover. Bake until the potatoes are a tempting brown. Serves 6.

Taste the WONDERFUL DIFFERENCE in Heinz Soups 57

Rich Heinz Soups—perfect Lenten mainstays by themselves—make wonderful backgrounds for meatless casseroles! Cooked the old home way, these thrifty soups are rich with homespun flavors! Buy your favorite Heinz Soups today!

vinegar, 5 tablespoons salad oil, 1 teaspoon prepared horse-radish, 1½ tablespoons sugar, ½ teaspoon pepper and 1 scant teaspoon salt. Toss with two forks until well mixed and taste for seasoning. You may need more salt—that depends on the saltiness of your herring. Make salad at least the morning of the party if not the day before.

To serve, make a high mound of the salad in the center of a bowl or plate and garnish with a circle of thinly sliced hard-cooked eggs and a border of small lettuce leaves.

PICKLED STRING BEANS

I'll give you the recipe for a small quantity, but I hope you'll remember it this summer when beans will be plentiful and inexpensive, if not growing in overwhelming abundance in your own vegetable garden.

Boil together for 10 minutes 1½ cups vinegar, 1 cup water, 1 cup sugar, 1 tablespoon mustard seed, 1 teaspoon peppercorns, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 cinnamon stick and 2 cloves garlic cut into small pieces. Strain and keep hot. Remove ends from 2 pounds string beans, cover with boiling water and boil until slightly underdone. Drain beans well and while they are still hot pour the hot vinegar mixture over them. Seal in jars, or, if they are to be used soon, store in refrigerator. They should stand at least overnight before they are used.

To serve, drain beans and arrange them in a dish with plenty of small onion rings.

STUFFED-EGGS ANCHOVY

Hard-cook 9 eggs; chill thoroughly in cold water and peel. Using a sharp-pointed knife, cut a circle of small connecting V's around the center of each egg, being sure to cut all the way through the white. Hold the ends of the eggs, twist gently, pull halves apart and remove yolks. Mash yolks with a fork, add ⅛ pound soft butter or margarine, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 1 teaspoon sugar, ⅛ teaspoon cayenne pepper and 8 anchovy fillets, minced fine. Stir and beat until very smooth, roll into balls and put one in the center of each egg-white cup. Sprinkle yolks with paprika. The stuffed eggs look faintly like water lilies—anyhow, they're pretty. To serve, arrange in a bowl and garnish with water cress.

CHEESE

Gruyère and Swiss cheeses make a good combination. Fortunately for me, I don't have to tell you how to make them, but I'll suggest an arrangement. Remove rinds from very thin slices of Swiss cheese, put slices on a damp towel and cover with another damp towel. Let them stand a few minutes to absorb moisture and roll each slice into a small cylinder. Cut several wedges of Gruyère cheese into 3 or 4 pie-shaped pieces each. Arrange them in a circle, points out, and stand the rolls of Swiss cheese upright in the center.

SHRIMP VINAIGRETTE

Wash 1 pound fresh shrimp and plunge them into boiling water to which some vinegar has been added. Boil 8 minutes. Drain and remove shells and veins. Precooked frozen shrimp or canned shrimp may be used instead of raw. Make vinaigrette sauce by combining 1 tablespoon chopped onion, 2 tablespoons chopped sweet pickle, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 1 tablespoon chopped green pepper, 1 tablespoon chopped pimiento, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon sugar, ⅓ cup salad oil, ¼ cup vinegar and a few drops garlic juice. Combine shrimp and vinaigrette several hours before serving. Arrange in a small bowl.

In arranging these five dishes on the smörgåsbord, the eggs anchovy, cheese and pickled string beans could occupy the same dish and they would look very pretty that way, but the shrimp vinaigrette and herring salad should be in separate bowls.

JELLIED VEAL LOAF

Get a veal knuckle or shin bone, sawed into several pieces, and 1½ pounds lean veal. Wash bones thoroughly to remove bone splinters, put in a pot with the lean veal and cover with cold water. Bring to a boil, skim and add 2 teaspoons salt, 6 peppercorns, 2 carrots and 1 stalk celery. Cover and simmer until meat is quite tender—

You'll love these new

BROWNIES

So good! So low in cost! So quick and easy to bake with the new

PY-O-MY

Brownie Mix

JUST ADD WATER —and nuts if desired.

One package makes 24 or more delicious chocolate flavored, fudge-cake squares

At leading chain and independent grocers.

Perfect results too from: PY-O-MY yeast raising Coffee Cake Mix, Piecrust Mix, Cookie Mix, Hot Roll Mix, Cake Frosting and Fudge Mix.

KITCHEN ART FOODS, INC., 226 W. Ontario St., Chicago

30 GREETING CARDS ALL DIFFERENT for ALL occasions

30 different folders with colorful designs and beautiful sentiments. Matching envelopes. Anniversary, birthday, illness, sympathy, etc.

reg. $2 value only $1.00 postage prepaid

HOUSE of CARDS

434 N. Gay St., Dept. 5, Baltimore 2, Md.

FOR EXTRA RICH BROWN DELICIOUS

GRAVY

Use

KITCHEN Bouquet

Here's the gravy secret good cooks have known for over 70 years—Kitchen Bouquet offers the easy, never-fail way to get extra rich, brown, delicious gravy! Kitchen Bouquet adds no artificial flavor — simply steps up true, rich meat taste. Helpful recipe folder with every bottle.

Frost at night . . . warm sun at noon—that's ideal weather for a good crop of Vermont maple syrup and sugar.

Old-fashioned real maple sugar flavor

In the maple sugar country, folks young and old love to follow the whiff of wood smoke to the sugar house . . . to enjoy that grand treat—real maple sugar flavor.

To give you that flavor in Vermont Maid Syrup, our skilled blenders choose maple sugar with a rich, full flavor; then blend it with cane sugar. This gives you, at moderate cost, uniformly rich and delicious real maple sugar flavor. At your grocer's.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.
Burlington, Vermont

Vermont Maid Syrup

Attractive, unusual. Makes perfect lamb-shaped cake. Ideal for parties and gifts. Recipes, directions enclosed. Aluminum mold set 9⅜ x 6⅝ high. Specially priced —$2 postpaid.

Heart-shaped for 2-layer Sweetheart Cake. Perfect for birthday, anniversary and special occasion parties. 9 x 1¼ inches. Set of 2 aluminum pans $1 postpaid.

Both sets are heavy durable aluminum. Money back guarantee.

CAKE PANS

Dept. LJ-1
E RIBBON BAKEWARE, Lemont, Ill.

about 2 hours. Remove meat from pot, turn up heat and let bones continue to boil, uncovered, to reduce liquid to about 3 cups. Strain, cool and skim off fat. Put meat through finest blade of food chopper twice. Soak 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Mix ½ cup cold veal broth with 2 tablespoons cornstarch, put rest of broth on to boil and when it is hot add cornstarch mixture and 1 teaspoon gourmet or other Chinese seasoning powder and cook, stirring constantly, until smooth and boiling. Remove from heat; add softened gelatin and stir until dissolved. Pour hot thickened broth over ground meat and stir and beat until an even consistency is reached. Taste for salt and pepper. I haven't suggested any other seasoning because I think the jellied veal loaf should be bland and delicate in flavor in contrast to the other more highly seasoned foods. Oil an oblong mold, fill it with the veal and insert a knife here and there to get rid of air bubbles. Cover with wax paper and store in refrigerator until set. To serve, turn mold out in the center of a platter and garnish with radish roses and slices of cucumber. Cut some petals of tomato and leaves of green pepper. Place the tomato petals in flower shape on top of loaf, put a dot of mayonnaise in center of flower and the leaves around it.

PINEAPPLE, CRANBERRY AND APPLE MOLD

This recipe will fill a 10-inch ring mold. Soak 3 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Boil together 1 cup water and 1 cup pineapple juice, pour over gelatin, stir until dissolved and add 1 cup cold orange juice. Thawed frozen orange juice

---

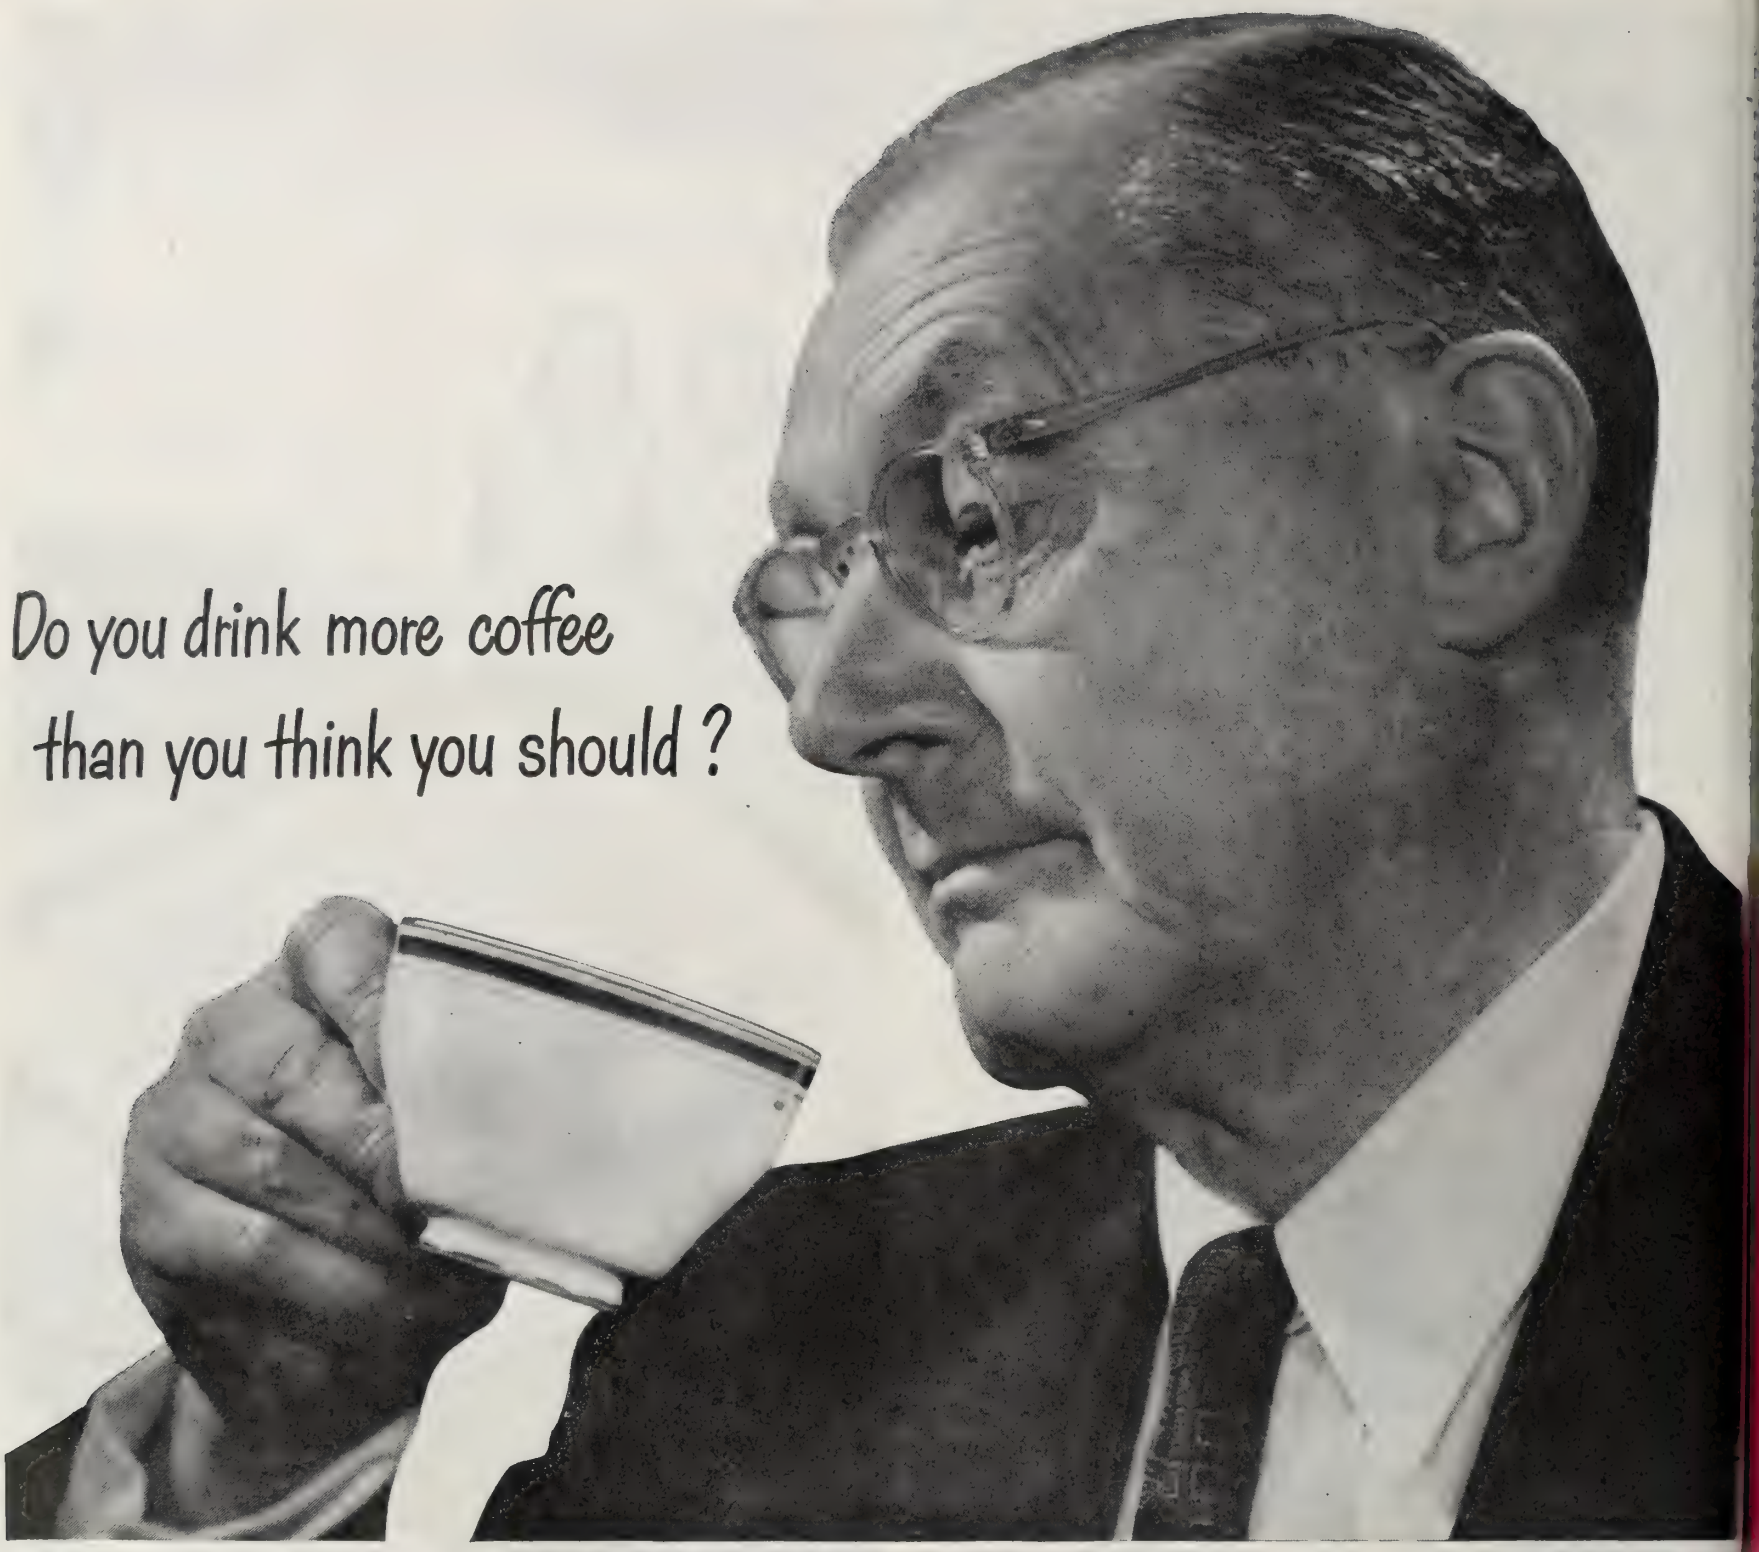
Before I got married I had six theories about bringing up children. Now I have six children and no theories. —LORD ROCHESTER.

---

is wonderful for this. When mixture is cold add ½ pound raw cranberries, ground through medium blade of food chopper, 2 cups apple, cut into small cubes, and 2 cups canned pineapple cut into chunks. Grease a ring mold, and if you're at all nervous about unmolding, line the ring with overlapping strips of cellophane about 3 inches wide. The cellophane strips should be long enough to extend above the rims of the mold. Spoon in fruit-and-gelatin mixture and chill in refrigerator until set.

When you are about ready to serve, cut 2 bright red apples in half, remove cores but not skins and slice very thin. Dip slices in lemon juice immediately to prevent discoloration. Turn mold out on platter, fill center with pineapple chunks and a few of the apple slices and make a border of apple slices. Have a bowl of sour cream beside the fruit mold.

SWEDISH TEA RING



Please don't be afraid to try this. You won't find it difficult, it's a lot of fun to do, and the result—spectacular! This recipe will make 2 rings.

According to directions on package, dissolve 2 cakes fresh yeast (or 2 packages quick dry yeast) in ⅓ cup lukewarm water. Scald 1 cup milk, add ¼ cup butter or margarine and cool to lukewarm. Add 1½ teaspoons salt, ⅓ cup sugar, dissolved yeast and 2 well-beaten eggs. Gradually stir in 4¾ cups flour. Beat for a while, then turn dough onto a lightly floured board and knead until it looks smooth. Work into a ball, put in greased bowl and spread a little soft butter or margarine over top. Cover with a towel, set in warm place and let rise until double in bulk—2 to 2½ hours. Divide into 2 balls. Stretch a ball into more or less oblong shape, put it on a floured board and roll it into an oblong that measures approximately 8 inches wide, 23 inches long and ¼ inch thick. Brush with melted butter or margarine and sprinkle with light brown sugar, cinnamon, ½ cup coarsely chopped nut meats and 1 well-packed cup candied fruit and white raisins mixed. For the fruit, I use cherries, pineapple and dates, all cut into small pieces.

Now, beginning at the long side, roll as you would a jelly roll and brush a little beaten egg along the final edge of dough to make it seal neatly. Bring the two ends

(Continued on Page 143)

IF YOU'RE AS FOND OF COFFEE as most people are, you probably drink it every day.

And chances are, from time to time you ask yourself, "Am I drinking more coffee than I should?"

For much as you love coffee, you know what the caffein in it can do to some people. How it can make them sleepless, nervous, irritable—and even keep them that way, sometimes for hours on end.

So when you, yourself, sleep poorly, or feel yourself getting tense and jittery, you start thinking about the coffee you drink. Perhaps you decide you really must drink less of this tempting beverage. Perhaps you even ask yourself if you shouldn't stop drinking coffee altogether.

Now . . . wouldn't it be wonderful if you could drink all the coffee you wanted without caffein effect?

DRINK SANKA COFFEE

You can! Drink Sanka Coffee. Enjoy real coffee—marvelous tasting coffee—and you can stop worrying!

For Sanka Coffee is two ways wonderful!

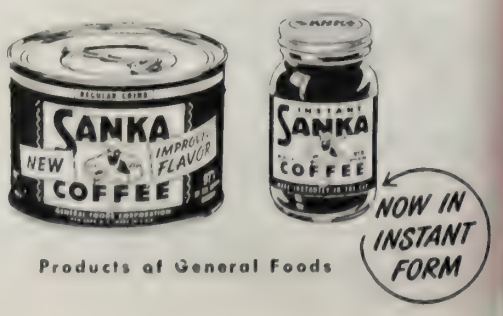
First of all, Sanka is delicious coffee. Rich and full-bodied, with the wonderful flavor—the satisfying, bracing cheer—that only real coffee can give you!

Second, Sanka Coffee is caffein-free! And that means worry-free! You can drink all the Sanka Coffee you want—at breakfast, luncheon, dinner, or far into the night—without the slightest question about caffein effect. For 97% of the caffein has been removed from Sanka. It can't possibly keep you awake, or make you feel nervous or cross!



REAL COFFEE - 97% CAFFEIN - FREE

But removing the caffein doesn't detract a bit from Sanka's rich, full-bodied flavor, its tempting aroma. You still get the wonderful taste-goodness that only coffee can give you!

Start drinking Sanka tomorrow. It's real coffee, all coffee, grand coffee—so you have nothing to lose, and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

Real coffee with the worry taken out. Drink it and sleep!

Products of General Foods

(Continued from Page 141)

ether to make a circle. Put beaten egg the ends and pinch them together. ransfer ring to greased cooky sheet. Pull l push until ring looks perfectly symtrical—you needn't be afraid of hang it—and be sure that the lengthwise l is at the middle of the bottom. With sors cut diagonally toward center at ich intervals almost through the ring. n outside edges of slices a little to make arations between them wider. A few es of nut and fruit will fall out, but poke them back in. Cover with towel again let rise to double in bulk—1½ to hours. Brush top delicately with cream; e in moderately hot oven, 375° F., 25 to inutes. Don't let rings get too brown. ave ready some chopped nuts and can- l cherries and pineapple and some icing le by creaming together 1½ cups conioners' sugar, 2 tablespoons butter or garine, 3 tablespoons cream and 1 teaon vanilla. While rings are still warm ad with the icing, which will run in all ctions—that's just what we want. Put lenty of icing, but don't cover entire ace as you would a cake. Sprinkle at with nuts and candied fruit.

vice. If each girl comes to the party with e of the prepared food in her hot little is, no one will be in the least overworked. what it's worth, I'll give you my idea of to distribute the jobs. If there are four les involved, No. 1 could prepare the baked beans, herring salad and pickled beans; No. 2, the salmon-oyster casserole, eggs anchovy and pineapple-cranberry mold; No. 3, the meat rolls, cheese, and tea ring; and No. 4, the jellied veal loaf, shrimp vinaigrette and sandwiches. If there are five couples, I'd do it this way: No. 1 brings baked beans, herring salad and cheese; No. 2, salmon-oyster casserole and pineapple-cranberry mold; No. 3, meat rolls and eggs anchovy; No. 4, jellied veal loaf, pickled beans and sandwiches; and No. 5, tea ring and shrimp vinaigrette. That makes a fair distribution of effort, I think, and, as nearly as I can work it out, of expense. Of course you can pool expenses and each pay her exact share.

Half an hour in the kitchen, or less, should be plenty of time to get hot dishes hot and cold dishes arranged for serving. Go as fancy as you like in arranging and decorating the food—that's part of the fun of a smörgåsbord. Each dish should look so appetizing and exciting that you don't know where to begin—and you end by having some of everything I'd suggest having two stacks of plates on the table, so that when you go back for a second helping—as everyone will—clean plates will be available. Be sure to have heating devices to keep the hot dishes warm, because many people like to eat the cold things first and make a second course of the hot food.

And so, in my best Swedish, mycken mat, god mat, och mat i rättan tid. THE END

Bringing up Parents

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

To a very young child money is a toy. But before he's out of the nursery years he learns another use for it. You give up money and get things. Having digested that basic concept, the child is then ready to be really confused. For he discovers a little piece of money can be worth more than a bigger piece. When he clears that up, his problem becomes: Why can't he have enough money to buy everything he wants? At that point it isn't his problem alone, for you must help him to face the fact that there are limits to what he can have. You can do it most gracefully by taking the child into your confidence. Talk over the most important things to buy with the money you're planning to spend on him. Give his opinions weight. If he wants something reasonable that you can't afford at the time, planning with him to save for it is better than an arbitrary "No." When he grows older—about eight or nine—an allowance (if its administration isn't so rigid that money becomes too important) will help him work out his own judgments.

"Why buy it? For a quarter and two box tops we can get it for nothing."

Cut Your Milk Bill with "Carnation-and-Coffee"

Says
Mrs. RALPH MOULTON
El Segundo Home Economist

Before her marriage, Mrs. Moulton taught Home Economics, so she really knows how to s-t-r-e-t-c-h a food budget. Mrs. Moulton says "Carnation costs much less than bottled milk—yet it's rich and heavy enough to whip. So just a little gives coffee an appetizing creamy-brown color and delicious mellow flavor."

Two more ways Carnation saves you money

1. Undiluted Carnation can be used instead of cream in many recipes—saves on shortening and eggs, too. That's because it's concentrated by evaporation—is double rich in all the food values of whole milk.

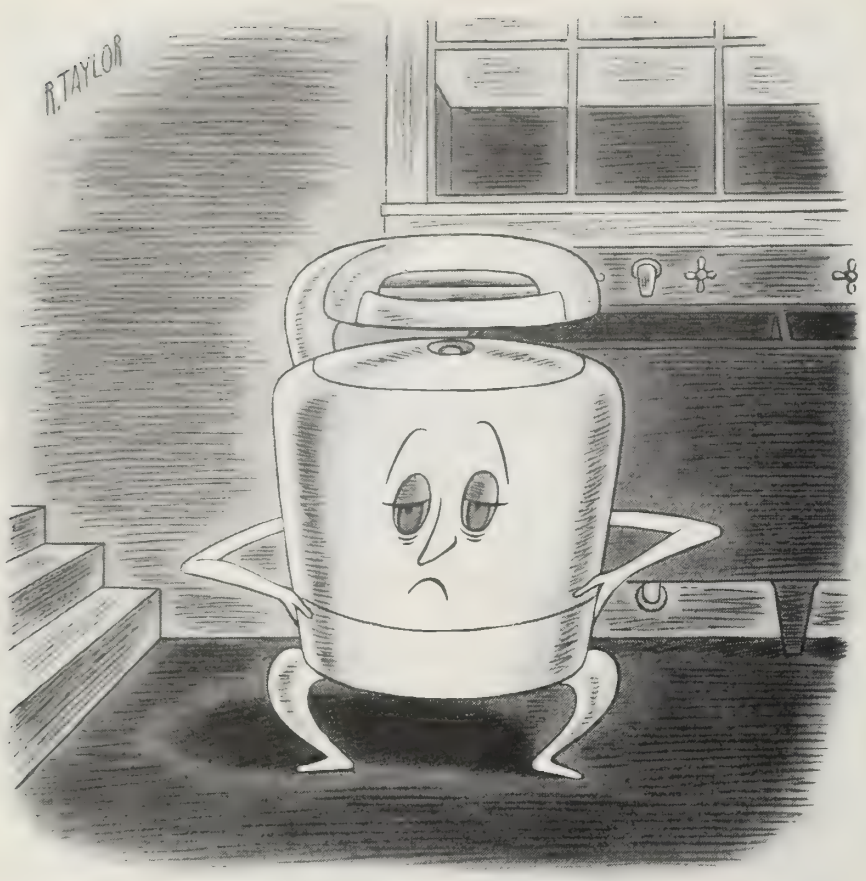
2. Diluted Carnation (half milk-half water) far exceeds all state standards for bottled milk. Use it for any recipe that calls for milk. Remember Carnation costs far less than bottled milk.

She Was A Carnation Baby—Now She's a Carnation Mother!

Mrs. Moulton knows from experience what a fine head start Carnation Milk gives to babies. She's raising her second "Carnation Baby"! Indeed, nation-wide surveys indicate more babies are fed on Carnation than any other evaporated milk. Ask your doctor about Carnation—it's the milk every doctor knows.

HEAR BUDDY CLARK—singing star of the Carnation "Contented Hour." Every Monday night on your NBC station.

Make the "6-cup Test"!



Carnation costs less than half as much as cream—yet millions of people like it better in coffee. You owe it to yourself to give it a fair trial—and one cup of coffee isn't enough. Carnation is so concentrated you'll probably use too much the first time you try it.

So drink your next 6 cups of coffee with Carnation—and vary the amount in each cup until you get the combination that suits you best. Just one can of Carnation is enough to make the test—even for a big family. It'll cost you just a few cents to find out how to save dollars—and to discover why so many coffee drinkers agree: "You can't beat Coffee 'n' Carnation."

SEND FOR the "Velvet Blend Book" giving many delicious, money-saving recipes. Carnation Company, Dept. L-39, Los Angeles 36, California.

"From Contented Cows"

All work and No Fels-Naptha...

"I'm not the complaining kind, goodness knows . . . but it does seem as though some one in this house would think about me once in awhile.

"Nobody works any harder than I do . . . week after week . . . washing the family's clothes . . . with never so much as a 'thank you' or a pat on the wringer.

"I'm not choosy, either . . . whatever they hand me . . . fine linens; the ladies' lingerie; Junior's grubby play suits; the Boss's work clothes . . . I get the dirt out—somehow.

"Seems to me it's about time I had some capable help on this job. After all, I don't ask for too much . . . just some Fels-Naptha Soap."

Golden bar or Golden chips

Fels-Naptha

banishes "Tattle-Tale Gray"

Maeve senses spring in the air, and waits for its coming with impatience.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

FOR me, the new world begins in beauty on a March morning when I look out the window and see the flying scud of white clouds against a gentian sky. How wonderful it would be if I could paint the wind on such a morning! Or catch the symphony of sound in music.

Everything is fine, with the great golden wind blowing. Blankets on the line, rugs soaking the sun in their musty winter fibers, frosty garden earth cracking to let spring in. I am a great believer in fresh air and sun on household things. The whole yard is drifted over with pillows, pads, mattresses. Drapes fling themselves about on the line. Clothes take on airy shapes of their own as they blow. And at dusk when they all come back in the house, you can smell the sun and wind on them.

The cockers get a kind of spring dementia. They race around in frantic circles, their ears standing out like sails. Their tails do stay on, but nobody knows why. Maeve looks redder than ever and is in a hunting mood. She and George's dog, Shep, go up the hill after woodchucks. Shep is a sensible fellow and Maeve is such a temperamental setter that they make an odd pair. Maeve loves to sneak up behind Shep and grab his tail and swing back on it, and when the big shepherd turns about, she whisks away, laughing heartily. He evens the score by not allowing her to ride on his truck with him when he goes with George to the fields. She has to run beside it.

An Irish setter running is a poem. A cocker is a lyric when he runs, but the long, level flight of a setter is an ode.

March meals are hearty at our house. When one exercises outdoors half the day, dinner must "stick to the ribs," as mamma used to say. Sauerbraten does just that, and is good for supper when the neighbors drop in. And it is so easy on the budget.

We use a 4-pound cut of beef—any pot-roast piece will do—sprinkle it heavily with salt and pepper and place it in an earthenware crock. Over this I pour 1 pint vinegar and enough water so the meat is covered, and add 3 bay leaves, 12 peppercorns, 6 cloves, salt and pepper. This marinate 12 to 18 hours in a cool place.

Then I drain the meat and brown it in a Dutch oven (a big kettle will do), u a little cooking oil if necessary to keep meat from "catching on." Then 1 b carrots, cut into thin strips, and 6 s onions go into the kettle with 2 cups o spiced vinegar the meat has tenderize I simmer slowly for 3 hours or until meat is tender. Then I add 1 tables sugar and 12 crumbled gingersnaps, cook 10 minutes longer.

As the meat cooks, more vinegar c added if necessary. We serve the brown, spicy gravy over the roast in a ish platter, and have plenty of plain potatoes to go with it. And oh, how g is! Nobody could ever dream what twelve little gingersnaps do.

Some people do not know how much a few cloves will do, either. I alway four to six cloves in stews or soups, veal roast basted with a couple of clo the basting liquid takes on a better acter. A pinch of chili powder is an excellent thing, and it is especially go breakfast eggs for a change.

THERE are so many fine seasonings days, various salts and herb blends, like the herb mustards and the garli onion salts. We keep three kinds of tard on the nearest shelf in the kitche plain mustard—and there are two b of that, each nice for certain things Bahamian mustard, which is special fo meats; the herb-flavored mustard for wiches, salad dressings, cold fowl or And Jill wants the horse-radish mus too, so she has her own jar of that o shelf. (That makes four mustards i count hers.)

Our village is growing. We now h radio shop and a drugstore, besides th cery store, garage and post office. utterly strange to drive to the tri where the roads meet and step into a ern drugstore, right out here in our v The radio shop (Continued on Pag

NEVER BEFORE A WASHER LIKE THIS SENSATIONAL NEW

eneral Electric All-Automatic Washer!

Does complete WASHING and DAMP-DRYING JOB all by itself —with one setting of the dial!

Completely automatic! Now at last, thanks to General Electric's scientific research, you can enjoy completely automatic washing—new washing developments found in this washer and in no other.

The General Electric All-Automatic Washer does the whole washing job for you, all by itself:

1. Automatically soaks clothes (if you set it to include soaking) with famous G-E "Activator* action," then empties soak water.

2. Mixes hot and cold water automatically to selected washing temperature—flows wash water through soap dispenser.

3. Washes your clothes cleaner with G-E "Activator action" and with self-cleaning filter screens that catch the dirt and lint.

4. Rinses clothes with "Activator action" in constantly filtered, constantly circulating water.

5. Spins clothes in General Electric's high-speed spinner, until most pieces are dry enough to be ironed at once.

6. Automatically shuts off, saving rinse water for next soak or wash; or turn control and it cleans itself out, empties, and shuts off automatically.

*Trade-mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

PLUS FAMED GENERAL ELECTRIC DEPENDABILITY!

Portable • No bolting down • Ideal balance suppresses vibration • Soaks, washes, rinses in enough water to keep clothes completely immersed • Dissolves soap thoroughly • Can be operated manually for blankets and fineries • Counter-height top opening • Amazingly quiet operation • "Sealed-in oil" driving mechanism never needs oiling.

There are dozens of other startling new worksaving and clean-washing features. Don't think of buying a washer until you've seen this great General Electric All-Automatic Washer—at your retailer's NOW! General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

DARING 5-YEAR PROTECTION PLAN GOES WITH EVERY WASHER!

Includes one-year warranty on entire washer—plus additional four-year protection on "sealed-in-oil" driving mechanism. Insist on a five-year protection plan when you buy your new automatic washer.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

How to catch a fine fish meal...

Any time you get a hankering for seafood, you can do something about it. Yes, really something! For in community after community, A&P Super Markets are "Fish Headquarters." And making them so took some tall doing.

A&P established fish and seafood purchasing offices and shipping plants at many places where famous fleets dock with their catches . . . at New York. Boston. Baltimore. Miami . . . ports along the Great Lakes . . . to be Johnny-on-the-spot to pick the best. And A&P enlisted skilled staffs of experts to buy, process and transport fish and seafood . . . and to do it all in jig time for assured quality and freshness control.

Today, hundreds of miles from fishing waters, there are seafood specialty departments in A&P Super Markets. They are manned by trained men who work with modern refrigeration and observe strict procedures for freshness protection . . . to guarantee that whatever you select will come as close as possible to giving you "right-out-of-the-water" flavor.

No matter what cooking preference you have for fresh fish or seafood . . . broiling, frying or poachi . . . your A&P Fish Department will clean and prepare your choice accordingly, and at no extra co

Correct Weight Always is the aim of all A&P people. And they want you to confirm weights. All scales are placed to let you see the dials easily.

Friendly, Willing Service is the code of every A&P and every department in it. When you visit an A&P, you're a guest . . . and will be treated so.

Your Order Is Itemized when you pay for your purchases. You are given a cash register receipt at the check-out stand to enable you to know the prices of what you have bought.

A&P

1859 - 1949 90th YEAR OF SERVICE

A&P Super Markets

YOU CAN HELP US! Have you an idea for improving the service of your A&P? If you have, please write us. We want to make your A&P the best possible place to market for food in your community. Address: CUSTOMER RELATIONS DEPARTMENT, A&P Food Stores, Graybar Building, New York 17, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 144)

't been open a day before we were there two radios, and it was very pleasant to irst aid for the sound waves within a le of miles from the house.

it it is true that I do not like change, and t saying I liked the old days better, even : I was getting tooth paste and soap from ice new druggist. I can foresee the day we shall not really be country folk any , but a kind of extended suburbanites. wever, Jill says bitterly, we don't get express service any more, so progress quite swamping us. They took that this season. When express comes, it ar- ten miles on one side or ten miles on the , according to the whim of the express any, apparently, or it may turn up in own. Freight all goes there.

m glad we got the house furnished be- he express withdrew, because I really do ee how anybody could possibly get a delivered any more in our parts. It is a and mysterious fact that as civiliza- -or the outward evidences of it— ds farther and farther into the hinter- , at the same time it also retreats. I sup- this is another thing that is peculiarly ican.

snowdrops are out around the twenty- d. The lovely pearl-white bells seem too delicate to bear the brunt of that March wind, but they do. The first clump that opens is a cause for special celebration. The scilla is fragile, too, and so is the first pale amethyst crocus. Bloodroot and dogtooth violets—all the flowers of spring seem too frail to last out the end of the cold. And they are all the more exquisite because they seem so alone in the world.

When the peepers begin to cry in the night, I like to lie awake just to listen to the sweet, thin crying. No music can compare with it, for it is the voice of new life beginning, or a new season coming; it is the final period to the silent sentences of winter.

The swamp still looks dark and wintry in the cold light of the moon, but in the swamp all the little folk are stirring, and the brave song makes the heart glad.

Surely, I think, there is no grief so deep that might not be eased by the sound of the singing in spring, or no joy so perfect that might not seem even better.

Without the long winter, would we love the spring so much? I will leave that to the philosophers to answer. For myself, I can just go up to the old orchard on the top of the hill, with Honey puffing beside me, and let the great sweep of the wind blow away everything tired and old and sad and bring the sweet thunder in the blood of spring!

UNDER THE QUIET WATER

(Continued from Page 35)

d into a way of earning her living, ; those pain-racked years of her child- It wasn't an easy way, although a the town's career-minded daughters d Allie's chair, which looked impor- It wasn't an easy way, but Allie n't have changed with a queen. Tres- was her town; she had owned it all her nce those early days when her father ought bits of it home to her every day ey had chuckled over the bits together, ted them, and understood them.

sat at her big littered table under the glass window and checked carefully, third time, the names of the prize s in the Summer Fair. It was an g task. Mrs. Bill Anderson had won rst for the Best Loaf of White Bread Irs. Carl Anderson, her sister-in-law tterest enemy, had ne Second for Cro- Towel Ends. Any ion in reporting the orrectly would bring nsequences.

clipped her sheets er, satisfied at last, em on the desk and ed gratefully. Her day's work was She sat looking out at Main Street, ite seeing it for a moment; hearing in- he sounds of the office, the linotype g away in the shop at the back, Joe's shuffling irritably on his tall desk ne was making up the weekly Halliday y advertisement.

aw that Allie was through. "Allie." m-m?" u don't spose this old fool's really g to sell catchup at three cents a He might; he gets the dangedest Joe muttered. And then, "Guess I call'm up and ask'm."

oice rumbled into the wall telephone. aid no attention. She went on watch- street. She wasn't exactly part of that went on beyond that window. uldn't hold a thing off and look at it and impersonally and still be part d to hold the town off and look at it n the thing her father had drummed all her life, when she was a five-year- ting down to the office with a note for nned on her sweater, when she was d had to stay in bed most of the time. n't let it get you," he'd said to her d over. "Don't have any of it, don't ny of it. None of it's yours, and as you remember that, it's all yours. n't buy it or sell it, but you can look at it and handle it and have as much fun collecting it as any man with cupboards full of jewels."

So Allie sat and watched, and thought about the people, and about what went on in their lives and minds. They were all familiar people; there were few newcomers to Tressady, few strangers. Of late years there had been a few changes along Main Street; not many. Across from the Courier there was a small new building which housed the two latest comers. One side of the building was a lawyer's office; the other was a lending library and gift shop, with a magazine counter and a candy bar and a few shelves of toys.

When the word had gone around three years ago that such an establishment was opening, everybody thought the idea was ridiculous. A stranger, coming into Tressady and starting up a business—he'd go under in no time, everybody said. And he was a queer little man. His name was Horace Pottle, and he wore thick glasses behind which his eyes looked slitted and even rather frightening. Maybe it was his odd appearance which had helped him; he was such an object of curiosity that people went into his little shop to get a look at him—and he had worked up a really good business.

Borrow trouble for yourself, if that's your nature, but don't lend it to your neighbors. —KIPLING.

Two people were going into Horace Pottle's now, and he came to the door to open it for them. The sun glinted for a second on his thick glasses. The two people were Mrs. Carling, the doctor's wife, and Norah James, who did a lot of special nursing for Doctor Carling and often stayed at the Carlings'. Somebody had said the other day that Horace Pottle was trying to make up to Norah James, which might be true. Allie didn't like the idea very much. Norah James wasn't very attractive, and she was getting to the age when perhaps almost any man looked better than none; she had always been bothered about not marrying, and was developing a sort of high-pitched nervousness that betrayed an inner anxiety. Still ——

The wide screen door of the Courier banged suddenly open, and Ralph Harland came in. He was the principal of the high school now, and much finer-drawn than anyone would have expected the town's one-time football hero to be. He looked bad today, white and drawn, and much older than his thirty-five years. He glanced quickly around the office, at Joe still standing at the telephone arguing with Mr. Halliday, and came over to

(Continued on Page 149)

"I commend to you our pleasant California custom of the Olive Bowl"—says KATHLEEN NORRIS

Queen of American authors, Kathleen Norris is beloved by millions of readers. In addition to her prodigious output of 73 novels (her latest, High Holiday, is just out) and countless heart-warming stories for the top magazines, brilliant, energetic Kathleen Norris has found time for family and national affairs — and is noted for her hospitality.

"It's an easy, well-liked gesture of hospitality when friends drop in...an enjoyable "first course" when just the family comes to table"

"I'M GLAD TO HEAR our good California custom is becoming so popular throughout America today," writes Kathleen Norris. "Do try it at your house soon, if you haven't already: simply fill a generous bowl with your favorite brand of California ripe olives and set them out for all to enjoy. Compliments never fail you."

Ripe olives from California fill an honored place in the diet. Among other food values, California ripe olives offer you nourishing protein...and they're a source of Vitamin A, and iron. But the reason California ripe olives are famed throughout the world is FLAVOR!

Bite into one. Here's plump, meaty goodness. Here's good eating. Have another...enjoy all you want! (Yes, even if you're a "calorie-counter." For 8 to 10 California ripe olives just about equal 100 calories.)

Good Eating!

How long since you've enjoyed 'em? Get some!

Ripe Olives from CALIFORNIA

This advertisement is published by the growers and processors of California ripe olives, acting together as the Olive Advisory Board. All California ripe olives are held to standards of quality, strictly graded and correctly labelled.

Tropical Fruit Mold

1 package Orange Jell-O
2 cups hot water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup sliced banana (1 medium)
½ cup orange sections, free from membrane
4 dates, sliced lengthwise

Oranges, dates, bananas held captive in a mold of Orange Jell-O. Watch the faces rour brighten up for this one! A recip again and again—for salad or dess Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add Chill until slightly thickened, then f Pour into loaf pan and chill till firm mold, double the recipe.)

For salad: Unmold on crisp greens, garnish with whipped cre naise, and sprinkle with Baker's Shredded Coconut.

For dessert Unmold, garnish with whipped cream, and sprinkl nut. Makes 5 or 6 servings.

JOLLY 'EM UP WITH JELL-O

BRAND GELATIN DESSERT

SIX DELICIOUS FLAVORS

Grapefruit Julep Cup

1 package Lime Jell-O
2 cups hot water
2 to 16 canned or fresh grapefruit sections, free from membrane

Shimmering cubes of Lime Jell-O with juice-laden sections of grapefruit... a bright exclamation point of refreshing flavor at the end of a hearty dinner!

Dissolve Jell-O in 2 cups hot water. Pour into 9x9x2-inch pan and chill till firm. Cut in 1-inch cubes. Arrange in sherbet glasses with grapefruit sections. Makes 4 or 5 servings.

Strawberry Peach Quickie

1 package Strawberry Jell-O
2 cups hot water
1 cup drained canned sliced cling peaches

Flavors from the orchard and the berry patch meet in this simplest of Jell-O family treats! (Bless Jell-O's "locked-in" flavor for that right-off-the-vine taste of strawberry!)

Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. When slightly thickened, fold in peaches. Turn into serving bowl and chill until firm. Makes 5 or 6 servings.

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE MAR

(Continued on Page 152)

When a fellow welcomes hospitality

you want to be technical, "hospitality" comes from a Latin word meaning rest and entertainment. If you want to be practical, it means, "Have a Coca-Cola." And that means refreshment, friendliness, relaxation—so casual, so complete.

COPYRIGHT 1949, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

THE KRIPPENDORF-DITTMANN CO. • CINCINNATI 2 • OHIO

GLAMOROUS MODELS shampoo without water

Have shining clean hair always, the way lovely Barbizon School models do—with Minipoo!

WAVE STAYS IN! You'll thrill to the glorious sheen Minipoo restores—without disturbing wave.

QUICK! EASY! No water, soap, drying. With handy mitt, fragrant Minipoo removes oil, dirt, odors in 10 minutes.

10 MINUTE DRY SHAMPOO

30 Shampoos and Handy Mitt in each Package

Cosmetic Distributors, Jersey City, N. J.

NOW A COMPLEXION CLAY THAT MAKES SKIN LOVELIER

CLEANS PORE OPENINGS • REDUCES SKIN BLEMISHES

WORKS WONDERS WITH TIRED LINES IN FACE

Look better, feel better, after the first application with Hopper White Clay Pack.[R] See for yourself how this amazing facial pack cleans pore openings, helps tighten the tired lines in your face and loosen blackheads which can then be easily removed. Yes, you can thrill at the new loveliness of your complexion, the radiant, tingling feeling that is yours after a facial with Hopper Clay Pack. It's easy to use, costs only a few cents. At drug or cosmetic counters.

CORNS

Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

MOSCO ★ CORN ★ REMOVER

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon at low budget prices. Charming fashions with concealing lines for the mother-to-be. Also Maternity Corsets and Lingerie.

SPRING STYLES

CRAWFORD'S DEPT. A 729 BALT. AVE. Kansas City 6, Mo.

(Continued from Page 150)

lot of the worst of the fighting. He was in the Normandy landing. He was at Caen. We all thought it had been especially hard on him because he was so thoughtful and fine. He improved as the summer went along—seemed to get settled down, to take more interest in things. Then, in November, when his wife and the two little girls were visiting her people in Riverport, he—well," Allie said in a low voice, "he shot himself. There, in the little house. So ——"

"No explanation?"

"None."

"Why do people think he did it?" Danny March asked, and looked carefully at his brown knuckles.

"Nobody has any idea. His wife never came back. We've never seen her. She went to pieces, people said. I don't blame her. Financially she's all right; Bruce left her quite a lot, although he wasn't a bit wealthy, but enough insurance and investments to bring up the children. And her people are well-to-do. It's quite a mystery, because except for Bruce's thinness and sort of . . . troubledness when he first came home, everything seemed fine. Nobody can even imagine what happened unless he was one of those serious neurotic cases you hear about—and it's hard to believe that of Bruce."

"I suppose there'd be plenty of gossip, after a thing like that."

"Plenty of talk, but there was nothing to hang it on, except the actual death. Everybody liked Bruce and his wife. She wasn't carrying on with other men. Bruce's affairs were in good order. He just—well, he just stopped, that's all."

DANNY MARCH sat silent. Allie glanced up at him, at the lean brown face under the thick waves of dark unruly hair. Just for a fleeting instant he reminded her of someone, but she couldn't place the resemblance.

The six-o'clock bell in the town-hall tower rang out suddenly. It roused Danny. He started the car again.

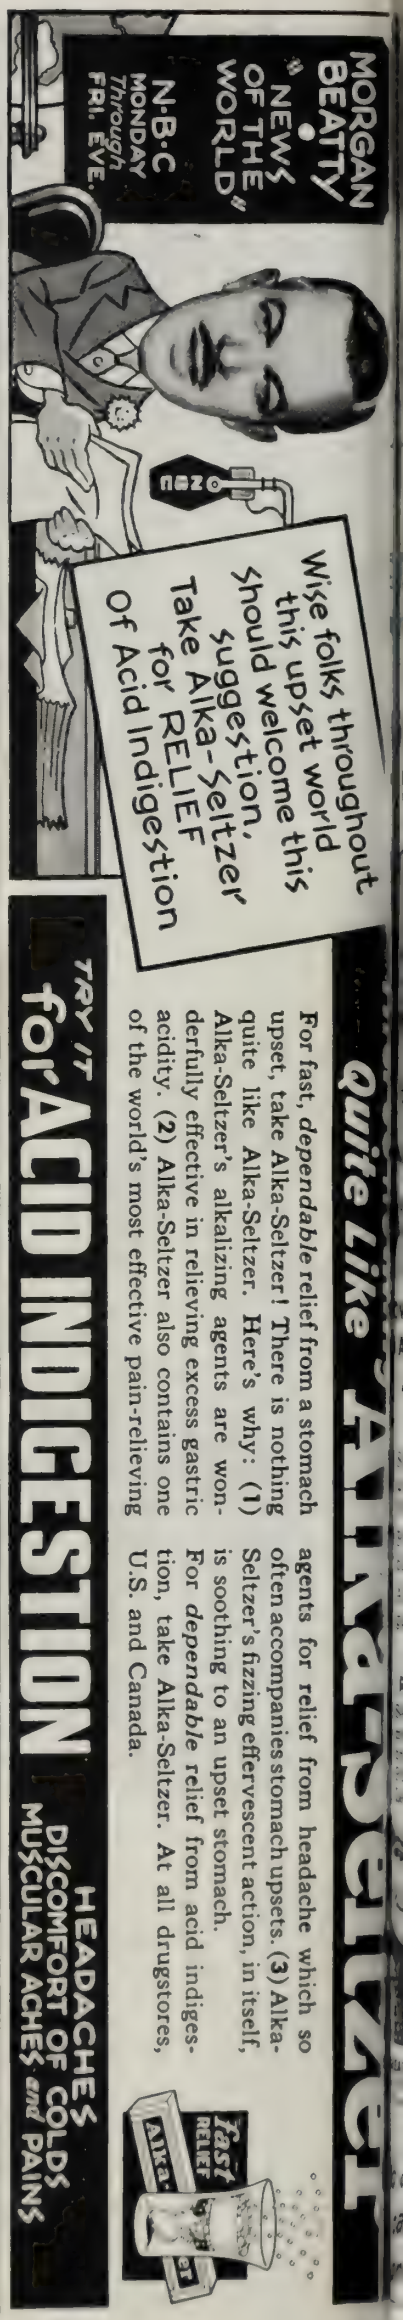
"Catherine North is Judge Spencer's daughter, isn't she? Top of the hill?"

"Haven't you met her?"

"She doesn't seem to go out much."

"She's a pianist. She practices most of the time. She has her little son too. Her husband was killed overseas and she brought the baby home, to live with her father."

"Her husband didn't come from around here?"



"No, he was an Englishman. None of us knew him. Catherine met him when she went abroad to study. They were married during the early blitz, I think—we didn't hear from her for months afterward. Everything was so confused just then."

The car stopped at the grilled iron gate set into the Spencer hedge. Danny March said lightly, "I saw Mrs. North on the street one day. She's a very beautiful girl."

Allie went up the path thinking about Danny March, until the sound of Catherine's piano caught at her mind. She stopped beside the hawthorn tree and listened, head bent. The piano went on and on, and Allie would have known that delicate, exquisite touch if she had heard it coming from the caverns under the sea. She had spent thousands of hours listening to Catherine at her piano; all the years when they were growing up had been set to Catherine's music.

It was Bach that Catherine was playing today, and the notes came clear and flawless in what, if one didn't know Catherine, would nave been considered a beautiful rendition. Even Allie had to listen carefully to be sure that everything wasn't beautiful and perfect. But she was sure. Catherine was clinging to Bach's precision and formality as a drowning person clings to a rock. She was playing with her fingers and with her training, nothing else.

It wouldn't have been so hard to understand if Catherine had been like this when she first came back, nearly two years ago, with her husband only newly dead. But she had been marvelous then, strong and courageous and with a kind of inner quiet as if she had learned to look beyond death and time. Now her fingers went on and on; they would never stop, they would never let the music end.

The garden below the porch was beautiful, smooth green lawn sloping down past the round lily pool, below it to the long terrace where the judge's treasured roses were. A hummingbird came flashing out of nowhere and hung almost invisible above the pink peonies beside the porch.

Allie sat down in the wide porch swing. She moved it back and forth once, and it gave out the old familiar creak. Catherine always heard that sound no matter how deep she was in the music. She went right on playing now until she finished the concerto. Then she pushed the screen open silently and came out. She sat down in the wicker chair across from the swing. She didn't look at Allie in the old way. She just sat there, as still as a statue.

Allie's throat hurt her. She swallowed firmly and made up the words she was going to say. She had been making them up for a long time, but they didn't stay made. She had to say them sometime and today was the time. This was a queer day, full of dark places. This was the day to talk to Catherine.

But Catherine didn't intend to talk. She gave Allie a quick look and then got up, to stand tall and lovely in her pink linen dress. She looked down Main Street and said abruptly, "There seems to be some sort of commotion downtown. I can see a lot of people running. Is there a fire, Allie?"

After a minute Allie said in a low voice, "Are they running down to the wharf?"

"I think they are. Why? Has something happened?"

Allie got off the porch swing. "I think I'd better go home," she said. "I think I'd better go, Catherine."

I speak truth, not so much as I would, but so much as I dare; and I dare a little the more as I grow older. —MONTAIGNE.

Catherine gave her a sharp glance. "I'll come with you," she decided.

Allie's house was on the other side of the hill, which had been landscaped to make the town's little park. The park overlooked the river; the path through the park was at one point almost directly above the wharf.

The two girls walked quickly, in silence. As they approached the river the sound of voices grew louder. A crowd had obviously gathered at the wharf, excited, nervous. The park ahead of them was moving with figures, with people hurrying from all directions to see what had happened at the river. The water there was thirty feet deep, out beyond the drop. It was a dangerous river, swift and treacherous and dark.

There were people crowded thick along the low wharf railing, peering over one another's shoulders along the bank. A big truck stood on the wharf, its back to the river, its engine turning heavily, thick ropes straining back from its rear axle. The ropes went down into the water, and something was attached to them. It was a car, a long coupé, coming, as the truck edged forward, slowly, reluctantly, out of the hidden depths.

Catherine stood motionless. Someone had come up to stand on Allie's other side. It was Mrs. Godfrey, dressed in her best mauve voile, with the minute book of the missionary society clutched in her hand.

"It's her, all right," she was saying. "That's her car." She lowered her voice. "Maybe she did it on purpose," she told Allie. "She always was a wild thing."

The car slid up to the planks of the wharf. The big truck skidded back a foot and a horrified gasp went up from the crowd. But it stopped, moved forward slowly. The long coupé settled on the wharf, water streaming from its shining black sides.

Dick Treherne was there on the wharf, but as the car came to stand on its own four wheels, he did not move. His face was set and hard, blank, as if he were dazed. It was Doctor Carling who stepped forward, after an instant's hesitation, and put his hand on

ENTISTS SAY:

Colgate Tooth Powder with the 2-minute routine Gets Teeth Sparkling And Super-Clean

OVER 4,000 DENTISTS, IN A NATIONWIDE SURVEY, APPROVE THIS EASY CLEANING METHOD

Simply brush teeth for two minutes, morning and night, with Colgate Tooth Powder.

Brush all three surfaces—front, back, and biting edges of teeth.

Always brush away from the gums.

REMOVES DULL FILM—REFRESHES THE MOUTH

See how easily this routine removes dull film, gets teeth naturally bright. You'll love Colgate Tooth Powder's refreshing flavor, too. Leaves breath sweet.

EATH WORRIES... Tooth Powder leaves "romance-clean".

No dentifrice can get Teeth and Breath cleaner!

"That Formfit Look"

... for a sweetheart of a figure

Everywhere, people are talking about this girl with the "Formfit look." She's the symbol of a new loveliness which Formfit has brought to millions of women who never dreamed they could look so figure-perfect. Yes, no matter what your figure faults, Life Bra by Formfit corrects them faultlessly ... gives you that high, wide and beautifully rounded natural look. That's because of the exclusive Formfit way it's tailored to LIFT—MOLD—CORRECT—HOLD, all at one time. Make "that Formfit look" your own today—at any of the better stores.

Life Bras from $1.25

THE FORMFIT COMPANY
CHICAGO, NEW YORK

Life BY Formfit

MORE WOMEN WEAR FORMFIT THAN ANY OTHER MAKE

the edge of the open window above the driver's seat. He looked inside the car. He moved back. He shook his head.

Dick Treherne moved a step then. He came, without knowing, to stand beside Ralph Harland, so that for a moment the two faces were together. Ralph was the color of death, but Dick had not lost his ruddiness. There was still a kind of unbelief in his expression, an impatience.

"Why," Mrs. Godfrey muttered, beside Allie, "she isn't in the car after all. You don't suppose she just let it go off the wharf by itself, do you? I wouldn't put it past her, if she wanted to give that Dick Treherne a good scare. I wouldn't put it past her. She always was a crazy wild thing."

A sudden wave of relief went over Allie, so that she almost liked Mrs. Godfrey. She felt the blood beginning to run in her veins again. But Catherine was still turned to stone, except that she put one of her long hands up to her throat and stood with it there.

The professional diver had been standing there in the crowd all the time; of course, it would have been he who put the ropes on Viola's car. But it was only as he stepped foward that Allie became aware of him. Doctor Carling came to stand beside him, to speak to him. The doctor's voice could not be heard, but his meaning was plain. He gestured, he moved his hands. Somebody behind him handed him a rope with a steel hook fastened to the end.

The doctor was saying, "When you find her, fix the hook through her belt—fasten it there, boy, through her clothes."

THE diver began his breathing. It was horrible breathing, deep and harsh. The crowd was utterly silent, its own breath stopped. The diver's chest rose and fell, rose and fell. Then, suddenly, with no warning, he was gone—down into the black water, deep, deep, with the rope held fast in his hand.

"Say," Mrs. Godfrey whispered, "she must be down there after all! What would make her do a thing like that? She must've been drinking. I guess that's it. There's too much drinking goes on nowadays, Allie. It's the cause of a lot of misery. You ought to do something about it in the paper. Look at Bruce Whitney, shooting himself last fall. They said you couldn't smell it on him, but Doctor Carling always did try to cover things up like that. It isn't as if he'd always been in Tressady, like I have, and really felt for the good of the town."

It was an endless time before the diver's blue cap came up and pierced the water. There were fifty hands stretched out to help him to the wharf. He came up to the planks. He lifted his right hand and gave up the rope to Doctor Carling.

"Okay," he said in a loud, harsh voice. "You better get a boat. The hook might slip. She's a long way down."

Catherine turned. She left Allie's side and began to walk away toward her home. But in a second her steps began to quicken until she was running. She flew down the path and through the woods, and in only a minute the pink dress had vanished between the trees.

"Well," Mrs. Godfrey said flatly, "she certainly got upset. What's all this got to do with her, I'd like to know?"

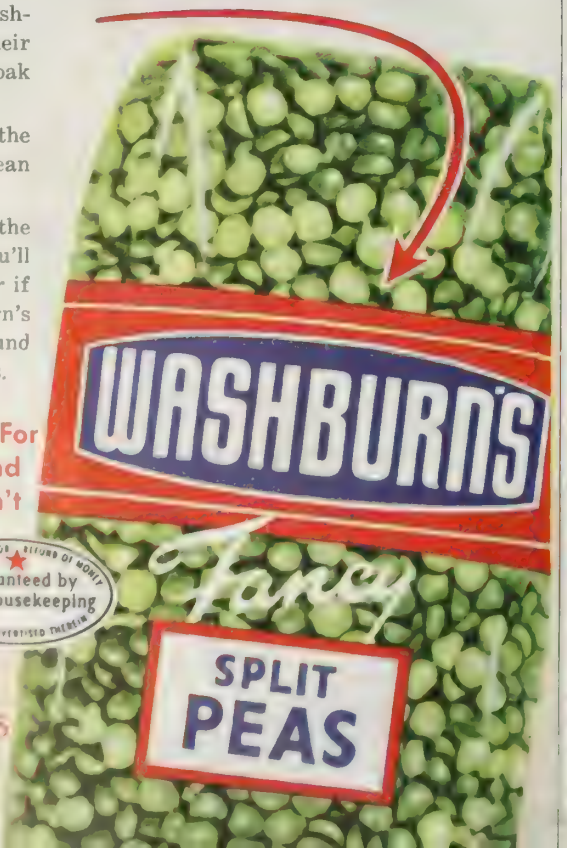
Allie went slowly down the lane leading into her own garden. The hedge needed trimming. It was ragged and untidy. Once in the garden, the untidiness stopped short. Jessie's flower beds had been combed and brushed, the stems were stiff and prim, and every one of the flowers had been scrubbed with soap and water.

Jessie was standing in the door, waiting, her hair pinned neatly into its round flat knot on the crown of her head. She said flatly, "You're late, Allie."

"Yes."

Jessie's eyes went over her sharply, as if to make sure that nothing was missing. Jessie's eyes had been going over her that way for a long time. "You look clean tuckered out. I didn't know it was a hard day. It's only Monday. Something happened?"

"Happened?" Allie repeated, her mind still lost



Make Wonderful Soup
At Unheard-Of Low Cost

• How can soup eating be so good yet cost so little? The secret's in the peas—Washburn's Fancy Split Peas. Washburn's are the peas selected for their gardeny flavor. So tender you don't soak them. So clean you don't even rinse.

Yes, we select these peas from the recognized top grade. Then we clean and pack them with special care.

Look for our Washburn's brand on the other foods mentioned below, too. You'll find all of these foods naturally finer if you take care to get them in Washburn's red and blue packages: 1- or 2-pound cellophane bags, or 1-pound cartons.

You start with

The Peas Selected For Finest Flavor—And So Clean You Don't Have To Rinse

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

No Others Are Like WASHBURN'S Naturally Finer Foods

Split Peas, White Beans, Beans in your favorite varieties, Lentils, Pearl Barley, Rice

Roughage without Roughness

Food bulk in its natural and most valuable form

The smooth cellulose pulp of prunes is invaluable as a natural aid to regular habits.

They're good eating, too... especially SUNSWEET Prunes. SUNSWEETS are tree-ripened. The extra days of ripening insu extra sweetness, extra flavor, and the extra "plus" that makes the pulp-bulk extra effecti

Also, SUNSWEETS are "Tenderized," seale in FOIL, and packed by the growers themsel

SUNSWEET
"TENDERIZED" PRUNES
CALIFORNIA PRUNE & APRICOT GROWERS ASS'N · SAN JOSE,

He knows Fish is delicious with A·1 Sauce—the dash that makes the dish

FREE—"Cooking for a Man" Write G. F. Heublein & Bro., Inc., Dept. LHJ, Hartford, Conn.

BOWLING BALL

YOU can easily win one of these nationally advertised Mineralite Bowling Balls, to fit your hand.

Send us only nine 2 year Ladies' Home Jou subscriptions, sold at the full U.S. Price, $5.00 e to persons living outside your own home. Your or your personal gift subscriptions will not co Renewals count the same as new subscripti

Write subscribers' names and addresses on white paper and mail to address below, together your name and address and checks or money o for the total amount. In return, we'll send you certificate with which you secure your Bowling This offer is good in U.S. only until May 31, 1 Sorry, we cannot sell the bowling balls.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPA
841 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa

MAKE $25

WRITEWELL CO. 303 Transit Bldg. Boston 15, M

Baked to a crusty pan?

...on't tie yourself up in knots ...ver stubborn grease-crusted ...ans! Drop that namby-pamby ...lishrag, and let a sturdy metal-...fiber Brillo pad do the work!

...hine 'em quick with BRILLO

Just swirl off greasy scorch and baked-on crust! Quick as a flash —a square Brillo pad-with-soap whisks grimy pots and pans clean and shining! Fast! Neat! Easy! Wonderful for your aluminums. Use Brillo every day to keep pans gleaming!

There's ...eweler's polish ... in BRILLO!

...llo's a joy! Brillo makes your ...s and pans sparkle like sil- ... And there's a good reason ...—Brillo's special-formula ...ontains polishing ingre- ...that jewelers use to shine ...cious metals!

...-soap-filled pads
...—pads and cake soap

...ral Offices: FO... ...KE $50 selling Am... ...sion greeti... ...nts. Samples on approva... ...fast money makers—gi... ...ice cards, etc. Don't de... ...ORAIN ART STUDI... ...LLIANT ...Ver...

...RN FREE S... ...All wo... ...Yards ...Buy D... ...TT YARN ... ...luminum fast!

better than I what might have been in Viola's mind. Far better than anybody, except ——" She stopped.

"Except?"

"Dick, of course," Allie said quickly.

Doctor Carling's eyes rested on her flushed face for an instant. He turned. "I don't like inquests," he said wearily.

Mrs. Carling moved quickly about her shining, immaculate kitchen, preparing breakfast for her husband and Norah James, who was staying with the Carlings, as she so often did when she had a day or two between cases. Norah ate a substantial breakfast, as Mrs. Carling did herself. Evan, the doctor, was becoming more and more difficult about his food. Mrs. Carling cut a big grapefruit for herself and Norah, sprinkled the carefully segmented halves thick with powdered sugar and set them back in the refrigerator to chill. She squeezed oranges for Evan.

She moved into the bright dining room and laid the table quickly. There was a long mirror between the wide dining-room windows, set there deliberately. Mrs. Carling stopped in front of it in the course of her work and regarded herself evenly. She looked at the tremendous bulk and the unmanageable white hair. The sharp little jet eyes in the mirror were hard. She loosened slightly the tight sash of her crisp apron and tied the bow with firm fingers.

Her husband came downstairs, walking slowly. He was still a young man, fifteen years younger than she was; he was only forty-two. But he was aging fast. His hair was quite gray at the temples and there were a great many lines around his eyes. He looked particularly bad this morning, as if he had had a restless night.

She said affectionately, "I didn't hear you go out in the night, dear. Did you have a call?"

He got a glass of water at the sink. "No. No calls."

"You don't look very rested."

"I didn't sleep very well."

He sat down listlessly at the head of the table and took up his napkin. He sipped at his black coffee. His wife's eyes went over him again.

"Evan, what are you going to do about an inquest on the dead girl?"

That was what was worrying him, of course. He hadn't enjoyed the inquest on Bruce Whitney. There had been state police at that inquest, and as coroner, Evan had been rather in the limelight. However, it had gone off quite well after all. Now it appeared that the same situation had arisen again, not at all a pleasant situation.

"What are you going to do, Evan?" she repeated.

He moved his fork on the fresh white cloth. "What do you advise?" he inquired.

She buttered herself another piece of toast before she answered, and took a large spoonful of strawberry jam. Her jams had all turned out wonderfully well this year. Adding lemon juice gave the strawberry just the extra fillip it needed. Unfortunately, she hadn't done enough jam, not at the rate it was vanishing. That was because the women's auxiliary had had a bazaar right in the middle of the strawberry season, and she had promised—and of course had fulfilled the promise—to dress twenty dolls for them. Her dolls were quite famous now, with their costumes made out of the exquisite bits of fabrics people sent her from all over the country, and there wasn't any item in the bazaar that meant so much to the funds of the auxiliary. The dolls had to come first, of course, and so the jam supply had suffered.

Part of her mind was on jam and dolls, but the other part was fixed carefully on what Evan had said, and upon what he was thinking. She said thoughtfully, "I think an inquest would be a great pity. I can't see that anyone would benefit through holding it. Do you?"

"I might be seriously criticized if I did not hold one."

"By whom, Evan?"

(Continued on Page 159)

A THING OF Beauty AND A JOY FOREVER!

Double Boiler
1½ qt. 2.25; 2 qt. 2.65

MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

● MIRRO utensils brighten your kitchen with graceful, good-looking design. But, best of all, notice the MIRRO finish, next time you're in a store. That silvery polish, so high and glossy, will mirror every movement and catch every color in the room. So, don't worry about matching colors when you buy MIRRO.

And remember, MIRRO beauty is lasting beauty. MIRRO, with only ordinary soap-and-water care, will wear well for fifty years or more! So, money spent for MIRRO gives you good things to cook with and to live with, for a whole housekeeping lifetime.

Because you want loveliness that lasts... get MIRRO

ALL MIRRO UTENSILS promise you overall even heating ... quick cooling ... sturdy construction, of thick aluminum ... smooth interior surfaces for easy cleaning ... cool handles ... many exclusive worth-while features.

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MANITOWOC, WIS.
World's Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Get MIRRO at department, housefurnishing, hardware stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

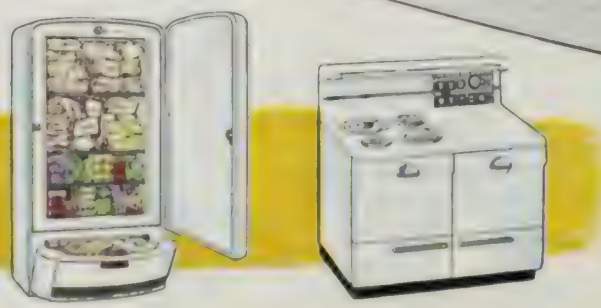
All prices slightly higher in west

Double Feature with Cold Modulation

That's it! That's the NEW Gibson Electric Refrigerator

It's here—the New Gibson—better than ever! Only Gibson with the Gibson Double Feature—the Freez'r Locker and Fresh'ner Locker—gives you Cold Modulation! Just the right blend of cold and moisture in every scientifically engineered compartment to keep different foods as they should be kept.



FREEZ'R LOCKER—A spacious wall-to-wall, easy-to-reach freezing compartment. Constantly maintains freezing cold for proper freezing and storing of frozen foods; they're deliciously fresh until you want them.

FRESH'NER LOCKER—Another amazing compartment, created by Gibson, with the proper combination of cold moisture for keeping fresh meats, vegetables and other foods fresh and appetizing. Retains vitamins and flavors. Prevents wilting and drying out. Keeps salads crisp. Saves on food bills.

Your new Gibson gives you faster freezing, greater ice cube capacity, the exclusive Ice Cube Reserve, unobstructed shelves, and an extra large crisp storage bin for crackers and cereals. Before you buy, be sure to see the new Gibson.

ALL NEW MODELS

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY
GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

GIBSON HOME FREEZER—Upright design for ... convenience. Saves floor space. Stores 250 lbs. of frozen foods. Buy when prices are right and foods are at their best. Enjoy your favorite delicacies all year 'round.

GIBSON AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC RANGE—with UPS-A-DAISY . . . Completely automatic cooking—plus super-speed cooking. 2 complete, balanced-heat insulated ovens—Smokeless broiler—Concealed oven vent—7-Speed surface units—Minute Watchman.

Copyright 1949 Gibson Refrigerator

(Continued from Page 157)

e was silent.

t seems to me that it all depends on . attitude you take from the beginning. e you suggested so far that you think her n might be anything but an accident?"

have been very careful not to."

Has anyone else suggested it?"

Not to me. Quite the opposite."

Do you think it occurs to anyone that h night have driven into the river delib- ly?"

e sat down his coffee cup and looked at He said, "You get around the town, sa, in all the gossip circles. Have you d anything anywhere which would sug- that there was any reason for Viola erne to wish to die? Have you heard ne say that . . . she has appeared to be ppy of late, living under a strain?"

No," she said at last. "I can't recall hav- eard a hint of it. I have heard, Evan, if don't mind my mentioning it, that you ar to be living under a strain. A number ople have asked me whether or not you ell."

e took his left wrist in his right hand and ed it heavily, over and over, in the liar gesture which he used so uncon- sly. It was as if he felt shackles on his s and was trying to wrest them off.

am perfectly well," he said harshly.

always tell people that you are," she pleasantly. "But to go back to the est—I really don't that you need to e everyone go igh that unpleas- ess again. If I were my dear, I should old Milligan this ning—it is still gan who is police f, isn't it?—and se of the matter n accident. And, u are clever, you suggest to Allie an that the Courier t be well advised evote a great deal pace in the next to insisting that council erect a e there on the highway across the en- e to the wharf, and at once. You can to Allie Jordan—she's a gentle little , quite pliable, I'm sure."

She may not be as pliable as she looks," id briefly. "However ——" He got up. haps you are wise," he said.

e poured herself another cup of coffee put the rich cream in generously. She "I'm sure I am, Evan. It will save one so much trouble, in the end." , as he was starting toward the door, by the way, dear—just stop at the ge, will you, and tell them I'll want my nished by tomorrow? I've got to go into city—I'm almost out of things for the clothes and I'm sure Aunt Ida will have ved dozens of parcels for me. I haven't in for weeks."

hen he was gone she drank her coffee ctively and had just another small cor- of toast. Evan really was not himself e days. He really acted all the time as ere was something dreadful on his mind.

was just after lunch on Tuesday when ace Pottle came across Main Street to Courier, walking with his usual mincing, ful steps. He was carrying a book. He ed his glasses and ran a finger under the r of his badly fitting greenish jacket as tepped up to the sidewalk. He pushed the wide screen door and came in.

Good afternoon," he said politely to at her desk, and to Joe at the wide e-up stand. "A very nice afternoon, Miss an. Not too hot for you, Mr. Burns?"

It's seasonable," Joe said agreeably.

I brought you a book," Horace Pottle him, and laid it on the top of the low ier beside the swing door opening from 's section into Joe's.

e pushed up his green eyeshade and came . He lifted the book. It was very thick. Allie could see the title on the green jacket. It was The Search for Atlantis.

"Hum-m-m-ph," Joe said thoughtfully. He riffled the pages. "M-m-m-m," he said appreciatively.

Allie got up and went to stand beside him. The book was filled with beautiful color plates of fishes, like jewels, flashing through black water. Joe's deepest passion, long hidden from everyone, even Allie, was submarine exploration. He knew a lot about the oceans of the world. But nobody had found that out until Horace Pottle came along.

"Looks like quite a book," Joe decided.

"I've had it in for several days, but I forgot about it. I'd be grateful if you'd read it and give me your considered opinion of it, Mr. Burns."

ALLIE looked at Horace Pottle. "I suppose you always try to classify your books according to the real tastes of people."

He turned quickly and smiled. "Oh, certainly," he said. "That's the secret of my business. It's the same with all my stock—the magazines and the toys, even the candy. One must get to know each individual and sense his tastes, often before he knows what they are himself."

Allie said, "Do you keep a record of us all?"

His smile was gentle. "Only in my mind," he said. "I do not need paper. Three years in Tressady have given me an opportunity to know most of its people fairly well."

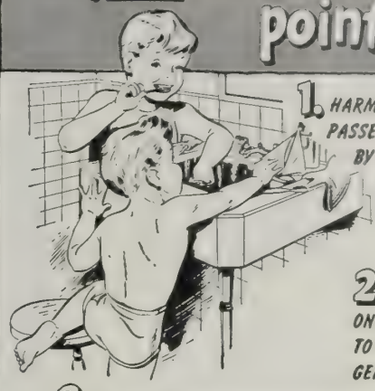
Joe was hunched over his book, now, going through it completely absorbed.

Allie said, "I suppose you could give quite a good interpretation of character of each of us, Mr. Pottle, from your careful observations?"

He came across to her desk and sat down gingerly in the chair across from her. "I should never do such a thing, of course," he said. "It would be much too revealing in many cases, and not quite fair. People do not always know that they give themselves away in their choice of reading."

Joe shut The Search for Atlantis abruptly. "I got to get back to work," he said. "This looks pretty good to me, Horace. I'll sure enjoy it."

Mr. Pottle rose. He said, "I should have brought it before. But the human mind is very odd. I was only reminded of this particular book because of our tragedy yesterday evening. I found myself thinking of the power of the earth's waters—they are full of potential tragedy. They are also full of sunken treasure, I was comforting myself, and of mystery. And so I was reminded of this book." He turned back to Allie. "I hear this morning that there is to be no inquest," he said. "Is that decided?"



Allie took up her long yellow pencil and slid it up and down in her fingers. "Doctor Carling says he is convinced that it was an accident," she said. "He was Viola's doctor and he says he has seen her several times lately for minor things and that she was in good spirits. And Dick says she was never a good driver—always had her mind anywhere but on the road. They both think she came down the hill too fast, and couldn't quite make the curve. Council is meeting now to vote money for a strong steel barrier there at the entrance to the wharf. It should have been erected long ago."

Horace Pottle rubbed a forefinger thoughtfully across his temple. "Perhaps it is wise not to hold an inquest," he said. "Nothing would be gained." Then, "I can believe that Mrs. Treherne did not keep her mind on her driving. Her reading was all of the lurid and sensational type—she liked none of the deep, steady things. If my opinion had been asked, I should have recommended long ago that the responsibility of handling a "Sweetwater Bill" Gates, a prospector who made a fortune during the Klondike gold rush, is one of the few men who have literally believed their sweethearts worth their weight in gold. In a reckless moment, he asked the girl to step into the container on one side of a pair of scales. Then he began piling gold dust and nuggets into the other side. After putting 120 pounds of the precious metal on the pan, the beam balanced. Sweetwater Bill gestured grandly. "There, little girl," he said fondly, "it's all yours."

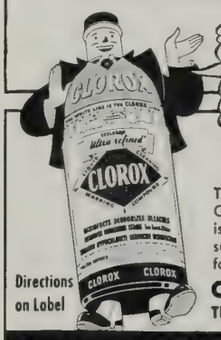
—GEORGE STIMPSON.

Is your wash basin a "transfer point" for germs?



1. HARMFUL GERMS CAN EASILY BE PASSED FROM PERSON TO PERSON BY MEANS OF THE FAMILY WASH BASIN.

2. YOU CAN'T RELY ON ORDINARY CLEANING TO DISINFECT. YOU NEED GERM-KILLING POWER.

3. CLOROX HAS GERM-KILLING POWER. CLOROX DISINFECTS; ALSO DEODORIZES AND REMOVES STAINS. THE CLOROX TYPE OF DISINFECTION IS ENDORSED BY HUNDREDS OF PUBLIC HEALTH DEPARTMENTS. PROTECT FAMILY HEALTH! MAKE YOUR WASH BASIN, TOILET BOWL, BATHTUB AND FLOOR HYGIENICALLY-CLEAN WITH CLOROX!

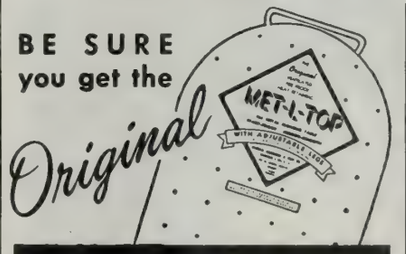
Directions on Label

CLOROX...FIRST WITH AMERICA'S HOUSEWIVES BECAUSE IT OFFERS BOTH:

GENTLER Bleaching Action... Longer Life for Linens!

There's no gentler bleach than Clorox in laundering. For Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

GREATER Disinfecting Efficiency ...Added Health Protection!



Because Clorox is caustic-free, it works faster in killing germs... does a better job of disinfecting. Give your family the extra health protection of a Clorox-clean home!

CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS

There's only one CLOROX... it's always uniform... always dependable!

Save time, money, effort with BOON... the ready-to-use liquid household cleaner made by the makers of Clorox. BOON wipes away dirt and grease from washable surfaces like magic.

BE SURE you get the Original

G.P.&F. MET-L-TOP ADJUSTABLE HEIGHT IRONING TABLE

LOOK FOR THE LABEL ON THE TABLE

The original, all-metal Ironing Table... G. P. & F. MET-L-TOP, gives you many extra advantages you'll enjoy for years. Look for the identifying label when you buy. Be sure it's a G. P. & F. MET-L-TOP.

The new G. P. & F. MET-L-TOP is ADJUSTABLE to YOUR height... assures you the most comfortable ironing position to avoid back strain, arm strain... ironing fatigue. Short, or Tall, RIGHT HEIGHT FOR ALL.

The smooth-as-glass, white-enameled, ventilated top never sags or buckles, stays smooth and level, because hollow channel-steel reinforcements run underneath full length of the steel top.

Ask your dealer to show you the many advantages of the genuine G. P. & F. MET-L-TOP Ironing Tables. Adjustable height model, $10.95; standard model, $9.45.

For best results, use Met-L-Top pad and cover set, tailored to fit.

G.P.&F.

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO.
Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

"that's why we both chose a DEXTER TWIN TUB

The ONLY Washer with TWO Washing Tubs. Yes, this sensational washer does your entire week's wash the cleanest ever, the easiest ever, and in only one hour or less! Dexter's EXCLUSIVE DOUBLE SUDSING washes dirtiest clothes cleaner and whiter. Yes, Double Sudsing, yours only with Dexter Twin, eliminates hand rubbing, soaking and pre-treating. It's the perfect way to wash.

Free! Write for illustrated booklet "WASH HOUR MAGIC." Gives valuable washing information—tells why DOUBLE SUDSING washes best.

THE DEXTER COMPANY, Dept. L-39, Fairfield, Iowa

WASHES CLEANER • QUICKER • EASIER

The S.O.S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A. • S.O.S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

motorcar might be too exacting if any sort of crisis arose."

He bowed, an odd stiffish little bow, and went out and across Main Street again. Two or three children were waiting for him inside his store. Allie looked after him, thinking about him.

Joe said, "Your voice don't sound just natural, talking to that little feller, Allie. Don't you like him?"

"Not very much," Allie said briefly.

"You're just like all the wimmen," Joe said disgustedly. "Just because he has to wear them thick glasses and walks funny and ain't six feet tall with curly hair, you wimmen don't like him. He's a good little guy. He means all right. The kids is crazy about him, and the old folks." He looked at her curiously. "It ain't really like you to be bad-tempered about anybody, Allie. You pretty upset about Viola?"

"Oh," Allie said crossly, "of course I'm upset about Viola. Who isn't? But that hasn't got anything to do with ——" She stopped. "I don't know what's the matter with me," she said angrily. "Joe, tell Ike to go out and get me a Coke, will you? Or two Cokes, or something. Or maybe an aspirin. I think I must be coming down with something."

An hour later Danny March's car stormed down the street and stopped at the Courier door. Danny made two steps across the sidewalk and banged the door after him. He walked over to Allie's desk.

He said coldly, "What's this I hear about no inquest on Mrs. Treherne? Why isn't there to be an inquest?"

Allie looked at his set face and angry eyes. She said after a minute, "I'm not the coroner."

"You know everything about this town. Most things, anyway," he amended. "More than anybody else. Why isn't there to be an inquest?"

"Nobody seems to think it's necessary."

"Who is nobody?"

"The coroner. Her husband. The chief of police. Council."

"I see," he said coldly. "And you agree too?"

"I haven't anything to say about it."

"Oh, yes, you have. You have more than anybody else to say about it. If you wanted an inquest you could have one. You can do anything, with the paper to do it with. Why don't you take an opportunity like this to get things straightened out around here? You're sitting in a man's chair. Why don't you either do a man's job or get out and let somebody hold it down who can?"

"Hey, there," Joe said belligerently, from the other side of the barrier. "Who do you think you are, young man? What do you think you're doing, coming in here telling Allie how to run the paper?"

Allie put out a hand. "Just—just a minute, Joe," she said gently. Then, to Danny March, "Do you think it matters a great deal whether there's an inquest on Viola Treherne or not?"

"I think it matters damn all, if you want to know," he said bitterly. "Nothing would come out of it. But to let the thing go by, when it might be—when it could be ——" He stopped.

"You know," Allie said under her breath, "I don't know what you're talking about. But I want to. If you'll tell me who you are—and why you're in Tressady—and what you mean ——"

Joe looked at her sharply, and back at Danny March.

March said, "I'm sorry." Their eyes met, and his were steady now, and thoughtful again. "I'm sorry," he said again. He looked from her to Joe and back again. "I came here to —— I'm Bruce Whitney's cousin," he said abruptly. His words hung in the air. He went to the door. "Maybe you could think that one over," he said; and then, "Allie, doesn't anybody have any idea about what's going on in this town?"

A wise Frenchman said you can generally win if you are careful not to triumph.
—DEAN INGE: Our Present Discontents (Putnam & Co., Ltd.).

Allie watched Danny March climb into h car again and go off down the street. He h called her Allie, and he had asked if anybo had any idea what was going on in Tressad He had sounded like her own people, the for a minute. He was Bruce Whitne cousin. He was her own people.

Doesn't anbody know what's going on Tressady?

Joe sat down in the chair at the corner Allie's desk. "He make you feel bad?" asked harshly.

"Not me personally. Not for me. Joe, anything going on in Tressady?"

"He's got me pure stymied, Allie," told her. "I don't know what he's talki about. There ain't nothin' could go on Tressady; not much, anyway. What diff ence does it make if he's Bruce Whitne cousin? He don't think we got a mu derer loose around here, does he? He thin somebody shot Bruce Whitney and som body hung on the edge of Viola's car a made her drive into the river?"

Allie turned her garnet ring round a round on her finger. It was loose aga Maybe she was worrying more than Dan March knew, more than she knew hers

She reached out for her telephone a called Central. She asked for Ralph H land's house. Dolly answered.

"Dolly, is Ralph at home? May I sp to him?"

Dolly had a little girl's voice, edgy shallow. She said, "He's just about ne at home, Allie. He's up at the school, in office. It's two-six-three, if you want h If it's about the sch fair, the board's made selections."

"Thanks, Dolly," A said, and hung up. Tl she asked Central to r Ralph.

The telephone rang times before he answer His voice was low a dead.

Allie said, "Are you alone up there, Ralp Can I come up and talk to you?"

There was a long silence. "Could we le it for a day or two, Allie?"

"It isn't the school fair. Are you alone

"Yes."

"Stay in your office," Allie said, and h up the receiver. She said to Joe, "You d know where I am, Joe. And maybe I won' back."

"Well," Joe said, "okay."

The wide bare corridors of the sq brick school building on top of the echoed to the sound of Allie's footsteps. faintly irregular rhythm brought abou the little drag of the left foot was ter obvious here. When she heard it Allie her chin a little higher, as her father taught her to do; but she found herself se suddenly the long free strides that Da March took as he crossed the street, freedom and ease with which he leaped his car. She found herself thinking, to Catherine—so beautifully made, so and strong-boned and perfect. They—th look well together, those two.

She tapped on Ralph's door, at the h of the stairs. She opened it, and he sitting at his desk with his head down in arms, not aware of her. She pulled a c over beside the desk and sat down in it put a hand on his arm. He moved sligh and then, after a minute, raised his h

"I guess you've got to tell me abou now, Ralph. Maybe it would be good you to talk, anyway. I don't think it's happy to bear things alone."

After a long time he said, "No."

"What is it?"

"It's pretty bad."

"What is it?"

He said shakily, "I loved her, of cour

"Yes."

"The—the baby isn't Dick's. It's mi

Allie moved an eraser an inch on the d

"Does Dick know?"

"Not yet. Thank God."

(Continued on Page 162)

Look! "Pushbutton-Cooking" With The New HOTPOINT

hoose your cooking speed—then push the button. It's s simple as snapping on an electric light. Each cook- ig unit has its own set of pushbuttons—and a distinc- ve colored light shows you exactly what speed is on.

America's Leader Brings You a New Kind of Electric Range—and Far Easier, More Accurate Cooking!

ALL YOU DO IS PUSH A BUTTON! You'll be thrilled by the simplicity, the speed, the convenience, and above all the accuracy of "Pushbutton-Cooking" with the beautiful new Hotpoint Range.

● ● Hotpoint's new Pushbutton Panel gives you instant fingertip control for all kinds of cooking. Hotpoint's "Talking Color" Lights show you exactly what unit is on and at what speed. There's no groping, no guesswork—you're sure of the proper cooking temperature every time.

● ● And Hotpoint has packed 37 other wonderful features into this sensational new kind of range. Hotpoint's Hi-Speed Broiler cooks steaks for 12 in 10 minutes. Hotpoint's big Sealed-Heat Oven bakes more evenly, cleans more easily, holds more food. And Hotpoint's famous Calrod® Units give you instant, accurate, measured heat. Ask your Hotpoint dealer for a demonstration of this great new range.

HOTPOINT INC. (A General Electric Affiliate), CHICAGO 44, ILL.

verybody's Pointing To Hotpoint Automatic Electric Ranges

Stop scolding, lady!

You've left some nasty filth in your own sink drain!

Of course, it's maddening when your child leaves dirt anywhere in your house. But . . .

Is there a spot that you yourself have forgotten to clean? Ugly filth hiding in your own sink drain!

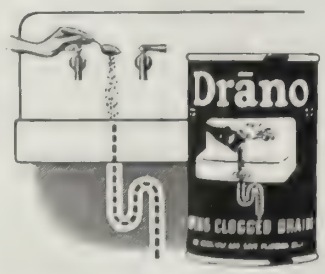
In this important spot (so close to food and dishes) grease collects—filthy grease where sewer germs make their home.

Liquid disinfectants can't get rid of this grease that gathers in your drainpipe! It takes Drāno to boil out this muck and the germs that breed there!



Put a tablespoon of Drāno in your drain once a week—every week!

Drāno has a special churning, boiling action that loosens grease and chases it down your drain. It leaves your drain clean and clear, always fast-running!

P.S. Remember—Drāno also opens clogged drains in a flash!

Drāno®

removes the muck that slows drains and breeds sewer germs

Harmless to septic tanks: Makes them work better—cuts down odors.
TUNE IN: DOROTHY KILGALLEN, Thursdays. See local paper for time and station.
Copr. 1949, by The Drackett Co.

(Continued from Page 160)

"Dolly?"

"No."

"You're not planning to tell them?" Allie asked gently.

"I don't know what I'm planning."

"Did you . . . decide you ought to tell, or did Viola? Or were you trying to decide? Or . . . do you think either Dick or Dolly was beginning to suspect? Or . . . could Viola just not bear Dick any longer?"

"None of those things. We—we made fools of ourselves . . . but we were getting everything under control. We decided it would be hell to let either Dick or Dolly find out. And we were doing fine. As if the baby—as if he resolved something for us, settled something. We'd have been all right, Allie."

"And what happened?"

"Why," Ralph said unevenly, "somebody else knows, you see."

"Who?"

He shook his head. "I don't know," he said.

"Maybe you'd better explain, Ralph."

"It's very simple. Somebody else in Tressady knows, and for a year now . . . Viola's been . . . she's had to get money and . . . because if the story'd got out it would have been hell for everybody. Two marriages broken, my two children without a home; I'd have lost my job."

After a long time Allie said incredulously, "You're not talking about blackmail, are you?"

"That's what they call it in mystery stories. Blackmail. Funny, neither Viola nor I called it that when the first letter came. We didn't think of it by a name. It was just somebody who knew about us and who was going to tell if the money didn't come. Viola had a little money then—a few hundred dollars—and this person seemed to know. The first letter only asked for a hundred. That didn't seem so much then. But in the last year all Viola's money went, and I've sold my bonds. And last week . . . there was another letter, and we were both desperate."

"Haven't you any idea who this person is who knows?"

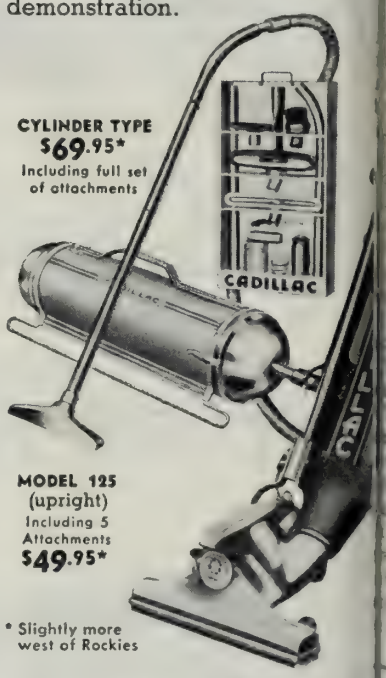
"Not any."

"How do you pay the money?"

"It goes to a man in New Orleans to general delivery. But this person isn't in New Orleans. He's in Tressady. He knows too much not to be right here in Tressady, watching us every minute. He's in Tressady."

JESSIE had Allie's favorite food ready when Allie got home after her long talk with Ralph Harland. The table was spread with the pale-green linen cloth that Allie liked best, with a low bowl of brilliant nasturtiums in the center. The jellied consommé was in Allie's mother's old pink Wedgwood soup cups, and the salad, of lettuce and water cress and red baby radishes and infinitesimal yellow Italian tomatoes, was on a big clear glass plate. Jessie had made sour-cream dressing to go with the sliced and fluted cucumbers, and there was fresh crusty bread and unsalted butter. Allie looked at the table in silence, and then at Jessie.

"It looks wonderful," Allie said steadily. "Sometimes I almost think I like you, Jessie. Just almost, you know."



"Mph," Jessie said sharply. She sat down in her chair. "I had an awful day," she said. "Something's got to be done with the sewing machine. It ain't Christian, the way it makes me feel when I try to cope. Today I was trying to get through a whole flock of diapers for the ladies' aid, hemming 'em, and the blamed thing kicked up an awful ruckus."

Allie was eating salad, and listening. But suddenly she got up and went across to the telephone. She took down the book, hanging from its hook just under the wall cabinet. She went back to the table and sat down with it. It wasn't a very thick book, even with Oriole and Burside and Green Springs in it as well as Tressady. She went down the list of Tressady people with a slow finger. There were dozens of people who had to be crossed off at once. You had to cross out old Mrs. Jost, for instance, and Pete Heine, the baker, and Noah Wright in the barbershop.

CADILLAC
GIVES YOU ALL THESE ...AND MORE

Whether you choose a dirt hungry upright model with beating, sweeping, cleaning action.. or the powerful cylinder type Cadillac, you get fast, thorough cleaning with a minimum of effort. Compare Cadillac cleaner with any other make — at any price. You can't buy better value. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

Write CLEMENTS MFG. CO
6607 S. Narragansett Ave., Chicago 38, Il
For name of your nearest dealer ou had to cross out the harness maker and e garbage collector, the tinsmiths, the house inters, the men who worked in the tannery d in the mill. And when you crossed all of em out, all the impossibles, there weren't any left. There weren't fifty left.

"Eat your salad," Jessie said inexorably.

"Oh," Allie said. Then, "I'm sorry, Jessie. n—I'm awfully sorry. I have something my mind."

"So I see," Jessie said dryly.

"Jessie."

"M-m-m?"

"Who are the important men in Tressady?"

"Important men? Important to who?"

"Strong men. Important men. I mean . . . n who get things done, and manage ings, and know about things."

"Men you can trust, Allie? Like the esbyterian minister? Like the Methodist eacher?"

"Strong any way, good or bad. I mean . . . many of the people there in the book—ey're like weak elastic. You couldn't—you uldn't expect much of them. I mean the her kind. You know."

Jessie got up and got the teapot. She ed Allie's cup. Her lips were pressed to-her, her eyes sharp. "Well," she said, ight's well begin with the Methodist eacher, even if I am a good Presbyterian. 's little, and he's as funny-looking as he be, with them high-laced shoes and his mpy pant legs, but he's mighty. He'd d back the sea, if he wanted."

"Jessie, it isn't Mr. Murdoch I'm thinking ut. I mean . . . who else is there?"

"Well, Judge Spencer."

"Nor Judge Spencer," Allie said slowly. here's . . . Dick Treherne, of course."

"Dick Treherne?" Jessie repeated. "Heav-, Allie, would you call him a strong n? He's stubborn and he's got an awful per. Still, I dunno," she said, and bed at a spoon absently with her table kin. "He was one that stepped in when fire department got all froze up last ter, wasn't he, and brought the Wismers l the Disharts down out of that burning lding. Maybe you have to be real strong brave to risk your life and limb for a lot good-for-nothing people that ain't hardly th saving." She considered. "And I'd Doctor Carling at the top of the list, t next to the judge."

Do people think Doctor Carling is a ng man, Jessie?"

Of course they do. He ain't a vain man, er. And he's a wonderful doctor. Don't remember, last year when he had to do t awful operation on Jimmie Sloan, on his n, and saved his life? He did the opera-, but when the big important brain geon from Baltimore got here, the one Sloans paid a thousand dollars for or ething, Doctor Carling was away up in back country taking care of some poverty-stricken woman having a baby. He stayed up there two days, didn't even try to get down and take compliments from the big surgeon. And it was a wonderful operation, the big man said—he didn't know there was a country doctor anywhere could do such an operation. He was anxious to meet Doctor Carling and talk to him, but he never got the chance because of course he couldn't wait."

After a long time, "I remember," Allie said.

"Of course," Jessie went on, "people would still like to know how on earth a handsome, clever, nice man like that come to marry a woman like his wife. She's a woman full of good works and as friendly as they come, but a handsome man like that, always working with young nurses. I guess Mrs. Carling can take care of things, though. You never see any signs of him straying any. Except that ——"

"Except what?"

"Well, he did kind of hang around Catherine, Allie, winter before last when she was getting over pneumonia. There was almost talk about it. He kept going to see her a long time after she was well—lots longer than he goes to see other people."

Allie took a long breath. "Catherine was very weak for a long time, Jessie."

"Sure. Still ——" Jessie stopped. Then, "What about this Danny March I hear all the women talking about? He don't sound like any milksop, if you're looking for strong men. What's he like? Why'd he come to Tressady?"

Allie said nothing.

"And," Jessie went on, "there's Joe."

"Oh," Allie said bitterly, "not Joe. Of all the people in the world, not Joe."

Jessie's fork stopped in mid-air. "And why not?" she demanded. "Why not Joe, I'd like to know? Joe's as fine and strong and good, for all his kind of unpolished way, as any of your judges and doctors, and you know it, Allie Jordan."

Allie put her hand to her forehead. "I didn't mean it that way," she said. "Quite the opposite. I was thinking of something else, Jessie."

"Well, I guess you must've been," Jessie said coldly. "I guess you must've been. And whatever it is I wish you'd hurry up and get it straightened out in your mind. You know what you've had for supper? Three spoonfuls of consommé, half the crust of a roll, two slices of cucumber and a radish. Now does that make sense?" She sat up straighter. "Look here," she said. "You aren't in love, are you?"

"In love?" Allie repeated. "Me?"

Jessie got up abruptly and went across to the stove. She shook it vigorously. "I got to have some hot water for dishes," she said, and blew her nose hard.

Allie put her elbows on the table and sat for a long time, thinking. Then she looked

"I'm not your mother, I tell you!"

THESE KITCHEN JEWELS SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES

But to make sure you get them, look for the Revere trademark in the thick copper bottom.

6 and 8-cup Coffee Percolators . . . 1, 2 and 3 qt. Covered Sauce Pans . . . 1½ and 2-qt. Double Boilers . . . 4-qt. Covered Sauce Pot . . . 5½-qt. Dutch Oven . . . 8, 10 and 12-in. Covered Skillets.

REVERE COPPER AND BRASS INCORPORATED
Rome Manufacturing Company Division
Rome, New York

P.S. New items are constantly being added to the line. Look for them at your dealer's.

LITTLE LULU

"When that big blow comes—here's the Kleenex!"*

Little Lulu says: Breeze through a cold in comfort—use Kleenex! For only Kleenex Tissues give you a perfect balance of softness and strength to soothe your nose—take the blows!

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

up the number of the hotel in the telephone book and went across and rang Central. At the hotel, she got Danny March.

"It's Allie Jordan," she told him. "If you aren't busy could you come down to my house? There's something—I think there's something we'd better talk about."

Allie lit the lamp on the broad table beside the chair that had been her father's. She pushed the ottoman close up to the chair. She went out to the kitchen and got an ash tray from the stack on the top cupboard shelf. She put it on the table beside the lamp.

Jessie came to the door. She said sharply, "Your hair's a sight."

"Oh," Allie said, and looked at herself quickly in the mirror. She took the pins out of the dark knot low on her neck, shook out the hair, ran one of her side combs along the center part, smoothed down the sides and gathered it into its knot again. It never stayed smooth for any length of time anyway; it wasn't exactly curly, just soft, cloudy, babyish stuff that was always escaping along the edges.

"I like your yellow eyelet dress better than that one, for a summer evening," Jessie said.

"Goodness, Jessie, I'm not going to a party."

"It wouldn't hurt you to fix yourself up once in a while," Jessie said crossly. "It wouldn't hurt you to think about yourself once in a while, Allie Jordan."

"Oh, I don't know," Allie said lightly. "Maybe it would." She glanced at herself in the mirror. A small, sallow creature with nothing much in the way of a body. Her hair was all right, and her eyes were clear enough. But there wasn't anything there to think about.

The kitchen door closed behind Jessie just as the front doorbell rang. Allie let Danny March in. He was very tall, in her small familiar house.

He said, "It was good of you to telephone me. I'm sorry I was a boor today."

Allie indicated her father's chair and sat down in her own low one. "I didn't mind," she said. "I'm sorry I've been so stupid. So blind, maybe. Irresponsible too. But maybe you can't blame me too much. I've lived here all my life, and these people are all my friends. Until I had it forced upon me, it was impossible to dream up the sort of thing that I know now you came here to find."

His eyes were steady and clear on hers.

She said, "Was Bruce Whitney being blackmailed?"

"Yes."

"By someone in Tressady?"

"I don't know. I imagine so."

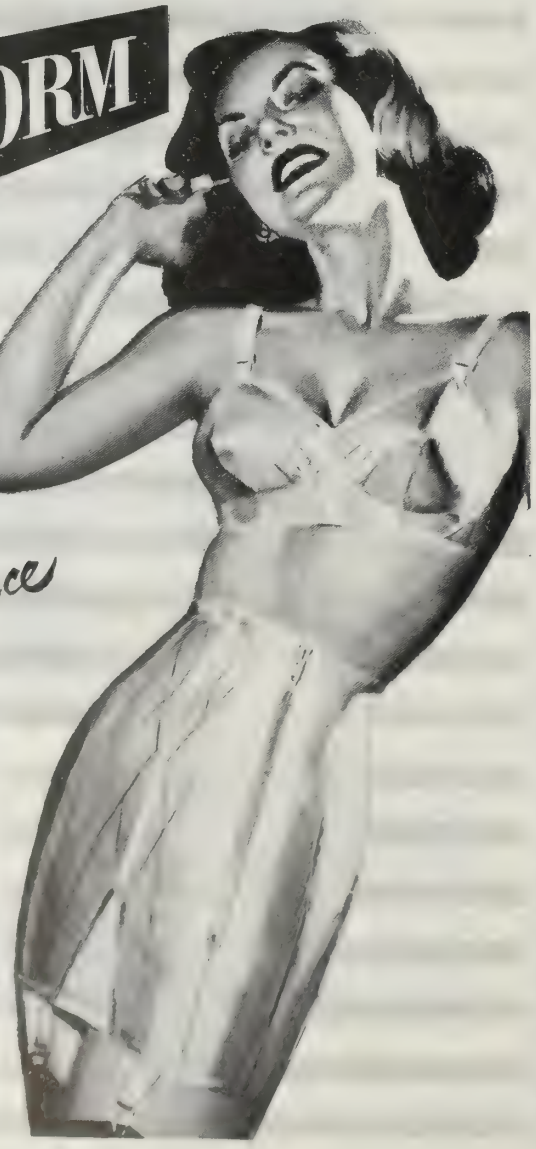
"You came here to find out?"

"Yes."

Allie said slowly, "Someone else has been blackmailed too. I just found out today, after you came into the office. I wish you had spoken to me sooner. I wish you had come and talked to me about it sooner. We might have ——" She stopped.

"Saved Viola Treherne?" he said.

Allie was silent. They sat looking at each other.



"Look," he said abruptly. "I see your position. I'm a stranger. For all you know, I might be the blackmailer myself. You don't know anything about me except what I've told you, and that might be a lie. I'm not the blackmailer. I'm his bitter enemy. How can I make you sure of that?"

Some of the strangest and most unfamiliar words came almost to Allie's tongue. Some of the warmest blood she had ever known swept through her heart. But she said steadily, "You don't have to try. I am sure. Can you believe the same of me?"

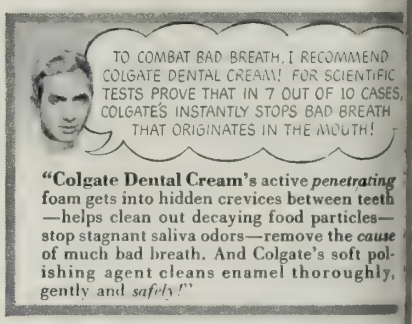
He leaned forward abruptly and took her hand. It was her left hand, the small hand, the one she hated. He didn't seem to notice. He closed his own over it and said, "There isn't anybody in the world who could mistrust you, Allie."

She drew her hand away slowly. "At least we've made a start," she said. "We eliminate each other. That's something. Can you tell me now about Bruce?"

BESTFORM

no finer fit at any price

to minimize your waist-line...



Bestform's all satin, Talon zipper figure molding girdle, featuring "swing back" elastic band for a flat midriff and vertical stretch back. At fine stores.

Style 5664—16", sizes 26-34 $6.50
Style 5464—14", sizes 25-32 $6.50
In white, nude and blue

She Took a Cruise—but Missed the Boat!

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!

Always use
COLGATE DENTA
after you eat and b

Your Children NEED This 'Tween-Season PROTECTION...

Klad-ezee TWEENER
Trade Mark

When Mother needs her spring coat and Dad needs his topcoat ... YOUNGSTERS NEED THE "KLAD-EZEE TWEENER"! America's largest-selling 'tween-season garments ... "KLAD-EZEE TWEENER" and "BABY TWEENER"! Of snug, washable "Sturdi-Suede" cloth, with patented self-help feature.
"KLAD-EZEE TWEENER" in Scarlet, Royal Blue or Emerald Green. Sizes 2 to 8, $6.95. Matching bonnet or helmet, $1.25.
"KLAD-EZEE BABY TWEENER" in Cloud Blue, Baby Pink, Scarlet or Skipper Blue. Sizes 1 to 3, $6.95, complete with matching bonnet or helmet.

Available for older girls 7-10 in 2-piece set, $9.95. If unable to purchase in your city, mail order to:

Klad-ezee Dept. J49, 241 1st Ave. N. Minneapolis 2, Minnesota

"You're—you mean, you're coming in with me on this?"

"Yes, and not alone," Allie said steadily. "We'll move slowly and carefully, but we'll marshal in all the goodness and strength there is in Tressady—and there's plenty—and we'll kill this other thing. I don't think it stops with Viola and Bruce," Allie said gently. "I don't think it does."

He got up and went over to look at the portrait of Allie's mother, on the wall in its oval, old-fashioned frame. He straightened it absently.

"I imagine you're right," he said. "I've been watching, of course. Maybe I've noticed a couple of things." He ran a quick hand over his hair. "Bruce's story isn't very long. He was, as you know, a paratrooper; one of the lot that was landed early in France. When he landed he was caught, beaten, left for dead. Our boys found him after some days. He'd been badly hammered about the head. I don't think he was ever right again, but he apparently recovered and went into action. One night a couple of months later he suddenly went completely berserk for no reason, and in the ensuing melee he shot a brother officer. He didn't kill him, fortunately. When he was examined later he was apparently perfectly sane and never showed any further signs of mental disturbance. He was court-martialed and dishonorably discharged. I saw him overseas and he told me the whole story. He felt that he'd been dealt with fairly; I thought so too. Neither of us then thought of a head injury; it was not until after his death that it occurred to me. We had an autopsy done in Riverport and the trouble was unmistakably there. However, this was something Bruce didn't know. He was desperately unhappy about what he had done abroad. He couldn't bear to come home in disgrace. So," Danny March said, "he didn't."

The truth is, most of us believe in trying to make other people happy only if they can be happy in ways which we approve.

—ROBERT LYND:
Life's Little Oddities
(J. M. Dent & Sons, Ltd.).

"He came home in his uniform with his ribbons on."

"I know."

There was a long silence.

Allie said, "How did you know about the blackmail?"

"He mailed me a letter just before he went home and . . . shot himself."

"Had it been going on for long?"

"It was just starting. Bruce didn't meet any terms. He made no payment. He knew the end of that road, and it wasn't any good. He also knew something else," Danny March said briefly. "As soon as he got the letter from the blackmailer he felt himself slipping. The same sort of rage that had overwhelmed him once began to creep into him again. He was afraid. He didn't know he was ill. He did know he was losing control. He did what he thought was the best thing he could possibly do for his family."

"Was his brain injury curable?"

"Yes. It was pressure only. If he had not been driven to do what he did, he would sooner or later have shown unmistakable symptoms of his trouble and it would have been cured. His wife," Danny said, "is a good friend of mine. His children miss him."

It was time, of course, for the important question. Allie said, "Who could have found out his secret?"

"Two or three of his pals abroad would have known it. It was kept very quiet. They aren't likely to tell, and certainly they wouldn't blackmail him."

"His wife didn't know?"

"The last person in the world he wanted to find it out."

"Did he suggest anything?"

Danny March came back and sat down in his chair. "He said in his letter that he once thought he'd lost a long letter from me in

Out of your dreams... and into your arms

It's the moment you've lived over and over in your dreams...

Your heart catches as the nurse hands you the tiny bundle...warm, moving, alive. The silky eyelashes flutter. A pink fist waves out of the blanket. Your baby... to hold, love, care for...

Part of your mother's-care is to keep his precious baby skin soft, smooth, free from irritations. And now there's a new, better way: Johnson's Baby Lotion!

Use this velvety, snow-white Lotion exactly like baby oil, for all-over skin care. Hospital-proved more effective in preventing prickly heat that may lead to impetigo!

In a famous Chicago hospital different skin-care methods were tested on more than 2000 newborns. With usual methods, as high as 55% of the infants suffered from prickly heat. But with Johnson's Baby Lotion care, this figure dropped to an amazing low of 3%—and there was not one case of impetigo!

Doesn't your baby deserve this new and better protection? Get Johnson's Baby Lotion for him today!

New! Hospitals prove it's better!

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

NEW Rinso WITH SOLIUM PUTS SUNSHINE IN YOUR WASH!

Washes White Clothes Whiter... Colors Brighter...than New!

On rainy days or sunny days...whether clothes are hung indoors or out . . . new Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient, puts a brilliance in your wash never known before the Lever Laboratories discovered Solium!

You'll see white clothes become not just whiter—but whiter than brand new! You'll see washable colors become not just brighter—but brighter than brand new! You'll even see yellowed and grayed clothes made whiter than brand new!

And, the oftener you wash clothes with new Rinso containing Solium, THE WHITER AND BRIGHTER THEY GET! You'll see these amazing results no matter how hard the water. Get new Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient, today.

RINSO IS USED BY MORE WOMEN THAN ANY OTHER WASHDAY SOAP IN THE WORLD

SOLIUM . . . the miracle Sunlight ingredient . . . is an exclusive development of wartime [illegible] famous laboratories of Lever Brothers Company.

New Rinso with Solium . . . So Safe for Clothes . . . So Kind to Hands reply to rather a frantic one from him. It was after he got back, when he was having a tough time to keep his mind straight. I remember my letter; it went into the thing pretty thoroughly. He said he had been carrying it around in his pocket for a while and suddenly missed it—couldn't find it at all—but that it turned up again in another suit. He says he found it in the pocket of his dress clothes; and that struck him as odd, because he hadn't had those clothes on since before the war until that night."

"Until what night?" Allie asked quickly.

Danny looked at her. "Oh," he said. "Yes, I get your point. I don't suppose there are many dress functions in Tressady."

"Can you establish the date?"

"I'll think it out while we go on. Does Bruce's pattern repeat itself in the one you know?"

"It isn't the story that matters, is it? Although I know we must talk plainly when we can. Right now, it's the blackmailing device that matters. In this case Viola got the demand letters and was instructed to send her money to a name at general delivery in New Orleans. Is that what Bruce was told to do too?"

"Why, no," Danny March said. "No. His money was to go to Boston."

Allie stared at him.

"I don't think I like this very much," Danny March said slowly. "Is somebody running a wholesale blackmail business? Is the whole country being eaten into by this filthy thing?"

Allie got up. She twisted her ring round and round, thinking. "I haven't had any experience with blackmail," she said. "I should think it must originate in a horrid mind, in a very tortuous and bitter sort of thinking. I don't like it. I don't like even one case of it in Tressady—or anywhere else—and we know of two and I'm afraid of others." She looked at him. "I said we had to get the right people to help us, you remember?" she said. "Do you—would you mind if we went now to—to my—to see Catherine North? She's very intelligent and she's been . . . I mean, she knows everything about Tressady and she's been away long enough to see it in perspective, and her father is the judge. Would you mind if we went and asked her to help us?"

Danny's eyes were on her face, level and thoughtful. Considering. Allie held his gaze and begged him mutely to meet her on the ground she had chosen.

After a minute he said, "I think that's an excellent idea. I'd like very much to get to know Catherine North. I hear she's a person worth knowing."

Allie said, "This is Danny March, Catherine. I don't think you've met him."

Catherine stood in the doorway of her father's big open living room. She was wearing a white dress. It made her blue eyes very dark. She looked lovely.

HER eyes rested on Danny March for a second before she put out her hand. She smiled, and then said surprisingly, "I haven't met him, but I know who he is, of course."

Danny took her hand. He was a lot taller than Catherine. He stood holding the hand and looking down at her. He said, "And who am I, then, Mrs. North?"

"You're Bruce Whitney's cousin. I saw you at a football game with him in the city—it must be ten years ago. Before I went away, long before. Bruce told me afterward who you were," she said, and colored a little.

"Now, look," Danny March said. "Let me get this straight. You weren't the girl . . . were you the girl wearing the gray-squirrel coat, with a kind of pointed hat wound with a lot of stuff—scarfs or something, blue and pink and purple, like a magician's hat? Was that girl you?"

"I had a hat like that."

There was a little silence.

The ultimate test of the laughing instinct is that a man should be always ready to laugh at himself.

—GAMALIEL BRADFORD: American Portraits (Houghton, Mifflin Co.)

Allie straightened. She said, "Cath we—it's something about Bruce that our minds. We came to ask you to help

"Something about Bruce?" Catherin slowly. "To help you, darling?" Her went from Allie to Danny and back

"It's a horrid sort of story," Allie bravely. "It's the thing Mr. Ma Danny—came to Tressady to uncover

Catherine's hand went to her throat the unconscious, telltale hand. She wa

"SOMETHING is going on in Tressady," persisted. "Danny and I have just go lines straight tonight. I should have working on this a long time ago, becau I almost guessed that something like happening, but I was a coward. Now has come. Too many people are bein tured—there have been two deaths probably everyone who is involved that he—or she—is the only one, and d dream that there is any help anyw Catherine's blue eyes were as dark night sky. Danny March was watchin intently.

"So," Allie went on, "what we've do is collect together a few people we we are sure of and find out who this this—this incredibly evil person is person who doesn't mind, who must like to torture people far beyond the ing point."

The big grandfather clock in th purred, muttered and struck ten muffled hoarse note.

In an almost inaudible voice Ca said, "What is going on in Tressady?

"It's melodramat it's true. Blackma

"And . . . why come to me?"

"Because we nee to help us. You're the people we're s We have to divide sady into two forces and evil, until we c our finger on tha man."

Catherine went on looking at them.

Danny March said in a matter-tone, "There are a great many peo shan't be able to talk to, of cours thing's got to be done with complete s From what we already know, we're with a very tortuous and unscru intelligence, with someone who see know exactly what he's doing. If enlist five or six people to watch an and compare notes and so on, perh help lay a few traps as we go along, make progress."

"Do you . . . suspect anyone?"

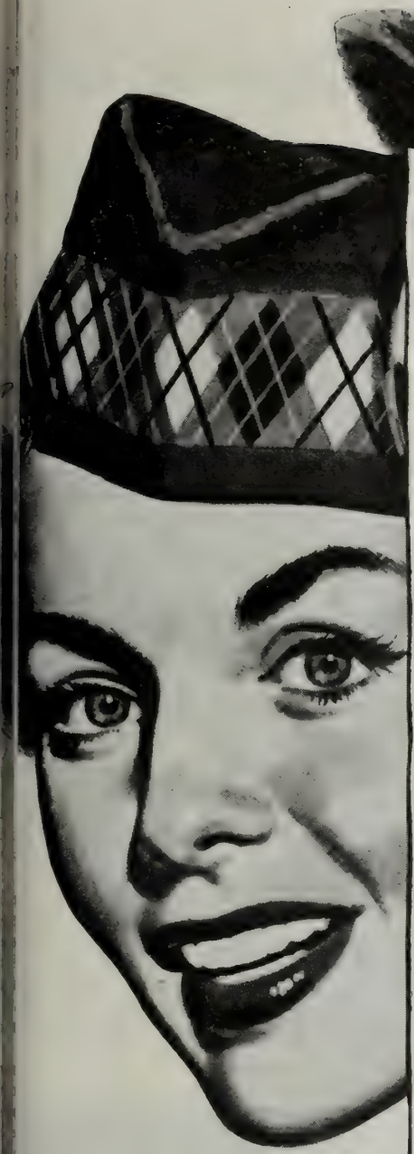
Danny March looked at Allie. not answer. He said, "If we do, it's sort of instinctive suspicion. We h evidence. It's the sort of thing that be attacked very carefully. I don't k actly what is in Allie's mind, but I from what she says that since yo everyone in Tressady, as she does, it be possible for us to go through the see both who might be a victim and very man himself might be."

The color was beginning to come ba Catherine's chalk-white face. She back against the cushion of the sof said, "Do you think that Bruce W was being blackmailed? Is that what saying? Is that why he killed himse you think that?"

"I don't think it. I know it."

"How do you know?"

"He wrote to me just before he . . . He had received only one demand, w did not meet. Unfortunately, he send me the blackmailer's letter; app he burned it almost the moment he because he couldn't bear the sight statements that were in it."



"He wouldn't pay?"

"No."

"But he had a secret so . . . that it was either ——"

"A great many people have Danny March said briefly. "It dep

(Continued on Page 169)

How much will an EASY save you?

Money?

The new Easy Spindrier with Automatic Spin-Rinse is today's first washer value. Costs far less than many washers that do lots less for you!

washing time?

Does a week's wash in less than an hour! One tub washes gently-but-thoroughly, while the other super-rinses, then spins clothes damp-dry!

soap and hot water?

Easy's a miser! Uses hot suds over and over! No need for an oversize water heater. No family fights for hot showers!

set tub rinsing?

Not with Easy! Just turn a tap! Clothes are needle-sprayed in spinning basket. Rinses a full load whiter, brighter in 3 minutes ...with 3 gallons warm water!

wringing time?

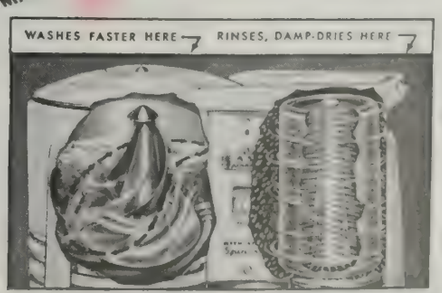
There isn't any! Instead, Easy spins a full load damp-dry at once...as much as 25% drier than tight-set wringer rolls!

drying and ironing?

Clothes are lighter to hang up and dry faster. No dripping. No wringer wrinkles to iron out! No broken buttons!

precious space?

Store Easy anywhere. Just wheel it to kitchen or laundry sink. No set tubs needed. Perfect for cramped living quarters!



cleaning bills?

You'll save dollars every month by safely doing "washable" drapes, blankets, and slipcovers at home! See Easy in action today! Easy Washing Machine Corporation, Syracuse 1, New York.

NEW EASY SPINDRIER WITH AUTOMATIC SPIN-RINSE

Every day more women say—
"It's EASY for me!"

Don't wait—choose now from today's loveliest carpets

Wide, wonderful choice—best values around —ready at your Bigelow dealer's!

STAND IN THE DOORWAY of the room in your house that needs a new carpet most. Take a good look.

Then close your eyes and picture the same room transformed with a beautiful new Bigelow Carpet. Imagine the perfect pattern, the just-right color. Hold that dream in your mind (you can open your eyes!) and hurry to your Bigelow dealer!

Glowing array of colors—superb patterns! Like a solid color? Find today's newest, loveliest shades! A pattern? Everything from 18th century florals to smart modern leaf design! An unusual texture? So many luxurious ones! No wonder women say Bigelow makes the best styles—and more of them!

Left: Glowing beauty through color and texture. Bigelow's Sonata 2103-9201. Around $18.95 a sq. yd.*

Quality that means years of wear and pleasure! Every Bigelow Carpet is made of fine imported wools, blended to give greatest richness, luster, wear. These wools are kept "lively" in the making—so that your Bigelow Carpet keeps its like-new springiness and good looks long after you've forgotten the year you bought it!

Below: An unusual carved effect surface. Bigelow's splendid Sovereign 10410; around $11.50 a sq. yd.*

For name of your local Bigelow dealer, call Western Union by number. Ask for Operator 25.

Prices from $5.95 a sq. yd. to $18.95! Pay what you please—you have plenty of choice at every price level! No need to put off till "sometime" the Bigelow Carpet that will give your home a needed lift-in-loveliness right now. Don't put up with shabby rugs or bare floors for another tick of the clock—see your Bigelow dealer now!

Below: This expensive-looking embossed effect carpet is Bigelow's Fervak 9419, a real value. Around $7.50 a sq. yd.*

*Slightly higher in West.

LIVELY WOOL SPRINGS BACK UNDERFOOT

Bigelow

Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see . . . quality you can trust . . . since 1825

(Continued from Page 166)

u look at life whether you think they rible or not. Unfortunately, we are is kind as we might be, nor as humble.
the people who are most frightened blackmailer are not the guilty, but ocent people; not the conniving evil but the unfortunate victims of cir-nce."

erine looked at Allie. "Who else?"

a."

erine nodded. Then she said, "Are g to the police?"

ay come to that at the end," Danny said judiciously. "But I went over my mind before I came up here my-decided that the moment the police to the thing, the blackmailer would ght, stop his activities—for the time and perhaps be so completely clear
'd never get him. Then, later on, rt up again."

erine said, "Don't you care that ust have done something dreadful, ng he couldn't bear to have told?"

hand moved on her knee. She fixed s imploringly on Danny March's is own eyes lifted and caught her He made no acknowledgment. Insaid:

t he did was his own business. That's t, isn't it? It's between him and er he calls
s neither my nor that of we're anxious ver, to judge anyone else.
n't care."

rine got up.
t over to the dow beyond d piano. She th a hand on g draperies, lown toward

y March Allie, a long turned and t Catherine, concerned,
ul.

a long time
e came back.
ed at the end
ano and faced them. She said with
, "I can see that Allie would know.
e she—this is something else; I'm be generous, Allie—but if only I ve been left out. . . . I see that would say that, and that some-
. . but I can hardly believe that ld ——"

cked her fingers together. She felt l.

't know what you're talking about," March told Catherine. "If there's ism of Allie implied, you could cross you don't want to have any part le sortie into the hard nasty world, n't. I didn't see what good you'd ay. Allie was sure you could help in she hasn't made clear to me. An er's a nice comfortable place, Mrs.
t's a good place to stay when there asant storms blowing up."

at him, Catherine's face changed.
d again at Allie, and suddenly the an to roll down her cheeks.

fool," she said. "I might have Forgive me, Allie. Forgive me,
When the worst of the storm
Catherine wiped her eyes. She Danny March, "She brought you use—not because I'd be any good except that she's somehow guessed being blackmailed too."

was a long silence.

ne got up. She went out into the listened. She came back, shutting again behind her. She said, "I've rible shock. I thought I was the and now you tell me about Bruce
. . . and maybe others. I'll help course I will. But . . . I won't ever tell why I'm being blackmailed. I'll never tell that. But I'll tell you all the blackmailing part. Only . . . what happened, what I did, I can't ever let anyone know that. That's why I—I've been paying and paying and paying: because nobody must ever know, not even Allie." Then, to Allie, "You did guess? Didn't you?"

"I knew that there was something frightening you. I didn't know what it was."

"Allie, somebody knows! Somebody already knows! Don't you see how terrifying that is? Nobody can possibly know—but somebody does. I wouldn't tell even you, because I made up my mind I would never tell anyone, and it's all over and hidden deep, deep. It happened long ago, in England. But here, in Tressady, somebody knows."

"Are you sure it's somebody in Tressady?" Danny March said.

"It's someone who knows every move I make. It's someone who can say 'When you go to Riverport on Friday, cash a check there for two hundred dollars and get the money in ten-dollar bills. Don't cash your check in Tressady.'"

"You have this letter? These letters?"

"I burn them. I am instructed to burn them immediately."

"What do you do with the money?"

"I send it away. But it must come back. There must be some way it comes back to the man in Tressady."

"Where do you send it? To New Orleans? Boston?"

"To Dallas. To Eli Pardell, General Delivery, Dallas. Why do you say New Orleans? Or Boston?"

"Bruce," Allie explained. "And Viola."

Catherine looked at Allie. "Why was Viola being blackmailed?" Then, "Oh, I'm sorry. Of course I mustn't ask that. I don't want to know. That isn't what's important, is it? What's important is to find this man—this devil. We needn't even think why each of us is—what each of us has done."

Danny March got up and started pacing the floor. He ran his hands through his hair again. He said, "Maybe it's going to be tough unless we have all the information. You see, the catch is . . . how does this single person know so much about all three of you? In what position is he that he can discover all your secrets? You say nobody can possibly know what it is you don't want to tell. But this man knows. How did he find out? In Bruce's case we have a few facts. In Viola's we have some and may have access to a few more. But in neither case can we even begin to see as yet how the information got into the blackmailer's hands; how he has access to the hidden depths of people's minds."

Allie said, "Catherine, are you sure you have no papers anywhere with part of whatever this thing is set down in black and white? Or any other tangible evidence?"

"There are no papers. There is nothing."

"You've told nobody?"

"Nobody."

"When did the blackmailing start?"

"I got the first letter a year ago last February. I've had six since. My mother's little bit of money is . . . almost gone. When it's all gone I—maybe I don't know what I'm going to do." She put her hands over her face.

Danny March said, "There's something funny here."

Allie was thinking. She said, "Catherine . . . did the letters begin to come just when you were getting better after you had pneumonia?"

"It—the first one came the day I first got up. I remember because . . . I was

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

High Wall

By Felix N. Stefanile

The child we taught to take his steps,
Who came to us, led on by love,
Has grown a man to walk with men.
And what can I be dreaming of
To seek to hold a trusting boy
Who used to run to us in tears
At sadness long ago, who now
Stands barred from us by the tall years?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Invite new Beauty into your Home

WITH NEW IMPERIAL WASHABLE WALLPAPERS

You'll greet the latest colors and lovely patterns of the 1949 Imperial Washable Wallpapers with enthusiasm. Every room will respond to their delightful freshness with a beauty you hadn't realized was there. Each paper is "Color-Locked"—guaranteed for three years to withstand room exposure without fading, and to clean satisfactorily in accordance with instructions in every roll. Look for the silver label that says the finest in wallpaper.

Jean McLain's "Color Harmonizer" has an important place in your decorating plans. Send 25¢ for a copy of this inspiring booklet. Imperial Paper and Color Corporation, Department L-58, Glens Falls, N. Y.

TO START THE DAY RIGHT

have your breakfast table brilliantly ensembled with Imperial's Cape Cod crystal . . . the resplendent hand-crafted tableware that serves so royally for family dining and entertaining every hour 'round the clock.

Rich in beauty, low in cost, Cape Cod is sold in fine stores everywhere. Patent-protected pattern, hand-crafted at Imperial Glass Corporation, Bellaire, Ohio.

feeling so miserably weak." She stopped and stared up at Allie.

Allie said steadily to Danny March, "She was very ill. She was delirious a great deal. The doctor stayed here practically day and night."

Catherine went on staring. Her hand went up slowly to her lips.

"That's what I was wondering," Allie said gently. "That's what I can't help wondering."

On Wednesday morning Mrs. Carling moved about her house after breakfast with speed and purpose. It was only a two-hour drive to Riverport, but she wanted to be there and back long before dinnertime. She had planned a really wonderful dinner for tonight, something that Evan might really enjoy. Old Mrs. Purvey, out at Burside, had sent in some of her delicious pressed chicken. With it there were going to be potatoes, boiled and whipped to a white foam with thick cream and lots of butter; and there was to be asparagus, the last of the season, with hollandaise. And for dessert the wonderful ice cream she had made early this morning and left in the freezing tray. The chocolate sauce for the ice cream was made, too, in a pitcher in the refrigerator. It was the sort of dinner that ought to tempt Evan's difficult appetite.

She was in the glassed-in porch on the west of the house, straightening up her workbasket and setting the three half-finished dolls on the shelf beside her big, soft, armless sewing chair, when she heard Norah coming downstairs.

"Hoo-hoo," Norah said. "Oh, dear, Louisa, why didn't you call me? I'm getting to be such a sleepyhead! I'll be just too awfully spoiled when I have to get back to work."

"It isn't late," Mrs. Carling said. "I've left your strawberries and cream in the refrigerator, Norah, and the butter is on a plate beside it. You don't mind if I go on with things and skip right off as soon as I can? I want to get back quite early."

"I don't mind a bit," Norah said, yawning and holding her skimpy blue housecoat around her spare figure. "I think you should have left all the work for me, though, instead of doing every single bit of it yourself. You spoil me. Not that I don't love to be spoiled, Louisa," she said. "It's a wonderful treat for a girl to be spoiled. I just don't know why you're so good to me. I just don't."

"Well, you work pretty hard," Mrs. Carling said. She smoothed out a pile of small pieces of fabric and laid them back in the basket. "It's time I went up to town," she said. "I've practically nothing pretty left to work with. My friends up there collect me lovely things, don't they? I can't bear to work with ugly materials."

"You have such wonderful taste, Louisa, and such an appreciation of beauty."

Mrs. Carling looked at her thoughtfully. "You don't want to come with me, do you, Norah? Perhaps you'd like the ride. I expect to be back before five. On account of dinner."

Norah flushed a little. "Oh, I thought I'd told you, Louisa. I've got a date for this afternoon. I was sure I'd told you. I'm—that is, Mr. Pottle is taking me for a walk. We thought we'd go out along the river. He's awfully interested in birds, you know, and there are so many this year. So we thought we'd go at one o'clock when the store closes. He's going to have the people at the café pack us a lunch and we'll eat it out on the riverbank. I'm so sorry; of course I'd have loved to go with you, but I can't disappoint him, can I?"

"Not for the world," Mrs. Carling Then, "He's getting quite sweet on Norah. I think he's really interested."

Norah flushed still deeper. "Oh, do y she said. "Really, do you? He—he do say anything, you know. But I have s lot of him, one way and another, the while. For quite a while, really."

"What does he talk about?" Mrs. Ca said mildly.

"Well, he's got a very good mind, know. He talks about all sorts of thin he's very entertaining. He knows a deal about almost everything. And terribly interested in everything—pe and places and things that happen—so interested that he's awfully eas talk to."

"I wonder where he learned so much a things," Mrs. Carling said speculati "Did he ever tell you?"

"He never talks about himself at a don't really know a thing about him. S times I've quite thought that he was r secretive, Louisa."

"Perhaps he's just shy," Mrs. Ca said. "But if you think he's really ge serious, my dear, as I do, perhaps it's a time you found out something about It isn't wise to go further without being of what you're building on. Why don't just try asking him point-blank wher comes from and how he happened to co Tressady? Maybe like it. Maybe he's shy."

"I think I migh it," Norah said. " all, men love to about themselves. they? Yes, I thi might just try, Lo I'll tell you all a it if he tells me thing."

She went out an her breakfast, still tering. Mrs. Ca got herself upst with considerable culty, and took off print housecoat. wrapped her thin d brown silk dress arc her and tied it. It the only style she could wear any m this tentlike wrap-around.

It took her a long time to dress, to ge stockings fastened and her shoes tied. couldn't wear pumps; she had to wear h shapeless, flat-heeled monstrosities that l up the front and held her feet firmly. were extremely ugly; they made her a look fatter than ever. Not that it matter now.

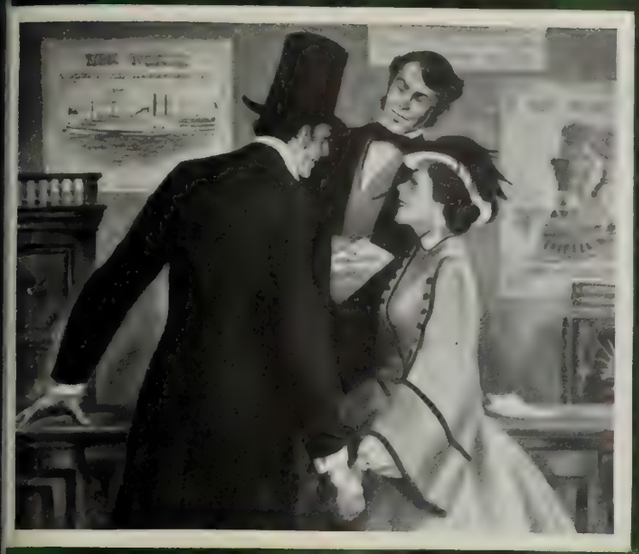
Norah came upstairs again and went her room. She would be there a long t She spent hours in front of the mirror, t her hair out in new ways, admiring her fi

Mrs. Carling was ready at last. She up her purse, her voluminous empty s ping bag with its heavy drawstrings, g clean handkerchief from her dresser. went over to her bed. She took up the elaborately dressed French-marquise sitting there propped against her fat pillows. She lifted the doll, examined it c fully, and held it for a second, fondling i

She went out into the hall. She sai Norah from the open door, "I glued doll's wig last night and the glue won't s this heat. I'm putting her in the refrige Don't touch her, will you?" And t "Good-by, Norah, I'm off. See you at ner unless you elope!" and went on d stairs to the sound of Norah's ridicu giggling.

It was hot driving to the city. Long be she was twenty miles on the road the black circles of perspiration had spread d the sides of the brown dress. The seat very confining; she had very little roo move. She didn't like driving. But t were a good many things she didn't that had to be done.

(Continued on Page 172)



WITH THE CHILDREN

After a discussion on imagination our young son said, "But there are still two things I can't imagine and they are: father being a newborn baby not knowing anything and me grown up like father knowing everything."

"When you get disappointed it gives you a dark-black feeling inside."

"I'm glad we brought all these shells back from the beach. It doesn't make you so lonesome for the good times when you bring part of your vacation back with you."

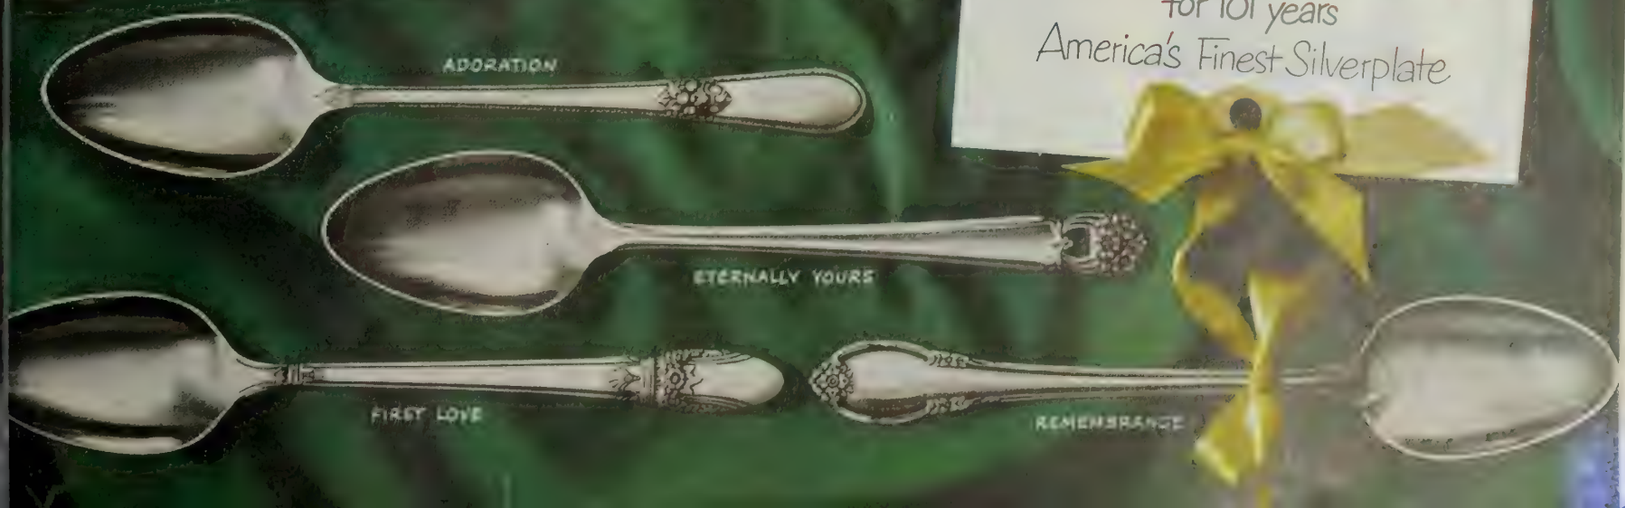
—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

It's still the thing to do...

It's still a happy tradition, as it was in 1847, to plan a wedding trip. And even if it's not by stagecoach or new-fangled wood-burning train, it's just as exciting! Almost as exciting as making plans for your home-to-be...

It's still the thing to own...

More brides choose and treasure 1847 Rogers Bros. than any other silverplate. A beautiful tradition for over 100 years!



Today the silverplate with the yearmark "1847" has a perfection of detail and finish, an extra height and depth of ornament usually found only in solid silver.

52-piece service for eight, $64.75, with chest. No Federal tax. Same price as in 1945!

TUNE IN: "THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET," SUNDAY, 5:30 P.M., E.S.T., N.B.C.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

for 101 years
America's Finest Silverplate

LOVELY! LOVELY!

Jacquelines

designed by WOHL

Lovely—but more than that. It's the beautiful styles, plus the fine quality materials, the superb workmanship and perfect fit that make Jacquelines so popular with women who love smart shoes. The new Spring styles are prettier than ever, in all the new colors...in suedes and calfskins. There are no finer shoes than Jacquelines at their price. 7.95 to 9.95

(Continued from Page 170)

She turned into Miller Street at last and drove on to its junction with Lawton. She hurried the car down the broad thoroughfare until the traffic thickened, then slowed to get down the hill and on beyond St. Edward's. At a narrow street there she turned and came in a block or two to a row of old red-brick houses, long past their prime.

The house at the end of the block had its own private driveway. It was a smaller house than some of the others. The drive went in along the side and curved round again to make its exit on the other street. It was an unused drive, once graveled but now grown up with weeds and grass. Mrs. Carling drove the car in, rounded the curve, lumbered out of the seat directly in front of a high battered gate in a tall board fence, let herself inside the gate and walked up the narrow cement path to a side door opening off a gray, half-ruined veranda.

It was some minutes before her ring at the old-fashioned bell was answered. Then the door opened, and Ida stood peering at her with her half-blind stare.

"It's me, Aunt Ida," Mrs. Carling said, and moved forward impatiently. Ida was getting deaf as well as blind.

"Oh, Louisa," Ida said quaveringly. "How very nice to have you, my dear. Do come in. I was just having a tiny nap."

Mrs. Carling pushed her way into the dark musty hall. She went on into the square, dim sitting room at the front of the house.

She said, "My goodness, Aunt Ida, it is dark in here. I suppose the light hurts your eyes, does it?"

"Yes, it makes me quite miserable," Ida said, and groped forward to her chair. "Do sit down, my dear, it tires me so to see you standing," she said automatically. "You haven't been here for such a long time, Louisa. Have you been well?"

"Well, but busy," Mrs. Carling said.

"I can't just remember when you were here before," Ida said hesitantly. "I was trying to think yesterday. I don't remember whether it was just before my birthday or just after."

"It's been quite a while," Mrs. Carling said. "I've been busy. There was a bazaar, for one thing, and I had twenty dolls to do. And, of course, the preserving. And Evan is overworked these days and needs a great many things done for him."

"Dear Evan," Ida said absently. "He was here one day not long ago, you know, Louisa. I thought he seemed quite tired."

"Evan was here?"

"Yes, didn't he tell you, dear? I haven't seen him for such a very long time. I got quite a start when he came to the door. I did think Evan looked so very tired, Louisa."

Louisa sat down carefully in the heavy carved wooden chair beside the table in the corner. She said, "I suppose these are parcels. Is this all there were?"

"Yes, only about a dozen, dear. It's summer, and, I suppose, people are at the everywhere. I was disappointed, too, cause Mrs.—oh, dear, who was it?—yes, Mrs. Arnold—she put a little notice the Missionary Monthly asking all ladies anywhere to send nice piece material. Perhaps we'll have more month or two, dear."

"Did you ask her to put the notice

"Yes; but don't worry, Louisa. I was careful not to say who wanted them. I you are concerned about Evan's name. really very careful, Louisa. I know I'm ting awfully absent-minded, but wh comes to remembering about Evan, I sh always be very careful."

Mrs. Carling did not answer. She op her cloth bag and began dropping the pa in. They were of many different sizes shapes; there was one almost as big as a pillow, probably a real treasure, and long heavy one.

"I think that one has a doll inside," said, leaning forward and peering dim the parcel. "I was really almost tempt open it, Louisa. I think there's a doll i

"Well, it's probably broken, if ther Mrs. Carling said shortly. She pulle string around the end of the parcel an it off. There was a doll, a very ord thing with its wig half off and a leg br It was wrapped around with dozens doll clothes, some of them not very Mrs. Carling regarded them fastidi "Heavens," she said. "The only thing with this is to burn it. I'll just drop it basket, Aunt Ida—will you put it out your rubbish? I won't work with trash."

"Oh, dear," Ida sighed. "I really tho it might be something awfully nice, I've often thought that those parcels really terribly interesting, coming from e where, filled with unknown things—piec people's wedding dresses and commu frocks. I've almost been tempted to them sometimes, when the days get d

"Well, you see what you'd probably f Mrs. Carling said. "And you'd probably the sender's name if you did open the have to thank them all, you know."

"Yes, so you do, I suppose," Ida wistfully. "How you do keep in t Louisa. You are such a hard worker."

Mrs. Carling got up. "I've got t along," she said. "There are one or things I promised to do for Evan. I down again in a week or two, Aunt Ida really getting short of things for the and this isn't a great lot of material, few little parcels. Perhaps there will be of them soon."

(Continued on Page 174)

"According to the price index, you haven't spent as much on me as you should this year."

DOROTHY GRAY GALLERY OF FASCINATING WOMEN—ONE OF A SERIES

Mrs. Stanley G. Chamberlain of Boston, the former Esther Carolyn Dawes Nice, descendant of the early patriots Thomas and William Dawes. Portrait by William Fields.

...uty Basics... ...or skin with kiss-appeal

...viting skin isn't ...matter of years alone. You can ...ave it... you can keep it ...n in later years! ...ollow the famous Dorothy Gray ...y Basics routine: ... Cleanse, (2) Stimulate, (3) Lubricate ...ur precious skin.

1. Cleanse

Dry-Skin Cleanser . . . $1 to $4. Salon Cold Cream for normal skin, $1 to $4. Liquefying Cleansing Cream for oily skin, $1 to $3.50.

2. Stimulate

...ge Flower Skin Lotion ...ry or normal skins, $1 ...3.75. Texture Lotion ...ily skin, $1 to $3.75.

3. Lubricate

Special Dry-Skin Mixture for dry or normal skins, $2.25 to $8. Suppling Cream for oily skin, $1 to $2.75. (All prices plus tax)

Dorothy Gray

THE DOROTHY GRAY SALON • 445 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK

(Continued from Page 172)

"Perhaps there will, dear," Ida said vaguely. "We'll hope so, I'm sure."

Mrs. Carling did her errands for the doctor, one or two for herself, and drove home again through the sweltering afternoon. She turned up Main Street off the highway and stopped before the post office. She twisted the combination of their letter box and took out three envelopes—one a bill from the electric company, and two for Evan, that looked as if they might contain checks.

Evan was at home. He was lying on the couch in the living room, with a glass of cold milk on the table beside him. Mrs. Carling's eyes went to it quickly. She handed him the envelopes. While he was opening them she went out to the kitchen. She opened the refrigerator, lifted out the French doll. She laid it carelessly on the table. She went back to the living room.

"Money?" she inquired.

"No," he said. "Just excuses."

Allie sat on the slope of the hill at the lower edge of her garden, looking down the river. Beside her Danny March lay on his back, chewing meditatively on a wide stem of grass. He was in gray flannels today, and a blue shirt with the neck open. He didn't look very stern and lawyerish. He didn't look much like a man intent on a serious and unpleasant problem.

He said, "What's Catherine really like, Allie?" and blew hard on the grass stem.

"Haven't you ever heard her play?"

"No. Well—maybe when I was walking past there the other night. But it was too far away to hear very clearly."

"She's all in her music. She's very deep and very intense. Maybe she's a little more wrapped up in her own thinking and doing than some people like, but she's a musician. She isn't like the other girls in Tressady and never was. I love her. I think she's wonderful."

"She's very beautiful, with that silvery hair and the dark-blue eyes. And the black lashes. She looks like a Frenchwoman. She's got a Frenchwoman's figure too," Danny said thoughtfully.

"Her mother was a Frenchwoman. She was beautiful. The judge almost stopped being alive when she died. I mean . . . he hasn't really been terribly interested in anything since, not until Catherine brought little Christopher home, anyway."

Danny blew on the grass stem again. It shrieked. "Allie?"

"M-m-m?"

"What are you like?"

Allie looked down at him quickly. He was intent on the grass stem. "Why," she said, "I'm just like I am. I'm just what you see."

He sat up abruptly and brushed off the back of his head. He turned and grinned at her. "You know," he said, "I think that's true. I think it's remarkable, but true."

"I don't see anything remarkable about it," Allie told him, and bent forward suddenly to look away down the river path and see who the two people walking there were. It was Horace Pottle and Norah James. His store was closed and she wasn't on a case. Horace Pottle and Norah James. She said suddenly, "I wish we could bring Ralph Harland and Catherine together and make them both understand that—that what matters isn't what they did, or what Viola or Bruce did. I wish we could. Maybe we'd find out more from them if they were together and would talk freely. Catherine gets so tense when we try to talk to her. Maybe it would have been better if I had gone to her alone . . . but she's evaded me so often, I felt we had force her hand."

"She needn't mind my knowing anyth about her. Lawyers are trained to h pretty grim stuff and not quail much. I do care what she did, anyway. It would make any difference to me."

"No," Allie said gently. "Nor to m

Danny glanced at her as if he intended say something, but he thought better of Allie said, "And the trouble with Ralph that he's so brokenhearted about Viola t his mind isn't working. And, of course, h expecting to get one of those letters hims any day now."

Danny said, "He can't have much mon He isn't worth blackmailing. If our ma from Tressady he'd know that. It wou hardly be worth his while."

"I've got a funny feeling about it," Al said slowly. "There isn't much money Tressady. The amount you'd get rea wouldn't be worth while—not more than few thousand dollars. There can't be ma people with horrid secrets and there c tainly aren't any really rich people. I've g a feeling that—that this man isn't in t for money."

"For what, then? Power?"

"Power, and hatr Because he hates p ple. Because he li to torture people. frightens me to thi it, but I can't h thinking it."

Danny said slow "A man who wants make other people m erable is usually o who's been made mi erable himself, one wa or another."

"I know."

Horace Pottle an Norah James cam nearer along the rive bank. They moved ou of the trees, saunterin along in the sunligh and then were hidde again. Norah was ver gay, talking with h hands, throwing h head back and laugh ing.

Danny said, "We ought to get air-ma answers within a week from our postmast friends in New Orleans and Boston an Dallas."

"Do you really think there'll be much?

"Don't see how there can be. We've g two names to go on. I wish Bruce hadn burned his letter; then we'd have thre Catherine sent her money, ten-dollar bil between cardboard, wrapped with crush tissue paper and sealed in a brown envelop to this Eli Pardell in Dallas. Viola, accordi to Ralph, sent her money to Iles Banbarr New Orleans. Odd name. There's somethi funny about both those names," Danny sai "I can't quite put my finger on what bothe me."

"Eli Pardell sounds like a name. Il Banbarr doesn't. It sounds made up."

"Well, we've asked the postmasters the to tell us what happens to those letter Maybe they're forwarded. That's about a much as we can do for the moment. Thos cities are so far away," Danny said thought fully. "Our man isn't taking any chances o anybody visiting one of them and checkin up."

"Do you think there's a confederate i each place?"

"That doesn't make sense, does it, Allie There isn't enough money involved. No, think there might be a smart system of hav ing the mail forwarded, though. If we ca get any leads as to where it goes—and asked the postmaster in each city very urgently to look into the matter—we migh make progress. Meanwhile, we'll have t keep on with our local testing." He lay bac on the grass again. "Don't you know any thing about Doctor Carling before he cam here?"

(Continued on Page 176)

The universally used expression for the marriage ceremony, tying the knot, originated from early wedding customs. Until comparatively recent times, the taking of a wife did not involve going before a clergyman, priest or civic official. Especially in the East, the head of the family performed all the functions of both religious and civil authorities.

In many sections, a patriarch performed the marriage ceremony by laying his hands on the bride and groom in blessing, then knotting together their sleeves or two corners of their flowing robes. No vows were exchanged; the act of tying the knot symbolized the permanence of the union. Even today, in certain sections of India, the priest or holy man ties together the garments of the bride and groom at the conclusion of the marriage ceremony.

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

History, colour and romance are all associated with Canada's red-coated "Mounties"

That away-from-home vacation you've been promising yourself is waiting for you over the border in Canada. You'll explore fascinating cities. Or relax with kindred spirits at a luxury resort. Or motor through "picture country". Or cruise mighty waterways . . . Here's a whole new world to play in. Canada adds exciting new flavour to all your fun. You'll love every minute of it! Write today for detailed information, or use the coupon below.

Swim, sail, suntan in a land o' lakes

Woollens! China! Colourful native crafts!

All nature calls you to fun in the sun

7 VACATION "POINTERS" — ALL POINTING TO CANADA

1. New — interesting — "foreign" atmosphere. 2. A million square miles of scenic playground. 3. Friendly cities, hospitable people. 4. Friends and relatives waiting to welcome you. 5. Lots to do—sports, recreation, sightseeing. 6. Near — easy to get to — no border "red tape". 7. Your vacation dollar buys more, goes further.

NO PASSPORT NEEDED.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL BUREAU
Ottawa, Canada D. Leo Dolan, Director

Please send me your illustrated book
"CANADA, VACATIONS UNLIMITED."

Name .....
(PLEASE PRINT)
Street and No. .....
Town ..... State .....

011164906

THE PERFUME THAT INSPIRED A BALLET

one of the most beloved perfumes

Perfume $18.50, $12.50, $7.50, $3.50.
Eau de Toilette $3.75, $2.50.
Sachet Powder $1.75.
Bath Softener $3.50, $2.50.
Talcum Powder $1.00.
Dusting Powder $2.00.
(prices plus tax)

SAFE EYE-GENE
Relieves TIRED EYES In SECONDS!

Wonderful EYE-GENE! Just two drops in your eyes that are tired or irritated from wind, glare, overwork, lack of sleep, reading, driving or movies—will relieve, rest, refresh, clear them in seconds. Use it every day. EYE-GENE is safe and gentle. 25¢, 60¢, and $1.00 in handy eye dropper bottles at Druggists everywhere. Insist on EYE-GENE!

Weary, irritated one minute...

Relieved, rested, cleared the next!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MAKE $$$$ EASILY
Selling greeting cards, napkins, coasters, stationery and a complete line with name on. Costs nothing to try. Send for samples and Selling Plan on approval.
MERIT
370 PLANE ST., DEPT. B, NEWARK, N. J.

COULD YOU USE MORE MONEY?
MAKE UP TO 100% CASH PROFIT SELLING FRIENDS GREETING CARDS
Extra bonus. Write for free samples. Name Imprinted Xmas Assortments, Personals, Name Labels, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, Assortments, Religious, Birthdays, etc. Exceptional Gift Wrappings. Many others. Write for samples. Name Imprinted Xmas Assortments, Personals, Name Labels, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, Assortments, Religious, Birthdays, etc. Exceptional Gift Wrappings. Many others. Write for free samples. Name Imprinted Xmas Assortments, Personals, Name Labels, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, Assortments, Religious, Birthdays, etc. Exceptional Gift Wrappings. Many others. Write for free samples. Name Imprinted Xmas Assortments, Personals, Name Labels, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, Assortments, Religious, Birthdays, etc. Exceptional Gift Wrappings. Many others. Write for free samples. Name Imprinted Xmas Assortments, Personals, Name Labels, Everyday Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, Assortments, Religious, Birthdays, etc. Exceptional Gift Wrappings. Many others. Write for free samples.
FREE SAMPLES
FLORAL DECORATED and PERSONAL STATIONERY
PILGRIM GREETING CARD CO.
111 Summer St., Dept. L-1, Boston, Mass.

(Continued from Page 174)

"There's never seemed to be any mystery about it, but we don't really know. I think he may have come from Baltimore—he's said one or two things that sound likely."

"I went to his office this morning," Danny said, "and there's no string of framed diplomas hanging there, as there seems to be in most doctors' offices. Funny. But . . . I find myself extremely unwilling to distrust him, Allie. Medical men are usually pretty decent eggs. We had some fine ones in the Army. They're strong on ethics. I can't see him as our villain, although of course we can't take chances. I telephoned somebody I know in Riverport this morning, by the way, to check up on Carling through the Medical Association—rather from there than here. Carling's a very good surgeon, from what everyone says; good diagnostician and medical man too. Why should he stoop to blackmail? It doesn't make sense. I am not sold on the idea."

"But if Catherine hasn't told anyone her story; if she has always, always been on guard, as she says—and I know that's true, because I've never had an inkling of it—and if, as she says, she dreamed about it all the time she was sick, and was always waking up frightened that she'd been talking about it . . . and the doctor was there such a lot, Danny ——"

He said abruptly, "What about the nurse?"

Allie stared at him. She shook her head at last. "Oh, that would be impossible," she said. "Norah James nursed her. She's an awful fool, Danny. Really, she is. She's a good nurse, but she isn't capable of blackmail. She wouldn't think out any of the clever parts; she wouldn't be interested unless—well," Allie said determinedly, "unless there was a chance of finding a man in it. She's man-crazy. She's not a blackmailer, not Norah James. Look," she said quickly, "she's right down there now, with Horace Pottle. Look at her, giggling and acting silly, like a thirteen-year-old with her first boy. Can you see a blackmailer in her?"

Danny looked. Norah was sidling along the path in a very coquettish way, holding back her skirts and teetering on her toes. Mr. Pottle was smiling at her. He was turned toward Danny and Allie, but he probably could not see them so far up the bank. The sun glinted on his glasses.

Danny turned to Allie. "And who," he said slowly, "is Horace Pottle?"

Viola Treherne's funeral was on Thursday afternoon at two o'clock in the Baptist church down beside the skating rink. It was only a small church, and it was filled to overflowing for the ceremony. Everyone in Tressady was there; most businesses closed for an hour so that employer and employees could go and pay their last respects to the dead woman and to her living husband.

AFTERWARD Allie went back to the office. It was just as the boys came in for the loads of papers that she saw Norah James coming down Main Street. Allie went out almost without thinking and waited in the doorway. She smiled at Norah as the girl approached.

"Oh, hello, Allie," Norah said. "This is your busy day, isn't it?"

"We're just finished," Allie said. "I thought I'd just step out and get a soda, or something. How would you like to come with me?"

"Oh, I'd just love to," Norah said. "I never do get a chance to see anything of you, you're always so busy—and I usually am too," she said. "I'm going on a case again in the morning—old Mrs. Fawcett, out at the crossing—so I've really been making the most of my time."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Patient

By May Richstone

The husband who bears a little pain
Stanchly, assuming it will pass,
And thinks it beneath him to complain
Doesn't exist, alas!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"I didn't know she was ill."

"Well, they'll probably send in the n to you next week. Of course I shouldn't e tell it, but I know you won't quote She's very ill—probably won't get out of again."

"Let's go in here to Berger's," Allie m mured. "It's quieter," She led the way i the dusky little ice-cream parlor and t tioned Norah into one of the wire-bac chairs drawn up to a round marble-top table. "What would you like, Norah? think I'm going to have a chocolate sod

"Oh, I don't think I'll have chocolat Norah said. "We had the most marvel chocolate sauce last night on our ice cre I don't know how Louisa makes everyth taste so good."

ALLIE ordered. She said, "I imagine y feel badly today. Viola was a patient yours once, wasn't she?"

"Yes, when the baby was born. She ha bad time, poor girl. But she wasn't rela at all. You know, I always tell them, if o they'd relax it would be so much eas Although," she said thoughtfully, "ma its easier to say than do. I don't think plan on having very many babies, when married. I've seen too much of it."

"Nurses see a all right," Allie s "They know j about everythi don't they?"

"Oh, not eve thing. But you c stay in a house days and weeks end, nursing a s person, without f ing out a lot of thi You'd have to be bl and deaf and du if you didn't. But course nurses do talk. Professionalet ics, you know. T just don't talk. L doctors."

"And a good thing, too," Allie s "You've got so much power, really, if y wanted to make trouble." She laugh "You remember that long excited st Catherine North told you when she was ill, winter before last?"

"Long excited story?" Norah said blank Then, "Oh. Oh, you mean—oh. But thought—I mean to say, that is ——"

"Catherine's got such an imaginatio Allie went on. "She has often said she w going to write someday. I imagine she w too, unless she goes away again and g into concert work. I doubt if she'll le Christopher and her father for a w though." She took a sip of her soda. "A way, she was busy working out a story w she took sick—and she says it went on a on in her mind all the time she was ill, a she was sure she'd told you about People do talk a lot when they are delir don't they?" Allie looked across at Nor Norah's eyes were round, a little puzzl She said, "Yes, but they don't usually m very much sense. I mean—usually it's just jumbled. Of course, Mrs. North's st was jumbled too, but . . . she kept com back to it, you know." She leaned forw "I can't tell you how glad I am that brought this up," she said. "You know, t was such a very extraordinary story she k telling me, about her husband trying to her and her stabbing him and being tried murder, so very extraordinary, and kept calling me Allie, of course, as if thought I was you—and for a while I thou she was telling me the truth. Isn't t ridiculous? Of course I see it all now."

After a minute Allie said, "I'm sure s write it someday. It actually did happen two or three other people—parts of it mean. And she was putting it together her mind. It's a good thing you didn't b lieve her, and maybe tell somebody ab it. That would have started a very qu sort of rumor—it could make a lot of trou for everybody. Couldn't it?"

(Continued on Page 179)

Even the huskiest baby's skin needs protective, tender care.

Watch Tenderly over his Thinner Skin

ou use only the blandest soap for baby's daily ath. His skin is so tender, so much thinner than ours—some soaps might easily irritate it. Recent udies show baby's skin would be more sensitive, e "hurt" sooner. From his head right down to is tiny toes, your baby's skin needs regular, pro- ctive care.

You really don't mind changing him—because it's important to keep that delicate skin comfortably dry. Be sure, too, that you always choose his bathroom tissue for 3 "tender skin" qualities. Old-linen softness that won't chafe. High absorbency for really thorough cleansing. The right amount of strength to resist tearing or shredding even when moist.

More mothers every day are finding this ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissue. ScotTissue is gentle as your own touch on baby's tender skin. Up to 6 months, try padding his diapers with 20 or more sheets of fluffed-up ScotTissue. Just flush away the soiled tissue. Fewer diapers for you to launder—keeps baby happy too.

Trade Marks "ScotTissue," "soft as old linen" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SCOTTISSUE IS SOFT AS OLD LINEN

Every shade of red under the sun!

Revlon's

newest pinks, golden reds, clear reds for day...
deepest reds for night...in nail enamel and lipstick

Reds for every hour...every occasion...every costume...for the smartest matching lips and fingertips in all the world!

Wear! Nothing equals Lastron, Revlon's ever-improved nail enamel in the fabulous plumed bottle. Nothing equals "All-Plus" Lipstick and exclusive "Lip-Fashion" in the slim golden case.

PHOTO HARRINGS. MAKE-UP BEL RUSSO OF REVLON. COSTUME B. OP. JEWELS MILTON SCHEPPS. ©1949 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP.

Smart hands always look smarter with Revlon!

(Continued from Page 176)

"Why," Norah said, "I suppose it could."

"Did you just happen to mention it to anyone?" Allie asked lightly.

"Heavens," Norah James said at once, of course not. Certainly not. Professional ethics, you know. One just doesn't tell what goes on in the sickroom. Never. It's just like being a doctor, exactly the same thing."

When Norah James reached the Carling house half an hour later, Mrs. Carling was lying on the broad sofa in the screened porch, fanning herself and drinking iced coffee. She looked almost apoplectic, her face was so red.

Norah dropped down into the wicker chair at the foot of the couch and fanned herself with the Courier, which she had brought home. "It's been a terribly hot day," she said. "Such an awful day for a funeral. All the flowers on Viola's grave will be wilted already, in this sun."

"Would you like some coffee?" Mrs. Carling said heavily. "There's a pitcher in the refrigerator."

"No, thank you," Norah said. "I just had an ice-cream soda with Allie Jordan. I was quite surprised she asked me. Poor little girl, she really does pretty well, doesn't she? Sometimes she limps quite badly, you know, and her left hand really is a bit awkward. It must do something to her thinking. A physical defect usually changes one's thinking, doesn't it?" Norah said unconsciously.

"Does it?" Mrs. Carling said, and lifted her coffee glass. Then, "Did you have a nice time yesterday, Norah? I meant to ask you last night, but I was much too tired to do anything but go to bed."

"Oh I had a lovely time," Norah said eagerly. "And, you know, I got really acquainted with Mr. Pottle. He told me all about himself. I drew him out, of course—I remembered what you said about a man liking to talk about himself."

"Had he anything interesting to say?"

"Well, not really very interesting, except that things haven't been very easy for him. He grew up in Riverport—not really in a wealthy family, but still respectable and hard-working. I don't mind that. His father was—well, he was a streetcar conductor. Still is. And there were twelve children, so not too much to go around. Horace was one of the older ones, and he had to start work very early to help support the others. He always wanted to go to school, but didn't get very far—only to the end of grammar school. But he always read and read everything in the world, and that made him think of opening a bookstore. He worked for a few years on the Star—first he delivered papers while he was in school, then he was a messenger, and then finally a reporter. He didn't rise very high, but he says it taught him to be observant. And he saved every penny of his money after he gave what he had to at home, and finally he had enough to start up in business. He's older than he looks," Norah said. "He's over forty."

"He never married?"

"No. He said," Norah explained, and preened herself a little, "he said he'd never met a girl he was really interested in. Maybe," she said judiciously, "he never will marry. He says he makes just barely enough money for one—and that he probably never will make much more, because he gets so interested in his books and buys a good many that are too expensive."

Mrs. Carling was silent. She pushed her pillow into a more comfortable position and settled herself against it.

Norah got up. She said, "I think I will have just a teeny-weeny glass of that wonderful-looking coffee, Louisa. I adore iced coffee." She went out to the kitchen and got herself a glass.

When she came back Mrs. Carling said, "What did Allie Jordan want?"

"Want?" Norah repeated. "Why, nothing. We had a soda together, that's all."

"What did she talk about?"

"Oh, quite a few things. Viola, I remember. And Catherine North too. Of course she's Catherine's best friend. We were talking about when Catherine was sick last year and the very odd things she kept telling me—you remember, I was so bothered about them until you told me not to pay any attention. Allie says the same thing—I mean, she says Catherine wants to write someday and is always making up stories."

"Does Allie know the story?"

"Oh, she seems to. She talked as if—that is," Norah said confusedly, "it is only a made-up story, of course. But Allie was pointing out that it was a good thing nurses and doctors had professional ethics about telling things, or there could be trouble when a patient talks as wildly as Catherine North talked."

"Did you tell Allie Jordan that you had told me the story?" Mrs. Carling said slowly.

"Heavens, no, Louisa. I wouldn't think of doing such a thing. Telling you isn't like telling. I never think of you as any different from Doctor Carling. Because you'd never tell anyone, Louisa, of course. You just wouldn't, would you?" She took a long drink of the rich, ice-cold coffee. "My, this is good," she said.

Mrs. Carling pulled herself up from the couch. It was almost painful to watch her get up from a chair or off a bed or couch.

She got up now and went to the glassed-in shelves against the wall. She slid the glass doors back and stood looking at the dolls ranged there on the shelves—dozens and dozens of them, mostly little ones, some already dressed in the loveliest clothes. Louisa ran a hand along the top row and selected a little six-inch Shirley Temple doll, dressed in shimmering white gauze, stiff and wide-spreading, sewed over with tiny sequins and pearl beads. Louisa looked at it carefully, back and front. She touched the hair with a careful forefinger. She put the doll back in its case.

She said, "You know, of course, Norah, that I told my husband about Catherine North. I knew you wouldn't feel free to talk to him, and it seemed to me that she must be much more seriously ill than he realized. He didn't like it any too well that you'd told me, but I explained that you were worried and he was very busy. I had to tell Evan, you know. But of course I didn't tell anyone else."

On the morning after Viola's funeral, Ralph Harland came into the Courier. He looked dreadful, white and haggard. He came across to Allie and dropped into the chair beside her desk. He said under his breath, "It's come."

"A letter? For you?"

He nodded.

After a minute Allie said, "Don't be too unhappy about it, Ralph. This is a break, you see. Viola had destroyed all hers and we had nothing to work with. Give me the letter. Now we've got something to start from."

"I'm supposed to burn it."

"Don't be foolish, Ralph. You're giving in before you start to fight. You can't keep on paying blackmail, can you?"

"I'm cleaned out already."

"How much does he want?"

"A hundred dollars." Ralph laughed. "He knows I'm pretty small potatoes."

"Give me the letter," Allie said, and held out her hand.

(Continued on Page 181)

Like playing the violin, the art of reviling, railing at, and abusing one's fellow men has to be learned when one is young. When we come to middle age, a kind of moral lethargy—which we flatter ourselves by calling tolerance—creeps over us: we cease to be capable of healthy hatred; we drop into the bad habit of looking at even the most loathsome of created beings from his own point of view, and seeing that, after all, he may conceivably have something to say for himself.

—WALTER MURDOCH: Collected Essays.

IF YOUR HAIR LOOKS LIKE THIS —

WHEN IT SHOULD LOOK LIKE THIS

don't use greasy pomades, brittle lacquer or sticky hair oil...

"Suave" your hair

"The cosmetic for hair"

Your beautician will tell you there's nothing else like Suave to make hair miraculously obedient . . . whisper-soft, kissable . . . starry-bright . . . Keeps every tress perfectly in place, and safe from parching sunlight. Rinses out instantly. It's the amazing, new cosmetic for hair that outsells ALL women's hairdressings! Greaseless—not a hair oil. No alcohol! For the whole family. At beauty shops, drug and department stores. 50c and $1

Helene Curtis Suave

So any time you need a bright idea, just open a can of DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail!

It's so easy! "As is," it's a gay first course, salad or dessert—with no work at all for you.

Then see the life and sparkle even a few spoonfuls can add to other foods! There's nothing like it to lend extra-special looks and taste to all kinds of familiar dishes.

It takes plenty of fine, rich fruit flavor to do so much—so easily. And you can't beat DEL MONTE for that!

In DEL MONTE Brand Fruit Cocktail you get five luscious, fully ripe fruits—combined in just-right flavor balance. That means you can always serve it with pride — enjoy its convenience often.

When DEL MONTE's your brand — fruit cocktail's your buy!

FIVE-FRUIT PARFAIT (top): Alternate layers of DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail with vanilla ice cream.

SUPER-FRUIT SALAD (center): DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail, chilled on crisp greens. Serve with your favorite lemon-juice French dressing.

APPETEASER (below): Sparkling DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail, chilled to a turn. Isn't it handy to have such wonderful fruits ready-diced, ready-mixed?

Del Monte FRUIT COCKTAIL

(Continued from Page 179)

gave it to her reluctantly. She spread on her desk. It was printed, an awk-sort of printing that looked as if it have been done with the left hand.
aper was sleazy white typewriter bond.
etter just said:

d a hundred dollars in ten-dollar bills to Banbarr, General Delivery, New Orleans.
know why. Put the money in a small box, into a brown-paper envelope, wrap the ope round it and glue the flap down. Don't e parcel with string, use tape and glue to
. The finished parcel must be five inches ght inches. Mail it on Saturday, but not Tressady. Send it air mail.

ie frowned over the letter. It was queer.
aid, "I'll have to talk to Danny March t this, Ralph."
don't much like washing our dirty linen e strangers."
le isn't a stranger. I told you. He's e Whitney's cousin. You've got to reber that you're not alone in this thing,
h. Bruce and Viola are dead, but there ill others besides you."
Who?"
ie shook her head.
e Courier door opened again and Cath-came in. She was terribly pale, and her were almost black.
ie looked at her sharply and then got
She said to Ralph, "I'm glad you came 'll be phoning you."
lph saw Catherine. He was too absorbed is own misery to notice trouble in face of anyone else. He muttered, lo, Catherine," and
d to pass her.
t the Courier door
ed again, and this it was Mrs. Carling.
came in with her
y tread and said in big, hearty, cheerful
, "My goodness, peo-
re around early to-
It isn't much more nine o'clock. Is this a meeting, or thing?"
ust the neighbors dropping in," Allie
ged. "How are you this morning?"
h, fine. I'm always fine. Allie, I won-you'd do me a favor?" She carried a parcel in her hand. She unwrapped it and took from the tissue paper one of eautiful little dolls. "Will you put Shir-your window with a little sign?" Mrs.
ng asked. "Everybody comes in here, or here, and I need a little help."
ie took the exquisite little doll. "I'd to put her in the window. What sort of Mrs. Carling?"

ELL, you know that the school-round bazaar is to be the first week in mber—they want to raffle off some of olls, and of course I'm anxious to help,
'm just about entirely out of materials othes. I get them everywhere I can, but le are lazy in the summer. The attics in sady must still have dozens of things I use." Mrs. Carling glanced at Ralph back again at Catherine. Her face ged. "I suppose you young people are g very badly today about poor Viola," said kindly. "It's a terrible thing, a ble thing. One feels so sad for her and and the poor baby. What's to be-of the baby, I wonder?"
lph moved convulsively.
lie said quickly, "I'm sure he will have od home. Perhaps Viola's sister ——"
, "Oh, Ralph, I know you're in a hurry; forgive you if you run along. I'll call in an hour or so."
rs. Carling looked after him thoughtfully then pursed her lips. "Poor boy," she
"People say that he was fond of Viola
. After all, one never forgets one's child-sweethearts." She took out her handhief and wiped her face. "It's already hot," she said. "Another scorcher, I'm
d. Allie, I'm very grateful to you. Do ct a lot of nice things for me, won't you,
? I can't dress my dolls in the things one in the stores nowadays."

Mrs. Carling went out. The two girls watched her go. Then Catherine sank down in the chair Ralph had just left. She put an elbow on the desk and dropped her face for a moment into her hand.

Allie said, "You've had another letter, darling."

"Yes."

"Just like the others?"

"More money this time."

"How much?"

"Five hundred dollars. That's about all I've got left. Allie, when that money is gone ——"

"Give me the letter."

Catherine opened her hand and dropped the crushed envelope on Allie's desk. Allie straightened it out and read it. Except for the name and the city, the letter was like Ralph's. The name was Eli Pardell, the city Dallas.

ALLIE got up and went to the window. Danny March was sitting at his desk in his office across the street. Allie was about to reach for her telephone when he looked up. She waved a hand and beckoned. He got up and came across the street.

"We've got two letters," Allie said, and gave them to him. "Now we can begin to make progress, can't we?"

"This is wonderful."

"Is it?" Catherine said bitterly. "Is it really?"

Allie looked down at her bowed head. Her eyes met Danny's and she gestured toward Catherine, toward his car, pointed in the direction of Catherine's home.

Danny had bigger ideas. "Come on, Mrs. North," he said. "Let's go for a drive. Then I'll take you home."

Allie sat down slowly at her desk again. Joe came in, his rusty hair newly trimmed at the back of his neck. He always got a haircut on Friday morning. He brought in an ice-cream cone and handed it to Allie. She licked at it absently. She stood Shirley Temple up on her desk and stared at the beautiful little doll.

"Joe."

"M-m-m?"

"What was the final date for the clothing collection last fall? For Europe?"

"Golly," Joe said, and scratched his head. He went over to his big scribbled-over calendar on the wall and pulled back the flipped-over pages. "October the fifteenth," he said.

"And Armistice Day Ball was on the twelfth instead of the eleventh of November, wasn't it? Because the eleventh was on Sunday."

"Somethin' like that. I didn't go. No fancy tail coat."

"You didn't want to go anyway. Joe ——"

"M-m-m?"

"When did Bruce Whitney . . . die?"

Joe attacked the calendar again. "November fourteenth," he said. Then, "What've you got on your mind these days, Allie? You been funny all week. Some of the things you say don't make sense." He shot her a sharp glance. "You kind of falling for that Danny March?"

"Don't be so silly, Joe."

"What's silly about that? Anybody can see he's kind of sweet on you."

Allie looked at him, startled. "Joe, I never heard anything so ridiculous in my life! Danny March and I have—well, you might say we have a deal on. It's business that brings us together."

"Hmmph," Joe said. "Funny kind of deal, you ask me. Funny business."

He pulled on his green eyeshade and went to work. The office was quiet. Main Street lay deserted in the quiet of midmorning. Allie went on thinking. Across the street Horace Pottle was dressing his windows.

It was lunchtime before Danny March came back. But he had not been with Catherine all morning. He had been with the bank manager, and down at the post office.

Men that believe only what they understand can write their creed on a postage stamp.
—AUSTIN O'MALLEY: Keystones of Thought (Devin-Adair Company).

You Can Serve It 'Round the Clock!

NEW Betty Crocker "Cake in a Box"

all but ready to bake!

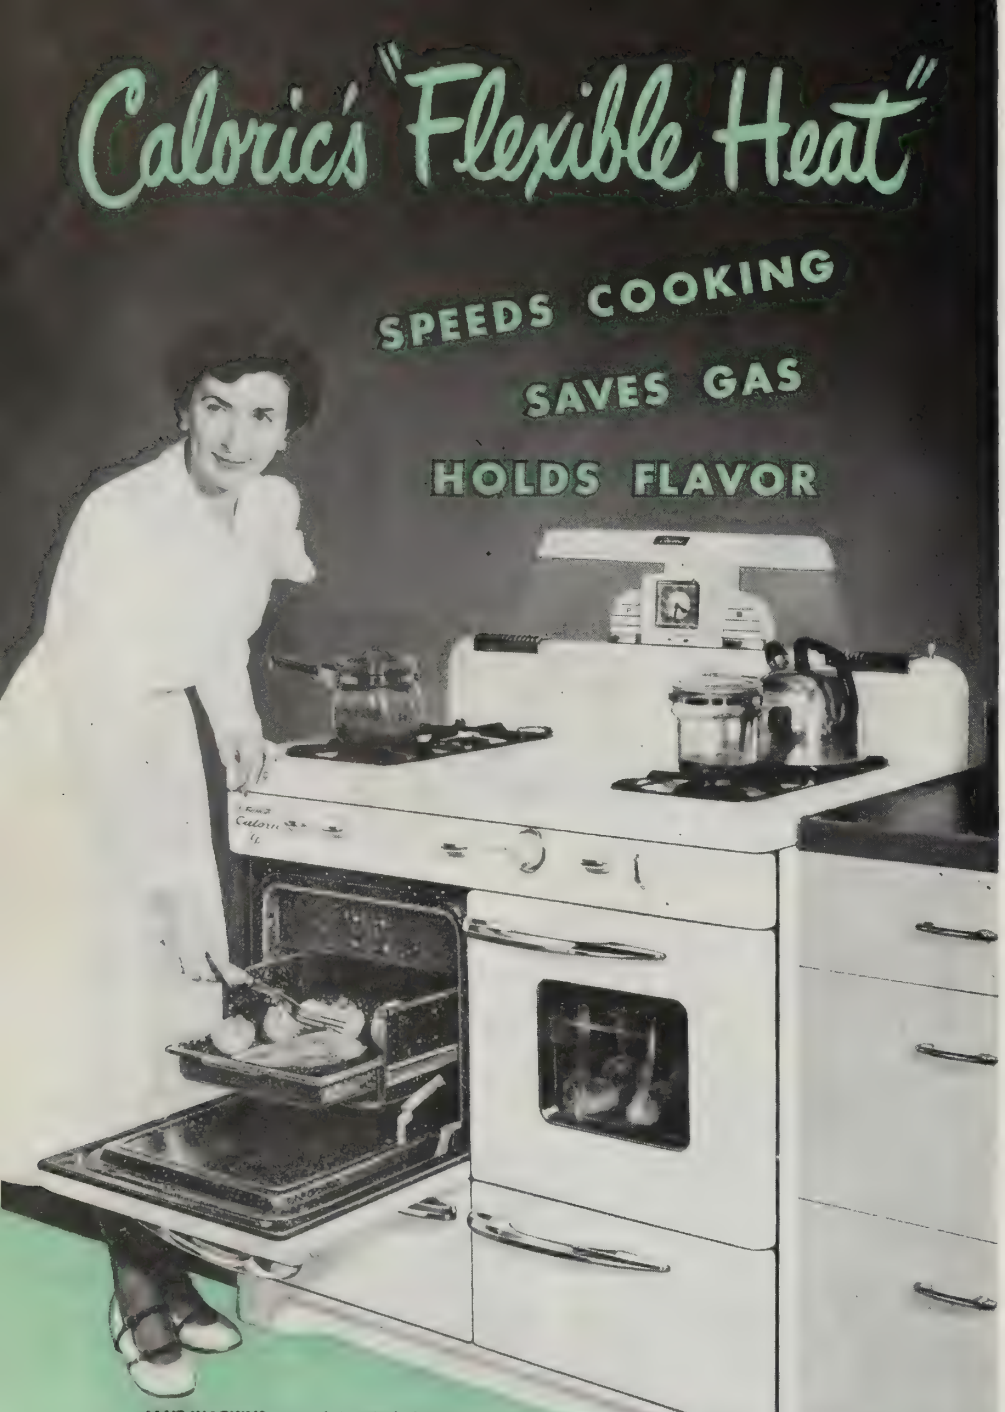
Whatever the time of day,

it's only a matter of minutes to mix up Betty Crocker GingerCake. For here is a Betty Crocker recipe all measured out. You just add water, mix and bake, and come out with pipin' hot, fragrant, golden-brown goodness that improves any meal!

Betty Crocker GingerCake Mix is made from silky-fine Softasilk Cake Flour, not ordinary bread flour. That's why every luscious crumb of it is always cake light, cake tender. Try it!

General Mills

Spicy-rich as gingerbread... tender-light as cake!



Betty Crocker is a trademark of General Mills.

Caloric's "Flexible Heat"

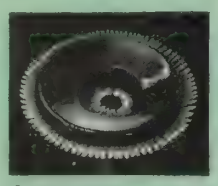
SPEEDS COOKING

SAVES GAS

HOLDS FLAVOR

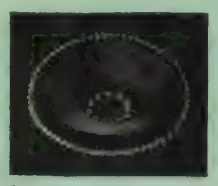
JANE WATKINS, one of America's foremost Home Service Directors, regards "Flexible Heat" as one of the outstanding advantages of Caloric Gas Ranges. The range shown here is the divided top, elevated broiler Ultramatic Caloric —one of many Caloric models.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping



Good cooks everywhere, as well as home economists, know that for perfect cooking you must have perfect heat control. And that is exactly what you get with Ultramatic Caloric's "Flexible Heat."

You can "tune in" any degree of temperature from "keep warm" to "sizzling hot" as accurately as you tune in a station on your radio. In addition, Caloric's "Flexible Heat" saves gas, speeds cooking time, and is ideal for pressure cooking.



Caloric is America's easiest range to keep clean. Porcelain enamel finish inside and out, One-Piece Porcelain Top, Veri-Clean Removable Broiler and Hold-Heat Seamless Oven are a few of the many easy-clean features.

For list of local dealers see "Caloric" in classified telephone book—or write Caloric Stove Corporation, 1202 Widener Bldg., Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Flavor-Saver Dual Burners Give Quick, Flexible Heat

1. Highest Flame. With both rings on full, you can be sure of fast boiling or frying.

2. Pinpoint Flame—lowest heat on both rings. Steady, low even heat for slower cooking.

3. Simmer Flame—full flame on middle ring only. Maintains exact boiling temperature.

4. "Keep Warm" Flame—tiny points of flame on middle ring. For keeping food warm.

Ultramatic

Specially engineered models for use with LP-Gas "bottled" gas. Every model can include CP features if desired. CP

Caloric

Automatic Gas Ranges

He said, "I didn't expect to get very far at the bank. We can't be explicit enough and we're not the police. But Marsden's a decent fellow and he was willing to take my word that we were looking into something that wasn't so good for the town. I asked him to call you and confirm. Did he?"

"No; apparently you have an honest face."

"Well, he didn't have to commit himself far. Look, Allie, you got anything down at your house to eat? We can't talk here."

"Maybe soup and salad," Allie said. "I'll call Jessie." She called Jessie, who immediately got into a flutter and had to be spoken to firmly. Allie went back to Joe, haranguing Ike in the back room. "I'm going home to lunch," she said.

"He's going with you?" Joe asked, indicating March with his head.

"Yes, he is," Allie said wearily. "We'll probably elope while we're away, so don't expect me back for a couple of hours."

Danny March held the car door for her. "Who's going to elope?" he inquired. He must have very good ears.

ALLIE looked at him and felt her face flaming. But there was a way to answer. She said flatly, "You and I. You see . . . Jessie and Joe . . . they've taken care of me for so long—and they're used to me. Sometimes they forget that . . . you know, sometimes they get to thinking that I think about getting married, or having beaus, anyway. Just because you and I have driven around a little bit together, and you've been at the house a couple of times, they're making up things in their heads. Don't pay any attention."

"Don't you think about getting married, Allie?"

"Of course not," she said.

"I thought all girls did," he said gently.

"Well, but ——"

"But what?"

"Well, marriage is important," Allie said confusedly. "I mean . . . you see, I wouldn't be interested in anybody like—well, like Horace Pottle. And—you see, I always get a sort of sickish feeling when I look at the Carlings. That isn't a marriage. It can't be. A marriage ought to be beautiful, between two people who are both —— I wouldn't be interested in anybody like Horace Pottle."

"Why on earth should you be?" Danny said reasonably, stopping the car at her front gate. He put his hands under her elbows and swung her to the ground. His hands were warm.

Allie looked up at him. "I guess you've never paid much attention to me," she said soberly. "You know, I—that is, I limp quite a bit, and if you've ever noticed my hand ——" She held it out to him. "It isn't really too bad, because I didn't get sick until I was twelve, and I had most of my growth by then, so there isn't much difference. But it isn't very useful."

They walked up the path together. Danny did not answer until they got to the door. There was a big lilac tree just there, shading the doorway. Allie stepped up on the low porch. Danny stopped. He put his hand out and took hers, the left one, the small one. He scrutinized it carefully, front and back. Then, "I haven't noticed you limping anywhere inside, Allie," and bent and kissed her, quickly, on the tip of her nose.

Something terrible happened in Allie's heart. It was a thing she couldn't bear. He mustn't do this to her. He mustn't talk like this. She moved quickly and opened the door, indicated the sitting room to him and went into her own room across the hall. There she stood for a moment with her hands pressed to her face, and they were wet when she took them away. She shook her head violently and tightened her throat. She washed her face, powdered it, and went out. Danny was in the kitchen, sitting in Jessie's rocker, leaning over Night's basket where the four kittens lay sleeping.

Jessie said, "I've put your lunch on a tray. You can take it out under the apple tree. Can you manage to carry this tray, Danny March?"

NO DUST BAG TO EMPTY

Approved by Underwriters' Laboratories

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

- Empties like an ash tray!
- It's quiet—no roar!
- Cyclonic cleaning power!
- Cleans upholstery—dusts furniture!
- Sprays paint...waxes...de-moths!
- Space-saving storage!
- Triple-filters unsanitary dust!
- Light, easy to use!
- See the Lewyt! Try it yourself!

FREE! PICTURE BOOKLET ON MODERN HOME CLEANING. WRITE TODAY

COMES COMPLETE—NO EXTRAS TO BUY

No. 80 Carpet Nozzle • Upholstery nozzle Dusting brush • Crevice tool • Floor-and-wall brush • Moth snuffocator • Sprayer

LEWYT'S REVOLUTIONARY NO. 80 CARPET NOZZLE...cleans rugs better than ever before! Actually gets more embedded dirt...picks up more lint, thread, and hair...yet with less carpet wear! It will amaze you!

Lewyt (Rhymes with 'do it')

VACUUM CLEANER

Lewyt Corporation, Vacuum Cleaner Division
66 Broadway, Brooklyn 11, New York

I got up and took it. Allie followed him
He set the tray down on the old painted under the apple tree and dropped into eck chair beside the table comfortably.
"My idea of comfort," he said. "After a years of mess kits and canteens and urants, I never want to eat any way but gain."
"You'll need a rubber bib," Allie reminded
"This way of eating is very hard on es." She filled his plate from the salad and the cold-meat platter. "Now tell bout the bank," she said.
"Well," Danny said, biting into the bread ciatively, "I asked him if he had any -looking accounts. Specifically, any ular account that periodically took in ers of ten-dollar bills, since our friend s so partial to them. He hasn't. He
'What is it, a betting ring?' I said, ething like that.' Handy to be a
r. People take it for granted you're l up in funny stuff."
"So there's no such account in Tressady?"
"None. He seemed startled when I asked f he had accounts with any irregulari-
He ate some salad. "The postmaster
t any use either. He says there's a lot ail goes through this office, and he
't remember that printing or anything letters such as vo that came this ing."
he two this morn-were mailed in ady?"
esterday."
e laid down her
She said, "I've thinking, this ng."
nny lifted his eyes face.
hat's so difficult,
see it, is not the
ed way the man hrough the banks
the post offices,
he way he finds out things. We we know in Catherine's case that the nation got out through the nurse. Norah
s honestly doesn't think she tells things.
he repeated the story to me with al-no urging, and maybe she's told half en people. Only, it's such an incredible that nobody with any sense would pay attention."
it's the story that gets the pay-off, it be true," Danny said dryly.
hen maybe it isn't," Allie said. "Maybe lly haven't found that one."
nny lifted an eyebrow and took another of bread.
e went on. "In Viola's case, I've got an that it was mostly guesswork. You
. . if any of us had the sort of mind ooks for horrid things, we might have d too. I might have myself. Maybe ackmailer saw a couple of things that f other people might have seen too—e put them together and got a story.
maybe he sent a letter, just sort of ng in the dark. And when Viola paid, ew he was right. It might have been as e as that."
nd Bruce?"

LL, that's more complicated. But I've me dates. You see, we were having a thing collection in October for Europe. body gave everything he had. All the gave all their uniforms, but we had to nsignia off. What we did was to have e clothes sent in to a central depot and the women went and worked over —took off insignia and went through ts."
omen?"
len helped, too, I think. Anyway, they ht carloads of things in. We were ly busy at the end. Men could have any part of the work."
ouldn't it be a coincidence if the ly right person happened to be the one d an incriminating letter in Bruce's
t?"
needn't have been that way. Maybe und the letter, yes. Maybe someone else found the letter and it passed along—there was a central collection box, I remember, for all personal belongings found in pockets. Maybe somebody went through that box. You see?"

"And why and how did it turn up in his dress clothes later?"

"For pure torture's sake." She locked her fingers together. "I don't like this man."

DOCTOR CARLING, driving back to Tressady from Oriole on a humid afternoon a week later, found himself slowing the car as he approached Judge Spencer's house. It was weeks since he had allowed himself to stop there. But today he was tired, for many reasons; and the thought of going home just at this moment was something he could not face.

He wrestled with himself for a moment or two, then turned abruptly and parked in the side street round the corner from Main. He walked quickly along the hedge and turned in at the high gate. The judge and the baby were down in the summerhouse; they spent all their time in the garden together, as Doctor Carling knew well.

Catherine came to the door. She looked at him silently.

"I had to come," he said.

"Yes," she answered and moved aside.

He looked down at her. "Are you well?"

"Physically, yes."

He nodded.

She shut the door. They walked together to the big cool living room, so restful and uncluttered, so serene. "I was having tea," Catherine said. "Will you have a cup?"

He sat down on the chair opposite hers. She poured a cup of clear tea for him and put a paper-thin slice of lemon in it. The cup was fragile white milk china. She held out a plate of wafers to him, thin delicate bits of food. He took one and leaned back with the cup in his hand, and let the quiet and the austerity of the room touch his mind.

Catherine said, "You look very tired."

He said nothing. He looked at her and went on looking: at the pale soft hair and the beautiful eyes, the long graceful hands, the slender lovely body.

"Will you play for me?" he said abruptly.

"What would you like?"

"Beethoven. The Moonlight, I think."

She went to the piano. The music began to float in the air, the gentle tender melody wove itself around his thinking. He put his head back against the chair and shut his eyes. He rested. She played on and on; another sonata, a nocturne. As he listened, his mind cleared a little. If only he could come here often . . . if only he could stay here forever. After a long time the music stopped. She came back to her chair.

He stood up. He said, "I've never made any explanation before. I should have. No matter how it may appear, I am not free to make any change in my way of life. I did something some years ago which binds me forever; I created a debt I can never repay. If it were not for that I should take immediate steps." He put a hand lightly on her wrist. "There's nothing I can possibly do."

"I knew it must be like that. And . . . I did something too. Something that . . . leaves me bound. Something not even you could forget. So —"

He smiled. "I know what it is," he said. "You told me when you were ill. It doesn't matter. I know what happened, all the details. You had to do it. You acted the whole thing out for me . . . the man was mad, you know. You had to do it."

Her eyes were like midnight, luminous and yet dark. Her teeth bit into her lower lip.

"I love you," he said under his breath, and went away.

On that same day, Danny March received answers to his letters to the postmasters at Winston Churchill was about to broadcast a speech and sent a copy of his manuscript to the Foreign Office for official approval. The manuscript was returned to him with only one correction—a correction in his grammar. He had ended one sentence with a preposition, and the Foreign Office advised him that this was incorrect. . . . "This is the type of arrant pedantry," wrote Mr. Churchill in reply, "up with which I shall not put."

—LEONARD LYONS.

Butterscotch'n' Cake Float

Luscious—with Jell-O Pudding's buttery goodness!

1 package Jell-O Butterscotch Pudding

6 squares of plain cake

Here's a perfectly wonderful way of glorifying leftover cake—with a butter-brown, velvety-smooth Jell-O Butterscotch Pudding!

Prepare Jell-O Butterscotch Pudding as directed on package, increasing milk to 3 cups. Chill. Serve as sauce on cake squares. Garnish with currant jelly or other tart jelly and Baker's Shredded Coconut. Makes 6 servings.

Easy to fix—and so Jell-O superb!

Jell-O is a registered trade-mark of General Foods Corporation

VANILLA, CHOCOLATE, BUTTERSCOTCH→

Jell-O Puddings

VANILLA, CHOCOLATE, ORANGE COCONUT→

NEW! Quick-and-perfect tapioca pudding—from the JELL-O kitchens!

Vanilla Tapioca with Cherry Sauce

Prepare Jell-O Vanilla Tapioca Pudding as directed on package. Chill. To make Cherry Sauce, drain 2 cups quick-frozen or canned red cherries. Add enough water to juice to make 1 cup. Combine ½ cup sugar, 2 tablespoons cornstarch, and a dash of salt. Add cherry juice and water and cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add 1 teaspoon lemon juice and the cherries. Chill and serve over pudding. Makes 4 or 5 servings.

No shrink worries for me!
I knit with yarns that are

*Wonderized

ANTI-SHRINK
ANTI-MATTING

"When I knit with yarns that are Wonderized, I'm certain that even after endless washings my hand-knits will stay as soft, as resilient, and as true to size as the day I knit them!"

Wonderized is the miracle process that is absolutely anti-shrink, anti-matting! The next time you buy knitting yarns, ask for Wonderized, found only in Bear Brand and Fleisher's yarns.

FREE! Instruction leaflets for knitting men's, women's and children's sweaters, also men's socks. Send 3¢ stamp to cover postage to Wonderized; 30-20 Thomson Ave., Long Island City 1, N. Y. Dept. J-39

Wonderized is available only in

BEAR BRAND YARNS
Fleisher's Yarn

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

*® PROC. PAT. NO. 2,429,082

RELIEVE EMBARRASSING PIMPLES—ACNE

WITH STAINLESS CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Famous liquid antiseptic instantly relieves soreness, itching —Combats infection from minor skin irritations

Pimples can become infections. Treat them with soothing, stainless CAMPHO-PHENIQUE. It relieves soreness and itching instantly . . . kills many germs on contact . . . aids healing by combating infection. Use CAMPHO-PHENIQUE also to relieve pain, combat infection from cold sores, fever blisters, minor cuts, burns, scratches. Many doctors, dentists, nurses prefer it. So do children. Doesn't smart like ordinary antiseptics. Recommended over 50 years. Try it today!

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE
(pronounced Cam-fo-fi-neek)
THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

New Orleans and Dallas. Dallas had no information about Eli Pardell. But New Orleans was much more helpful. It so happened that the clerk who had recently forwarded a letter to one Iles Banbarr was himself from Riverport; and although the manner of forwarding the mail was such that no record was kept, it happened that the Riverport street address had stayed in his mind because it was the street upon which he had lived as a small boy. Mr. Banbarr had sent a letter addressed to the postmaster asking that an expected parcel be sent to him in Riverport, and with the letter he had enclosed a gummed, self-addressed label which fitted very neatly over the face of the parcel which had duly appeared in the box. This on two occasions. And the Riverport address, at which Mr. Banbarr could very likely be reached, was 8 Solon Avenue.

DOCTOR CARLING did not go home to dinner that night. Instead he asked them at the garage to telephone his home and say that he had been called away suddenly. Then he went on down the highway and drove to Riverport. It was only just after six when he got to his aunt's house. He left the car on the side street and walked round the corner to ring Ida's doorbell. He rang three times before she answered.

"It's Evan," he said. "How are you, Aunt Ida? May I come in?"

"Why, Evan, dear," she said. "How nice of you to come. But weren't you here just a short time ago? No, I suppose not. Some weeks ago, perhaps. It's so nice to see you. Can you stay?"

"For a bit." He shut the door behind him and moved into the muddled-looking little sitting room after her. One small lamp glowed dimly from a corner table, littered with odds and ends: a magazine, an empty cup, a few small wrapped parcels. He glanced half curiously at the parcels and then away, not really thinking about them.

"It's so nice to see you, dear," Ida muttered again; and then, "It must be suppertime, Evan. Would you like something to eat? I think I must have something in the house. Some cheese and crackers?"

"No, thank you. I mustn't stay long." He sat down carefully in one of the rickety old chairs.

"Nothing I have would compare with dear Louisa's meals, anyway," Ida said. "Is she still as wonderful a cook as ever, Evan?"

"She does a great deal of cooking. Everything's perfectly done, as always."

"Louisa likes to eat," Ida murmured. "Perhaps one has to be very fond of eating to become a good cook. I don't believe I ever cared very much, and I remember you were never much of an eater. You haven't got fat at all. Louisa is really getting quite heavy, Evan."

"Yes."

"Smoke if you like, dear. It's so nice to have a man around to smoke. I often think I should take it up myself, for company. But of course I should always forget to buy the cigarettes or have no matches," she said. Then, "You know, when you married her, Evan, she had quite a nice figure. She was plump, but nothing like she is now. You know, Evan, she is rather a strange girl, Louisa. I must say I never quite knew why you married her, dear. Except that I know she had quite a bit of money and you couldn't manage medical school. Jack and I should have helped more there. But was it only the money, dear? It would put my mind at rest if I knew."

He said, "I was pretty young. Twenty-three. I know now that she was a great deal older than she said. She wasn't bad-looking; she was amiable, kind, helpful. I thought she was intelligent. There were a lot of things I didn't understand very well; I thought, for instance, that I really cared for nothing in the world but my chosen profession, that no woman could ever mean anything important to me." He stopped a moment. "We actually got along very well," he said, "until I . . . did that operation. And was caught. I did it because the girl was in a terrible situation, but of course that is no excuse. Probably I was weak—too sympathetic. The

Keeps hair tidy all through the day

Costs less because it lasts long 20¢ White, gre purple 2
Single or double me

VENIDA
The Guaranteed
HAIR NET
rules the waves

FAMOUS VENIDA HAIR BEAUTY AIDS BY RIESER CO., N.

Relief
AT BALL OF FOOT

Pains, Callouses, Tenderness and Burning Feeling

Like walking on air in your smartest shoes!—that's how this wonderful new Metatarsal Cushion—Dr. Scholl's LuPAD—feels on your feet. Cushions feet against shock and pressure. Gives mild support to Metatarsa Arch. Loops over forepart of foot. Worn invisibly Flesh color, washable. Sizes for men and women Only $1.25 pair at Drug, Shoe, Department Store When ordering by mail, give shoe size and width Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

Dr Scholl's LUPAD

Permanently mend torn books or papers — Repair them with

Dennison
TRANSPARENT MENDING TAPE

One of many Dennison Handy Helpers for Home, School, and Office

On sale at stationery counters everywhere

NOW... order by mail

exclusive "Famous Designer" fabrics by the yard

Steal a march on Spring and Summer. Sew with the identical fabrics used by famous fashion designers. Exclusive weaves and colors in rayon for dresses, suits, skirts, blouses, lingerie, pajamas, housecoats and play clothes—at so much less than you'd spend for ready-mades.

WRITE TODAY for FREE FABRIC FOLDER, full of beautiful color samples from which to make your selection right from your own home.

Mitchell Company
Department LJ
SPINDALE, NORTH CAROLINA

exquisite

$3.50

SONATA

Made of Crescendoe's wonderful wonder fabric.

Outlasts, outwears any other glove!

Becomes softer, richer, more doe-skin-like with each sudsing.

So beautiful . . . you'll love it!

Crescendoe

Insist on CRESCENDOE at your favorite store or write to:

CRESCENDOE GLOVES, INC
JOHNSTOWN, N.Y.

most unfortunate part of it all as far as Louisa is concerned is that she thought then, and still thinks, I feel sure, that I was the girl's lover." He said carefully, "Sometimes I almost believe that she has hated me ever since."

There was a long silence. Doctor Carling lifted one of the parcels on the table beside him and fingered it. He looked at the address absently. It was something that had been sent and Ida had not yet opened. The other parcels on the table were all addressed to her; two of them in similar flowing backhand, an odd sort of writing, on neat white labels.

"Don't you open your parcels?" he asked.

"They aren't mine, dear," she said vaguely. "I must remember to send them with you, dear. They're Louisa's . . . doll clothes, Evan, you know. Materials for her doll clothes. From people in the Missionary Monthly, I think. We use my name instead of hers just in case, you know. Although I don't see how there could be any link; I mean, Carling isn't a bit like—like your old name. Is it? And nobody knows about your changing it."

He got up restlessly. "That's what I came about tonight," he said. "Somebody does know. I would have sworn that nobody in the world but you and Louisa and myself knew of the change. Of course the judge who heard my petition to change the name knew; but because of the special aspects of the case it was kept as secret as possible. Baltimore is a far cry from Tressady, and there have been no slips. But someone in Tressady knows the truth. I've been . . . blackmailed for months."

"Evan, surely that sounds very melodramatic?"

The greatest privilege of a human being is to be able to do good.
—VOLTAIRE.

"But it's true."

"Does Louisa know?"

"She would be frantic. She has built herself up as quite a person in Tressady. To be aware that even one person knew that her husband had spent five years in the penitentiary would drive her mad." He fell silent. "I don't want to do that," he said. Then, "Ida, are you quite certain that you have never let the secret out to anyone?"

"Evan," she said tremblingly, "I know I am getting old, but I'm quite certain about that, dear. I've never discussed it even with Louisa; I couldn't. I felt very deeply about it and I couldn't mention it to anyone even if I wanted to. And anyway, dear, whom do I know? I live here very much alone, except for a few ladies from the church very occasionally, and there is no one I should talk to. No one ever comes here but you and Louisa and those few ladies. I have no one to tell, even if I wanted to."

There were sudden quick loud footsteps on the front veranda. The doorbell rang.

Ida stood turned to stone, her mouth open. "Was that the doorbell?" she said. "My doorbell?"

"It sounded very much like it."

"But how odd! Nobody ever comes here. And who would come at such an odd hour? Louisa comes, but always to the side door."

The bell rang again. Doctor Carling moved quietly across the floor and stepped into the dining room. "You'd better answer it," he said.

Ida shuffled to the door. It was a man who spoke to her, in a voice oddly familiar to the doctor and yet not quite identifiable. He said, "I have two registered special-delivery letters here, for this address. What is your name, please?"

"Why," Ida said in surprise, "it's Randall, Mrs. Ida Randall."

"Are these for you?" he inquired.

There was a silence, as if Ida were trying to read the superscriptions. She said vaguely, "Well, yes, they appear to be. Yes, that seems to be my name. But I don't understand . . . registered letters . . . special delivery."

"I had the laugh on my mother-in-law!"

You can't blame a girl for being a little smug about being able to give her mother-in-law advice.

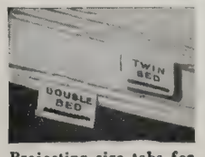
Especially when it's really helpful advice. Mrs. Olga Helwing of West Allis, Wisconsin, writes us that when she was married, a kind friend gave her:

"...six lovely Pequot sheets ...woven so closely they seemed to shed dirt and look unsoiled much longer. They wore wonderfully!"

Mrs. Helwing's mother-in-law was not so lucky. She'd been using another brand of sheets. So, when she complained that after a mere two and one-half years these sheets were "frayed and useless," the younger Mrs. Helwing was tickled to brag about her Pequots, which were much older and still going strong.

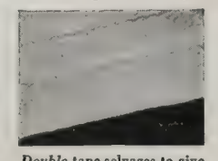
But this mother-in-law was a good sport, for, writes Mrs. Junior:

"She's thanked me a dozen times for introducing her to Pequots. And I'm proud to have been the one to tell her about your real quality sheets."



So the word spreads . . . mothers tell daughters, daughters-in-law tell mothers . . . and you, too, have probably heard from friends how wonderfully Pequots wear. Close-woven, firm, yet soft and smooth to the touch . . . with a pure, white beauty that lasts to the end . . . Pequot plus-service muslins have long been America's most popular sheets.

Pequot Mills, Salem, Massachusetts
Also makers of Pequot Fine Combed Percales



so good-looking .... so long-wearing

PEQUOT PLUS-SERVICE SHEETS PILLOW CASES

Pronounced "PEE-KWAT"

Projecting size tabs for quick finding on the shelf.

Double-tape selvages to give extra strength.

PEQUOT SHEETS

Plus-Service Muslins have the thread count and weight that give the longest service.

Whether it's that "meaty and mighty good" Wilson's Certified Corned Beef Hash —or tasty, thrifty 4 MOR meats, Beef, Lamb, Veal and Pork—or B-V, America's favorite gravy maker—or any other Wilson's fine quality canned meats, you can always depend upon this:

The Wilson label means that you are getting a product of Wilson's 33 years of experience in processing only the finest quality meats for America's homes.

See Your Favorite Dealer.

Buy Wilson's Canned Meats Today.

"Will you sign for them?" the man's voice asked.

"Why, yes. I suppose I must. I don't understand ——"

"Is there anyone else in this house?"

She said, "You mean . . . at this moment? Anyone else?"

"Does anyone else live here?"

"No. No one at all."

"There are no other names in this house?"

"Nobody lives here but me. Nobody ever has."

"You don't accept mail for anyone else?"

"No," she said confusedly. "Of course not. I'm the only person here."

"This is Eight Solon Avenue?"

"Yes. The number is on the pillar. This is Number Eight."

He said oddly, "Then there can't be any mistake," and his footsteps moved off the veranda.

Ida came back into the sitting room with slow steps. Doctor Carling crossed to the archway and joined her. She was looking down at the two large white envelopes in a very puzzled way.

"I don't understand this at all, Evan," she said. "I never get special-delivery letters. Who should I get them from?"

He took them from her hand and looked down at them. He looked again. "But they aren't for you," he said. "This isn't your name, Ida. Neither of these is addressed to you. Why did you say they were?"

"But they are," she said, peering at them again. "That's Ida Randall, isn't it?"

"That one is Eli Pardell," he said. "The other is a very odd name, Iles Banbarr. Certainly neither is Ida Randall."

"Oh," she said. "But that's surely . . . oh. Oh, Evan, I know what it is. How stupid of me. They're for Louisa."

"For Louisa?" Doctor Carling asked.

"Her doll clothes. Her materials. You see, people tell each other where to send the things—maybe they write the name down and then someone has difficulty reading it. Those names look like mine, don't they, dear?"

"A little. Yes, considerably."

"If you look at the addresses on those parcels, all for Louisa, you will see that the same thing happens. I noticed it once or twice when I had my proper glasses on, and was puzzled until Louisa explained. I'm sure that's what it is." She gathered up the parcels and held them out to him. "See if I'm not right, dear," she said.

He looked at the addresses. It was true. One of the parcels here was addressed to Iles Banbarr. Another, with a similar white label, was for Eli Pardell. Odd. Two friends who had both tried to read the handwriting of a third mutual friend and were sending Louisa the same sort of thing?

"Take them all home to her, Evan," Ida said. "I know she needs them. Just a minute, dear. I'll get a large paper bag. I have ever so many."

There were many things on Evan Carling's mind as he drove back to Tressady. Catherine was first, perhaps; if not her image, then the persistent need of her and the way in which all the rest of his life lay as a barren waste around the thought of her.

He was almost at the turn of the highway when an odd thought which had been nagging at him for miles became too strong to push away. He stopped the car.

He took up Ida's paper bag from the seat beside him and opened it. He put his hand in and took out a parcel, and then another. He felt them, looked at them curiously. Some were firm and hard, some were soft and crushable. The two with the white labels that matched the special-delivery letters were firm. He turned them over in his hands. Doll clothes? Materials for Louisa's doll clothes?

The two parcels with the white labels were not tied with string. One was bound with tape, one with strips of gummed paper. The other parcels were tied with string, easier to open. He groped among them in the light from the dashboard, found a small firm one. He untied the string; a small flat box lay inside. He opened it. Inside was a piece of purple silk, shot with a deep red, to which a note was pinned. "My mother's going-away dress, made in 1898," the note said, in a spidery hand. And, "God bless your work and you."

He looked at it again. He folded the silk carefully and put it back in the box. He laid the note on top and tied the parcel up again, as well as he could. The paper didn't quite go back into its original folds. It didn't matter. He drove on.

Louisa was on the porch, sewing. Her brimming basket lay on the couch beside her; her thick, pudgy fingers flew as she fashioned the small elaborate dress. "Hello, dear," she said. "Where were you?"

"I had to go in to the city," he said.

"Oh? Serum?"

"Something like that." He laid the paper bag down on the couch. "I dropped in to see Ida for a minute," he said. "She sent you these parcels."

Her hands stopped in their work. She looked up. The light made her eyes small, pin-pointed. "Thoughtful of her," she said. "How is she, Evan?"

"Getting old."

Louisa opened the bag and looked inside. "Quite a haul."

"Yes. By the way, there are two special-delivery letters in there. They came while I was at Ida's. She was confused at first because she thought they were for her. They're at the bottom of the bag."

"Special-delivery letters?" she said slowly.

"Yes . . . rather odd. The name isn't Randall on either of them—and there are two packages addressed in the same way. An odd mistake."

She tore the bag abruptly down the side. The two letters lay on the couch. She took them up and looked at them closely. She bent and looked at the parcels. After a minute she laughed. "Oh, heavens," she said. "Those two foolish old women . . . I know what it is. How silly of them." She pushed the letters to one side. "Did you have any dinner, dear?" she asked. "There's a bowl of strawberries in the refrigerator, and some nice cold lamb. Some jellied mint too. Shall I get you something?"

"I think I'll just have a glass of milk and go to bed," he said. "I'm rather tired."

"I'll make cocoa," she said quickly. "Cold milk isn't anything to go to sleep on." She gathered up the parcels and the envelopes and went inside with them. He sat down and put his head back against the chair, relaxing in the cool night air.

Upstairs, Louisa Carling shut her bedroom door. She looked sharply at the parcels again, singled out the two with the white labels. She took up the letters—she looked at them closely. Special delivery? Registered? Neither one. An inked imitation of the post-office marking, that was all. She took up a nail file from her dressing table and slit one open.

Inside were two blank sheets of paper. The other letter was the same. Blank.

She stood thinking, her mind whirling. She laid the letters and parcels in her bureau

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Unreturning

By Sara King Carleton

Lancelot is gone, Elaine,
He has found another lass,
He will not come back again.
Gather up your looking glass.

Do not question how or why—
This the truth that you must learn:
Love that goes without good-by Never, never will return.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

REALSILK MEANS QUALITY

FOR MEN
Socks
Neckwear
Shirts
Underwear
Pajamas
Sportswear
Accessories

FOR WOMEN
Hosiery
Lingerie
Dresses
Suits
Rainwear
Sportswear
Accessories

Your Realsilk representative brings this famous line to your home or office.

Profitable full-time or part-time sales opportunities for men and women.

Contact local Branch Sales Office or write...
REAL SILK HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
Indianapolis 6, Indiana

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN EVERYDAY CARDS
Satin and Velour Designs
MAKE Extra MONEY FAST
Show rich Satin and Velour Greeting Cards. Get easy orders FAST! Astounding value—16 for $1. Up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery, Floral Charmettes, Napkins, 25 other assortments retails 60c to $1. Samples on approval. Write today.
PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 913-C, St. Louis 3, Mo.

"SPECIALISTS FOR LITTLE FEET"
Sizes 1 to 5 only

Send for our CATALOG J illustrating large variety of styles you can order by mail!

Cinderella of Boston
59 TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON 11, MASS.

drawer under some stockings. She went noiselessly into the bathroom and opened the cupboard. There was a box of small white tablets there. She took it and slid it into her pocket. She went downstairs and made cocoa for Evan and served it to him, sweet and hot and rich, with a little salt to bring out the flavor, and nutmeg to give it added tang. It was good cocoa. She poured a cup of it for herself first, to make sure.

There wasn't much traffic on the Riverport road after midnight. Her car flew along through the cool night. The moon was up, and brilliant, so that driving was easy. She got to Riverport in much less than the usual two hours.

She parked her car, as usual, in Ida's side drive. She went up on the side porch. It was no use ringing the bell: Ida would be asleep; but she, Louisa, had a key. She had had it for a long time. It was important that she should have a key to this house. Long ago she had foreseen that something might happen, something she couldn't plan against.

She let herself in quietly and went upstairs with her flashlight. The stairs creaked under her weight. But Ida did not hear her until she was right in the bedroom. Then, "Who—who is there?" she quavered.

"It's just me," Louisa said calmly. She went into the bathroom and got a glass of water. She held the glass in a washcloth. She opened the box of sleeping pills for the second time that night. Two had gone into the cocoa; this time she needed more. Several more.

"Just . . . you?" Ida was saying. "Louisa? Is that you? What are you doing here? Isn't it the middle of the night?"

"No, it's not very late," Louisa said, and sat down on the edge of the bed. "Evan sent me," she said. "He said he was worried about you, Ida. He said you didn't seem at all well to him. He sent you something to take to make you feel better."

"But I feel all right," Ida protested. "I feel fine, Louisa. Really I do. I feel fine. Evan didn't say I was sick."

"He worried about it afterward," Louisa said. "There, it's all ready now. Sit up a bit, Ida, it's too hard to swallow lying down."

IDA sat up obediently, still groping in her vague old mind. "I feel all right," she said. "I don't need ——"

"Drink it down. It will do you good."

She finished it and lay back.

Louisa went to the bathroom and ran some fresh water into the glass. "Water," she said. "Here, hold the glass yourself, Ida. Then you won't choke."

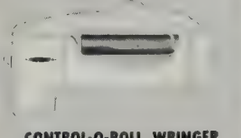
Ida took the glass in her hand and sat up again, feebly. She sipped at the water and then put the glass down on the seat of the chair. She said, "Evan is a good nephew to an old aunt. He's a good man, Louisa. Even if you didn't always believe it. He's a good man."

Louisa went back down the stairs and back to Tressady.

It was dawn when she got there, just barely dawn. Evan was still deeply asleep. Everything was fine.

But now . . . it was time to think. Who had sent those letters? Who had sent them? Why?

Danny March got out of the police car at the front of 8 Solon Avenue. He was followed by Detective-Inspector Green, who was still a little doubtful about the long story he had heard earlier this morning. It wasn't that he questioned Danny March's word, exactly; it was that there wasn't any concrete evidence that the old woman who lived at 8 Solon was tangled in a blackmailing game. It was because there was no evidence that he had been unwilling to make this checkup call last night, by the time Danny March had got to him.



"Too late," he said. "It isn't a time for the police to call on respectable householders—if she turns out to be respectable. That's a decent neighborhood. You can't go barging into respectable people's houses asking questions about blackmail when there's no evidence."

What! Put your best tablecloth in the washer!

IF IT'S WASHABLE...IT'S SAFE IN THE NEW UNIVERSAL 2-SPEED WASHER!

3 BIG FEATURES MAKE WASH DAYS EASIER...SAFER!

CONTROL-O-ROLL WRINGER for new safety. A slight instinctive pull instantly stops the rolls of this super-safe wringer.

SPEEDSELECTOR fits the speed to your washing need at a flick of the hand.

TIME-A-MATIC TIMER times washing and shuts off current automatically—ends tedious watching.

In they go! Filmy curtains, sheer linens and even your loveliest lingerie...all get "hand washing" care in the sensational Universal 2-Speed Washer with the new super-safe "Control-O-Roll" Wringer.

At last, in one washer you have the two speeds you need to get clothes really clean ...and to do everything in the wash safely. You select the speed with a flick of your hand...REGULAR for extra-thorough washing of heavy pieces and work clothes... LOW speed for gentle action to which you can trust finest silks, rayons and woolens.

See this Universal Washer at your dealer's! Compare its 2-speed washing action, new super-safe wringer and streamlined beauty with ordinary washers. Buy it today!

UNIVERSAL WASHERS
Priced from $109.95
Model Illustrated—No. 2701
$169.95

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

UNIVERSAL
LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

"She took the letters," Danny said. "They'll still be in the house."

"In the fire, likely," the inspector said. "If she's really guilty, they'll be in the fire, and everything else. Blank paper!"

"You forget the evidence of the postmaster in New Orleans. We know that blackmail money was sent to Iles Banbarr in New Orleans and that postal clerk will swear that he sent it back to Eight Solon Avenue. The woman last night said the letter was for her and signed for it. I will swear to that."

"How do we know there was blackmail money in the parcel that went to New Orleans?" the inspector said shrewdly.

Danny told him, "Because one of the victims sent it there. To that name and box number."

The morning was slightly foggy, cool and with mist rising from the lake. The police car sat at the curb in the midst of the faint haze. The inspector peered at the house.

"Quiet's a tomb," he grumbled.

"It's only half past eight," Danny said. "She seemed pretty old—maybe she doesn't get up early."

"Milkman's been along. Other people's bottles are on their front porch. None on hers. She must've took 'em in." He pulled himself from the car. "Well, if it's got to be done, it's got to be done," he said. He settled his coat and went up to the door. He turned the metal handle set into the old-fashioned bell. The bell made a grumbling rusty sound inside the door.

"She sounded half deaf to me," Danny said. "She's certainly either half blind or pretending to be."

The inspector rang the bell again. He knocked. He knocked loudly. Nothing happened. "See if there's a back door," he said mildly.

Danny went round the house. He found the side door opening into the narrow covered porch, screened from the house next door by the tall, close-woven lattice. He glanced at it with interest, noted the few drops of oil just outside it on the drive, as if a car had stood here recently.

He put his hand involuntarily to the knob and rattled it. It turned in his hand. The door swung open. He looked into the house; the side door opened into the dining room, beyond which he could see the musty, crowded sitting room he had seen last night. There was no one stirring in the house.

This was a good time to force the inspector's hand. He went into the house, across the sitting room, and opened the front door. The inspector stared at him.

"Side door unlocked," Danny explained.

"Was it now?" the inspector said curiously. "Funny. People don't leave their doors unlocked down in this part of town usually."

Danny said easily, "A good officer on the beat would investigate such an open door just as part of his business, wouldn't he?"

The inspector glanced at him and grinned. "Maybe he would, at that," he said. "We'll just have a look round, since the old woman lives alone and leaves her doors unlocked. It's part of the service." He moved on through the dining room and into the kitchen.

Danny turned and stayed in the sitting room. He looked round him quickly, at the table in the corner where the lamp stood; it was empty now, but there had been something on it last night. He looked for a desk, but there was none. There was nothing but a wooden-framed, uncomfortable old sofa done in rubbed and worn brocade, two stiff chairs, one red-velvet semirocker that looked as if it had been won with tobacco coupons, the table in the corner, and two framed and poisonously tinted enlargements of photographs on the wall—a young woman and a young man, wedding photographs, probably taken about forty years ago; there was the high-necked floppy-bosomed blouse of the early nineteen hundreds on the woman, and the handle-bar mustache and stiff celluloid collar of the same period on the man.

The letters were not here.

The inspector met him in the dining room. "Kitchen's tidy enough," he said. "Pretty bare. No signs of breakfast." He glanced at Danny with slightly more appreciative eyes. "Your bird's maybe flew the coop," he said.

The stairs went up from the dining room. The inspector surveyed them thoughtfully for a moment, then tramped up them manfully. He called, "Anybody up there?" in a loud voice, and waited. There was no answer.

Danny followed closely. There were three bedrooms here, opening off the dingy hall. One was empty; one had a narrow bed, a bare bureau, a chair and a drawn window blind, as if it were never used. The third was Ida Randall's room, with her wider bed in it.

She was in the bed. She was dead.

The two men stood in the doorway looking at her, at the huddled bed, at the shrunken old figure lying in it, at the stiff arm holding something rigidly in the air.

JENNIFER

"Maybe you think Saturday is so wonderful, Pete—but you're not a woman!"

Your husband will love it!

...ADD COLMAN'S

Give Zip to his favorite salad dressing

Here's a quick easy way to give your favorite prepared salad dressing that extra tang and zip that men prefer. Blend 2 teaspoonfuls of Colman's (dry) Mustard with a little water. Then add it to an 8-ounce jar of dressing. Equally good with mayonnaise or French dressing.

THE FAMOUS DRY MUSTARD USED BY FINE COOKS EVERYWHERE

"Well," the inspector said. "Well." He went on into the room. "She's dead, right enough," he said, bending over the bed. "What's that in her hand?"

"Looks like a pillbox," Danny said. "There's an empty glass there on the chair."

Ida Randall's teeth were on the chair too. Her mouth was open, a gaping cavity; her eyes were shut. Her wispy gray hair straggled on the pillow.

"Looks like she did it herself," the inspector said. "Maybe you put your finger on something, boy. Maybe you just did. Did you see a telephone in this house? I got to call the office."

"I didn't see one," Danny replied. "I'll stay if you like while you go next door."

The inspector lumbered off down the stairs. Danny turned quickly and looked through the room. He opened the drawers of the heavily varnished old bureau, with one leg propped up by a block of wood. The drawers were almost empty. There were no boxes in the room where the letters might be, where any other incriminating material might have been put. He went into the bathroom, and it was of a pattern with the rest of the house. A towel and a washcloth were on the rack, the towel pushed behind the bar in a muddle, the washcloth folded neatly in half and hung with straight edges. Danny regarded that thoughtfully. There was no medicine cabinet.

Two more officers arrived shortly from headquarters, and went methodically about the business of investigating Ida Randall and her death. They weren't much concerned; they didn't know the background, and it seemed just another old woman tired of poverty and loneliness, deciding to stop. There were traces of one of the more powerful barbiturates in the glass, the police chemist reported later in the day.

Danny asked curiously, "Why isn't there any label on the pillbox?"

"Kind of funny, all right," the inspector said. "No druggist's name stamped on the cover, no label with directions, no prescription number, no doctor's name."

They left the house just after lunchtime. By that time Danny was sure that the letters were gone. The letters, and whatever it was that had been stacked on the little sitting-room table. They were gone.

The neighbors didn't know much about Ida Randall. It was a big boardinghouse that stood next door. Most of the people who lived there were out all day and weren't interested anyway in a dull old woman who lived alone in the house on the corner. One half-crippled old man who had a tiny room on the top floor had seen her once or twice, pottering about her bit of garden. He could see the end of her driveway from his small window. There had been a car in the drive once or twice, he said, but he couldn't remember when. He had never seen anyone get in or out of it because it always stopped just beside the gate into the enclosed part behind the tall lattice, and whoever got out probably went through that gate and into the house by the side door.

Danny, standing at one side while the old man was questioned, asked once, "Did you happen to hear a car there last night?"

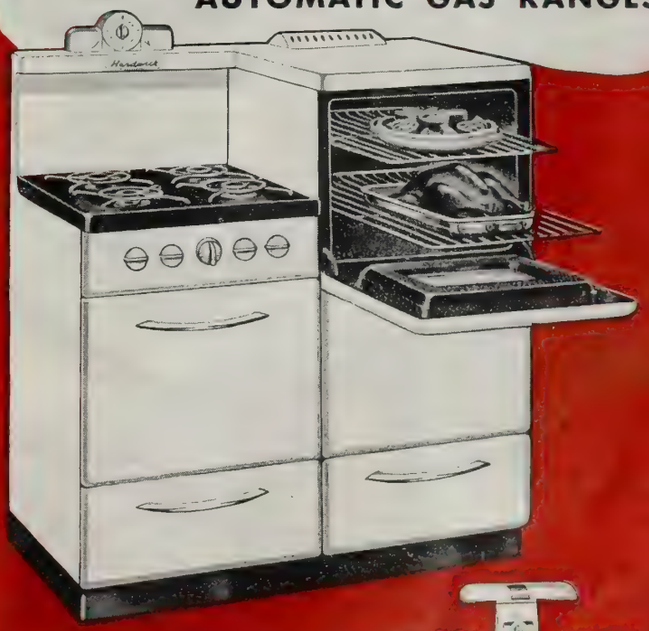
The old man said no. He hadn't. He slept pretty good, considering he didn't get out none. No, he'd gone to bed about nine o'clock and he hadn't heard anything.

Afterward, the inspector said, "Why a car last night?"

Danny and he were having a belated lunch downtown. "Couple of reasons," Danny said. "Where are the letters? I left them there about seven o'clock. She told me no one else lived in the house. She told me she did not accept mail for anyone else—but maybe that wasn't true. She didn't have a telephone, so she couldn't have sent for anyone. But someone may have been here—must have been here. There may even have been someone here while I was here. It seems to me I vaguely remember a car parked around the corner on the side street. And another thing. There's been time enough for the latest blackmail money to get back air mail from New Orleans and Dallas. I

NO MATTER HOW MUCH YOU PAY

you can't buy better cooking performance



There are higher priced gas ranges, but there is no automatic gas range at any price superior to Hardwick in COOKING PERFORMANCE.

Any woman who has used a Hardwick range will tell you it is unexcelled in cooking performance, and will give perfect service year after year with little or no attention . . .

Hardwick has made fine stoves since 1879. If you want the best cooking performance on the market . . . and the best value for your money . . . BUY HARDWICK.

HARDWICK
AUTOMATIC GAS RANGES

▲The Hardwick Challenger designed for those who prefer upper level cooking with everything handy to see and to reach.

Famous for looks . . . Famous with cooks. Hardwick's simple, classical lines are perfect for today's kitchens, will stay beautiful for years to come.▶

Ask your local gas company or write Department L-2 for free literature and name of your nearest dealer

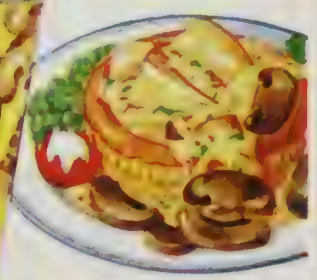
HARDWICK STOVE COMPANY, CLEVELAND, TENN.
MAKERS OF FINE STOVES SINCE 1879

Now! All ready to Serve

Choicest Mushrooms Broiled in Butter!

Save Time and Money with B in B Broiled in Butter Mushrooms. Packed 3 ways for every mushroom use!

WHOLE CROWNS add zest to steaks, chops, meat patties.



Use CHOPPED for spaghetti sauce, meat loaf, soups.

B in B Mushrooms give you that delicious broiled in butter mushroom flavor!

B in B Mushrooms are choicest hothouse mushrooms—picked when their flavor reaches perfection. They're especially prepared, broiled to a rich brown color, and then packed in their own luscious broth.

So economical. No picking no trimming—no waste! B in B Mushrooms are all ready to heat and serve.

SLICED CROWNS are wonderful in chicken à la King, with peas.

You will enjoy all 3 styles of B in B Broiled in Butter Mushrooms!

suggest that you telephone the postmasters in both places, officially, and ask about those two boxes. They'll have been watching them; I asked them to. You may find that parcels were sent back to Eight Solon in time to have got there last night. I saw parcels, six or seven, on that small table. There wasn't any way I could get at them—when," Danny said wryly, "when you weren't available until midnight and wouldn't go then."

"Who'd have been there?" the inspector wanted to know.

"That's the sixty-four-dollar question. Somebody, I'd be sure, from Tressady. We'll do a lot of checking out there for you—grapevine stuff. Somebody will know where everybody in Tressady was last night. You can find out anything if you start asking."

"This thing's gone on quite a while, according to your story," the inspector said. "If everybody knows everybody's business in Tressady, why has it gone on so long?"

"Somebody's smart, that's all, and the thing's so unlikely in a small town." He looked across the table. "You know the facts. Would you say it was likely that Ida Randall killed herself because she was scared?"

The inspector's eyes met his. "What do you mean?"

"She sounded to me like a tool, rather than a master. She was either a very good actress or a very vague old woman. It may be that she hadn't any idea what was going on, but was only being used. In that case," Danny said, "it would be murder, you know. I think myself that it was."

The inspector folded his arms on the table. His fish began to look sodden. He said, "If you were there at seven o'clock, and saw a car on the side street . . . the old woman wouldn't go to bed for a while. Did the . . . man stay there until she went to bed and then give her the stuff? Why would she take so much?"

Danny said briefly, "Maybe he was somebody she trusted a great deal." Then, "Do you see how we're going to make a real connection between her and someone in Tressady?"

"I don't," the inspector said flatly. "That I don't. Not at the minute. I never saw such a bare way of living. No books, no family photograph album, no letters, no pieces torn out of newspapers—no nothing to show what she'd been or done or who she really was. She owns the house, but nobody knows when or how she came there—dog's years ago. She has some money in the bank, draws out fifty-sixty dollars a month. Otherwise we haven't found a thing about her. You really think it might be murder?"

Danny said in reply, "You wouldn't call the police doctor now and ask him if he'll establish the time of death?"

The inspector got up abruptly and went out to the lobby. He came in again very soon. He said. "Between one and three in the morning."

Danny ate two forkfuls of smoked salmon. He said, "I should have stayed there and watched the house from seven on instead of going for you."

DANNY had telephoned Allie just after lunch from Riverport and told her about Ida Randall. She had never heard the name. She had no idea of any possible connection between the dead woman and anyone in Tressady. But the connection had to exist.

"Whoever it is was in Riverport last night," Danny had said. "It's got to be that way, Allie. Maybe early in the evening; maybe in the middle of the night. Almost certainly in the middle of the night, for my money. I think he murdered her. I think the poor old woman was only useful to him as long as she wasn't suspicious—or hadn't anything to tell. But after I gave her the two letters she was dangerous to him. He kr someone was on his trail and he had to br it."

"It sounds dreadful," Allie had s "Murder is something else again, Dann

"Not very much else, after you've cau the deaths of two other people, young peo Not very much else."

Allie hesitated. "Do you—have you any idea now who it was?"

He said slowly, "The pillbox is qu Who'd have an unlabeled, unstamped p box?"

AFTER Allie hung up she got up from desk and walked around the office restless She stood looking across the street at Hor Pottle's shop. He might have pillboxes that shop; he had everything else. No, t was silly. Well, he might have got one fr Norah James. You had to keep coming b to Norah James. But she was a stupid g much too stupid to be worth very much a matter like this. She talked too much. criminal would dare trust himself to her any way.

Allie didn't want to think about the i mediate possibility suggested by Dann words. Doctor Carling wasn't anyone wanted to think evil of, any more th Danny did. Doctors were somehow ab evil, good doctors like Doctor Carling. A why would he want blackmail anybo He made more tha good living. Anyw how could he have t to figure out all th tortuous schemes?

Allie got up. went to the mirror ha ing round the co and tidied her h She thought, Maybe time to take a chan anyway, and we across the street to H ace Pottle's.

"I'm honored," told her. "You do often come into r little place, Miss J dan."

"I've got a pr lem," Allie said ruptly. She glanced up at the long shel set round the corner, loaded with bright jacketed books. "Joe's got great confide in your judgment, Mr. Pottle. He thoug you might be able to help me."

"Of course I'd be delighted if I coul he said, with his wide smile that Allie fou so unpleasant. An ingratiating smile.

Well, maybe that was only because was so unattractive, because he was tryi so hard to make friends and didn't know h to go about it. Maybe that was it. Words Danny's kept coming into her mind: "I do notice that you do any limping inside, Alli Maybe Horace Pottle didn't smile ingrati ingly inside, either.

She said, "There is someone in Tressa who is making trouble for some of our frien Mr. Pottle, and doing it in a very und handed and clever way. Do you know an thing about it?"

He said thoughtfully, "No. I don't thi I do. I've wondered, from time to time, there mightn't be a kind of storm cent around. I've detected a certain amount unnatural tension occasionally. Centerin about the deaths of Bruce Whitney a Viola Treherne. Neither of those deat seemed just right to me, Miss Jordan, n just natural. Young, handsome peop don't . . . die so easily, as a rule. Mrs. Tr herne's death was accidental, as has be established, but if you read psychology y know that we are all of us battling incessant with an inherent 'will to die.' We are batt grounds between the 'will to live' and t 'will to die.' Psychologically speaking, wh such an accident as Mrs. Treherne's occu the 'will to die' has triumphed. And for th to happen, there must be underlying cau You follow me?"

"You are explicit. Yes. I do."

"I sit on the side lines, in a way," he sai

The lilac began life in the Balkan mountains, where it grew wild. From there, it migrated to other countries in Europe and then was brought to America from Europe. Another lilac—Syringa persica—migrated from China. According to ancient legend, lilacs are the guardians of the household. They were cherished by the early settlers of America, and many a lilac shoot came over on the Mayflower. As the early settlers traveled westward, flower-loving women secretly tucked in cuttings with their household effects. Now we find lilac bushes dotting the countryside to mark the path of the pioneers across America. —FLOWER FACTS AND FANCIES (Society of American Florists).

RAYON THAT "MAKES" LIKE MAGIC EASY-SEW
EASY-CARE WASHABLE
CruisAir
PRINTS

CruisAir—at the command of scissors, needle and you. Crispy-faced, unwrinkling, it stays bright and beautiful through countless washings. A marvellous rayon of Du Pont yarn—with a unique weave, a million prints. Moderns, florals, geometrics, conversationals—besides the Feather Print shown here in Vogue Pattern No. 6252-C. All of them, by the yard, at your favorite store.

BELVEDERE FABRICS INC.,
1412 Broadway, N.Y.C.

"You told me once, in the office, that you could interpret character by knowing what people chose to read. You interpreted Viola's character then. Can you tell me who, in Tressady, might be . . . anxious to make other people suffer, willing to make them suffer so that he might profit?"

"Does he profit financially?"

After a moment Allie said, "Yes."

"You do not speak of business? Sometimes in business there are ruthless men, as you doubtless know."

"Not business."

He tapped slowly on the ledge where he was sitting, with square, plump finger tips. He said, "Like a small boy tearing the wings off a fly simply for his own pleasure, then?"

"It must be something like that. The money isn't enough to be important."

He got up and went to his bookshelves. He ran an absent, loving hand over the books. "Your man is managing cleverly?"

"Very."

He moved on to the shelf of pocket books, to the more lurid jackets of the mystery stories. He stood for a long time thinking. He came back and sat down.

"Many people read mystery stories," he said. "If I were engaged in any sort of intrigue I should be certain to read mystery stories to get ideas. They are very popular. Judge Spencer reads a great many. It would be impossible to suspect him."

Allie waited.

"The mayor does not read mystery. He reads westerns, if you can believe it. Mr. Treherne reads nothing. The bank manager reads ghost and horror stories, but not detective novels. Mr. Harland reads serious novels and books of literary criticism. There, I've covered the town hall, the bank, the railway, the school. Oh, Doctor Carling. He reads a great many mysteries. He has little time for anything else. His wife comes and gets them for him by the armful. He must read half the night, he reads so many. His wife says he is voracious when it comes to mystery."

"What does she read herself?" Allie inquired quickly. She didn't want too much attention focused on Doctor Carling.

"Why, nothing. As she points out, she sews all the time. Her dolls are quite remarkable," Mr. Pottle said musingly. "I have often wondered . . . they have no children, you know. I suppose the dolls are a substitute."

"Maybe they are."

"Perhaps she should have had a dozen children," he went on. "She is a very capable woman and could manage the lives and affairs of a considerable family with ease. Perhaps she gets considerable satisfaction from managing her little puppets."

The door opened and four grimy infants came in: the Bryan four-year-old, the Gilchrist boy and girl and the Toomey baby, toddling along with his hand firm in Betty Gilchrist's. They wanted candy.

Allie got up suddenly. She said, "Thank you, Mr. Pottle," in a kind of odd breathlessness, and went out. Instead of crossing to the Courier, she turned north and went as quickly as she could up to Catherine's.

"Father's having his nap," Catherine said from the veranda swing. "Christopher's asleep with nothing on. He minds the heat, poor baby. You're hot, too, Allie. Why were you hurrying?"

"Catherine," Allie said abruptly, resting for a moment beside her on the swing, "would it be Doctor Carling who is blackmailing you?"

Catherine fixed her eyes on Allie's face. After a long moment a slow flood of color swept up inexorably from her long throat. "No," she said quietly.

Allie nodded. She got up. "I thought not," she said, and started back down the steps.

"Where are you going?"

"Just . . . nowhere, really. Just to think for a little. Everything seems to be making a little sense at last. I . . . maybe in a few hours we'll have it settled. Maybe we will."

She couldn't say anything more. She went on back down to the Courier. She went over to the window and took the Shirley Temple doll out. She held the doll in her hands. She Good mornings start with good nights...

...and sleep-inviting relaxation starts with the lullaby comfort of an Ostermoor. Quality-built with the craftsmanship you rightly expect of its famous name.

INNERSPRING
OSTERMOOR
AMERICA'S QUALITY MATTRESS FOR NEARLY 100 YEARS
Dealers in Principal Cities—or write OSTERMOOR & CO., Chicago 16, Ill., or Bridgeport, Conn.

Cash's WOVEN NAMES
The Mark of Safety for Everything You Own
12 Doz. . .$3.50
9 Doz. . .$3.00
6 Doz. . .$2.40
3 Doz. . .$1.80
HUGH NEEDHAM
Identify distinctly. Protect positively. The preferred marking method for Home, School, Camp, Travel.
Ask your dealer, or write— Cash's So. Norwalk 4, Conn.

Beautifies AS IT CLEANS

America's Largest Selling Silver Cleaner

QUAKER OATS HELPS GROW

"Stars of the Future"

Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition!

Your youngsters get more growth, more endurance—your grownups get more energy, more stamina from nourishing oatmeal than any other whole-grain cereal! That's why Quaker Oats is recommended for a better breakfast! According to a recent survey, only 1 school child in 5 gets the kind of breakfast he should have. So doctors say, the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! Serve Quaker Oats often!

A GIANT in Value!

Nutritious Quaker Oats helps keep your grocery bills down. Saves you money, and saves precious time, too—Quick Quaker Oats cooks in 2½ minutes!

A GIANT in Flavor!

People eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR! Tempting recipes on the package. Remember to buy delicious Quaker Oats.

QUAKER OATS

Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same remembered other dolls—dozens of them. Tiny humanlike figures created out of nothing but ordinary twenty-five-cent models of wax and wood and limp stuffed cotton; made into reality . . . given power, really. They went out into the world and earned money to be used for Causes; they became important. In the background, their creator could afford to take considerable pride in them. In her puppets.

Allie found herself crushing the doll in her hand. She spread the crisp skirt carefully and set the doll back in the window against the little notice card. She went down to Joe.

"I'm going up to Carling's," she said. "Danny March is on his way back from the city. If he wants to know where I am, Joe, I'm at Carling's."

"What you going up there for?" Joe demanded.

"Something about the dolls," Allie said vaguely. Because that was what she was going to talk about. The dolls.

Mrs. Carling's voice called out "Come in" as Allie rang the doorbell. She went in, to find the shades drawn and the house comparatively cool. Mrs. Carling was on the porch at the back, the porch that was screened in summer, glassed in winter; her workroom. She sat upright in a wide, old-fashioned Morris chair with wooden arms. Her face was purple and she was wearing her hat.

"Oh, it's you," she said heavily. "Should have come to the door. But I just got in this minute. Something happened to Evan's car and I had to drive him out to the crossing. I wouldn't have done it if I'd known it was so hot. It's terribly humid today, Allie. I don't think I ever saw it so humid."

Allie said sympathetically, "You do look quite done. Do you have trouble sleeping when it's so hot?"

The bright jet eyes blinked once, like a bird's. The lids dropped and then were lifted, in a hooded way. She said, "I couldn't sleep much last night. I read most of the night."

"Anything interesting?" Allie asked lightly. "I don't seem to find anything much around."

"Nothing much. Mysteries. I get them for Evan—he reads them by the dozen. I found one somewhere and read it. Don't know what it was now. What do you want, Allie?"

"I thought we might do rather a big story about the dolls," Allie said. "It would stir up interest for the bazaar later. But get your breath—I'm not in a hurry for a few minutes. Can I get you something cold to drink?"

"I'm all right," Mrs. Carling said shortly. "What happened to Doctor Carling's car?" Allie inquired. "Did he have an accident in the night?"

The sharp eyes fixed themselves on her again. "He wasn't out in the night," she said. "He went to bed about eleven and slept like a log all night. I had quite a time waking him. What makes you think he had an accident?"

"I didn't, of course. I was just concerned. Everybody's always concerned about the doctor—we're always thinking that any minute we may need him. Selfishness."

"M-m-m," Mrs. Carling said shortly. She picked up a paper and fanned herself. "Something came disconnected in the garage, apparently," she said. "It must've happened just as he stopped. It's nothing much. They're fixing it downtown and they'll go out and get him. Thank goodness." She moved a little, settled herself.

Allie said, "I called on Catherine just before I came here. She isn't looking very well. I'm worried about her."

"What's the matter with her?"

"I don't know," Allie said, troubled. "She seems to have something on her mind. I'm not sure it isn't connected with Norah James. . . . I had a little talk with Norah a week or so ago and I'm bothered. Catherine told Norah a ridiculous story when she was ill and Norah believed it. I'm afraid she's told it."

"Who to?"

"I don't know. I thought I'd ask you who Norah might talk to."

Mrs. Carling was silent for a minute. Then she said, "Is that what you came for? I thought you came about the dolls."

"Maybe I wanted to ask you about Norah, too," Allie said with a show of honesty. "After all, Catherine's my best friend."

"There's no use you coming to me. Norah doesn't talk to me." She stopped abruptly. "Did she say she did?"

"Well," Allie said, "not exactly. Not—not really. But ——"

"The girl's a fool," Mrs. Carling said shortly. "Even if she did talk to me, I wouldn't repeat anything. I'm a doctor's wife. I know better than that. Did she tell you that she told me some story Catherine told her? Did she?"

"Well," Allie said, hedging. "Well ——"

The fat hands on the chair arms clenched unconsciously. "The girl's a fool," she said again. "I'll have to tell Evan to send her away. Can't have nurses who talk, not to anybody. She's been around too long. Trouble with her is she wants to get married—her head's addled. I'm sorry I've been good to her. I'll have Evan send her away." She sounded as if she liked the idea.

"Did she tell you what Catherine talked about when she was ill?" Allie asked.

"Heavens, I don't remember. The girl runs on and on—you know what she's like. What does it matter? Has Catherine got some guilty secret in her life? What does it matter?"

Allie sat silent. She was thinking, making up her mind, wondering if she wasn't already sure what had to be done.

She said, "It isn't only Catherine I'm thinking of. It's a dreadful thing to have to think about, in Tressady, in our own town. But something dreadful has been going on for a long time now, Mrs. Carling. I don't think it will be long before it's cleared up, because in the last two days we've made wonderful progress. But it's horrible, what's been happening. It's already caused two deaths—three deaths, I should say," Allie corrected herself.

Mrs. Carling said slowly, "Three deaths? Whose?"

"Bruce Whitney for one. Viola Treherne."

She didn't say "Why did they die?" She didn't think of them at all. Instead, she said evenly, "And the third?"

"Someone you don't know, Mrs. Carling. A woman in Riverport."

There was a long silence. "A woman in Riverport? What woman?"

"Her name was Ida Randall," Allie said gently.

The broad face, which had been losing its congested color, purpled again. She said, "I

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Thus I Refute It

By Joan Aucourt

I wear my body like a dress
And put it on and off at will;
The silken skin, the stolid stress
Of bone, bright blood, inconstant still.

Inconstant, careless, soon put by
The fragile leaf-veined wrist and hand,
The quick, kaleidoscopic eye,
The jagged brick on which I stand.

So pain, like time, is but a stream
In which abiding may not be,
And sorrow is a frailer dream
Than either pain, or time, or me.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

don't know what you're talking about, Allie Jordan. Or why you're telling me all this wild stuff. It sounds like melodrama to me, something you're making up as you go along. Why are you telling me all this crazy story? It's nothing to do with me."

"It's hard to believe that it's had anything to do with anybody in Tressady, but it had. You see . . . the woman in Riverport was mixed up in the thing somehow, and last night she died. It looks very much," Allie said simply, "as if she had been murdered. It was quite cleverly done," she went on. "Whoever did it thought that there wouldn't be any way now to find out who it was in Tressady who was . . . making so much trouble for a few unhappy people. But of course there are ways."

"How do you know all this?"

"Danny March and I have been working on it for some time," Allie said. "He's in the city now—at least, he has been since last night. He laid a trap for the wicked person, and it's been sprung. In a very unexpected way. He's . . . on his way here now, with the city police."

"On his way here? Here?"

"To Tressady."

She had almost stopped breathing. She said, "Do they know who . . . they're coming for?"

"Not yet," Allie said. "But it will be fairly simple now. You see, there are bits of evidence . . . from New Orleans and Boston and Dallas, from people here in Tressady. These clever plots can't go on forever. It was blackmail, you see. And a blackmailer may be sharp and smart and quick-minded, and he's certainly unscrupulous and utterly, utterly greedy and selfish. But he is bound to give himself away because of all those things. It must be like taking drugs, starting in to a career of blackmail. You don't know where to stop—and you give yourself away. All that has to be done now is to put all the bits of evidence together and see what they add up to. It won't take long, now that the police are interested." She said slowly, "It's too bad Ida Randall died. Too bad for the blackmailer, I mean. It was only blackmail before. Now it will be murder. . . . It's a dreadful kind of mind, the blackmailer's mind—when it can set up a motivation for murder. I think it's the most evil kind of mind in the world, because it is deliberate. It is deliberately selfish, deliberately torturing, deliberately evil."

Mrs. Carling said thickly, "And you've been setting yourself up against this, then? This young upstart Danny March, and you? It's you who have been interfering in all this?"

Allie got up quickly. "I'm afraid I've been upsetting you," she said. "I'll get you a drink of ice water, Mrs. Carling. I've upset you terribly."

She went into the kitchen, with her heart beating wildly. She turned on the tap and let it run hard. She reached out and unlocked the kitchen door under the sound of the water, turned the knob, unhooked the screen. She left the door ajar. She took a glass from the shining, immaculate shelf and went to the refrigerator for ice. She opened the door.

There was a doll sitting in the refrigerator—a big doll, a doll dressed like a lady of the long-ago French court, with high powdered hair and immensely voluminous skirts. A doll, in the refrigerator? Allie lifted it out, forgetting, for half a second, the woman on the porch.

But Mrs. Carling had heard the refrigerator door. Allie heard her move; turned, with the doll in her hands. Mrs. Carling was standing in the open doorway, and her face was blotched, furious, completely insane with rage. She leaned with a hand on the door casing. She began to straighten. Her eyes were on Allie, on the doll in Allie's hands.

"Why, you little cripple!" she said in a thick, low voice. "You dirty little cripple!"

For half a second they stood staring at each other. Mrs. Carling's eyes were like a snake's eyes, holding Allie rigid. She moved forward.

"YES! IT'S EASY TO GET BETTER CAKES—use Spry with Cake-Improver!"

SAYS AUNT JENNY

"Is it proof you're wanting, ladies? Then cast your eyes over this big, beautiful chocolate cake, handsome enough for the St. Patrick's Day parade with its lovely, pale green mint frosting. Now you make one. Follow the recipe to the letter, using Spry's easy One-Bowl Method. See if you ever had another chocolate cake so luscious-tasting, so light and delicate, so velvety-textured. For there's a special Cake-Improver ingredient in Spry that no other type shortening has! Yes, it's the smart woman you'll be to use Spry for all your cakes, all your baking, and all your frying, too. Spry gives grand fried foods, crispy, delicate, and so easy to digest."

TRY MY CHOCOLATE MINT SUNDAE CAKE

1½ cups sifted cake flour	1 teaspoon salt
1¼ cups sugar	⅔ cup Spry
½ cup cocoa	1 cup milk
1¼ teaspoons soda	1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar	2 eggs, unbeaten

Sift flour, sugar, cocoa, soda, cream of tartar and salt into mixing bowl . . . Drop in Spry . . . Add ¾ cup milk, then vanilla, and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed) . . . Scrape bowl and spoon or beater. Add remaining milk and eggs and beat 200 strokes (2 minutes by hand or on mixer at low speed) . . . Bake in two deep 8-inch Spry-coated layer pans in moderate oven (350° F.) 30–40 minutes. Spread Green Mint Frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Decorate top with little "rivers and pools" of melted, cooled chocolate (½ teaspoon Spry and ½ ounce chocolate).

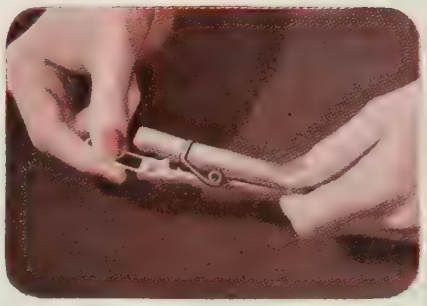
Green Mint Frosting — Put 2 egg whites, unbeaten, 1½ cups sugar, 5 tablespoons cold water, 1 teaspoon light corn sirup and ⅛ teaspoon salt in top of double boiler and mix thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water and beat constantly with rotary egg beater until mixture will hold a peak (about 7 minutes). Remove from hot water, add ¼ teaspoon mint extract and enough green coloring to tint frosting a pale green. Beat until cool and thick enough to spread. Makes enough frosting for top and sides of two 8-inch layers.

SAVE MONEY— GET SPRY IN ECONOMICAL 3 LB. CAN

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SPRY WITH CAKE-IMPROVER

Another fine Lever product



"As soon as Daisy gets to know you better, we'll take off the 'Scotch' Tape."

Tape it easy

with "SCOTCH" Cellophane Tape

SKIRT HEM RIPPED? A strip of transparent "Scotch" Cellophane Tape makes a quick temporary repair.

PREVENT GARMENT SNAGS by covering clothespin jaws with smooth-surfaced "Scotch" Brand Tape.

FIRST AID INSTRUCTIONS taped on inside of medicine cabinet door are helpful in emergencies.

"Scotch" Cellophane Tape is transparent—seals without moistening. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., St. Paul 6, Minn.

SCOTCH BRAND Cellophane Tape

MADE BY THE "3M" COMPANY . . . also makers of "3M" Abrasives, Adhesives, and a wide variety of other products for home and industry.

3M COMPANY

General Export: DUREX ABRASIVES CORP., New Rochelle, N. Y.
In Canada: CANADIAN DUREX ABRASIVES LTD., Brantford, Ontario

©1949 3M CO.

But then, suddenly, she collapsed. Her heavy body crumpled, went inert; she slid down the casing to the floor and lay there, her eyes open, staring at Allie, her face twisted sideways, her mouth pulled down at the corner. She just lay there.

There were steps at the back door almost before Allie could breathe, and Doctor Carling came in. He saw Allie first, and then his wife.

"I think she's had a stroke," Allie heard herself whispering. "I think she's had a stroke."

He was on his knees beside her. He dragged his bag across the floor and opened it. His wife's wild eyes stared up at him, fully conscious. His hands were busy.

"What happened?" he asked Allie sharply.

"She was excited. She . . . was very angry. She fell."

"Phone the hospital, Allie, for the ambulance. We'll have to wait for a stretcher. We can't even get her off the floor. She's too heavy."

His wife heard him. But the eyes did not close.

Allie telephoned and came back. "Is it bad?" she said.

"Can't tell how bad yet. We'll do what we can."

Suddenly, away back in her throat, without moving a muscle of her face, Mrs. Carling began to laugh. She laughed and laughed, lying there on the floor, dreadful, hoarse, impossible laughter.

Her husband got up. "Why is she laughing?"

Allie said after a minute, "Don't you know what she's been doing, Doctor Carling?"

"Doing?"

"Don't you know where she was last night?"

"As far as I know, in bed." Then, "She put a sleeping drug in my cocoa. I tasted it, but it didn't matter. She was always prescribing for me. I needed sleep last night. I drank it. Did she leave the house after that? Why? For what purpose?"

A CAR drew up in the drive under the kitchen window. It wasn't the ambulance. It was Danny March.

Allie felt herself suddenly beginning to tremble. She got herself somehow to the kitchen door and pushed it open. She said "Danny!" in a choked voice, and then, to Doctor Carling, "He'll tell you. He'll tell you everything." She was still clutching the doll.

The money, of course, was in the doll, put into the refrigerator as the one safe place against fire in Mrs. Carling's absences from the house. It was the sight of it in Allie's hands that had finished Mrs. Carling completely. The doll had been her secret treasure, her dearest possession. The big hollow body held a roll of hundred-dollar bills, crisp and new—probably acquired one by one in exchange for the old tens, from different city banks. The wide-spreading skirts and petticoats were lined with them, stitched neatly between two thicknesses of cloth, hidden. Everybody's money was there, when they counted it: Catherine's, Viola's, Ralph's. There was almost six thousand dollars, some of it unexplained money, so that some person or persons unknown had been paying blackmail too.

They told Doctor Carling the story, and he accepted it at once. He could fill in the gaps.

"She hates everyone," he said briefly. "Myself above everyone. It doesn't matter why."

Detective Inspector Green worked patiently through all the evidence. He was satisfied. He discovered that Ida Randall was Doctor Carling's aunt; he insisted on a long description of her character before he crossed her off in his mind as nothing more than an unfortunate and completely ignorant tool. He wasn't told any of the private histories of the victims, but he said he needn't know. The case was clear enough.

"Now, the last thing," he said, in the Carling house long after dusk, "will she live?"

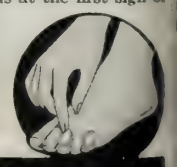
TUMS

OVERSMOKED? OVERINDULGED? take TUMS Feel better FAST!

When acid indigestion heartburn and sour stomach follow too much smoking or other over-indulgence, get almost instant relief with Tums! Easy to take as candy mints, one or two Tums neutralize excess acid jiffy-quick. You feel better fast! No baking soda in Tums. No danger of overalkalizing—no acid rebound. Get Tums this very day—carry Tums with you always!

To feel better, try one or two TUMS after breakfast.

FOR THE TUMMY



Tums present "The Alan Young Show" every Tuesday night, NBC network

STOP CORNS!

ENJOY INSTANT RELIEF!

Millions of people, thanks to Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads, never have corns! Simply apply these thin, soothing, cushioning, protective pads at the first sign of sore toes from new or tight shoes and you'll stop corns before they can develop! But—if you have corns—Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads will instantly stop painful shoe friction and pressure. Separate medications included for quickly removing corns. Used the world over.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

HOW YOU CAN HAVE HEALTHY HAIR AND SCALP WITH THE HARPER METHOD

Your hair can have that "eye-catching", silky soft, lustrous look of a movie star. Your scalp can be delightfully clean and free from annoying dandruff, scaliness and other unsightly conditions. You can look your loveliest . . . be admired and envied.

It's easy with the Harper Method. Famous for 60 years. Visit our conveniently located Harper Method Beauty Shops or use our world-famous products in your own home. Let us tell you more about Harper Method and what it can do for you. Write Dept. LHJ3 today.

FREE Send for folders with charts on Hair and Scalp . . . and Skin. Also list of Harper Method Products.

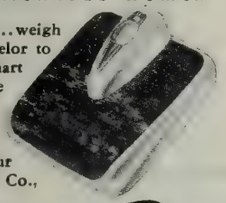
Harper Method Beauty

Rochester 9, N. Y. / Niagara Falls, Canada

Sparkle aplenty!

Bright housewives with a flair for doing things right don't wear themselves out scrubbing toilet bowls. They sprinkle Sani-Flush into them at least twice a week and let its chemical action do the work. Sani-Flush chases stains and invisible, germy film in a hurry. Disinfects, too.

Safe in all toilet systems—good in hard or soft water. At all grocers'. Two sizes. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.



Sani-Flush

GET TWO CANS FOR CONVENIENCE

HE Smart Figure

IDE of FASHIONABLE WOMEN

p pounds in check.. weigh ularly with Counselor to guide you to a smart re. Counselor is the y bath scale with light-heavy reg- or for maintain- accuracy. Ask your ler. The Brearley Co., ckford, Illinois.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

COUNSELOR STREAMLINED Scales

Her husband said slowly, "Perhaps for a time. You will understand if I say that I hope she will not recover?"

The inspector said, "For your own sake, you'd better stay away from the case."

"That had occurred to me," Doctor Carling said dryly.

Danny and Allie walked home in the moonlight. They had stopped at Berger's for something to eat. They lingered a long time over their coffee, not saying very much.

Once Danny said, looking at her thoughtfully, "You took quite a chance, going up there, Allie."

"Not very much, really. I mean, I didn't realize she would have such a violent temper. I'd thought of her as calculating. I mean . . . after I began to think of her. You see . . . I began to remember her bent over that special personal-belongings box at the clothing-collection room last year, very eager, hunting for something. Everybody else had left and I went back for something. She'd said she would turn out the lights. I remembered that. I thought about Norah, probably telling her everything. I realized that if she'd been watching and counting and measuring she could have become suspicious about Viola, just as I could myself if I'd wanted to, and then of course her letter hit the mark. If it hadn't it wouldn't have mattered. It wouldn't be a thing Viola would talk about, that letter, even if it weren't true. I thought about all those things—but it was really Horace Pottle who made me see the truth, with his talk about puppets. Who made me begin to see."

"You still shouldn't have gone up there. You should have waited for me."

I don't kare how mutch a man talks, if he will only say it in a few words. —JOSH BILLINGS.

"I thought I could get her to talk. I was tired of all this intrigue and badness, Danny. It doesn't belong in Tressady. I was tired of it. I thought I could goad her into talking too much, if she really was the guilty person."

"Well, you did it," Danny said. "Ready?"

He stopped at the counter and bought a cigar. Allie looked at him in surprise.

"Don't you like cigar smoke?"

"I love it. My father smoked cigars. I always loved coming into the house when he'd been smoking. It's such a friendly smell. I was fond of my father. I loved having him home. Maybe that's why I like cigar smoke."

Danny slid the band off the cigar and carried it in his fingers. They walked up Main Street, slowly. The movie was still on, and there was nobody yet on the streets. They stopped for a minute in front of the Courier, and looked in at Shirley Temple, still proud and glittering in the window.

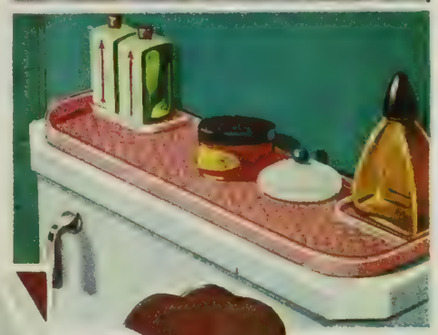
Danny took up Allie's left hand as they stood there, and singled out the fourth finger. He put the gold-and-red cigar band on it, and folded the extra paper over at the back. He didn't say anything. They went on up Main Street, and Allie found herself holding the band on with a tight thumb.

They went along the path through the park in silence. Going down the other side of the hill, Danny dropped his arm companionably around Allie's waist. His hand was firm and strong, holding her as they went down the hill.

He didn't stop at the gate and say good night. He went on up the path with her, and then turned her a little and guided her off across the lawn to the hammock under the apple tree. He lowered himself into it, full length, and pulled her to sit down beside him.

"I'm tired," he said. "I didn't really go to bed last night. Put your arm under my head, Allie. This darn thing won't fall down, will it?"

"It might," Allie said in a low voice.



He turned her round and put his head on her shoulder. He took up most of the ham-

Make your bathroom the safest room in the house—prettiest, too!

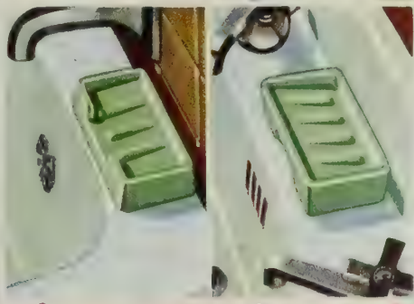
FOR A GOOD FOOTING and good sitting, too, put a Rubbermaid Vacuum Cup Bathtub Mat in your bathtub. It stays in place . . . and keeps its bright, fresh beauty no matter how often you use it.



STEP OUT on a Rubbermaid Floor Mat. It hugs the floor. Holds wet feet better than slick floors do. Feels fine underfoot . . . and it's reversible for extra long life.

PLAY SAFE with lotions and other bottled liquids, too. Set them on a Rubbermaid Toilet Top Tray. If they tip, the tray's high rim keeps spilled liquids from dripping.

SAVE SOAP with a Rubbermaid Two-way Soap Dish. Whether you use the side that catches drippings or the side that drains them off, soap stays high and dry. Ingenious!

THE WOOSTER RUBBER CO.
DEPT. L-1,
WOOSTER, OHIO

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

"You'll find Rubbermaid items wherever housewares are sold in the United States and Canada."

Send for catalog showing complete line

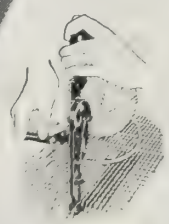
Rubbermaid Houseware

The quality home-engineered brand that assures long life, resistance to soap, grease, heat and wear.

Create these lovely

Minerva hand-hooked rugs

It's speedy, it's easy, it's loads of fun!



The instructions are simple. The yarn cost is low. The patterns are lovely. Make them at your leisure. Enjoy them all your life. Their elegance can't be duplicated. Not for any money. Remember—only Minerva Sparkletone Yarn can give your hand-hooked rugs this lustrous, lifelong finish.

To make this deep-piled 45" x 72" beauty, ask for Minerva Rug Manual Vol. 78 at your favorite Minerva store or send in the coupon below for your copy.

In 8½ short hours—whip up this hand-hooked beauty!

The secret? It's the new automatic Minerva Robot Needle! It's fast, fun, fascinating. The needle glides over the pattern like magic. Start this 22" x 34" oval with Minerva Sparkletone Rug Yarn today. See Minerva Rug Manual Volume 78.

James Lees and Sons Company, Dept. MR-1A, Bridgeport, Pa.
Please send me Minerva Rug Manual Vol. 78—75¢. I enclose remittance in coin (no stamps, please).

Lees®

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

ANOTHER FAMOUS PRODUCT . . . LEES CARPETS

mock. Allie perched on the edge and thought about him. She felt tired too. Tired, and as if she might be going to cry. She couldn't do that.

Danny put a foot out and pushed against the lowest limb of the apple tree. The hammock moved gently. He put his face in the hollow of Allie's shoulder. "You smell good."

There was a sudden small squeaky noise near by. It was Night, standing beside the hammock. She leaped up suddenly and hunted for a place to lie down. She settled for Danny's middle and ensconced herself there comfortably, kneading his shirt front with her velvet paws.

"Hey," Danny said, "you ought to be home taking care of the kids, hadn't you? You're a respectable old matron now, remember? Moonlight nights aren't for you any more, pal." He stroked her, though. Then he took his hand away from her suddenly and put the arm around Allie, holding her close. He said, "Let's get married tomorrow. Will you?"

Allie said faintly, "Married? Tomorrow?"

"The emphasis is on tomorrow. Will you? You haven't got any reason to fiddle around. You've got thousands of scalloped dresser sets, or whatever it is girls fuss around about. You've got lots of clothes and stuff. You haven't got anything to wait for."

"How—how do you know?" Allie asked dazedly.

"I asked Jessie. Yesterday. She says everything's all organized, and she'd make the cake today. Probably a cake would be nice," he said. "I don't draw the line at cakes. I don't care much about veils."

There was a long silence. Then Danny raised his head abruptly.

"What'd I say?" he demanded. "You crying."

"No, I'm—I'm not," Allie said. "I'm crying a bit. I never cry."

"No, but you're going to learn how," Danny said comfortably. He sat up. "We got this all backward. You're so darn strong and good and sweet and wonderful and that, I've kind of got twisted. Here," he said, and moved. "I'm the one to be the headrest in this family, not you." He put his arm under her shoulders and looked at her. "I'll have to struggle to be as big as you are, but it'll be something to work for." He bent his head. "Jessie said you'd marry me and Joe did," he said. He kissed her. It took a long time. "What about you, sweetheart?"

The words, the awful words that Mrs. Carling had said faded away. Allie lifted her hand with the cigar band on it and looked at it over Danny's shoulder.

"I'll never give my ring back, anyway," she said.

"Say you love me, Allie."

After a long time she said, "I can't say great big words like that without any practice." Then, at the look on his face, "I'll get to it, though, Danny. I can feel it . . . coming on."

Night purred loudly and moved her paws. Danny reached down a hand and scooped her up. He dropped her over the side of the hammock. "Go on and mind your own business," he said firmly. "You're interrupting."

"She's my pet kitten, of course," Allie said, "she's always been in on everything."

"Well," Danny said comfortably, and tightened his arm, "she isn't in on this

This is a condensation of the novel soon to be published by Macrae Smith Co.

NEW FRIENDS FOR OLD MASTERS

(Continued from Page 40)

is partly responsible. The precariousness of life has made people more responsive, more sensitive to the value of beauty. Also, millions of our men and women were compelled to travel to other countries, and their wanderings increased their experience of art. Their interest, too, was stimulated by the efforts made by the War Department to protect the important monuments abroad. A special corps in the Army composed of curators, professors of the history of art, architects, and so on, was constituted to see that works of art were preserved, properly guarded and put off bounds to the troops. These men, who were often under shell fire and suffered casualties and even death, gained the respect of the G. I.'s. As a result our Army became extraordinarily conscious of art and of the value placed upon it.

Two amusing proofs of the state of mind of our troops are offered by incidents that occurred in Germany. In Munich aerial bombardment had destroyed every monument of architecture before our ground forces had captured the city. They in turn had advanced so rapidly that they were ahead of the Arts and Monuments Officers, as this protective branch of the Army was designated.

When our G. I.'s arrived in Munich they looked around to find what they called "The Art," which should be guarded and put off bounds. Everything of architectural significance seemed to be in ruins except two buildings which looked like small temples, so the commanding officer immediately placed guards around these. When Germans passed they called out "Heil!" and the Americans stood at attention. After several days General Patton discovered to his intense irritation that we were guarding two monuments erected by Hitler to loyal party members!

As our armies advanced, "The Art" was always turning up in unexpected places. Castles were filled with stained glass from cathedrals, hospitals with sculpture from museums, and salt mines with paintings from all over Europe. A detachment of our sappers was working in one salt mine to remove a cache of dynamite when a G. I. noticed that a wall of the mine looked new. He persuaded his superior officer to let him dig through the wall and found that there was a cavern beyond. He wriggled through the hole, turned on his flashlight, and the beam fell on a large painting by Boucher. "Here's a nude! It must be art!" he shouted back.

Art, one can see, had penetrated deeply into the conscious and subconscious minds of American soldiers. But it has also taken on a new significance for us all. We need art today as we have never needed it before. In recent years, just as man's age-old struggle for existence has seemed certain to end victoriously, he suddenly finds himself face to face with potential annihilation. The weapons are there, chemical, bacteriological and atomic, and the temptation for some one to use them is seemingly irresistible. Threatened with catastrophe, a Archibald MacLeish has written, "There seems to be no place to make a stand and nothing against which to strike—only shadows and abstractions: impalpable imponderable things against which struggle is impossible. Everything a man touches seems to him impersonal, statistical, unmotivated mechanical."

Youth is always too serious and just now it is too serious about frivolity.
—G. K. CHESTERTON.

Instinctively, yet shyly, we sense in art a hope of escape, an Ariadne thread that may give us new courage to search for a way out of the intricate maze we have constructed for our own spiritual and physical destruction. By following the thread we may find a passage from our dark cave, find once more a world organized according to human values, a world in which human desires and aspirations may be satisfied. Through art we may regain the conviction that "Mankind is 'nice people' after all," as Private Erickson wrote; and when this conviction becomes universal we may hope for the end of wars.

That, I believe, is the real meaning of the comments in the servicemen's ledger. It also explains why thirty thousand people a day, nearly a million in five weeks, came to the National Gallery to see a group of paintings

(Continued on Page 198)

THIS MONTH

FLU DANGER* REACHES PEAK

Keep your guard up against the highly infectious flu virus . . . especially now, when flu may be raging in your community with epidemic or near-epidemic force. Remember—a single infected sneeze or cough can scatter this menacing virus in house dust . . . to infect your family, even weeks later! Be sure—every cleaning time—to disinfect with powerful, effective "Lysol" brand disinfectant! "Lysol" quickly kills the flu virus on contact. Use "Lysol" every day in all of your household cleaning. Highly concentrated . . . economical to use.

*Medical laboratory tests prove the flu virus has a remarkably long life. Sneezed or coughed into house dust, it can live to cause flu even 6 whole weeks later.

Every Day . . . As You Clean Fight Infection with Potent "Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. • Product of Lehn & Fink

L KITCHEN surfaces need daily disinfection with germ-killing "Lysol." Make sure this hygienic cleanliness for sink, drainards, cabinet doors and shelves, walls d floor. Also disinfect mops, brooms.

CHILDREN'S ROOMS need special hygienic care—particularly when flu or other infectious diseases are about. Clean floor, walls, furniture with efficient "Lysol." Won't harm paint, varnish.

YOUR BATHROOM has many "danger spots" where flu germs may be lurking. Be sure to use germ-killing "Lysol" brand disinfectant when cleaning the tub, toilet, basin, walls, floor.

MEASURE CAREFULLY for most effective, most economical use of "Lysol." 2½ tablespoons of dependable "Lysol" to each gallon of cleaning water is the rule for all household disinfection.

IMPORTANT "LYSOL" CLEANING USES: Bathroom tub, toilet, basin, walls, floor—kitchen sink, drainboards, garbage pail. • Laundry tubs and washers—closets, cellars, stairs, storerooms, shelves. • All woodwork, floors, walls, doorknobs, rails—children's rooms and furniture, diaper pail. • Sickrooms, including bedding, utensils and linen—cleaning rags, mops, brooms, brushes.

Here's a cargo to put new happiness in your canary's heart — a "treasure chest" of golden melody. Note the Biscuit. There, especially, are "gems" he loves—bright, tempting tidbits that bring out song you never knew he had!

Your canary likes to sing, but he has to be happy and healthy to sing his best. Don't depend on a few ordinary seeds. Feed him French's Bird Seed and Biscuit—the complete, correct diet of twelve tested ingredients. And remember—the sweetest song is in the Biscuit.

You get French's Bird Seed and French's Bird Biscuit in one popular priced 10-oz. package. Feed this diet for just ten days; then listen for the thrilling new notes in his song!

This Plus in his diet puts Song in his heart

French's

BIRD SEED and BISCUIT

The Largest Selling Bird Seed in America

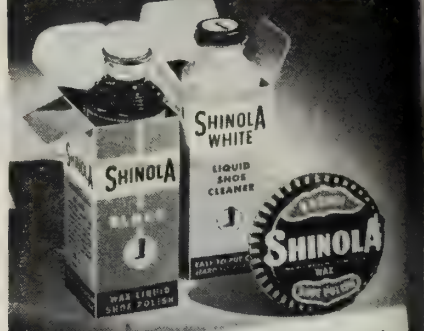
(Continued from Page 196)

from the Berlin museums, which were taken under the protection of our Army from a salt mine at Merkers, Germany. These thousands of people, who waited in line, stretched, ducked, stood on tiptoe to catch a glimpse of two hundred masterpieces of the past, knew probably very little about art; but they realized, as Senator Fulbright said in arguing for the prolongation of the exhibition, that great paintings "are symbols of all that is good in our Western Christian civilization. . . . People are hungry for a glimpse of something more beautiful, more satisfying than the synthetic emotions of their everyday lives in this troubled world. Never in the history of mankind has it been more important that people be reminded that there are enduring values in this life above and beyond the materialism of our customary activities."

The realization that these "enduring values" are to be found in great works of art has changed the public's attitude toward museums. They are no longer looked upon as dusty archives or dry collections of historical documents. They are rightly judged to be treasure houses of potential inspiration and delight. Thus they are no longer considered merely places where one accumulates knowledge, but rather places where one experiences emotion. We have come to recognize that the person who says, "I don't know anything about art, but I know what I like," is, in any case, better off than Thurber's expert, who knew all about art but didn't know what he liked. For in matters of art liking is more important than knowing, and is in fact the first step toward understanding.

The supreme achievements of art must be understood intuitively and spontaneously. In them poetic suggestions and profound spiritual interpretation are joined to the formal elements of art, such as volume, movement, color, composition and pattern. Their appeal is both sensuous and emotional. We enjoy them with our eyes, but the pictorial images transferred to the mind become a part of an imaginative world, where our desires and emotions find an ideal satisfaction.

Consider, for example, one of the greatest of landscapes, the famous painting of The Mill, by Rembrandt, which is reproduced with this article. Here the misty twilight reduces the scene to "huge and mighty forms" as inevitable and unalterable as the pyramids of Giza. In looking at this drama of the sky as it darkens to nightfall, the sensitive observer cannot but feel a profound harmony, something of the mood of detached serenity which Wordsworth described as lying at the root of poetry and which he analyzed as the outcome of emotion recollected in tranquillity. Or, as Roger Fry, the British critic, has written, "All that one has ever felt of exhilarated melancholy in face of the solemn movement from light to gloom, in face of its lingering splendor and its inevitable eclipse, returns to one before this canvas, intensified and purified of all that is extraneous to the emotion." Rembrandt in The Mill has given permanence to one of those momentary effects of almost supernatural beauty, which the eye can glimpse occasionally in actuality, but which it will rarely see unless trained to alertness by great works of art. It is not necessary to "know" any particular facts in order to justify "liking" this painting; it is only necessary to be ready to experience its majestic mood of solemnity and grandeur.



But is there then nothing to be learned about works of art? Does it follow that the tyro is as capable of appreciating great paintings as the connoisseur? An analogy to music offers perhaps the most informative answer. Even a novice, provided he is not tone-deaf, will be moved by the massive chords and the intricate rhythms of the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven. But when he has heard more symphonies he will be able to follow the complex development of its themes and the subtlety of its orchestration, and his pleasure will be increased. Similarly, through habitual association with paintings, one's eye becomes more sensitive, more capable of discerning quality and of reacting to the sensuous elements in the work of art, and at the same time one's mind increases its grasp of the picture's

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

1 Neat-looking shoes are an important part of good grooming.
2 Shinola's scientific combination of oily waxes helps keep shoes flexible—and new-looking longer.
3 Shinola is easy to apply and economical to buy. You'll find IT PAYS TO KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA.

In Canada It's 2-in-1

CAT'S PAW

Finest Rubber Heels & Soles

FREE! Maternity Dress Fashion Catalog ADVANCE STYLES

Wonderful new Spring and Summer fashions! Smart advance models for morning and afternoon that slim your figure with concealing lines. Easy way to shop for your comfortable maternity wardrobe—and such savings! Free catalog by return mail. WRITE TODAY!

VIVI FASHIONS, 136 Liberty St., New York 8, N.Y. Dept. P-1

TALL GALS SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLET

BUY SHOECRAFT SALON SHOES DIRECT VIA MAIL!

TALL GALS FAMOUS FIFTH AVENUE SHOES IN SIZES 9½ to 13, WIDTHS AAAA TO E. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE IF RETURNED UNWORN WITHIN 10 DAYS.

SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR FREE 24 PAGE BOOKLET IN EXTRA EXTRA LONG, NYLON HOSE, NEWEST COLORS SIZES 11 TO 13—ONLY

SHOECRAFT Tall Gal's Fifth Avenue Shop 603 Fifth Avenue, New York 17

overtones of meaning. Reproductions are useful in this education in connoisseurship in the same way that phonograph records are useful in learning to appreciate music; but neither reproduction nor record is a substitute for the original artifact or actual performance.

Another great aid is offered by the practice of art; and to some extent the present popularity of the Old Masters is due to the sudden appearance of numberless amateur artists. People everywhere are studying drawing, painting, modeling. This gives them a new insight into works of art; and the gallery visitor who arrives with canvas or sketching pad intent on copying, however imperfectly, some favorite painting is on the road to learning what constitutes a masterpiece. If you wish, for example, to understand why Rembrandt is considered a great draftsman, look at the economy and absolute certainty of line in any one of his drawings or etchings, and then try to copy these contours; and if you wonder why he is thought to be a great painter, note the infinitudes of space in the misty background of The Mill, and then take up your brush and try to imitate these effects of distance! Such exercises will help you understand and respect the magnitude of Rembrandt's attainment.

The Old Masters have acquired their new following because emotionally we are drawn to the humanized world they create and because technically we are beginning to understand the immense genius they display. But there is also a third reason for their growing popularity. The museums in which they are shown are much more attractive than formerly. Instead of hanging pictures against dingy backgrounds that make galleries look like railroad stations, there is now an attempt to suggest the original settings, while avoiding the artificial effect of period rooms. And instead of crowding paintings in serried rows one above the other, care is now taken to give each canvas ample wall space so that, in relative isolation, it may be enjoyed without distraction.

Monotony is the awful reward of the careful. —A. G. BUCKHAM.

Architects have also come to realize that the appearance of the museum building should create the right mood for the enjoyment of beauty, should be an example of architecture as a conscious art in contrast to architecture as a form of utilitarian engineering. The exteriors of many of our museums now show exceptionally fine composition and proportion; their interior spaces are pleasant, at times even exalting. The G. I.'s who wrote about the National Gallery of Art were not thinking of the collections alone; they were also moved by the beauty of the building.

Trustees, architects, directors and curators in their exertions to win a new appreciation for art have been phenomenally successful. But this is partly because their efforts have come at the right historical moment. More than 150 years ago one of our ablest Presidents, John Adams, in a letter to his wife, charted the evolution of American culture.

"I must study politics and war," he wrote, "that my sons may have liberty to study mathematics and philosophy. My sons ought to study mathematics and philosophy, geography, natural history and naval architecture, navigation, commerce and agriculture in order to give their children a right to study painting, poetry, music, architecture, statuary, tapestry and porcelain."

What a wise man predicted in the eighteenth century has now been realized with a plenitude he could scarcely have foreseen in the early days of the Republic.

In this and subsequent issues of the JOURNAL a few selected masterpieces from only one American museum, the National Gallery of Art, are being reproduced, but these will indicate something of our country's richness in the work of the Old Masters. These great paintings it is now our right, as John Adams foretold, to study, and also, and more important, to enjoy. THE END

A new interpretation of authentic watch band styling—fashioned to bring fashion to any timepiece.

Consistently recommended by America's jewelers . . . from $5 to $13.25—white, pink or yellow gold filled. Fed. tax included.

Jacoby-Bender, Inc., New York 13

GABRIELEEN

the soft, wide permanent that Fashion favors et your stylist create this hair style for you

GABRIELEEN with Adepsol is the kind of permanent you've dreamed about . . . completely versatile and exquisite. It's beautifully lasting too!

GABRIELEEN Cold Wave . . . Machine..or Machineless Waves at your favorite beauty salon.

Distributed by

GIBBS & COMPANY

CHICAGO, ILL.

World's Largest Manufacturers and Distributors of Beauty Shop Supplies and Equipment

Olson Rug "Magic"

Your OLD RUGS, CLOTHING Save You up to ½

It's All So Easy! Write today for the big Free Olson Rug Catalog (and Decorating Guide) in colors that tells how your materials are picked up at your door and shipped at our expense to the Olson Rug Factory, where . . .

By the Olson Process we sterilize, shred, sort, merge materials of all kinds—reclaim valuable wools, etc., then bleach, picker, card, spin, re-dye and weave deep-textured, modern Reversible . . .

. . Broadloom Rugs in sizes up to 16 ft. seamless, any length.

Solid Colors Tweed Blends Florals, Ovals
Tone on Tone Early American Oriental, etc.

FACTORY-to-YOU! We guarantee to please, or pay for materials. Over 2 million customers. We never employ Agents or sell thru stores. Our 75th year.

Mail Coupon below or a 1c Postcard for beautiful 36 page catalog of rugs and model rooms.

Chicago New York S. Francisco

FREE Catalog in Colors

OLSON RUG CO. N-59, Chicago 41, Ill.

Please mail the Olson Rug Catalog FREE to:

NAME.....

ADDRESS..... STATE.....

TOWN.....

© ORC. 1948

Knitting Yarns BY MAIL

Finer quality yarns of all types—spun in our own mill...sold to you at lowest possible price. Choose the colors you want—bright and gay or soft and delicate—

Write for FREE Sample Card

Cliveden Yarns have been manufactured for over 40 years by Walter McCook & Son, Inc. See and feel their lovely texture before you order.

Almost all orders shipped within 24 hrs.

WRITE TO DEPT. 1

CLIVEDEN YARNS

711 Arch St., Phila 6, Pa.

New Way TO MAKE MEATY SOUPS USE B-V

America's Favorite Meat Extract

SEE SIMPLE RECIPES ON B-V CARTON

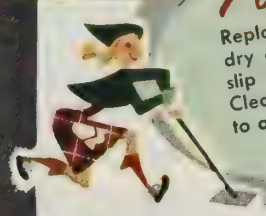
You just can't beat a Wilson Canned Meat

WILSON & CO INC.

The Wilson label protects your table

Now! just three easy steps CLEAN and WAX FLOORS STANDING UP!

Here's how Bruce Floor Cleaner and Doozit beautify wood and linoleum without scrubbing!



Pour...

Just pour a small amount of wax-rich Bruce Floor Cleaner on the wood or linoleum. Then slide the Doozit back and forth to loosen the dirt and erase spots and marks.

Clean...

Drop any soft cloth under the Doozit Pad and use Doozit as above to wipe up dirt and cleaner. Floor is quickly and thoroughly cleaned, ready for immediate polishing.

Polish...

Replace the Doozit Pad with a clean, dry one, then polish. The rich, non-slip wax film left by Bruce Floor Cleaner polishes quickly and easily to a natural sparkling lustre.

Bruce Floor Products are featured at stores everywhere. The Bruce Doozit is only $1.89. Extra, long-wearing pads, 19c each. Bruce Floor Cleaner, 68c quart and $2.10 gallon.

BRUCE

floor products

E. L. Bruce Co., Memphis, Tenn.
World's Largest Maker of Hardwood Floors
Also Terminix, Lumber, Furniture Parts

You'll call this wonderfully easy "standing up" floor care the happiest household idea since husbands!

No more hours of back-breaking scrubbing and waxing. Now, in just minutes, wax-rich Bruce Floor Cleaner and the Doozit do all the dirty work—you don't even soil your hands! And your floors, wood or linoleum, take on a sparkling new cleanness, a rich, naturally beautiful lustre.

Try Bruce Floor Cleaner and the wonder-working Doozit today. Clean and wax the modern Bruce way, standing up. And you'll never scrub another floor!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE REBEL HOUSEWIFE

"I take time out for living and loving!" Meet the Smiths... unregimented Hoosiers.

by RUTH SHAPLEY MATTHEWS

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MARIE HANSEN

"Dear Editors: I have read with amazement the way the mothers in How America Lives seem to manage. How they accomplish all the things they do is beyond me.

"I am the mother of four small children, the oldest 11. They are all spoiled (slightly) and present problems that floor me with the greatest of ease. I wonder what those wise mammas would do if their four-year-old son collected worms which he laid out in the refrigerator with precision and nicety, so they wouldn't 'spoil.'

"And the budgets—this is a matter I'd rather leave unexplored entirely. Even with the best intentions, my budget is a monster which prods me with a guilty conscience from one week until the next. Of course, I can't run up a pair of drapes from a 25-cent remnant that will look like custom-mades. If I try to whip together anything, it looks more like I had used the egg beater than a sewing machine.

"Sometime you should drop in on my typical family and see mom as I represent her—working in blue jeans, slightly mussed, with no apparent schedule in existence. I just schedule my time to the demands and wants of my family, and how can you go on a strict routine when the minute you start sterilizing bottles, the baby wants attention or the doorbell rings or someone calls on the phone?"

DOROTHY DENNIS SMITH responds to routine as a colt to harness, and with much the same result. While most of us occasionally dream of kicking over the traces, pitching out the alarm clock, letting the chips—and the dishes—fall where they may, do we? We do not. Dorothy reverses this order. She yearns over model schedules, housekeeping plans and budgets, but when actually confronted with any such curbs, she rebels, but laments her rebellion with a sad little sigh of introspective frustration.

In such a moment of self-examination and quandary, Dorothy sat down to the typewriter, dashed off the foregoing paragraphs and put the problem squarely up to the Journal editors.

Fair-skinned, plump, with rather unruly bobbed brown hair, she is 34 years old. Her features are definite, her eyes brown and a little dreamy, and she wears light-rimmed spectacles. These glasses do not look unusual, but they are. They are rose-hued. Dorothy views life and living, usually, with insatiable delight.

She was painfully thin until the birth of Brenda, her second child, now 8 years old. Since then she has gained weight steadily, and this worries her. She is small-boned for her 5' 6", which does not minimize her variable 140 pounds. But Dorothy detests restraint, whether in the form of girdles, elastic or whaleboned, or whether dietary. The family's favorite dessert, whipped-cream pudding, contributes somewhat to the problem.

Though the Smiths' comfortable, solidly built ten-room house presents an impressive job of housekeeping, Dorothy only occasionally goads

"If you keep your nose too close to budgets and schedules, you pay the price in fun."

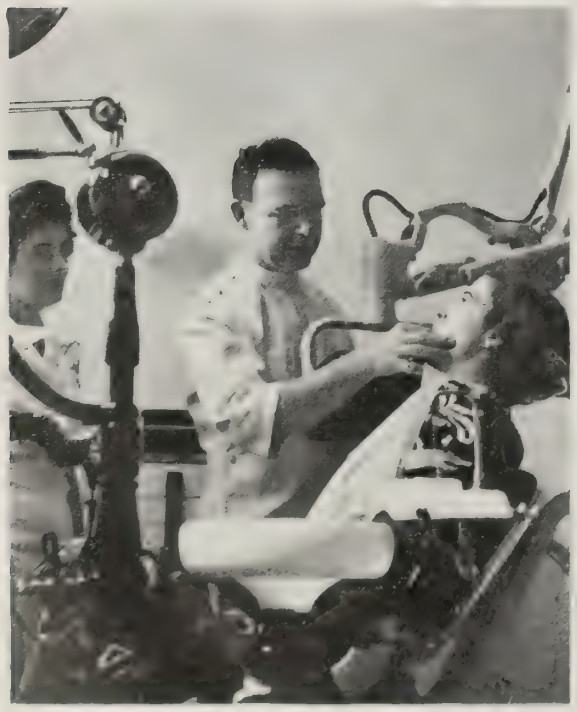
Dream fulfilled: to own their ten-room dream house; unfulfilled: to live on $100 a week.

Dorothy revels in shopping trips, often with rambunctious Jeffie and baby Leslie Anne. Frilly clothes for the girls are difficult to resist. Last year, clothing and cleaning bills ran up to $1132.

Hard work and a "happy house" in Frankfort, Indiana, helped to dispel the jinx that had haunted the Smiths.



herself into planning a schedule, then abandons it with happy relief for 4-year-old Jeffie's skinned knee or baby Leslie Anne's wet britches.

She realizes that this happens, knows why, and frankly explains it. "Actually, I want it that way or I guess I'd change. It may not seem so, but I have my own system. I get things done, but I do them my way. Maybe I don't do dishes when other people do, but they are done eventually.

"I hate a messy house and I like things clean and pleasant for Thurman and the children. They are too. But if I want to go to the park with the kids or stop and read something, I do it. You might just as well enjoy things as you go along or you lose an awful lot.

"If I work till eleven or midnight to finish, I don't care and neither does the family. We really have a lot of fun."

Dorothy's husband, Dr. Thurman Smith, 39 years old, blond, pleasantly round-featured and imperturbable, comes of solid Germanic Hoosier stock tempered by way of pre-Revolutionary Carolina. One of Frankfort's busiest dentists, his practice has grown steadily since the Smiths moved to the

Dr. Thurman L. Smith, one of Frankfort's busiest dentists, dogged by illness, fire and debt in the 1930's, now has an income of $7000, modern office, new X-ray equipment.

Voted the best disposition in Frankfort by Dorothy and friends, Thurman (center) enjoys his night out at the Tuesday Lions Club supper which costs $1. Members crack: "Rotarians own the town, Kiwanians run the town, and Lions enjoy the town." The Smiths recently joined the country club, dues $36 a year.

Dorothy, a newcomer eleven years ago, was shocked by town's social ice but has made warm friends. Among them are the twice-monthly bridge-club group.

Down in Salem, Ind., where she and Thurman were born, their families helped found the town. A great-great-uncle was frontiersman George Rogers Clark.

The monthly Literary Guild book and 12 or 15 magazines get voracious attention, often are read in one session. Dorothy says the work can wait. "I have my own system."

quietly prosperous little city of 15,000 population, just eleven years ago. Nobody in Frankfort can remember seeing Doctor Thurman excited. Competent and steady, he eases his patients' natural anxieties with comfortable conversation. His way with small fry works like a charm. They play with the tweezers, the cotton pellets and the mirror until happily relaxed. Then, psst! In goes the filling or out comes the tooth.

These methods are based soundly on experience provided by four lively Smith offspring: Denny (Dennis Lewis), age 11, bright as a button and growing like a weed (he claims 6½ inches since Scout camp last year!): Brenda, blond and pretty, in the second grade; Jeffie (Jeffrey Lee), who has a passion for bug collecting; and 18-month-old Botticelli cherub Leslie Anne, whose busy little feet cover incredible ground in five minutes.

As a matter of fact, the Smith brood is so happily relaxed as to provoke at times neighborly comment and arched eyebrows over bridge-club tables; for example, Jeffie's idea of preserving his grubworms in the family refrigerator. The uncurbed racket of piano banging, along with an insistent phonograph or radio, leaves a permanent impression on a caller. Repression is not in the Smith disposition, and if Brenda or Denny interrupts, or the baby clutches a knickknack seven times in seven seconds, there are few reprimands, their questions are answered, baubles removed. Temporarily, serenity is resumed.

From 7 in the morning, when Doctor Smith and the two older school children get up, until sometime between 7 and 9:30 P.M. (after the last little Smith has been sent back to bed for the fourth or fifth time), the house reels with activity. Thurman briskly prepares breakfast for Brenda, Denny and himself, sends them off to the James Whitcomb Riley Grammar School a few blocks away, and is in his office in the Coulter Building for his first appointment at 8:30—sometimes earlier.

Meanwhile Dorothy, feeling a little guilty, tries to snatch a few last winks of sleep. Ever since Leslie Anne arrived, the sleeping schedule has

Dr. Smith's skill with children doubles at home and in his practice. But he avoids disciplining the kids. Greasing cadavers helped pay his way through school.

AMERICA SPENDS FOR HEALTH

BAD health costs America $27,000,000,000 yearly in national wealth and 1,300,000 man-hours of work. The vast majority of us cannot afford adequate medical care.

According to a recent Federal Security Agency survey, the average American family spends about 4.3 per cent of its yearly income on medical care. But 80 per cent of our families, with less than $5000 a year, would be hard put to finance a serious illness, and only half of them can afford a moderately comprehensive health-insurance plan.

The Government, the American Medical Association, the Blue Cross Shield Commission and many insurance companies are working out programs to meet this need.

Dentist Thurman Smith Earns Around $7000 a Year. Here's How it is Spent:

Income (monthly average)	$583.33
Income tax	50.00
Spendable income	533.33
Food	152.08
Clothing, laundry, cleaning	94.33
Postal savings	33.33
Furniture	31.50
Interest on mortgage	2.08
Gas for heating and cooking	12.90
Electricity	6.00
Water	1.25
Tax on home	10.00
Insurance	17.13
Health	8.33
Recreation	23.17
Christmas presents	14.58
Magazines, papers, books, records	16.67
Church, charity funds	9.17
Telephone	3.33
Services (cleaning; sitter)	26.75
Car—repairs and upkeep	18.75
House alteration	10.42
House payments	20.00
Personal care	4.33
Total	$546.10

"We're really a happy family," says Dorothy; "though I wistfully hope to be a model mother, right now we go merrily on our way."

been out of kilter. Leslie has her own notions about bedtime. Apparently requiring less sleep than most youngsters, though otherwise normal, good-natured and healthy, she stubbornly resists regular routine. She patters around downstairs long after the other children are sleeping, then wakens with the sunbeams. It is a serious problem. Thurman's work requires a steady hand and clear vision, for which he must have at least eight hours of undisturbed rest. So he has retired to the guest room for "the duration." Dorothy copes with a lively little roommate as best she can. The crib is in her room, and the only one perfectly satisfied with the arrangement is Leslie Anne. She chirps, chatters and scolds bright and early in the morning until snuggled into Dorothy's bed. There she tries to make amends for misbehavior by standing on her head, smothering a sleepy mother with lavish kisses.

Dorothy is downstairs by 8:30 or 9. After she has fed Jeffie and the baby, she settles in the big, well-equipped kitchen, where plants in copper pots catch the glow of morning sunlight. She wears blue jeans, a shirt open at the throat, and comfortable old red loafers on her feet, her fatigue uniform which has proved adequate for any day's emergencies. Before plunging into an ominous stack of dishes, she lingers over breakfast, fortifying herself with the antics of Blondie in the Frankfort Morning Times. She reads the paper from cover to cover, and, while deploring this habit, she cannot resist the morning pause with the comics and the news while the work waits.

From then on there are few other quiet moments. Four times a day when Leslie Anne has her bottle, Dorothy sits and rocks her, a habit she has followed with each of the children. This is disruptive to housework, but the baby loves it and so does Dorothy.

Once Dorothy goes after it, there is a method in the Smith housekeeping. With vacuum and dustcloth, she attacks it the way a quarterback makes a flying tackle. The daily cleaning is done in less than an hour. (Continued on Page 206)

Everything happens at once at the Smiths'; the telephone rings, the baby gets a spill, the man from the gas company says, "Sign, please!" for the hot-water-heater repair job. Dorothy does two big washings a week, but worst job is getting crumbs off kitchen floor. Landscaping on the lawn is accomplished with trikes and bikes and toy rolling stock.

"Do you think you will live through it?" 4-year-old Jeffie asked

Denny, a Cub Scout, is also safety patrolman at the James Whitcomb Riley School. Folds and delivers 58 Indianapolis News papers every afternoon and earns $4.50 a week. This is spent on comics, movies.

randma, who took charge of the kids while their parents had a brief breather recently. Above, he "enjoys ill health" when Brenda and a friend play at nursing.

Dorothy erects barriers in doorways to keep Leslie Anne from mischief. Special bedtime treat for those tireless feet is to climb up forbidden stairs.

It's a short life and a merry one for household pets, turtles, chicks, beetles, carp, butterflies, bugs and worms. Longest survivor is Jeffie's agile cat, which gets new name every week.

Eight-year-old Brenda shines on Sunday morning, prepares breakfast before going to Methodist Sunday school. Paid 25c a week, she tidies room, runs errands.

There's no pattern for love and laughter, no routine for happiness.

During the day, Dorothy frequently drops everything to cuddle the baby in favorite Boston rocker.

(Continued from Page 204) Mondays and Fridays are washdays. They never start at crack of dawn. But with anybody's luck, the clothes are dry by sundown. All hand ironing (shirts and dresses) goes out to a laundress. Flat pieces Dorothy does on the portable mangle, all through the week. Tuesday nights she has a date with Bob Hope and a staggering basket of mending. This is Thurman's night at the Lions Club. Dorothy whisks on buttons and stitches burst seams to a running patter of nonsense.

Thursday afternoon is Thurman's half day off. He is home with the car and the marketing is done. For all his sensible talk about a budget, he can't be trusted with a grocery list! So they market together. Bargains! Thurman, unchaperoned, falls for bargains every time. They may be cheap individually, but collectively, the way Thurman does it, it is murder to the $35 (more or less) limit for the weekly grocery bill. The car comes home loaded with a dozen cans of soup, tomato juice, grapefruit juice, four dozen ears of corn. Well, the cans will keep, but the corn won't. So the family wallows in sweet corn.

The big cleaning day is Saturday. An Amish seminary near by provides "Holiness" students for household work. Dorothy's current helper is Caroline, 20 years old and fervently religious. This quality makes for conscientious cleaning, also baby sitting on occasions. But it has its uneasy side too. "Holiness" girls, because of their background, are likely to disapprove of practically everything.

Dorothy does no canning. Case goods she finds quite as economical. Home-canned food is apt to spoil on the shelves. Anyway, with the price of produce and sugar, you don't save much. The back yard is too full of play yard, a garage and a huge old elm tree for vegetable gardening. She recalls with horror all those radishes (there must have been a gallon a day) the time Thurman planted them.

This omission disturbs Thurman, and Dorothy feels sadly remiss. Thurman's mother and Dorothy's were of the old school where preserving, jelly making and pickling came as surely with the seasons as the peaches, pears and plums.

"I'm just different," she sighs.

Sewing is another lost art to Dorothy, but she is resigned. There are so many more interesting things to do than pushing a needle through endless yards of fabric. But this has its disadvantages with two little girls to dress. Dorothy loves pretty clothes. Brenda's and Leslie's are frilly and feminine. Dorothy's mother, who lives in California, eases the problem by making the baby's clothes. Dorothy pays for materials. All those dainty handmade dresses would cost much more at Adler's, in Frankfort, or Block's, Indianapolis. Dorothy does buy Brenda's dresses there and that mounts up!

"If I could sew," she laments. Instead, she haunts the clearance sales. Jeffie's $40 snow suit was reduced to $20. Her own $80 winter coat was just half price.

Dorothy would redecorate the house frequently if she could, but must satisfy the yen by moving furniture from room to room. The Smiths get virtually every home-decorating magazine published. "Antiquing" she considers highly rewarding, though Thurman is skeptical. Dorothy feels that the $550 spent on antiques for the house was an investment. And it was. She paid $35 for the cherry corner cupboard, $90 for a Doulton dinnerware set; and $15 bought a mahogany button-leg table and two Jenny Lind beds.

She keeps the big, roomy, fifty-year-old place, with its high ceilings and polished floors, amazingly well ordered in spite of the ruggedly individual regime and six active occupants. There are five rooms downstairs. On the left of an old-fashioned entrance hall is Dorothy's parlor-living room, giddy with red rose-sprigged chintz and her treasured antiques. The windows, shadow-boxed, with chintz ruffles, compromise fashion with utility and save cleaners' bills, but the staid room, proportioned for the '90's, appears a bit startled by the frivolity.

(Continued on Page 236)

Thurman seldom takes time out for fishing sprees like this one with Denny, but he's a good hand with a casting rod. When family fun conflicts with saving funds, Thurman's arguments for planned spending usually "go out the window."

Taste Perfection*

makes DELRICH E-Z COLOR PAK Margarine a New American Favorite!

*the Exclusive DELicious RICH CREAMY FLAVOR is SEALED IN!

ADEMARK

© T. C. P. CO., 1949

CUDAHY Plus Product VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

ENDS MIXING BOWL MESS!

PINCH BERRY AND KNEAD BAG TO COLOR DELRICH

- No mixing bowl mess! No waste!
- Blends to golden yellow inside bag.
- Amazingly easy to color!
- Mold in own carton!
- Easy to cut in quarters or patties!

After All*—"THE TASTE TELLS"

"WHAT A SNAP FOR ME!"

"How glad I am that Delrich gave me the easy, modern way to color my favorite table spread! And my family voted Delrich their favorite, too, for its delicious, creamy-rich flavor! There's such a difference in Delrich! It's amazing the way it holds its flavor and freshness!"

See for yourself why thousands are switching to Delrich! Nutritious—yet so economical, every pound of Delrich is packed with natural food energy and enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A.

Delrich and E-Z Color Pak are the trademarks of The Cudahy Packing Co. for its margarine.

THE CUDAHY PACKING CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

From experience comes faith . . .

Not duke, not king, not emperor, . . . but the simple word "doctor" falls on the ear of mankind with greatest meaning.

Doctor . . . despair turns into hope. Doctor . . . suspense gives way to knowledge. The moment he crosses the threshold he seems to lift a burden of fear and uncertainty from the house.

This wide respect comes from within the doctor himself. It comes from his faith . . . born of years of early sacrifice . . . the responsibility for life and death.

The stored-up knowledge of all the doctors who have gone before . . . experience at a thousand bedsides . . . continuous contact with man and the human mind . . . these have given him his surest instrument . . . faith in himself.

E·R·SQUIBB & SONS

Manufacturing Chemists to the Medical Profession since 1858

MIDDLEWEIGHT CHAMPION

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

FIRST WEEK

Height . . . 5′6″ Weight . . . 144 Pounds Bust . . . 36″ Waist . . . 30″ Hips . . . 40″

Hair-do—unbecoming. Make-up—sketchy. Grooming—incomplete and unflattering. A capsule analysis of Mrs. Dorothy Smith, who agrees the most successful way to improve your appearance is to acknowledge your handicaps, then quickly make a plan of action to take you on the right side of the beauty border! Her pictures prove her philosophy.

THIRD WEEK

Height . . . 5′6″ Weight . . . 131 Pounds Bust . . . 36″ Waist . . . 27″ Hips . . . 37″

Mrs. Smith's new waist and hip measurements are a result of diet, exercise and proper girdling. Over a lightweight but firmly elasticized girdle, she wears a waist-cincher which also flattens the midriff and upper hips. "The garments together," says Mrs. Smith, "are more comfortable and give more support than my old girdle which never fitted me."

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

IN three weeks Dorothy Smith banished the bulges and excess weight she had accumulated over a period of years. With her husband and four lively youngsters to care for, Dorothy's remodeling job had to be done at home—in a minimum amount of time.

After a thorough physical examination, and with permission from her doctor, Dorothy promptly embarked on her prettifying program. In addition to her exercises and diet, described below, she took this time to experiment with prettier make-up, try a new hair-do and perfect her grooming. She discovered soft curls camouflaged a too high forehead, richer make-up gave a new glow to her face, a one-piece dress with simple lines did more to flatter her figure than two-piece suits. The results, illustrated on this page, produced one of the prettiest wives and mothers in Dorothy's neighborhood!

If you are dieting, a calorie booklet will enable you to vary your menus as well as help you choose the foods which furnish the daily body needs for protein, minerals and vitamins.

Here is a typical day's menu from Dorothy's diet:

	CALORIES
BREAKFAST
Fruit (sliced peaches)	50
1 slice rye toast	75
1 teaspoon butter	40
2 strips crisp bacon	80
Coffee or tea	0
LUNCH
Soup (1 cup vegetable)	90
4 crackers	60
Salad (⅓ cup salmon, ½ cup celery, lettuce)	115
1 glass skim milk or buttermilk	90
DINNER
Meat (3 ounces roast lamb)	175
1 vegetable (⅔ cup broccoli)	40
1 teaspoon butter	40
Salad (cucumber and lettuce)	15
1 teaspoon French dressing	25
Fruit (¼ cantaloupe)	35
1 glass skim milk or buttermilk	90
Total Calories	1020

(Continued on Page 226)

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

MARIE HANSEN

Thirty-five dollars a week feeds big and little Smiths—not an extravagant budget figure, by any means, at today's food prices.

Budget Dinners

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

WHATEVER your top figure may be for the weekly grocery bill keeping it down under is a constant struggle. It's so easy to spend more—so hard to pass up the more expensive foods displayed attractively in the markets. Mrs. Smith spends about $35 a week for food for the six of them—certainly a very economical allowance.

Whether or not you keep a record of how your food dollars are spent, you know well that to save money you have to spend extra time—time in studying the grocery ads, extra time in shopping for the best buys, often longer cooking time. It takes longer to make a good lamb stew, for instance, than to broil loin lamb chops, but there's certainly a saving in money.

Budget dinners can be just as interesting and just as much fun to prepare and include just as many surprises for the family as more elaborate meals. Here is proof. Each of these dinners will fit into a moderate-cost food budget, yet each has a new way or two of preparing the same foods you've been serving right along.

Baked Eggplant Provençal
Glazed Carrots and Onions
Celery
Corn Muffins—Spread
Sliced Oranges With
Apricot Sauce
Milk—Coffee

BAKED EGGPLANT PROVENÇAL

Partially cook ½ pound sliced bacon cut into small pieces; remove from pan. Peel and cut 1 large ripe eggplant into ½-inch slices. Season with salt and pepper. Dip into beaten egg, then in cracker crumbs. Sauté on both sides in the bacon fat. Arrange eggplant slices in shallow baking pan. Cook slowly mixture of partially cooked bacon, ¾ cup chopped celery, ¼ cup chopped parsley, 1 onion, chopped, until vegetables are just tender. Add ¼ cup cream and season with salt and pepper. Place a thick slice of tomato on each eggplant slice. Top with a spoonful of bacon mixture. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 30 minutes.

APRICOT SAUCE

Separate 1 egg. Beat the yolk as thick as you can and combine with ½ cup sour cream, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, ⅛ teaspoon salt and ½ cup apricot preserves. Blend well and fold in 1 egg white beaten stiff but not dry. Chill.

★ ★ ★

Meat Balls With Sauerkraut
Mashed Potatoes
Raw Carrot Sticks
Rye Bread and Spread
Fruit Ring
Milk—Coffee

MEAT BALLS WITH SAUERKRAUT

Mix together ¼ pound ground veal, ½ pound ground beef and ½ pound ground pork. Add 1 onion, chopped, ½ clove garlic, mashed to a pulp with 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 egg and ¼ cup raw rice. Shape into small balls; brown in 2 tablespoons melted shortening, bacon fat or salad oil.

Open 1 No. 2½ can sauerkraut and arrange half of it in a layer on bottom of small covered roaster or casserole. Put the meat balls on top of kraut. Cover with rest of kraut. Pour 1 can condensed tomato soup mixed with 1 cup water over the top. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 1½ hours. Serves 6.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

FRUIT RING

Drain sirup from 1 No. 2½ can fruit cocktail. To the sirup add enough water to make 1½ cups liquid. Heat to a boil and add to 1 package lemon-flavored gelatin dessert, add juice of 1 lemon. Chill until thick and sirupy. Add fruits. Pour into a ring mold and chill until set. Serves 6.

★ ★ ★

Salmon-and-Macaroni Casserole
Canned Peas and Corn
Carrot Relish
Dessert Muffins—Honey Butter
Milk—Coffee

SALMON-AND-MACARONI CASSEROLE

Cook 1 package elbow macaroni until tender in boiling salted water. Drain and rinse with hot water. Drain and remove skin and bones from a 1-pound can salmon. Flake the fish. Combine with macaroni and 3½ cups thin cream sauce. Season mixture with salt and pepper and ⅛ teaspoon dry mustard. Add 1 cup grated cheese. Pour into casserole and bake 20–25 minutes in moderately hot oven, 375°F. Serves 6.

CARROT RELISH

Mix the following ingredients together: 2 cups shredded carrot, 4 tablespoons chopped green pepper, 4 sweet pickles, chopped, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, ½ teaspoon salt, ⅔ cup chopped onion, 1 cup mayonnaise or salad dressing, 2 dashes Tabasco sauce and a little pepper. Taste for seasoning. Makes 1 pint.

DESSERT MUFFINS

To 2 cups prepared biscuit mix, add ¼ cup sugar, ½ cup chopped citron and ½ cup currants. Beat 2 eggs. Add 1 cup milk and 3 tablespoons melted shortening. Add liquids to dry ingredients, mixing only until dry ingredients are dampened. Muffin batters should never be mixed until smooth. Fill greased muffin pans ⅔ full. Bake 15 minutes in a hot oven, 450°F. Makes 12 muffins.

Have dry and liquid ingredients ready to mix, but do not mix and put in oven to bake until you remove the salmon casserole. This way they can bake while you're having the main course and will be hot and fresh.

HONEY BUTTER

Cream together 2 parts soft butter or margarine to 1 part honey. This keeps well in refrigerator. Wonderful on pancakes the next morning if you have any left.

★ ★ ★

Cheese-and-Tomato Soufflé
Spinach with Buttered Crumbs
Creamed Onions with Peanuts
Bran Muffins and Spread
Baked Apple-Tapioca Pudding
Milk—Coffee

CHEESE-AND-TOMATO SOUFFLÉ

Make a cream sauce using 6 tablespoons butter or margarine, 6 tablespoons flour, 2¼ cups milk. Cook until smooth and thick. Add 6 tablespoons tomato paste and mix well. Then add 1½ cups grated Cheddar cheese. Season with 2¼ teaspoons salt. Add 5 well-beaten egg yolks. Cool slightly. Fold in 5 egg whites stiffly beaten. Pour into 2 quart ungreased casserole and bake in a moderately slow oven, 325°F., for 45 minutes. Serve at once.

CREAMED ONIONS WITH PEANUTS

Make creamed onions just as you always do. Before serving, add ½ cup coarsely chopped salted peanuts to 1½ quarts creamed onions.

★ ★ ★

Chili Pork Chops
Baked Sweet Potatoes
Pork Relish
Toasted Rolls—Spread
Canned Pears—Molasses Cookies
Milk—Coffee

CHILI PORK CHOPS

Flour and season 6 shoulder pork chops. Brown in skillet in a little melted shortening or salad oil. Transfer to small roaster or large casserole. Put 1 slice onion on top of each chop. Thin 1 cup chili sauce with 1 cup water.

Pour over chops and bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 1½ hours, or until tender. These may be steamed on top of range in covered skillet over low heat, if you prefer. Sweet potatoes, chops and a casserole of scalloped corn all bake well at same temperature.

PORK RELISH

Peel and core 4–6 apples. Chop. There should be 2 cups. Add 3 tablespoons chopped green pepper, 1 tablespoon chopped onion, 1¼ teaspoons salt, a dash of pepper and ¾ cup sour cream.

★ ★ ★

Baked Corned-Beef Hash with Deviled Eggs
Green Beans
Whole-Wheat Bread and Spread
Coleslaw
Hot Gingerbread with Fig Sauce
Milk—Coffee

BAKED CORNED-BEEF HASH WITH DEVILED EGGS

Open 1 can corned-beef hash at both ends. Push out cylinder of hash and cut into 6 slices. Arrange in bottom of shallow casserole. Season with salt and pepper. Hard-cook and devil 3 eggs—adding prepared mustard, salt, pepper and vinegar to the mashed yolks—and fill the whites. There will be 6 halves. Put 1 on each slice of hash.

Make 3 cups thin cream sauce. Season with salt and pepper and add ½ cup grated cheese and a little grated onion. Pour over hash and eggs. Top with buttered crumbs. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30–40 minutes, until bubbly and brown. Serves 6.

HOT GINGERBREAD WITH FIG SAUCE

Bake gingerbread along with hash casserole. Use your own favorite recipe; or easier still, use one of the mixes. Cut into squares. Serve hot with the following sauce:

Mix ½ cup sugar with 2 tablespoons cornstarch. Add 2 cups water, blending until smooth. Then add the juice and grated rind of 1 lemon and 1 cup ground or chopped dried figs. Cook until sauce is thickened and clear. Serve over hot gingerbread.

Virginia Coates
Home Economist

Happy ending for Sunday night supper—a super-duper apple pie! Make the pie crust the simple way—with quick-mix. I've used Pillsbury's and Betty Crocker's Crustquick and they're both excellent.

Here's my own recipe for apple-pie filling. Notice the addition of Durkee's Apple Pie Spice? That's for luscious flavor! This Spice takes away all guesswork and gives you the same delightful flavor every time. It's a perfect blend of cinnamon and other spices. Ideal for all apple dishes—applesauce, baked apples, apple Brown Betty, apple tapioca, apple cakes, etc.

A New Apple Pie Filling

2 tbsp. breadcrumbs
8 medium apples (approx. 2 lbs.)
⅔ cup sugar
1 tsp. Durkee's Apple Pie Spice
1 tbsp. cornstarch
1½ tbsp. Durkee's Margarine
1 tbsp. lemon juice
⅓ tbsp. water

Line a 9-inch pie pan with pie crust. Sprinkle bottom with breadcrumbs to prevent fruit from soaking crust. Peel and core apples and slice thinly. Combine sugar, Durkee's Apple Pie Spice and cornstarch and sift over apple slices, stirring with fork until slices are coated. Place in layers in pie shell. Dot with Durkee's Margarine and sprinkle with lemon juice and water. Cover with upper crust and prick with fork in several places. Bake in hot oven (450° F.) 30 minutes. Reduce heat to slow oven (325° F.) and cook 10 minutes.

Glidden

Send for other unusual recipes to Durkee Famous Foods, Dept. L3-9, Elmhurst, Long Island, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPH BY
FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Dorothy Smith wearing her three-piece black faille suit. Fresh white gloves and flowers. Vogue Design No. S-4956, 12 to 20.

Polka-dot crepe blouse with soft neckline. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6563, 12 to 40.

Afternoon Off....

Dorothy Smith, mother of four lively children, occasionally looks forward to an afternoon off . . . a chance to toss aside her house dresses and "dress up" for a matinee in Indianapolis or to prowl through antique shops (her favorite hobby). We helped Dorothy plan a minimum of clothes with a maximum wearing plan. Her three-piece black faille suit has a straight boxy jacket that can be used separately over other dresses. The skirt and top have button-back detail and a simplicity that lends itself to accessory changes. An extra polka-dot blouse to wear with the faille skirt and her printed silk dress, Dorothy thinks, will carry her through spring and summer. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

The black faille skirt and blouse worn as a dress. Back-button detail. Perfect accessory-change dress.

Printed rayon crepe, slim waistline. Vogue Design No. 6669, 12 to 20. Make gloves to match.

© VOGUE

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order them by mail, enclosing check or money order*, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, Ontario. Connecticut residents please add sales tax.*

Back and Other Views, Prices and Sizes on Page 260

Extravagant Price does not make a Perfume "Great"

What is a "GREAT PERFUME?"

In "An Open Letter About Perfume"* I have explained how to choose a "good" perfume. It is more difficult, however, to explain what is a "great" perfume and how to recognize it.

It is just as complex to explain what makes a perfume "great" as it is to explain what makes a piece of music or a painting a masterpiece.

High price does not make a "great" perfume, nor even a "good" perfume.

It is true that a "good" and a "great" perfume can be made only at a price (because its making requires first class essential oils and other ingredients which are often very costly), but this price need not be extravagant.

A GREAT PERFUME must be refined and give you a feeling of beauty and happiness.

A GREAT PERFUME should be an "original" fragrance, and not merely a variation on the same theme. It should be as different as L'Origan is from L'Aimant.

A GREAT PERFUME must have a remarkable unity of odor, by which we mean that not even the most sensitive nose should be able to distinguish any specific component of the perfume. Furthermore, it should maintain this unity of odor as it "diffuses" in the open and with time. At no time may it lose its beauty and refinement.

A GREAT PERFUME will awaken in us the sentiment of mystery and rejoice our heart.

A GREAT PERFUME is lasting, yet gives one always a feeling of beauty, of joy, and refinement.

A GREAT PERFUME like a masterpiece in all other arts, wins the recognition of the public and stands the test of time.

NEVER FORGET THAT YOU WILL BE REMEMBERED BY YOUR PERFUME.

Ch. Coty

PRESIDENT
COTY, INC.

*Anyone wishing a copy of "An Open Letter About Perfume" may secure it by writing to Coty, Inc., 730 Fifth Ave., New York 19, N. Y., Attention Miss I. Florian.

After the Easter Parade...

They're so nice to come home to—

A—Bambi. Comfortable Cuban heel slipper with flattering bow treatment on the vamp. $6.00.

B—Cleo. A lattice-like vamp enhances this lovely sling style. $5.50.

C—Lili. Dressy high heeled sling pump. In widths AAA to B. $6.50.

All slippers come in Heaven Blue, Pink, Royal Blue, Wine, Scarlet, Black and White shimmering satin.

AT BETTER STORES EVERYWHERE

Daniel Green

COMFY SLIPPERS

Made by Master Craftsmen since 1882

MENTAL ILLNESS

(Continued from Page 45)

Yet no one of us can say he is above the need of help. Mental illness hits one in five families—one in ten people—and strikes severely enough to send one in twenty of us to a mental hospital. And the bulwarks we once thought of as protections cannot be counted on.

Look back over the headlines of last year. The most popular boy in a small Ohio high school killed two elderly people to get a car to take out his girl. A statesman of intellect and prestige shot himself. A girl known for her beauty and glamour took an overdose of sleeping pills and left a note saying she had decided it was the only thing to do. A minister walked out on his flock and family to run off with a teen-age charmer. A competent aviator dropped a bomb on the United Nations Assembly to "blast them into peace." A woman took off her clothes and, while scores watched her, climbed out on the dome of the Capitol in Washington to take a sun bath and "think things over." Two schoolboys dropped a cement slab on a friend "to see what would happen."

There's a handful of the mental-illness cases with special peculiarities which made headlines. You know others. These days we all have friends or fellow workers who suddenly fly off the handle, take seriously to drink, can't work, or disappear mysteriously. Most of the mental illness which hospitalized over 125,000 people last year made no headlines. Most of the less severe emotional breakdowns took place in semi-privacy. But they happened just the same—happened alike to bankers and bakers, to clergymen and candy-store operators, to spinsters and to wives. Money, position, a home life, a "good" school, the law, a stable community—none of these proved a dependable protection.

What are we going to do about it? Go on ignoring our lack of treatment and take a chance it won't happen to us or the ones we love? Go on ignoring our chief places of treatment—the places we call mental hospitals and ought to call mental hells? Go on saying belligerently, "It's not my worry—there's nothing wrong with me"?

In addition to those in mental hospitals, there are 5,000,000 people in this country believed suffering from psychoneuroses; an additional 2,500,000 with disorders of character and behavior; and from 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 individuals with borderline or passing emotional disturbances. These are the figures of our Public Health Service.

BUT they are not just figures. They are people, all of whom are in need of psychiatric or psychological attention. Perhaps one in twenty of them is getting it—getting it in spite of the shortage of psychiatrists and clinics, the high cost of treatment, the stigma placed on mental illness by friends and families. The rest are not. Yet those with the "borderline" disturbances—the passing fears and hostilities—might be saved from developing full-fledged neuroses by only a few sessions with a psychiatrist. Those with neuroses—emotional disturbances dominating enough to interfere with effectiveness and happiness—might be helped to adjustment before real trouble develops. And those with the more acute form of illness legally defined as "insanity" might be brought back from the world of delusions with early, concentrated care before their feet grow firmly in it and before they cause too much of the trouble which is a part of their illness. Some of them may muddle through. Most of the will not. They will crowd our jails, up classrooms, abandon our children, po our mental hospitals, cause upheavals offices and factories—and spread the "g of disorder wherever they go until th ness becomes so acute it forces recog

IDEALLY, there are three logical steps care of the mentally ill. The first family doctor. Yet the plain truth is the good chance he can't be of much help. where psychiatry is best taught it oc only 4 per cent of his medical training are few facilities where he can catch u its development now. Psychiatrists es that about one third to one half of t tients treated for physical ailments in part or in whole from psychologic ments which the average doctor ofte to recognize.

The second step should be the psych clinic or the psychiatrist. Although the ber of our psychiatric and psychol clinics mounts steadily, we have no near enough to handle the headache family problems, the delinquency, t happiness and maladjustment that alike the su the cities, the try and the

No one ca mate precisel many of the timers" in th hospitals coul had their ter suffering cut or how many have been s commitment tirely if we ha more clinics o ing as way st between the il son and the st stitution. Bu average stay state hospital i years—with half the patien turning during first year, and the other half remaining eight or more years—and you can see needlessly long this is when you com these figures with what just two concentr early-care programs have been abl do. In Ohio, for instance, an efficient, u date procedure returned nine out of te tients to their homes temporarily impr during the first year. In Connecticut, i year it was estimated that 66 menta children were saved any hospitalizati all through mental-hygiene clinics.

Despite this, there are only some clinics in the United States, though is an estimated need for one clinic for 100,000 people, or 1400 clinics. The obstacle to getting more clinics is, of co money—yet a little figuring will show t costs at least twice as much in the lon to maintain the average patient in the conditions of a state sanitarium as it to give him good, rapid treatment.

As for the number of psychiatrists av ble—there are some 4500 in this country most of them are working in mental h tals. There are only 1500 in private p tice or in clinics, and most of these are centrated in the larger cities. A psych needs hospitalization because he is so ou touch with reality that he cannot take ca himself, nor can the unknowing take ca him. The neurotic, except when he is so pressed he may kill himself, rarely n hospital care—but he does need help in ferentiating between his real problems an unreal ones. And as things are now, the a place for only the most acutely ill to

And that place is, of course, the me hospital—where there is only too often n ing but custody, not care. Some gen hospitals admit the mentally ill, but mos

(Continued on Page 216)

THIS is the opening article in a series of four on the subject of mental illness. Much has been written on this subject. The JOURNAL hopes that by bringing the major aspects of the problem together into a readable, cohesive whole it can get something done to help the mentally ill. The first article deals with the more than half a million who are hospitalized for mental disorders. The second deals with what mental illness is and how to recognize it. The third discusses methods of at-home prevention. The fourth suggests ways to better community facilities to combat and cure mental illness, the nation's No. 1 health problem today.

Look your prettiest every day

CYNTHIA—STYLE 252
Sizes: 16-44
Colors: Green, Grey, Blue.
A Geometric pattern in a tailored coat.

JEAN—STYLE 254
Sizes: 12-40
Colorful plaid in Cocoa and Lime, Rose and Grey, Blue and Fuchsia.
Softly ruffled side-button coat.

SADYE—STYLE 253
Sizes: 14-42
Colors: Rose, Nile Green, Blue with Grey.
Tailored stripe coat.

LORA—STYLE 255
Sizes: 16-44
Colors: Maize, Blue, Rose.
A delicately smocked zipper dress.

FRUIT OF THE LOOM DRESSES

It's the famous crisp percale...in blossom-fresh colors that make these dresses so pretty to look at, so wonderful to wear. Smartly styled with fashion's newest touches, in fashion's new length. Beautifully washable, too. And they carry the Fruit of the Loom label—your guarantee of wonderful quality and value . . . for they're sensibly priced at around three dollars.

FRUIT OF THE LOOM

A FAMILY OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS FOR THE AMERICAN FAMILY

tch for your local store ad and order these Fruit of the Loom Dresses by mail.

(Continued from Page 214)

not. Those which do keep them only a few weeks.

The state institutions rarely can refuse any patient legally committed—no matter how overcrowded they may be. And the overcrowding in most defies words: the day rooms are jammed; the wards overflow into the halls, the basements; the number of beds and mattresses gives out and straw is brought in. The food is stretched into stew and soup, the bread that is not eaten is served again, no matter how stale it is. Untrained, unknown attendants are left alone with scores of patients in their "care"—and frustrated at being nothing but poorly paid, overworked guards, many of the good men and women quit, and few come to replace them. The nurses develop into nothing but pencil pushers and key keepers; the doctors—with an average case load of 250 patients—despair of giving treatment and apply themselves simply to keeping records straight.

Meanwhile, the individual is lost in the herd. He is a nose to be counted, a body to be showered, toileted, fed and kept quiet—not an ill person who should be helped to get well. If he is overdisturbed, he is locked in leather thongs, although a trained aide could soothe him, a warm bath would quiet him. Showers and baths are rationed; the outdoor clothes saved for visitors' day or "pet" patients; books, games, handiwork—it's a rare and fortunate patient who has any occupation offered him in the way of treatment. Yet in England today the same restraints we use are found only on exhibition as curiosities!

You cannot dismiss this with the thought that, as a group, the mentally ill now in state sanitariums are so cut off from the world that they do not suffer from these conditions under which they live. Only the very ill—a small proportion—have escaped entirely into a dream world; for the majority the conditions of our sanitariums are a constant nightmare, a pressing goad to run faster and harder toward mental suicide. Visiting a mental hospital, it is not the violence "craziness" which strikes you; it is passivity, the despair, the hopelessness which the mentally ill move, or do not m speak, or do not speak.

Part of this is in the nature of ment ness—if the mentally ill could get along other people cheerfully and co-operat they would not be mentally ill. But n the passivity you see is illness. Excep the relatively few who are extremely ill, of the hospitalized want desperately for panionship, for something to do. More as part of their recovery, they need it.

An intelligent woman who sufferec cently from attacks of alternating over ity and overdepression (manic-depres told me of what the terrible idleness and liness of a mental hospital meant.

"Of course," she said, "I never w have been hospitalized if I hadn't bee tearful and droopy that I couldn't do thing, I couldn't talk to anyone, an family were worried sick. But after through the worst of it—and it lasted three weeks—I was overwhelmed by slightest thing that would take me out o thoughts.

"I remember one evening when there a movie at the hospital. It was a gay pi and I wept, but about other people change—not me.

"People don't know that when you you may not respond to them but you you're not responding, and you're aware can't reach you and you're so sorry a it—but there's nothing you can do. The start coming out, or if you're ill differe like a schizophrenic, you're in and out there you are, with nothing to do, no o talk to—doomed to just sit and wait fo next meal, or the next time the bath will be unlocked, or the next visiting da

"Unless you've been in a mental hos you just can't realize how many pat are periodically okay, or in the pr of getting well, or just mildly daft. I think we don't know what it's like t

For YOUNG Curves!
For VERVE!

...Mis Simplicity*

You can be prettier, YOUNGER than ever! Have slender curves . . . a TINY waist . . . a high, sweetly shaped bosom. MisSimplicity can do all this for YOU (with wonder working diagonal-pull)...leaving you FREE for animated living. Pictured, satin and leno ELASTICS . . . flexible as your mind! Handsome lace uplift; Talon. . . . In white, nude or black.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

the Gossard line of beauty

At leading stores and shops, everywhere, or write: The H. W. Gossard Co., 108 E. Ohio St., Chicago 11.

GLAMOUR STEP BY STEP... a mist of smooth sleek nylon to flatter every graceful leg line...in the new 1949 Fashion Harmony Colors...

STOCKINGS by MOJUD

Of course, smart women prefer Mojud Lingerie, too

lected and fed poorly and shut up in the st sort of places. Sometimes you can rally feel yourself being made sicker by at happens—but you learn fast that if you out, or complain, by and large they'll nk you're even crazier today than usual."

The manic-depressives form a large group he mental hospitals. A larger group, over f, are the schizophrenics, the half-awake, half-in and half-of the world. Old ple, many of them fering only from dening of the arties, which brings on bleness, memory ses, peevishness l other personality orders, form another group—most of om could go elsere if there were ne place to care for m. There are also ne psychoneurotc persons with temrary personality akdowns, many of om could live at me and pursue a ar-normal life if tpatient treatnt were available.

The rate of return from our mental hosals now averages slightly over 50 per t who stay home permanently. This figure ld be increased; there is no doubt of that. t even the incurables are human beings o through no fault of their own are ill, perate, and in need of comfort and care. There are, of course, some hospitals which betters than others—but there is not one te hospital which meets all the minimum ndards of the American Psychiatric Association. It is not that these standards are so gh. They call for one psychiatrist to every patients in some types of disease, one to ery 200 in others, with an average over all of 150 patients per doctor; one graduate nurse on the average for every 40 patients, one attendant for every 8, and a $2.50-per-patient-per-day budget—instead of the present average of $1.25.

A state hospital has two main functions: to give treatment aimed at cure and recovery and to take care of those whose chances of cure are slim, so that they won't endanger society and themselves. Investigations by both the civic-minded and the scientific show that practically none of our hospitals gives adequate treatment—and that very few give even decent care. For instance, an informal check of 45 hospitals made by the National Mental Health Foundation showed that only 7 had doctors available for individual consultation. Yet almost nine out of ten of all our mentally ill are in state hospitals. Most of the balance are in Veterans Administration hospitals. Private hospitals are exclusive, expensive and few and far between.

Why, then, have we let them get so bad?

One reason is our distaste and fear of mental illness. We have all got problems, and too often we'd rather run away from them than face them. As one eminent psychiatrist has noted, to be reminded of the mentally ill is to be reminded of people who have failed. We also place a trust in any hospital and all hospitals, and we have counted on the medical profession to uphold that trust. Yet in the case of state hospitals we cannot hold the medical profession to blame. They are working hard to get public support, but they

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Color Preference

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Let it be upon my head
That I love plain honest red:
Children's wagons, scooters, trikes,
Pony carts and sleds and bikes,
Circus posters, neon signs,
Country barns and valentines,
Christmas candles, holly berries,
Toy balloons and ripe cherries;
For blame or credit be it said
I love unaffected red!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Spring or summer, you'll always be daisy-fresh in a young Mynette of Sanforized* chambray! Such quality for such a mere trifle! Luscious pastels—blue, pink maize, aqua or grey. Sizes 14½ to 24½. About $11.

*Maximum shrinkage, 1%.

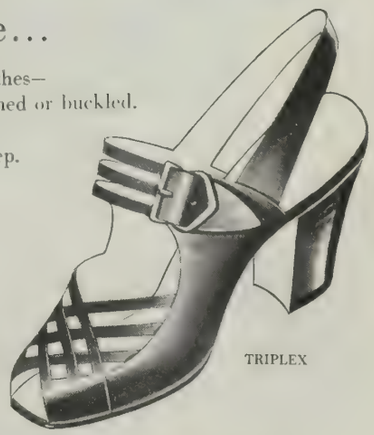
Posed by Vanessa Brown, appearing in Paramount's "The Heiress".

For store nearest you, write
THE GOTTFRIED COMPANY, Dept. L3
1778 East 30th Street, Cleveland 14, Ohio

ROMANCE

WALK-OVER
"Lady Slippers"

FIFI



Make your feet look light and little...

Airy accents for your new lady-like clothes—Walk-Over Lady Slippers—pertly buttoned or buckled. With graceful criss-cross strappings or lovely opera lines to slenderize your instep.

And flattering new heels! The slim Illusion or the mid-heel—both looking higher than they actually are.

Softly tailored by Walk-Over in suede or calf, black or colors. Styles shown $14.95 (Higher West).

Walk-Over prices from $12.95.
Geo. E. Keith Company, Brockton 63, Mass.

TRIPLEX

Hat, Sally Victor... Suit, Ceil Chapman

need money, and they need public interest to do the job of caring for the mentally ill.

Many psychiatrists who run our public hospitals are good, honest men, willing to look squarely at the awfulness of the places they run and admit their shame. We cannot blame them for conditions, and they know it.

The blame rests upon us, the public, who have not yet faced the fact that if our problems develop into breakdowns, that if our fears overcome us, and our annoyances and doubts crescendo into false ideas of persecution and hostility, the foul condition of the state sanitarium is where we, too, may wind up—simply because there is no other place for us to go, no other care available to us.

We are the ones who support the legislature which appropriates the money for state institutions. We are the ones who grumble about taxes—or demand that we spend more money where it is needed. We are the ones who think we have put the mentally ill out of sight, out of mind. It's time we waked up to the truth that the mentally ill might be any of us; that not one of us escapes the neuroses in our society today, the number of psychoses, the deterioration that may come with increasing age.

We might also face the fact that it will save us money, in the long run, if we better our psychiatric facilities. Compare, for instance, the $5 a day for six months it costs for rapid treatment of psychosis, against the $1.25 we spend on the average four-year hospitalization of a psychotic. Or read this in a United States Public Health report: "It is only necessary to eliminate three commitments a year to mental or correctional institutions to pay the budget of a mental-hygiene clinic." Or listen to the American Psychiatric Association: "Once scientific care is accomplished in state institutions, there is every promise that within the next generation this country would never need to build an additional mental-hospital bed."

And what of human values? One million of our children now in grade school are expected to spend some time in a mental hospital. The ones we could save might be our own.

We know how to care for mental illness and much about preventing it. We know how to hasten the recovery of the emotionally disturbed. We have methods of soothing the tearful and violent, of scattering the delusions of the crazed, of making the miserable happy again—and of returning the lost to normal life. Yet we are not using our knowledge; we are actually encouraging mental illness.

We have licked typhoid and scarlet fever in this country through preventing them. We have cut deep into the incidence of T through early treatment. We have broug cancer and venereal disease into the op where we can wrestle with them. We c battle mental illness, too, if we'll unwr our minds and decide the things to be do about it—and do them. The basic principl of physical health are taught even to c scouts. It's time we approached the pri ciples of mental health with the same s of directness.

We place a stigma on mental disease. W often refuse to accept diagnosis in its ear stages. We frequently blame the ill. Y these are attitudes which help spread disord and worsen the condition of the disturbed.

It is generally held by philosophers ar psychiatrists that hate, fear, rejection ar frustration are the major causes of—and the same time symptoms of—mental illne and unbalance. We have devoted much tin and mind in recent decades to mechanic and industrial progress. We have neglecte the development of man as a total being wh cannot live by bread alone. We must no seek every approac known to us to understar and meet our emotion needs—or be broken b the stresses and strains the machine world we ha created. We have come nc to the place where we a operating at cross-pu poses: slaving for mon when it is love and approval we seek; pr paring for war while we yearn for peac chasing sensation to replace the sweet sen of personal craft and achievement. O actions may make sense to us logically; th may satisfy our minds. But if they against our emotional needs it is to no avail for our emotions are not logical.

> It is the cleverest thing in the world to be merely happy, and the unhappiest to be merely clever.
> —MAARTEN MAARTENS.

In later articles, we will discuss the form mental illness takes and what we can do a home and in our communities to help recog nize it, prevent and treat it. In this article w have been concerned mainly with the prob lem itself. Our first weapon in the batt against mental illness is knowledge. Menta illness is not mysterious. It has known cause and recognizable symptoms. Most of its vic tims recover from it with care and treatmen But like any other disease, the sooner it i detected and treated, the quicker the energ working destructively can be channeled t work constructively.

We are all under the threat not only of ou own emotional problems, but the problem of others. Our first obligation—and happily our pleasure—is to strengthen ourselves, bu we shall have small chance of true success un less we see that all who are ill get better car and that those who are not are protecte against the disease.

IDLE WOMEN . . . WHERE ARE THEY?

(Continued from Page 37)

and ironing, bottles to be sterilized and formula made. "No, I never lie down during the day, and I practically never get out with the baby. There's so much to do!"

Although these two brides consider themselves the busiest women on the street, with an apartment and one child to care for, they do no baking, no sewing and no gardening. Ten of the twenty women interviewed make their children's clothes, three bake bread, nine keep gardens, and eleven put up considerable quantities of canned and frozen foods. Nineteen of the twenty women have no hired help at all; one woman has a high-school girl to help clean Saturday mornings.

One of the busiest—as well as the merriest—households is the Nyces', who have a tiny white house with only two rooms downstairs, and five children from 10 to 2. Mrs. David Nyce, a plump, harried, but still pleasant-looking woman of 33, was simultaneously cooking lunch and giving her eldest daughter a piano lesson when I arrived. She picked up a doll, two books, a crayon set and a child's coat from a chair and invited me to sit down. As the last of her five children trooped in for lunch, she herded them to the table, sent half of them flying to wash the hands, pronounced grace, and let her ow meal grow cold as she stood up to feed th two-year-old in a high chair.

"Now there's no use asking about m household schedule," she remarked with h gentle smile. "I just do what I think is im portant, and let the rest go. One week thi summer I had thirty starched dresses to iron And to think I wanted eight children. . . Rhoda, dear, eat your beans."

I remarked on the big garden out back

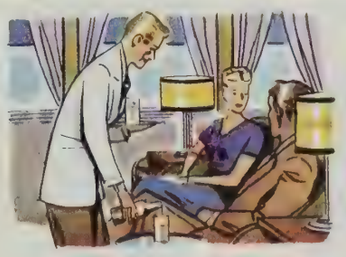
"It's really a patch, it's so big," she said "We all work in it. I canned about two hun dred quarts, I guess, and put about fifty boxes in the locker. Sewing? Yes, I mak most of the girls' dresses. How often do scrub out the inside of the stove? Well about once a year." This last remark wa greeted by the children with gales of laughter

Mrs. Nyce, who was raised on a farm, on of six children of a Mennonite minister, feels that townswomen are stuck alone in the house with the children too much. On a farm, she says, there are always some extra women about to share the responsibility.

(Continued on Page 221)

Colorado

UNION PACIFIC



Colorado is famous for its scenic splendor.

Horseback riding . . . one of many healthful activities.

They're both "Air-conditioned"

Mile-high Colorado playgrounds and Union Pacific's Streamliner "City of Denver" both offer you air-conditioned relief from summer's heat.

The fast, smooth-running "City of Denver" provides overnight service every night between Chicago and Denver. The Streamliner "City of St. Louis" offers like service between St. Louis-Kansas City and Denver. You'll enjoy restful Club cars . . . delightful dining-car meals . . . and a sound sleep.

Arriving at Denver, you'll be completely refreshed . . . eager to heed the call of rugged mountains and sparkling lakes.

* * *

The "City of Denver" and "City of St. Louis" carry both Pullman and Coach passengers. All Coach Seats reserved.

* * *

Union Pacific also serves:

SUN VALLEY, IDAHO
CALIFORNIA • PACIFIC NORTHWEST
YELLOWSTONE • DUDE RANCHES
SO. UTAH-ARIZONA NATIONAL PARKS
LAS VEGAS-HOOVER DAM

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD

Road of the Streamliners

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD, Room 230, Omaha 2, Nebr.

I am interested in a train trip to Colorado. Please send free booklet.

Name _____

Street Address _____

City _____ State _____

Also send information about All-Expense, Escorted Tours ☐

Starduster! Chicago's Elizabeth Toomey, gracious American Airlines Stewardess, has a delicate, sensitive skin. "So I never use heavy make-up," says Betty. "Just Noxzema and powder. It's marvelous for my hands, too—I carry a jar on every flight."

Charming New Yorker, Mrs. Nathalie Drozdoff-Cherny is a concert pianist. "It's important that my hands look well cared for," she says. "Years ago I found that Noxzema helps keep them wonderfully soft and smooth. It's my face cream, too."

WHO ELSE WANTS SOFTER, LOVELIER-LOOKING HANDS AND FACE?

"Chapped, sore hands used to be my number one wintertime problem," says Mrs. Freda Henry of Pittsburgh. "But now, Noxzema helps keep them looking soft and white all winter long."

Do you? Here's an amazing story six typical women told us. Each had some little thing wrong with her skin.

See how their Beauty Problems compare to your own!

● Recently interviewers have been calling on hundreds of women throughout the country, asking about their beauty problems. Here are the views of six typical women. Like thousands of others, they are using a new idea in beauty—Medicated Skin Care.

New Beauty Routine

It's a simple home treatment developed by a doctor. It has been clinically tested. In fact, 181 women—of all ages—picked at random from all walks of life—took part in this skin improvement test under the supervision of 3 doctors—skin specialists. On examination each woman showed she had some little thing wrong with her skin.

Based on Scientific Testing

Each woman faithfully followed Noxzema's new 4-Step Medicated Beauty Routine. At 7-day intervals, their skin was examined through a magnifying lens by these doctors. Here are the astonishing results of these tests:

Of all these women, 4 out of 5 showed softer, smoother, lovelier-looking skin in two weeks!

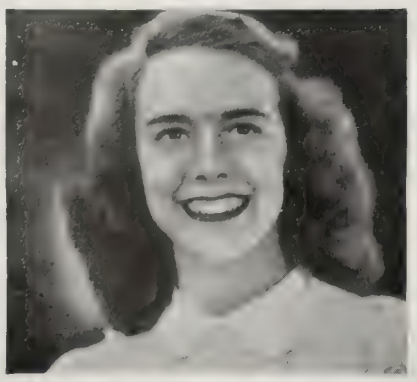
For Externally-Caused Skin Troubles

So if you want an aid to a softer, lovelier-looking complexion . . . if you suffer the embarrassment of rough, dry skin, externally-caused blemishes, or hands chapped from housework or winter weather — try medicated Noxzema.

4-Step Beauty Routine!

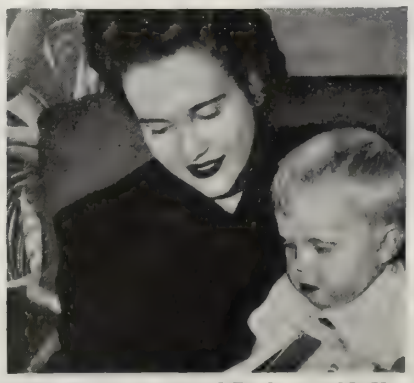
1. Morning—bathe face with warm water, apply Noxzema with a wet cloth and "cream-wash" your face.

2. Apply Noxzema as a powder base.



3. At night, repeat morning cleansing.

4. Massage cream lightly into face. Pat extra Noxzema over any blemishes.



Try it! Follow Noxzema's NEW 4-Step Beauty Routine faithfully. Smooth Noxzema on your hands, too, after each complexion treatment. See if you aren't amazed at how much better your complexion and hands look and feel! You can get Noxzema at all drug and cosmetic counters, 40¢, 60¢, and $1.00 plus tax—Trial Size also now on sale.

"Noxzema makes a big hit with my whole family," says Mrs. Virginia Stanley of San Francisco. "Helps protect us from externally caused blemishes, rashes, and similar skin troubles."

"I started using Noxzema for adolescent blemishes as a girl of twelve," says Mrs. H. Hiestand of Boston. "Today it's my regular night cream—it helps keep my complexion looking so smooth!"

Mrs. Muriel Kelly of Rochester, N. Y., first used Noxzema for chapped hands... now makes it her beauty cream. "It's the grandest night cream and powder base! Helps keep my skin looking just lovely!"

(Continued from Page 218)

"Vacation?" she repeated absentndedly. "Last summer was the first time e been away from home in, let's see, twelve ars. We took the three oldest children and ove out to Michigan. Oh, it was a grand cation not having a baby on my lap."

Mrs. Nyce's weekly house cleaning is done Saturday, when all the children except the o-year-old pitch in and help.

Of the twenty housewives interviewed, irteen of them set two days a week apart heavy cleaning. Most of them clean upirs on Thursday, and downstairs on Fri-y. In one household, however, which two nilies share, vacuuming is done every day. e owner of the house is a contractor with office off the living room. "With all those n tracking dirt in all day long you have to p after it," says his sister-in-law, who runs household. (The contractor's wife has a l-time job at a Doylestown department re.) Like most of North Clinton Street, s home is thoroughly house cleaned, from ic to cellar, every spring and fall. The two men map out a major battle strategy, and complish it in a week, including scrubbing d waxing floors, washing painted walls, aning out all bureaus and closets, doing tains and washing all windows inside and t. Even the outside porch banisters are ubbed until they shine.

There were wide variations in answers to e question: "How often do you wash your seboards?" Half of the women said twice ear, at house-cleaning time. Three women l it a bit oftener, two did once a month, and one oman wiped them down ery week.

Refrigerators, as a rule, t cleaned and defrosted ce every two weeks, ener in summer. Ovens e scrubbed out, "as necsary—whenever I bake a berry pie." Win-w curtains and windows are generally shed twice a year, although with young ildren in the house the insides of windows e cleaned much oftener than this. Nine omen leave bureaus and closets untouched cept for spring and fall house cleaning, hereas five women "keep at it constantly—ver through." Eight women wax their ors twice a year, but five don't bother to e wax at all.

Surprisingly enough, the housewife who ckles these heavy jobs of house cleaning ost often is a woman with three children 1, 8 and 6), a full-time job at a grocery ore, and no help at home at all. (Her husnd works the night shift and so is able to pervise the children after school.) Mrs. artin Lehn is a pale, friendly, energetic oman of 30 who worked before marriage as housemaid (for which she earned $6 a week). Then her husband was called into the Navy, e took in seven family washes a week. Then e had her sister tend to the babies while she orked as a waitress; now she wraps meat in e 55° "cold room" of a chain store.

N her day off, Wednesday, Mrs. Lehn es the family wash; on Sundays she housecans. She gets up regularly at 6:30, fixes r three children's breakfasts and lunch xes, gulps a cup of coffee and leaves on the n for work just as her husband gets in from e night shift. At noon she hurries home and oks something she can heat up for supper night, such as spaghetti or stew. As this kes a good hour, she generally skips lunch. ome again at 6:05, she heats up the supper ready prepared and spends the rest of the vening until 11:30 either baking or ironing.

Mrs. Lehn enjoys housework and loves her mily. "I'm no career girl. I work to get ings for my family." With the $35 a week e adds to her husband's $47 weekly pay eck, she has bought a new stove and water eater and a living-room suite. "As soon as I et what I want for my home, I'll quit." Although she is home only two days a week, Mrs. Lehn manages to scour out the interior f her new stove and refrigerator every week, ashes her curtains and windows every two onths, and regularly scrubs her kitchen and ining-room linoleum every washday.

The Lehns enjoy going out to a night club occasionally, but the only couple who regularly go out together every week is the 23-year-old bride, Mrs. Good, and her husband. Since he plays golf all week end, he takes her to the country club on Saturday night. About eight of the other couples sometimes hire a baby sitter, but feel that 35 cents an hour for a sitter makes an expensive evening.

THE most popular baby sitter in the neighborhood lives at the Leathermans', a substantial brick house bordered by a blazing flower garden and an acre of vegetables. Mrs. Leatherman, a genial, plump, gray-haired lady in a lavender-sprigged house dress and matching poke bonnet, was snipping up some home-cured bacon and home-grown string beans into the pressure cooker as I arrived. A mother of four sons, she adopted a daughter to round out the family, and this 17-year-old girl is the neighborhood sitter.

Sometimes, when the demand is heavy, the 15-year-old son, David, and Mrs. Leatherman herself "sit." One night, when David's young charge woke up crying, he sent out an immediate SOS for his mother, who was baby sitting on the next block, and they did a quick switch. Mrs. Leatherman thinks nothing of expanding her household by three or four when a neighbor wants to leave children with her for a week or two in an emergency. The same neighbor is sometimes surprised with a gift of a dozen quarts of tomatoes or elderberry jam from Mrs. Leatherman's lavishly stocked cellar.

"Now then, I have no special system for work," said this cabinetmaker's wife with a twinkle, as I gazed at her gleaming windows, waxed and polished furniture and immaculate kitchen shelves. "But my daughter-in-law, she says she never saw anybody cook as much as I do. Have you had your lunch?"

A fanatic is one who, having lost sight of his aim, redoubles his effort.
—GEORGE SANTAYANA.

Although most of the women interviewed enjoy cooking, don't mind cleaning and tolerate washing, ironing brings the greatest variety of groans. Four women iron the same day that they wash, taking the clothes damp from the line. But generally, when there are young children underfoot, making a hot iron a hazardous thing, ironing is done in the evening. None of the women owns a mangle or ironing machine. Three women hand-iron their sheets and towels; the other women simply fold them away without ironing.

In the contractor's home, where a weekly wash is done for seven people, Mrs. Mitchell Braznock starts to iron at 10 Tuesday morning and sometimes continues until suppertime.

For most housewives, however, such single-minded concentration on one task is impossible. As the mother of two youngsters with chicken pox put it, "It's not the work but the interruptions."

A good example is Mrs. Clayton Fairfield, a rather tired-looking ash-blonde of 39 who was canning tomatoes early one morning when I arrived. Mrs. Fairfield trained to be an African missionary—instead married at 29 and proceeded to have four children. As we talked, her two youngest girls of 3 and 4 constantly jumped on and off her lap, twined their arms about her in smothering affection, and managed to interrupt every other sentence.

Mrs. Fairfield is up by 6, always gets her husband's breakfast ("Mercy, yes!"), does two huge washings a week, finds time to bake bread and doughnuts and pies in large quantities and, since they have no car, lugs all her groceries a long three blocks home. Every evening the family has devotions together and then everyone, parents included, troops off to bed.

Mrs. Fairfield never had to combat the horrors of the African jungles, but she can't imagine a worse time than when the four children all got whooping cough together. Unless it was the winter the oldest boy had pneumonia, followed by all four coming down with measles, then chicken pox, and finally the same boy had appendicitis.

What to get for a Birthday Present?

Inspiration!

Send lovely, dewy-fresh Flowers by Wire and your own personal message on the card that goes along. It's the most delightful way to say "Many Happy Returns" . . . and in such good taste, too.

Send a Smart Gift!

Yes, lovely Flowers by Wire are so smart and make such a wonderful impression. Inexpensive, too! An exquisite bouquet can be sent from St. Louis (including wire cost) to New York for $5.83 and up.

It's So Easy

Your own local F. T. D. florist or any you choose from the telephone directory yellow pages will speed Birthday Flowers anywhere within a few hours. The Winged Mercury Emblem on their shop windows is our pledge that satisfaction is guaranteed! Say "Happy Birthday" with Flowers by Wire!

In Any Event . . . Send Flowers Worldwide via Interflora

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION, 149 Michigan Ave., Detroit 26, Mich.

For Finer Flavor...

serve Hi Ho!

Compare Hi Ho with any other cracker

COMPARE for appetizing appeal . . . In appearance, Hi Ho crackers invite comparison with any other cracker. Note the golden-brown color . . . the uniformity of every Hi Ho.

COMPARE for flakiness . . . Turn a Hi Ho cracker edgewise. Note the flakiness, the delicate texture . . . sure sign of expert baking.

COMPARE for finer flavor . . . Taste Hi Ho . . . try them on your family and guests. No other cracker has the flavor that belongs only to Hi Ho!

FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES OF

Like the majority of women on North Clinton Street, Mrs. Fairfield has never had a vacation since the children were born. Only four of the twenty families manage a few days' vacation a year. Mrs. Earl Frick, wife of a magazine salesman, generally flies someplace with her husband each year—he belongs to a flying club which owns two planes. Last year they flew down to Florida for a week to visit relatives. Total cost of the trip: $60.

Six of the twenty housewives have the use of a car during the day when they need it, but they seldom leave their own homes and yards. There is practically no visiting among housewives during the day. Not unfriendliness, but "I know I'm busy, and I figure my neighbors are, too," is the general feeling. Two sisters who live across the street rarely see each other.

These women seldom get outdoors except for gardening or putting up or taking down wash. The children are turned loose on the block and are seldom seen except for mealtime. Mrs. William Burnside, a pretty strawberry-blond British girl, solved the problem of her runaway 2-year-old by harnessing him with a rope in the back yard. I found her at 4 in the afternoon busily vacuuming the living room, with her 1-year-old in a play pen. She sat down with a gasp of fatigue and said, laughing, "You might say I'm sagging by five o'clock. But I recover after supper."

Mrs. Burnside has a son of 9, another aged 2, and a girl of 1—the two last only ten months apart. She is up at 6:45, dresses herself, changes the baby's diapers and puts the two youngsters into bathrobes for breakfast. To keep them from underfoot while she hurriedly prepares a hefty breakfast of hot cereal, bacon, eggs, toast and coffee, she sets one small fry in the high chair, the other in the play pen. There they wait, more or less patiently, while she eats with her husband and 9-year-old. Then she feeds the baby, puts her into the play pen to drink her bottle, and whisks the 2-year-old into the high chair. ("It would help if I had two high chairs!") The older boy is sent off to school and the dishes stacked, unwashed, until lunchtime.

Without pausing for a breather, the attractive Mrs. Burnside whips the two babies upstairs to the toilet, dresses them and makes the beds. If it is a rainy day, the children are then allowed the freedom of downstairs, the baby girl crawling after the toddler as he drags out all the pots and pans from the kitchen closet and empties the contents of his toy chest. If it is a sunny day, the little boy is tied outside to the clothesrope.

This British-born housewife takes the dust mop and sweeper to her two front rooms every day, the vacuum once a week, stopping at frequent intervals to race the children up to the toilet or to settle a quarrel. The baby gets baked potato, meat, vegetable and pudding for lunch. Then she fixes another meal for herself, the 2-year-old and Billy, home from school. After the two babies are toileted and put to bed for naps she tackles the lunch and breakfast dishes.

WHAT does she do between 1 and 4 o'clock, when she starts dinner? Well, she's apt to do mending or ironing, or paint storm windows (two coats to go yet), "or I might suddenly decide to scrape all the wallpaper off the kitchen. I like to have some free time in the afternoon for things I like to do."

She also likes to sit up until 11 watching television after her three children are bathed and put to bed. One night a week she does two loads of wash in her machine, then two more loads first thing in the morning—"gets it on the line much quicker." Every three days she does baby wash and diapers. She is also slip-covering the living-room furnitu and plans to repaint the downstairs room

Only one housewife finds time a bit heav on her hands, since her only child, now i high school, is so involved in Girl Scout cheerleading and hockey that she is seldo home before 6. Mrs. Henry Huegel, whos husband is a gardener and has taught her great deal about flowers, considered for while taking a part-time job in a florist sho Instead, she began making and selling apron for $1 and $2 in the neighborhood, and th has proved so successful that she is no longe considering a job.

WHAT recreation the housewives get i snatched in the evenings. Four of the twent women belong to evening bridge or pinochl clubs which meet once or twice a month Eight women like to go to the movies, gen erally leaving the husband home as baby sitter. Five are active in evening churc work; one belongs to a women's club. Read ing is usually limited to sitting down afte the dinner dishes and leafing through th newspaper. This is when the radio is turne on, too, although nine women listen to one o two specific programs during the day. Three families own television sets.

Questions about personal beauty car brought yelps like "Ouch!" or "That come last!" Mrs. Burnside, the pretty British gir with three young chil dren, regularly take an afternoon a week "to spruce myself u a bit." The rest limi their beauty care t washing their hai once a week or twic a month—two wome go to a hairdresser Only one housewif wears nail polish— and that because she works in her husband's jewelry store while the help is out.

How many husbands are a help about the house? Ten women cried, "No help whatever!" One husband, however, scrubs out the garbage can every week, three dry the dishes at night, and five men out of the twenty are willing to scrub and wax floors.

Only one woman in the twenty claimed that she despised housework, although her house showed signs of conscientious care. The only college graduate I interviewed, and a medical technician before her marriage eight years ago, she had a small boy in bed with a cold and was feeding another in a high chair when I rang the bell. "To say that every woman is suited to housework is like saying every man should be a bricklayer," she pronounced. "It's ridiculous." She coaxed another spoonful of applesauce into the baby and went on to tell me that her mother had died when she was quite young, and the family had been raised by a housekeeper. "She never taught us anything about cooking or keeping house—I've had to learn everything the hard way." She told me that her husband worked in Reading, Pennsylvania—too far away to commute, so that he was home only week ends—and this, perhaps, caused a large part of her feeling toward housework.

The rest of the housewives, although they look a bit worn, laugh easily and spend little time in complaining. Practically all of them earned their living before marriage as secretaries or sales clerks or factory workers, so they know what it means to hold down a job. They feel that keeping a house is physically more tiring than keeping a job, with more care and worry and responsibility, but it is also far more rewarding and satisfying.

"Your time's your own," says Mrs. Burnside. "As long as my work doesn't pile up, I like housework fine," remarks the mother of the two boys with chicken pox. "It gives you a sense of accomplishment," says another. "Work is the important thing in life; that's what brings happiness," believes Mrs. Nyce, mother of five. THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Disappointment

By Hilda Conkling

Spring skipped laughing
Down through the day,
Spring went dancing,
Her heart was gay!

Then, in the star time,
A fox stopped to stare,
He saw Spring weeping,
Snow caught in her hair.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BRING FLORIDA SUNSHINE right into your home!

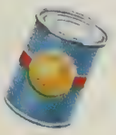
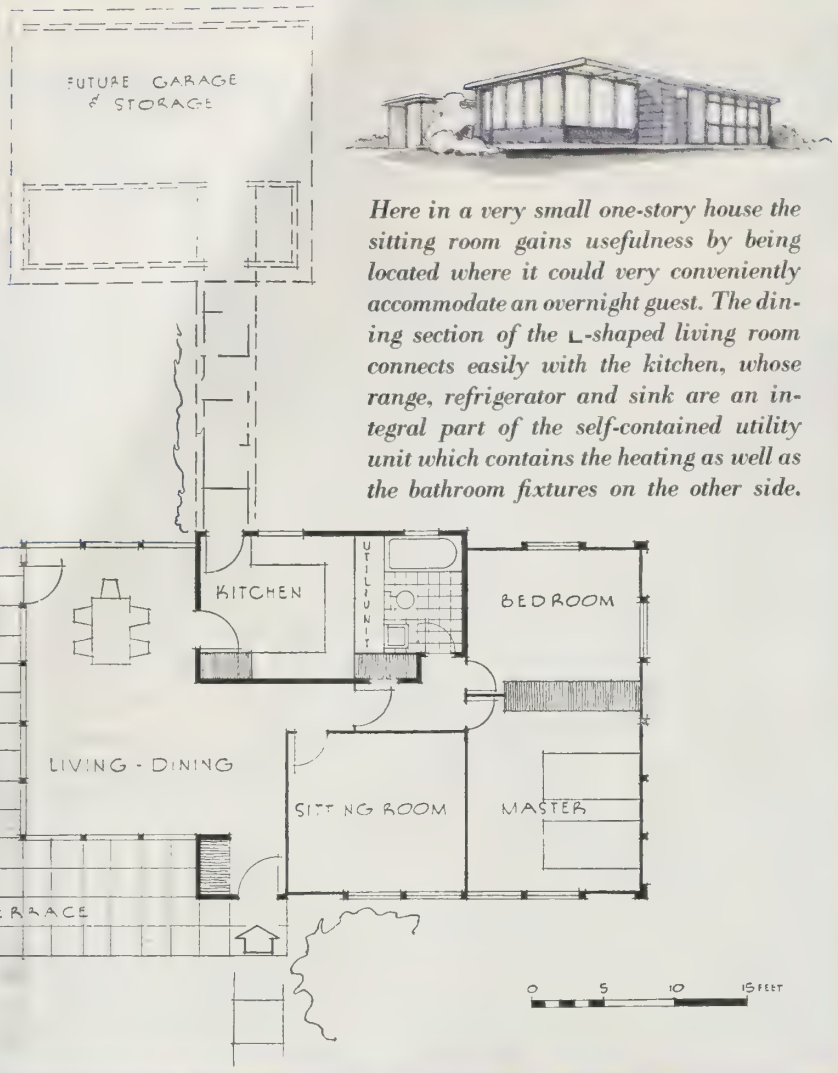
This luscious, low-cost orange juice means more to your health than you know!

These are the days for you to drive Old Man Winter right out of your life—and let the health-restoring rays of Florida sunshine stream in! In the luscious juice of Florida oranges, Mother Nature has packed a world of vital refreshment for you. Natural vitamin C in most generous supply. Other precious vitamins, and minerals absorbed through the roots of Florida's flourishing orange trees from Florida's fruitful soil. And quick energy for you when you need it the most.

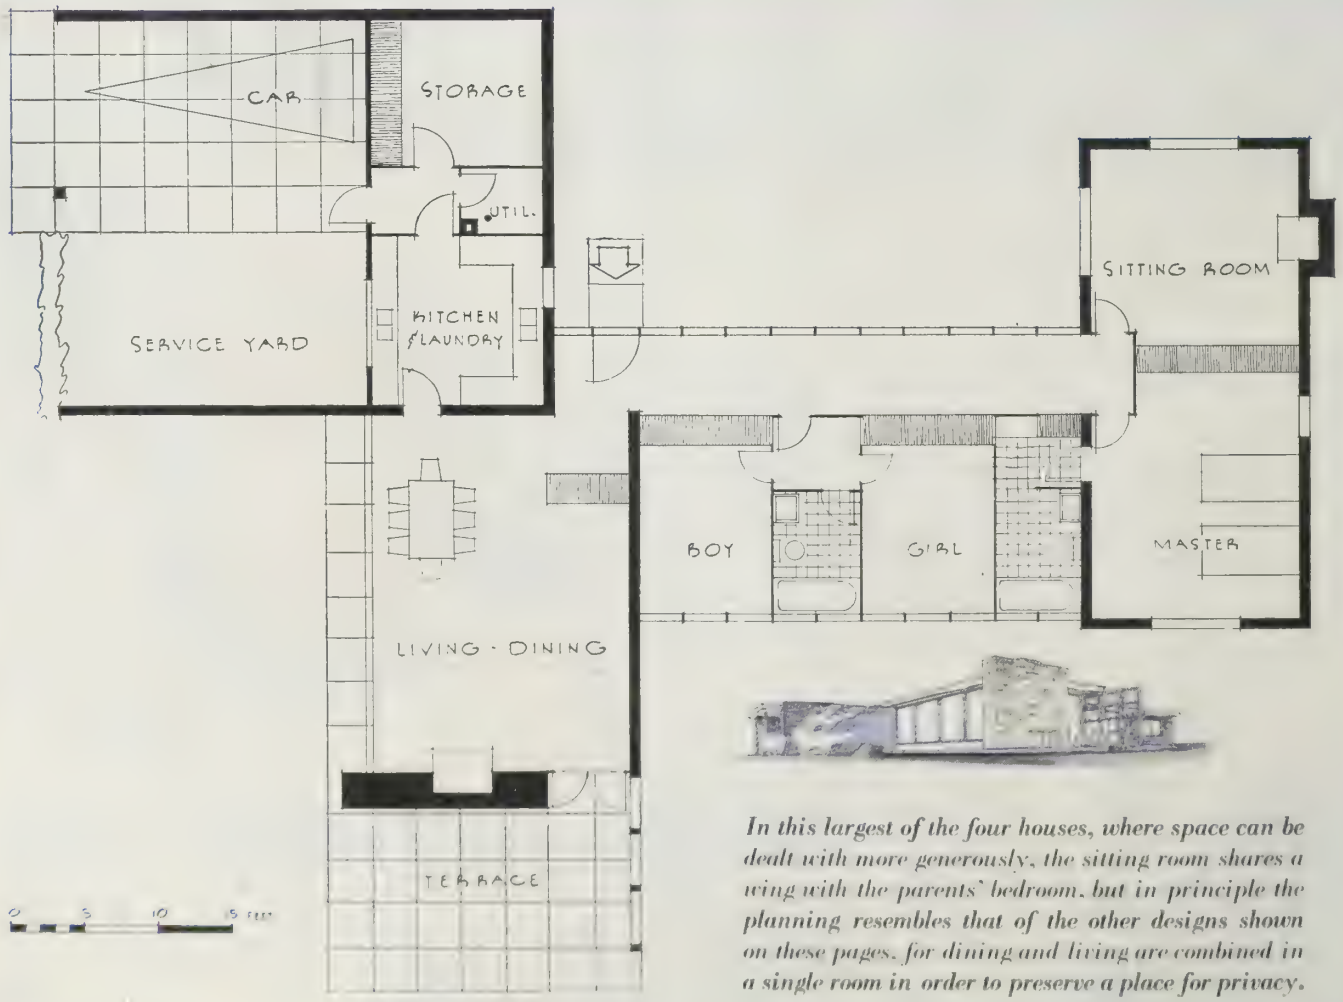


The delicious juice squeezed from Florida oranges, or poured from convenient, inexpensive cans, delivers such a wealth of natural vitamins, nourishment, and health at little cost, that good judgment, good taste, and good health suggest you drink plenty every day!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

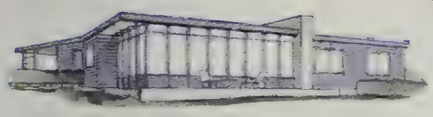


FLORIDA ORANGE JUICE

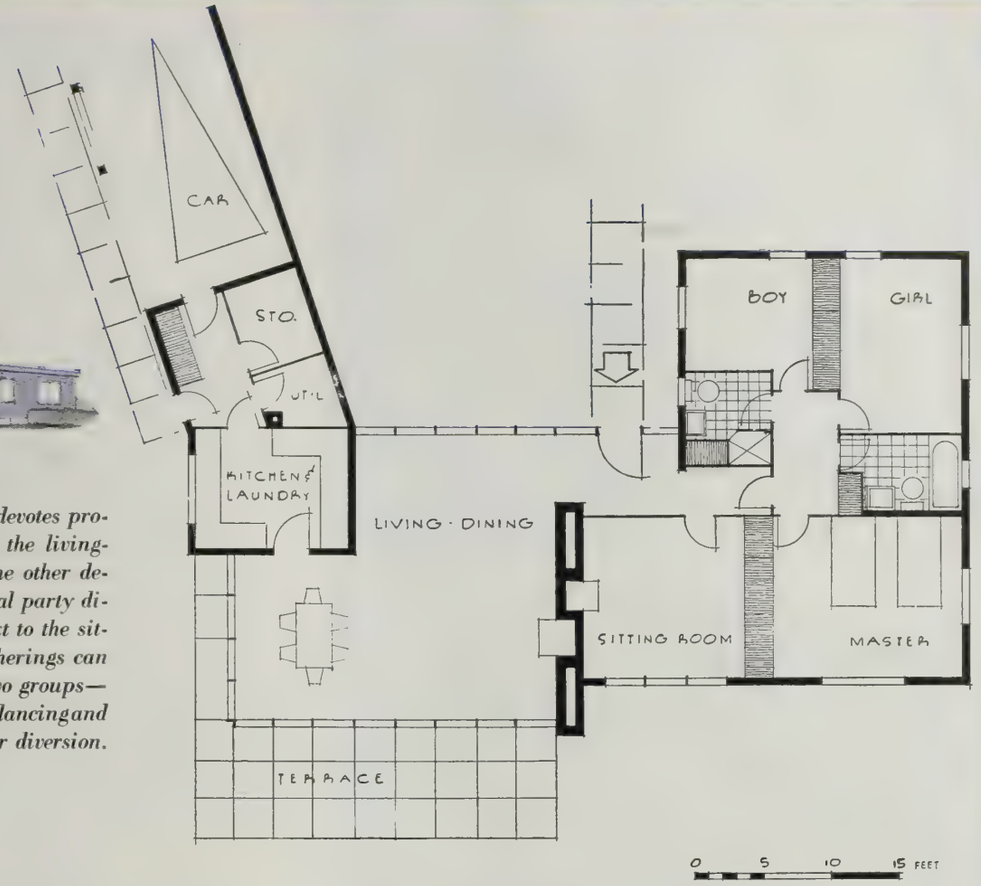


FRESH  OR  CANNED

make ROOM for privacy

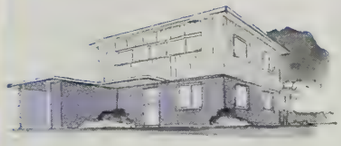


By H. T. WILLIAMS

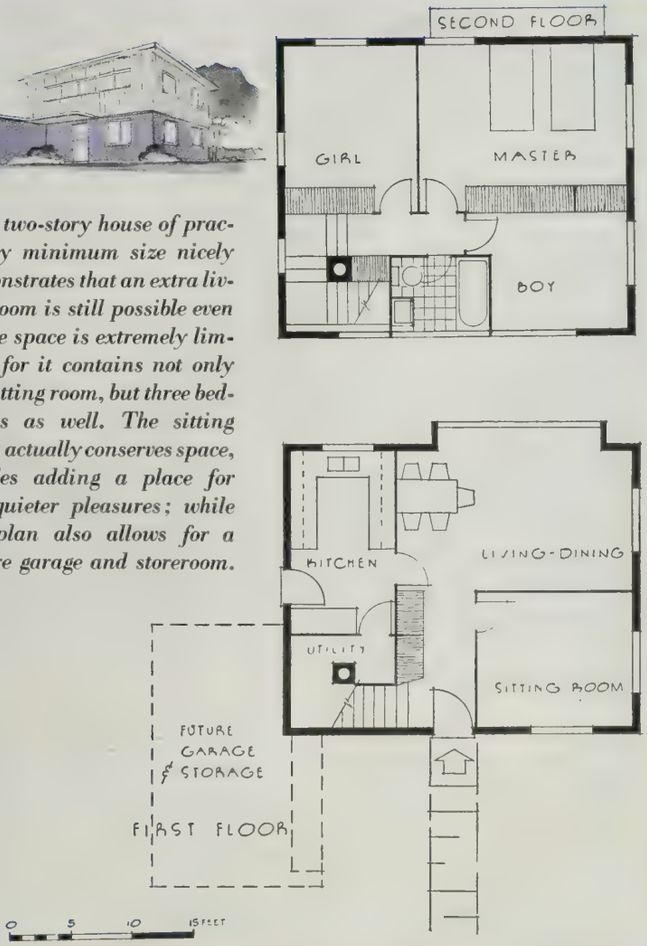


Here in a very small one-story house the sitting room gains usefulness by being located where it could very conveniently accommodate an overnight guest. The dining section of the L-shaped living room connects easily with the kitchen, whose range, refrigerator and sink are an integral part of the self-contained utility unit which contains the heating as well as the bathroom fixtures on the other side.

In this largest of the four houses, where space can be dealt with more generously, the sitting room shares a wing with the parents' bedroom, but in principle the planning resembles that of the other designs shown on these pages, for dining and living are combined in a single room in order to preserve a place for privacy.



This house of medium size devotes proportionately more space to the living-dining room than any of the other designs, creating a space of real party dimensions, but still right next to the sitting room, so that large gatherings can separate if they wish into two groups—young and not so young—for dancing and conversation, or for any other diversion.



PRIVACY not only for energetic youngsters but also for their peace-loving parents has long been a problem; and how to supply this privacy without increasing the size of the house is a still more pressing problem in these days of high costs and scarce materials. The houses shown here have been especially designed as four solutions. They are small, and yet that needed room to which mother and dad can retreat from table tennis and the rumba has been included in them by allotting to it the space usually given over to the dining room. Unruffled in its quiet, it could be called a sitting room or study, and used for the choicest treasures of the household, the best pieces of furniture, the cupboard of fine china, the breakable bric-a-brac. It gives the young people full freedom in the regular living section, where they would rather be. Dining, too, takes place in the large cheerful living room, a living room in the widest sense, intended for work and play.

In these plans you can see how such an arrangement keeps both parents and children out of one another's hair. It takes pretty concentrated planning and different, less conventional thinking about the use of the available space. But the new room thus allowed for is so important in the lives of so many families that the extra planning is more than worth the trouble it takes to every domestic architect and builder who has the homeowner's welfare in mind.

This two-story house of practically minimum size nicely demonstrates that an extra living room is still possible even where space is extremely limited, for it contains not only the sitting room, but three bedrooms as well. The sitting room actually conserves space, besides adding a place for the quieter pleasures; while the plan also allows for a future garage and storeroom.

Englander

AMERICA'S MOST LUXURIOUS mattress

No matter how you sleep or what you weigh, you sleep better on an Englander

Englander Red Line brings you the first really new mattress idea in 50 years

FOR YEARS THIS... FOR YEARS THIS... NOW! INDIVIDUAL SPRING ACTION

Coils held together at top and bottom by cotton sacks. This method prevents individual spring action.

Coils held together at top and bottom by wire. This method prevents individual spring action.

Sleep in Comfort

Sleep in Health

Englander coils are held together only at the center by flexible ribbons of steel. This method permits individual spring action.

That's why the upper half of an Englander gives you cushioning comfort. Every movement and contour of your body is gently cradled. "Roll-to-the-middle," when sleeping double, eliminated. Lower half supports your weight in the firm, healthful manner doctors recommend.

© 1942, The Englander Company, Inc., Chicago, Illinois

Shown above, the new Super Bodyguard—$49.75. Other Englander Red Line mattresses (twin or full size) or matching box springs to $79.75.

MIDDLEWEIGHT CHAMPION

(Continued from Page 209)

Middleweight Reducers

Exercises to flatten and firm your waist, abdomen, hips and thighs.

1. Lie flat on back, arms at sides, legs straight, knees rigid, toes pointing to ceiling. Hold legs together and slowly describe a wide circle with them. Three times to right. Rest a moment. Three times to left. Gradually work up to six circles in each direction.

2. From first position, described above, hold legs together and raise them slowly, breathing in as you begin. When you have raised them as high as possible, slowly lower them to original position, breathing out. Repeat five times. Gradually work up to ten.

3. Lie flat on back, hands clasped under your head, knees raised, feet on floor. Now, lift hands and head off floor as far as possible, pushing chin into chest, and pushing hollow part of back into floor. Slowly lower head and arms to original position. Repeat five times. Gradually work up to ten.

4. Lie flat on back, arms at sides, legs straight. Now raise upper part of body to a half-lying position, supporting weight with palms of hands and buttocks. In this position, draw knees up to chest, then stretch legs up and out as far as possible. Return legs to first position on floor. Repeat three times slowly. Gradually work up to eight.

Chin Slimmers

To help tighten flabby chin muscles and form a prettier throat.

1. In a sitting position, lower your chin into your chest. Then slowly describe a wide circle, swaying your head sideways to left, then to back, holding chin high, then to right and back to original position. Pause and repeat, going in opposite direction. Do exercise in each direction three times. Gradually work up to six.

2. Raise your chin as high as possible and slowly swing your head from right to left. Repeat five times. Gradually work up to ten.

If you would like to plan a similar beauty program for yourself, be sure to check with your doctor first, and follow his advice on diet and exercise.

FRAIDY CAT

(Continued from Page 54)

cheeks and the front lock of his hair was down in his eyes. "Oh, dear!" father said, taking a big breath and trying to stop laughing. He wiped his eyes and pushed up the curly lock of black hair. "Oh, dear!" he said. "He doesn't even come up to your ankle!"

"He comes exactly up to my ankle," mother said, and her eyes looked bright and gray-green and flashing like a traffic signal. "Just nipping height," she said.

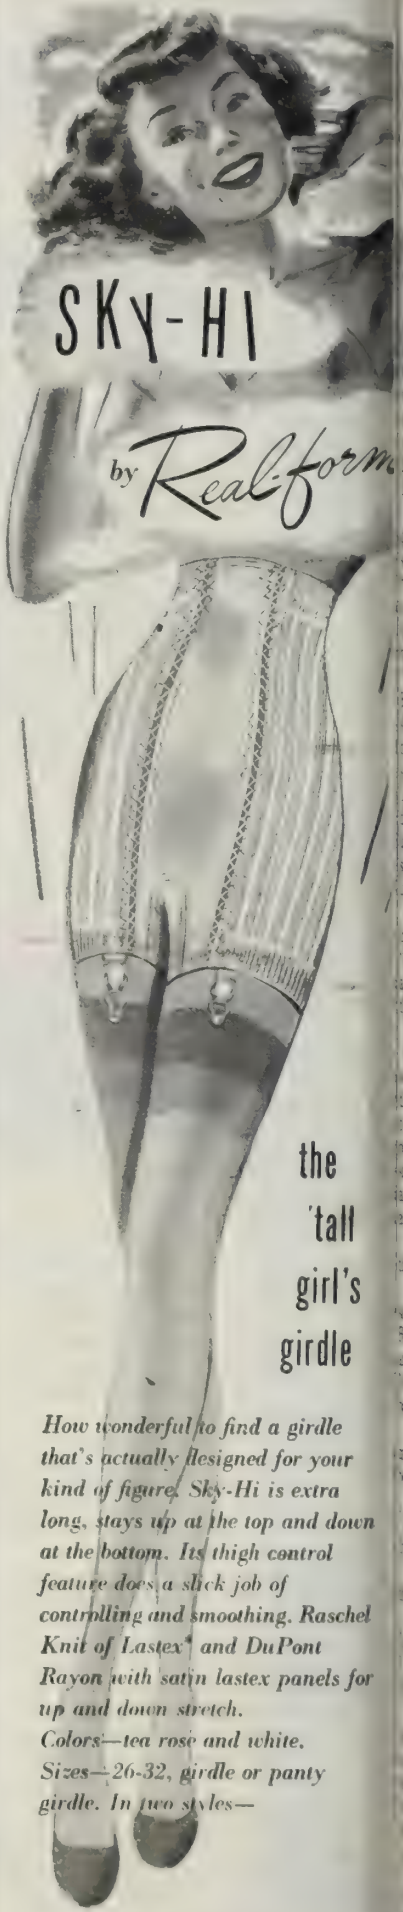
"Woman, woman," father said, mopping his eyes some more. "Timidity, thy name is woman," he said.

"Is that so!" mother said. "Is that so, Mr. Know-it-all? Well, let me show you a thing or two," she said. "Where's last night's paper?" She found it in the pile in the basement. "Look at this," she said.

Father read. "Very interesting," he said.

"What's it say?" I said.

"It tells about a fireman who risked his life to rescue a dog from a burning building."



"Let's see," mother said. "Where?"

Father showed her.

"That wasn't what I pointed to and you know it," mother said. "If you ask me, the man was insane. Here, this," she said, pointing. "Read that."

"Oh," father said. "Space filler. Something I never read. Very nice space filler for the woman's page too."

if you're 5 ft. 6 in. and over the 'tall girl's girdle

How wonderful to find a girdle that's actually designed for your kind of figure! Sky-Hi is extra long, stays up at the top and down at the bottom. Its thigh control feature does a slick job of controlling and smoothing. Raschel Knit of Lastex® and DuPont Rayon with satin lastex panels for up and down stretch.
Colors—tea rose and white.
Sizes—26-32, girdle or panty girdle. In two styles—

Front and back panel for firm control $6
Front panel for gentle control $5

If not available at your local store write

Real-form Girdle Co., Dept. 71,
358 Fifth Ave., New York 1 REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

20 other Real-form styles . . . for every figure type

"What's it say?" I said.

"Why," father said, "it states here that the female is the stronger sex. Let's see." He looked at the paper again. "She can endure more, has more fortitude and is more courageous. Get that," he said, "more courageous. Your mother," he said, "belongs to that sex."

"Everyone's afraid of something," mother said. "I'm afraid of Poochy. Coming over and acting as if he owned our yard! He stands there and barks at me while I hang out the clothes. If I stoop down and get something out of the basket, he snarls and shows his teeth."

"Very gallant," father said. "He disapproves of your working so hard. He seems to be gone now," he said, looking out the window.

"I can go ahead with my work then, I suppose," mother said. "I hope they called him in." But in a minute she was running back in. She called to father. She was really angry now. "Oh, I could shoot him," she said. "I could shoot him. He's in the basket. On top of the clean clothes. He snarled at me when I came near. If I ever get my hands on him, I'll shoot him."

Father was going out the door. "You could get your hands on him any time now," he said, and then he ran through the screen door before mother could answer. He got the dog out of the basket and helped mother rinse the dirt out of the clothes. "What I'm trying to picture," he said, carrying the basket out, "is you holding Poochy and shooting him." He put the basket down and picked up a shirt and gave it a good hard shake. He moved his pipe to the other side of his mouth and started to hang the shirt up. "You gonna do it at arm's length or just in your lap? And with what?" he said. "You got a gun?" He laughed and laughed.

"Believe me, it won't be in my lap," mother said, "and turn that shirt around, Mr. Smarty. You hang shirts by their tails, not their sleeves."

The only thing more expensive than education is ignorance.
—ANON.

It was about a week later and father was out of town. We sat in the living room and all the lights were on. The dining-room light, too, and in the kitchen and study and the porch light. Mother was reading a book, only she wasn't reading. She was listening. Pud and I were working with stamps. Bumps was asleep on the davenport.

"Hey, Pud!" I said. "Still want to trade that ——"

"Sh-h-h-h!" mother said. "For heaven's sake, sh-h-h-h," and she looked over at Bumps. Bumps turned over and one of his arms fell off the davenport and hung down. Mother went and carefully put his arm back up.

"Aw," I said, but I said it softly, "why can't you put him upstairs to bed where he belongs so we could talk?"

"All by himself?" mother said. "I wouldn't think of it."

"You put him up there all by himself all the time," I said.

"When father's home, yes," mother said. Just like anybody could understand that. So I traded a stamp with Pud and kept real quiet doing it. "Listen!" mother said.

She sat real still, her eyes turned, but her head was straight front. There was a kind of a slithering noise on the basement steps. Pud started to get up and mother held up her finger quick and Pud stopped stock-still on his knees and there it was again. I thought I really ought to go and see what was wrong; I was the oldest boy. I ought to be the man of the house. I started to get up real softly. Mother stood up too. We walked toward the basement door. Mother held me back when we got near. She stood listening. Then she took one tiptoe forward and looked around down the dark basement steps.

It happened again! It was a noise like sliding. It was something, that was sure. It wasn't just something we had imagined. Mother reached out and pulled the basement door shut slowly and quietly. Then she locked it quick and bolted it, not making a sound. And then we could hear more noise in the basement—like sliding. And then a thud!

Mother looked in front of the phone book and then she dialed a number. The police were there in nothing flat. There were two of them and a lot of light and noise and if there are two things that make you not afraid any more it is a lot of light and noise that you know what it is. We had all the lights on downstairs, but it was terribly dark outdoors till the police came. They had bright spotlights and flashlights and they lit up the outdoors too.

The men were big and loud and they had guns in their belts and it felt good to have them in the house. They said, "What's the trouble, lady?" and mother shifted Bumps to her other hip and said:

"My husband is out of town and someone's in the basement. I've got him locked in."

"Oh?" the one with red hair said, turning his head clear around to look at her.

Mother showed them where the basement door was. They turned the key. They made a lot of noise doing it.

"Sh-h-h!" mother said. "You'll scare him away."

"You want him to stay?" the black-haired one said.

"Sure," mother said, "till you catch him."

Finally they got the basement door open. They almost broke it down trying to open it before they turned the bolt too.

"Lady, you sure locked him in," they said.

"He'll never be there now," mother said.

"Is there another door?" they said.

"No," mother said, "but there are windows."

They took out their guns. Mother backed up.

"Be careful with the guns!" she said.

The red-haired one took a new grip on his gun and smiled at mother. The other one put up his hand and made a quick little forward motion with it.

"Leave it to us, lady," he said.

The policemen disappeared. We could hear them going down the steps, loud and fast. Then there was a big bump that shook the house and a shot. And then there was another kind of a crash.

Mother pushed us back into the living room. She put Bumps up on the davenport. "Get up there," she said to us, and we did. She got up too and put her feet up.

We could hear mumbling in the cellar and scraping and bumping and walking around downstairs too. We could hear the fruit-room door opened and shut again.

Then they were coming up the steps. They were coming real slow. We all sat on the davenport and waited. They came to the open door into the living room and stood leaning there.

Mother sat up straight. "What happened?" she said. "Did you shoot him?"

The red-haired one stood up from leaning against the doorway. He pushed back his hair and looked at mother like he didn't like her very well. "All I shot was a rafter," he said through the side of his mouth. "Unintentional."

The other one stepped into the living room. "Lady," he said, "don't you know about safety first? Like if you got something to be carried to the basement, carry it all the way down, instead of leaving it lay on the steps. Like you left all them newspapers and magazines."

Mother's face changed. "Oh, dear," she said, and her voice was very sorry, "you slipped on the papers!"

"Yes," the policeman said. "Bill did. I slipped on him."

"Oh, that's terrible," mother said. "Let's see, where'd you get hurt? I'll get the iodine."

The one in the doorway put his one hand on his seat and pushed mother away with the other. "We don't need help," he said. "We got first aid. Come on, Mac," he said, and he started limping toward the front door, stooping a little.

"Oh, don't go," mother said. "We did hear a noise."

You can put this bedspread in any setting from a career-girl's room to a most extra-special guest chamber. It is glamorously big, super-size, dramatically lovely. Yet so very practical!

Its thousands of petite tufts are woven right into the fabric: they'll withstand countless launderings. More wonderful yet, a few shakes after it's tubbed and the tufts fluff up like new!

Picture the "Heiress" in your home . . . giving a luxurious "new look" to your bed . . . beautifying the whole room. In crystal pastels as well as white. Matching Simpleat drapes, too! In better stores coast to coast.

Double-bed size, 100 x 112, fringed
Twin-bed size, 83 x 112, fringed

MORGAN-JONES, INC., 58 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK 13

New life for any room

New life for any room—Glorious in color . . . lavish in texture. Tumble-Twist Rugs give a luxury look to any room, any style of setting. And because Tumble-Twist Rugs are stagger-woven of permanently-twisted, all-cotton boucle, that bright beauty lasts for years . . . looks even lovelier with laundering! Room sizes and scatter sizes in a garden-riot of colors, all pre-shrunk. At America's smartest stores. Insist on the genuine Tumble-Twist—for only Tumble-Twist has the patented tongue-and-groove construction

Tumble-Twist

RUGS

"Tumble-Twist Laundry Made Laundering Easy"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

LIBERTYVILLE TEXTILES, INC., CHICAGO 54, ILLINOIS

"I looked everywhere. There wasn't nothing," Mac said.

"You didn't look everywhere," mother said. "There was a noise."

"I even looked in the cupboards," Mac said. "I looked behind the furnace. I looked under the steps."

"Did you look in the fruit room?"

"In the fruit room too," he said.

"In the darkroom?" mother said.

"All the rooms was dark," he said.

"The room next to the fruit room," mother said.

"The painted one?" he said. "No, I didn't look there," he said. "It said not to. I can take a hint."

"That's where he is, then," mother said. "Look there," she said, "but be careful!"

"Careful!" Bill, the red-haired one, said. "Me. I'll wait."

Mac went downstairs. In a minute he was back. "All clear," he said. "Nothing." He was putting his gun back in his holster. They started to go.

"He could have sneaked up when we were talking," mother said. "Maybe he's upstairs."

They stopped dead still for a minute without looking around. I think they were counting to ten. Then they came back. They didn't talk. They went upstairs. They tromped around all over. They came back down. They didn't miss anything. We followed them around. Back porch, kitchen, broom closet, coat closets. They went out in the study. Mac went over to the outside door to the study and grabbed the doorknob.

Mother screamed. "No!" she screamed. "Don't open that door!"

Mac dropped the knob like it was hot. He looked around at mother.

Mother laughed a kind of tinkly little laugh. "Thank you," she said. "Thank you very much for searching the house."

Mac stood staring at her. "Just what is wrong with that door?" he said.

"Huh-ha," mother laughed. "It's a—huh-ha—just a . . . bee," she said.

"A bee?" Mac said.

"Yeah," Bill said. He was standing kind of bent over and his hand on the back of his pants. "In her bonnet," he said.

"I caught it in there," mother said. "I don't know how it got in the house, I'm sure," she said. "I had to watch it for hours till it lit on the screen door and I quickly shut the door and shut it in."

Mac grabbed the knob. "I ain't afraid," he said. "I'll get him!" He grabbed his gun.

"Oh, no, please don't," mother said. "He might get out and then where would we sleep?" she said. "With a bee in the house."

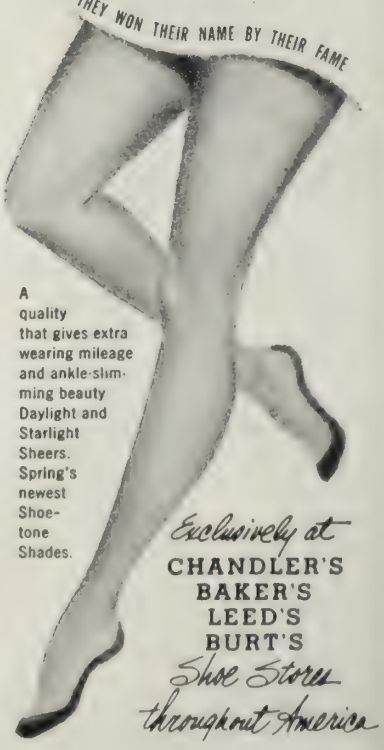
We all felt good when they were gone. "My goodness," mother said, "the police are wonderful, aren't they? I certainly know what to do after this when I'm afraid. My goodness," she said, "we pay for it in taxes, why shouldn't we use it?" She wasn't a bit afraid any more. "Let's have a snack," she said, "before we go up."

So we had milk and cookies by the kitchen table and we didn't even have the rest of the lights on.

"If anyone was snooping around," she said, "they'd be afraid to now, after the police were here."

It lasted a couple of nights. Mother was very brave. But the third night she said, "I know what I'll do. I'll put up the Army cots in my room for you and Pud. Bumps can sleep with me."

So we did. And mother got us all in and locked the door. It was real cozy and fun all being in one room, only a little warm with the door closed. It was the middle of the night when I woke up. Mother was standing by the window and I could hear a noise downstairs, as if someone was softly trying to do something to get the front door open. I got up and went over beside mother. We couldn't see a thing. The bushes hid the door and the walk. But there wasn't any car out in front. The burglar must have walked.



Mother said, "Listen!" and we could hear them at the back door.

At better stores everywhere or write
WONDER MAID, INC., 1727 Locust St., St. Louis, Missouri
Manufacturers of MISS CO-ED and WONDER FORM Slips
WONDER MAID Gowns and Petticoats
New York Office, 152 Madison Avenue

AMAZING OFFER — $50 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 100 BOXES of entirely different, new Deluxe All-Occasion cards. Patented feature television card included. Each box sells for $1.00, your profit 50c. Surprise items. It costs nothing to try. Write today.
CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-19, White Plains, N. Y.
WRITE FOR SAMPLES

MAR-V-LUS
REG U S PAT OFF
Glamour leg
NYLONS
THEY WON THEIR NAME BY THEIR FAME

A quality that gives extra wearing mileage and ankle-slimming beauty Daylight and Starlight Sheers. Spring's newest Shoe-tone Shades.

Exclusively at CHANDLER'S
BAKER'S
LEED'S
BURT'S
Shoe Stores
throughout America

Long-Line BRASSIERES by Maiden Form
® REG U S PAT OFF

r trim, smooth lines below a beauti-lly uplifted bosom, choose one of aiden Form's favorite brassieres, with ur- or six-inch diaphragm band . . . all ailable again, after a long absence!

Allo-Ette" (above) or *"Allo" with reguion shoulder straps; *"Intimo", built-up or gulation straps—all with 6-inch band, $3.50
; *"Inter-Lude", regulation straps, 4-inch id, $2.50 up.

"There is a Maiden Form for Every Type of Figure!"

© 1949 MFB CO.

nd for free Style Folder: Maiden Form assiere Company, Inc., New York 16, N. Y.

et one of America's oldest and est known shoe stores help you

Beat High Shoe Prices!

Order Direct ave up to 1/2

Women's zes 4 to 10
AAA to EEE

Also comes in ½ inch lower heel

nagine! Good quality Women's Arch Shoes for only

$4.95

Royal Arch" has the same features as the ore expensive shoes—built-in steel arch, ombination last, narrow heel, soft black id leather, neat, attractive, modern styling.
How can we sell them for $4.95? We want o acquire a list of mail order shoe buyers uickly—hence this big special. The coupon money in your pocket. For 54 years we ave helped Minneapolis people save on
oes. We can help you, too. Money refunded you are not satisfied upon arrival. We ship repaid. No C.O.D.'s.

----------POSTAGE PREPAID---------- nclosed find $4.95 for Royal Arch Shoes.

ZE_____WIDTH_____

end style illustrated (Cuban Heel) ☐ end half-inch lower heel (Military Heel) ☐

Name_____

ddress_____

HOME TRADE SHOE STORE
Since 1894, one of the country's largest distributors of women's arch shoes.
MINNEAPOLIS 2, MINN.

"Did we hook the screen?" I said.

"Not in back," mother said. "It's broken. But I locked the door. I put a chair under the knob."

Mother dialed the red O in the dark. She told the operator about it.

"Get the police," she said.

It took them a long time to come. They were the same ones. But they weren't noisy this time and they just had flashlights. We could see them get out of the car. They looked kind of tired as they walked up the walk. They even turned back and reached in the car and got something. They sure weren't in a hurry.

"Hisssst," mother said from the window.

"Good evening, good evening," they said. They both stood and looked up at us. They were eating candy bars.

"Sh-h-h!" mother said.

"How's the bee?" Bill whispered real loud, peeling the paper down lower on his candy bar.

"It died," mother whispered back.

"Aw!" Mac said. "The poor little thing. Comin' down to let us in?" he said.

"There's nobody inside," mother whispered. "He's outside—in back."

"You don't say?" Mac said. "In back, huh?"

"Yes. He's trying to get in."

"Who locked the doors?" Mac said.

"I did," mother said.

"He hasn't got a chance," Mac said.

"Not a chance," Bill said.

"Well, catch him anyway," mother said out loud and they went away.

We waited and listened. We could hear voices talking. And then there was a clatter downstairs. A clatter that went on and on

In times of crisis we must avoid both ignorant change and ignorant opposition to change.

—JOHN STUART MILL

and on. It even woke Bumps. Mother grabbed a robe. She opened the bedroom door just a crack. The noise was still going on. It sounded like something had fallen down and that made something else fall and that made still something else fall and you wondered if it would ever stop.

Mother's voice sounded very little. "Who's there?" she said.

The noise stopped and it was very quiet. Mother looked around at me. She motioned Pud and Bumps to get up in the bed. She clutched her blue robe together at her neck.

"Who's there?" she said a little louder.

"Just us cops," someone said.

"Well, goodness me," mother said. "What in the world are you doing? You're certainly the noisiest cops I ever knew."

Mac came around into the hall. "Just opening the door, lady," he said.

And then we could hear someone else talking and Bill came in the hall too and father!

"Where did you come from?" mother said. "I thought you were in Fargo."

"I came from Fargo," father said. "I was trying to be quiet so as not to wake you."

"Wake me," mother said. "Wake me! I never go to sleep till daylight."

"Is this your husband?" Bill said.

"Well, naturally," mother said. "He had a key, didn't he?"

"Yeah," Bill said. "That's right. That man the other night didn't have no key, did he? That's what we thought."

"What man?" mother said.

"The one that wasn't in the darkroom," Mac said. "The one that kept sliding downstairs on papers."

"What?" father said.

"Oh, he's just trying to confuse you," mother said. "The papers slid down without anybody on them till they came. And they slid so hard they chipped the basement refrigerator with their bullets."

"What?" father said.

"The only thing was," Mac said, "the key didn't work so good in the door, so then we wondered."

(Continued on Page 231)

Oh, so Luxurious...and PRACTICAL, TOO...

Who could choose between these two fine Pepperell Percales? ★ Pepperell's regular Percales are firmly woven, popular-priced, loomed for durability with 182 sturdy threads per square inch. ★ Pepperell Peeress Percales are even longer-lasting. Indeed, you can buy no finer-woven, longer-lasting full-combed-yarn percales at any price! Only the very top grade percales are woven of these strong superfine-combed yarns, 204 threads per square inch. You want some of both Pepperell Percales—the beautiful sheets with the wear woven in. See them in white, and "personality colors"!

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

PEPPERELL PERCALE
PEPPERELL FABRICS ®
Sheets
FOR LOVELIER TEXTURE, LONGER WEAR

Tested by 200 Consecutive Launderings!

As part of our regular testing, we sent this Pepperell Peeress Percale to a regular laundry for 200 consecutive washings! Not one thread is broken! And this is only one of many quality controls and wear tests by which Pepperell assures you of full value in Pepperell Peeress Percales.

Million Dollar Luxury FOR A MODEST BUDGET

by KROEHLER

The gorgeous upholstered furniture you see pictured here is our crowning achievement in refinement, in style and in comfort. The meticulous detailing of every hidden part is glorified by an entirely new type of fabric. Exclusive Kroehler Cushionized* Construction makes for unmatched comfort. Visit your Authorized Kroehler Dealer today.

WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURER

KROEHLER

(Say KRAY-LER)

Furniture

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 229)

'But you went right ahead and helped him
'" mother said.

'Doors stick sometimes," Mac said. "That's r business, helping people in trouble. We lped him push."

"We didn't know," Bill said, "that you
d piled all your kitchen stuff by the back or. That was kind of silly of us, wasn't it?
ot to know that much?"

"Yes," mother said. "The hook on the een door was broken. So I had to put a air under the knob."

"And kettles on it?" father said.

"Sure," mother said, "so I could hear meone if they got in anyhow."

"Heavy sleeper, aren't you?" father said.
"I thought a chair under the knob was re," mother said. "I didn't think anyone uld budge it."

"We didn't budge it," Mac said. "It
oke."

"It broke," Bill said, "and the door came en and we fell in and all hell broke loose."

"Brave little woman you got there," Mac id to father. He was sucking a cut place on s hand.

"Oh, my, yes," father said. "She belongs the stronger sex. More endurance, more rtitude, more courage."

"Come on, boys," mother said. "Come on ck to bed. I believe the disturbance is over."

The disturbance wasn't over though. I uld hear the police and father laughing and lking downstairs. They were still doing it hen I went to sleep.

"How long did you and your little friends rouse last night?" mother asked next orning.

"Not long," father said. "We had a sand-ich. I made some coffee. Have to stay on e good side of the po-
ce. Second false alarm
a week.'

"Poof!" mother said.
That's what the police re for and there was othing false about the arms. If you ask me they ere very rude to me," she
id. "They implied that was a scaredy cat."

"Well, don't you care," father said. "They idn't mean it, I'm sure. They know you just all them because you get lonesome. And I now you're brave. It said so in the paper.
ou have endurance and fortitude and courge," he said.

Mother threw her napkin at him. Father aught it and tossed it back.

"Look," father said, "today I don't work.
et's just for once take the day off, huh?"

"Like what?" mother said.

"Like we'll get hamburgers and grill them ut in the yard. I've worked hard enough on hat yard, let's enjoy it for a day."

So we did. It was a cool day and Pud and I ade the fire and helped grill the meat and ather fried potatoes and mother sliced to-natoes and we had corn on the cob. It was eally neat.

Bumps crawled around the yard most of he time picking up things we didn't know ere there and sticking them in his mouth.
He had on a white sweater and it was so full f leaves and twigs that after a while he ooked as bad as Poochy before they take im down to have him trimmed and combed.

Mother sat back in a big chair after we ere through eating. She was drinking coffee nd nibbling cookies. The telephone rang and ather ran in to answer it.

"I'd let it ring," mother said, "but then e'd always wonder. We ought to do this very week," she said.

I could hear Poochy barking and I hoped e wouldn't come over and spoil mother's un. She was looking all around the yard for omething. She must have thought Poochy ight come running over too.

"This is what we built the grill for, my oodness," mother said. "This is why we uilt out here where there was a lot of space ——"

All of a sudden mother stopped talking and drinking coffee and nibbling cookies and her eyes looked like shooter marbles and I wondered what was wrong and then she was gone. She streaked through the shrubs at the back of our yard and made straight across the alley, across the vacant lot, straight for Adam's barbed-wire fence.

It was Bumps. He had crawled across the vacant lot and under the barbed-wire fence in with the bull. It was Bumps mother had been looking around for. And there he was sitting inside the fence, examining something he had found on the ground. He didn't even know the bull was there. He was just trying to eat twigs.

But the funny thing was mother. She didn't run to Bumps at all. And then I saw why Poochy had been barking. That crazy little mutt didn't know when he could stop scaring people. He had been trying to scare Lemmy.
That's what he'd been barking at. And Lemmy had had enough. I could hardly stand to look. Poochy was lying real still right underneath him and Lemmy was moving around a little bit wondering where Poochy was, I guess. He knew he had given him a biff but he didn't know how hard and he was looking around for him, snorting and ready to biff him again if he hadn't run away, and his great big feet might light right on Poochy any minute. Except for mother. I was so scared I couldn't even scream, watching mother.

Mother crawled under that fence, not once taking her eye off of Lemmy. She walked almost without moving and still almost as swift as running. She walked with so little motion it was almost like floating along and all the time she had her eye on Lemmy. She never once stopped looking at Lemmy. Not even when she got there and stood real still for half a second and then stooped down and scooped up Poochy, still moving steadily, without jerking or sudden motions
to make Lemmy excited.
She scooped Poochy up
and had him in her arm and then she turned and screamed. She screamed like mad and ran straight for Bumps, still holding on to Poochy.

The desire to take medicine is perhaps the greatest feature which distinguishes man from animals.

—SIR WILLIAM OSLER:
Life of Sir William Osler.

And that did it. Lemmy looked around and raised his head and stopped thinking of what had happened to Poochy. He saw mother. He thought it over for maybe half a minute and then he took after her. I don't know. They say Lemmy is gentle. Maybe he was just running to see what the excitement was about. Maybe he saw Poochy in mother's arm and was running to finish him off. Nobody likes little dogs biting at their legs.
Maybe he didn't know why he was running.
Anyway he ran and he must weigh a ton the way his running sounded. And mother screamed and screamed and screamed and I couldn't stand to look for a minute and when I looked again mother was still ahead and she swooped down and scooped up Bumps in her other arm and she lay down and rolled under the fence with both arms full of white woolly bundles full of twigs and leaves and Bumps was screaming now and mother just sobbing and her clothes were caught on the fence and I ran and helped tear her loose and Lemmy stood by the fence and watched.

Father and the Wehrbacks and most of the other neighbors were there then, everybody talking at once and Mrs. Wehrback holding Poochy and Poochy all right again, licking her face, and someone was carrying Bumps and father was helping mother into the house and someone called a doctor from up the street because mother was bleeding and everyone was saying how brave mother was.

And all of a sudden I knew. By the time the others got there Poochy was up on his feet, wobbling around and not looking like Bumps at all. So nobody else knew. They all thought mother had run right in under that bull to save Poochy. But I had seen Poochy and Bumps both bundled in her arms, both looking like woolly balls mixed up with twigs and leaves and I knew mother had thought it was Bumps when she ran in after Poochy.
But I didn't tell anyone.

(Continued on Page 233)

AMAZING
SELF-POLISHING
SIMONIZ
FOR FLOORS

OUTSHINES THEM ALL!

Costs less to use because it lasts longer!

Millions of housewives are switching to Self-Polishing Simoniz. They find it gives longer wearing beauty and keeps their floors brighter. For the same lasting loveliness that makes Simoniz so famous for cars—insist on Self-Polishing Simoniz for your floors!

Sold by grocery, hardware, variety, drug, paint, 5 cents to $1, auto accessory, department stores—linoleum dealers everywhere.
THE SIMONIZ COMPANY, CHICAGO 16, ILL.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

SELF-POLISHING SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

FOR LINOLEUM, FINISHED WOOD, ASPHALT OR RUBBER TILE AND TERRAZZO FLOORS

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

AHOY, THERE! Dad calls it his "S. S. Hideaway"—where he makes scaled ship models. During daytime, the skylight floods this converted attic space with natural light. At night, when landlubbers come aboard to inspect the fleet, the friendly wood stove keeps them warm. Notice how the floor pattern gives the room a look of generous width. It's Sloane-Blabon's new diagonal pattern 1681 in Inlaid Linoleum, edged with Koroseal* Cove Base. A breeze to keep in shipshape cleanliness!

*® B. F. Goodrich Co.

How to Have a Hobby Haven

Exciting new diagonal patterns in Sloane Quality Linoleum Products inspire these inviting hobby rooms.

HE'S NEVER LONELY! Young Pete, the radio amateur, spends his evenings talking to fellow-hams all over the country. When not on the air, he's busy building new equipment. He designed his attic "radio shack," too. The handsome floor is inexpensive Sloane-Blabon Resilient Enamel in the new diagonal pattern 5290, edged with Koroseal Cove Base. Good looking and so practical!

MOTHER PUTTERS WITH POTTERY! Yes, this beautiful room, complete with modern electric pottery kiln, was once waste attic space. But mother has a wonderful sense of color and design. You can tell by the floor. It's Sloane-Blabon's new Inlaid Linoleum diagonal pattern 1692, with Koroseal Cove Base trimming. Mother is practical, too! She knows it's easy to keep this floor sparkling.

Look what happened to the attic! From waste space to a hobbyist's heaven . . . made attractive so easily by doing as decorators do—starting with the floor. Each of these decorator-perfect ideas started with one of Sloane-Blabon's beautiful new diagonal patterns that do wonders for giving "width" to narrow rooms.

Whatever your decorating problem, see your Sloane-Blabon dealer first. You'll find your inspiration in the many stunning designs and matchless colors—in Inlaid and Marbletone linoleums . . . Koroseal, the miracle plastic, in Tile, Cove Base and Cove Molding that never shows its age, never needs waxing . . . Asphalt Tile that costs so little and wears so long . . . Resilient Enamel Rugs, Floor Covering and Wall Coverings. All lovely looking and such wondrous work-savers. Sloane-Blabon floors require so little effort to keep shiny-bright.

SLOANE Quality LINOLEUM PRODUCTS

"... for better design and truer color."

SLOANE-BLABON CORPORATION
295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 231)

And the next day was when mother got the medal and they took her picture for the paper. Mother sat in father's chair with her feet up on a stool because she had bandages on her legs. She had them on her arms too and she had one on her head and they had cut her hair around it.

First the reporter asked her all about it and she told him. She looked at father and she told him how it was nothing, any woman would have done it, women are all like that, they have endurance and fortitude and courage, only men don't realize it.

"You must be very fond of the little dog," the man said, "to practically risk your life to save him."

"Uh," mother said.

"And what," the reporter said, "went through your mind when the bull caught up with you?"

Mother turned white. "Did he catch up with me?" she said.

"You can't pretend you outran him with those bandages all over you," the man said. "Did your whole life go through your mind, like when people are drowning?"

"Uh," mother said. "No—I could feel the animal's hot breath on my neck and I only wondered if I could get to the fence in time to save Poochy and push Bumps under. When he knocked me down, I only thought of what would happen to the dog—and the baby."

The reporter called some men from the car out in front then and they came and set up this camera and mother was fixing her hair and then the photographer turned around to the hall and said, "O.K. You come in and hand her the medal and we'll take one of that," and I don't know why he was the one to do it, but there was Mac.

"Why, hello, Mac," mother said and oh, her voice was sweet. "How are you?"

"I'm fine," Mac said. "I present you with this here medal from the Animal Rescue League for your great show of bravery in the rescuing of a helpless little dumb animal." He kept looking mother in the eye all the time he said it and he didn't smile.

"That's good," the photographer said to Mac. "Now do it again and I'll catch it. When I say 'Hold it,' stop talking and hold still."

"I present you with this here medal," Mac said, "on behalf of the Animal Rescue League for your great show of ——"

"Hold it!" the man said and the light flashed. "Now," he said, "go ahead and present it to her."

"I present you with this here medal," Mac said, "on behalf of the Animal Rescue League for your great show of bravery in the helpless—in the rescue of a dumb—here, take it," he said. "I said it once."

"You said it so nicely," mother said. "I just loved to hear it."

"And I got it all down," the reporter said. "Great show of bravery," he said, "in the rescuing of a helpless dumb animal."

Mother beamed.

"Now," the photographer said, "where's the dog? I want one of you holding him on your lap and ——"

"Oh," mother said, "really? Wouldn't it be better to have him just kind of standing beside me?"

One of the men brought Poochy in and the photographer turned to take him. Mother looked at father. He just stood watching, like anyone watches interesting things, like it was no affair of his.

"My lap got hurt too," mother said. "He's kind of heavy."

"Put the dog down easy," father said to the photographer. "She has abrasions on her limbs."

Mother made one more try. "His feet are dirty, I suppose," she said, and then the photographer put Poochy on mother's lap.

"Just put your hand on his head," he said, and mother did, very carefully, and they took the picture and mother took her hand away quick and said, "Take him away," and so I did.

After they were gone, mother held the medal up and looked at it.

"Not bad, is it?" she said, raising her eyebrows and looking at father. "What was that," she said, "that you used to say? Something or other, thy name is woman, or something like that?"

"Gentility, I guess it was," father said. "Allow me to congratulate you, my dear. Be right back," he said. "Got to move the hose."

He went out in the yard and moved the hose and then he sat down on the bench and smoked a pipe. He kept chuckling and laughing little laughs and once he took the pipe out of his mouth and laughed till he cried. Pud and I were swinging in the hammock. I went over and looked where he was looking but there wasn't anything funny.

"What you laughing at, anyway?" I said.

Father stopped laughing. "Women are wonderful people," he said, but I couldn't see why that made him laugh. "And," he said, "your mother is a wonderful woman."

"She sure is," I said. "Did Lemmy hurt her very bad? I couldn't stand to look."

"Well," father said, "this is just between us men. It wasn't Lemmy, it was the barbed wire gored mother. She was pretty tangled up in it, you know."

"Well, it was still pretty brave, wasn't it?" I said.

"Of course it was," father said. "How bad you're hurt isn't the measure of your bravery. It's facing the chance of getting hurt."

"You can get just as bad hurt with barbed wire as with a bull," I said.

"Sure you can," father said, "but it was the bull mother faced and," he said, "she is a very brave woman because she is very afraid of animals. She's amazing, that's what she is," he said. "To go in and pick up Poochy right in her arms was showing more courage than I gave her credit for, even without the bull."

"Yeah," I said, "and when she saw it was Poochy and not Bumps, she held right on, she didn't throw him down."

"What?" father said and then I remembered I wasn't going to tell that.

"And look at the way she held him on her lap for the picture. She was sure brave about that," I said.

"Yes," father said, "unwilling though she was. But what was that you said about Bumps? What's that!" he said. Mother had screamed.

We ran in. She was way over to one side in her chair and she was looking at the ceiling and she looked like she was facing a dragon.

"Quick!" she sobbed. "Get it! Quick!"

Father grabbed mother's medal. He put it up to the ceiling and got it. It was a spider hanging down from the ceiling and it was almost as big as a small fly. Father took it very carefully on the medal out to the back yard. He was holding his mouth tight shut. He whisked the spider off the medal on to the ground. Then he looked hard at the medal and started to shake. He sat down on the step and laughed fit to kill.

"Timidity, timidity," he said, "thy name still is."

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Loveless

By Ethel Jacobson

Wanderers upon this earth,
Wrapped round with darkness from our birth,
Without a sun or star to guide,
We tread a barren countryside.

And if you stop and take my arm,
Stranger, stranger, where's the harm?
This heart will soon be still as stone
That beat an hour against your own.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

No defrosting

DUAL-TEMP

2-IN-1 REFRIGERATOR

by ADMIRAL

Admiral RADIOS • TELEVISION • REFRIGERATORS • RANGES

AMERICA'S MOST WANTED REFRIGERATOR! . . . because only DUAL-TEMP offers all these time-saving, food-saving features: Built-in HOME FREEZER really quick-freezes at 15° below zero. Stores up to 70 lbs. of frozen food safely for months. Huge, MOIST COLD COMPARTMENT never requires defrosting! Keeps food fresh and moist without covering dishes. STERILAMP kills germs, helps preserve food longer. Excess moisture removed by MOISTROL . . . the self-emptying drip tray. These and many other features make DUAL-TEMP first choice of those who want the finest. Admiral Corporation, Chicago 47, Ill.

SEE! HEAR! ON TELEVISION! ADMIRAL "BROADWAY REVIEW" EVERY FRIDAY NIGHT 8 TO 9 P.M., EST

Contemporary Crewel

PHOTO BY HAROLD POWLER

The romantic art of crewel embroidery revived for today's settings

Crewelwork is, traditionally, wool embroidery on linen. Most of its great effectiveness depends on distinctive designs and on color contrast and harmony. The actual procedure is quick and easy—the long-and-short stitch for shaded flower petals, the outline stitch for stems, and the lazy daisy for the petals of . . . yes, daisies, and for goldenrod and honeysuckle too. The chain stitch of the Orient is best for heavy stems, and the fishbone stitch for rose leaves, while the satin stitch fills any solid surface. You can use any yarn that is thin enough to go through the eye of a darning needle. But if you live near a needlework center, you'll be able to find the crewel or Persian yarn in characteristic soft, beautiful colors.

The designs for the draperies and chair coverings shown here, by an expert modern needlewoman, Marion Cheever Whiteside, can be ordered from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Ask for Pattern No. 2540, enclosing 25¢.

by Henrietta Murdock

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

VENETIANS OF

ACME Galva-bond

turally . . .
UR HAIR IS DIFFERENT

Be glad there's something special about your hair —and give it the special care it deserves . . . every day!

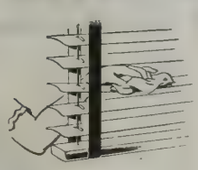
Different hair problems need different care—the specialized kind of care you get with Ogilvie Sisters PREPARATION for DRY HAIR . . . or with Ogilvie Sisters special-purpose SHAMPOOS. If your hair is a problem—the right answer is Ogilvie Sisters specialized HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Ogilvie S
HAIR PREPAR
at drug and depar

STEEL FOR SMARTER STYLE



Because steel is strong, each Galva-bond slat can be "thinner," more delicate in appearance, gracefully curved. The smooth porcelain-like finish reflects light softly to flatter any decorative scheme.

STEEL FOR LONGER LIFE

Venetian blinds of Galva-bond Steel bend without buckling, and hold their shape because steel gives them strength with flexibility. The special galvanizing-bonderizing process is the best-known method of giving the finish lasting beauty and long life.

STEEL FOR EASIER CLEANING

So simple and convenient to dust! Galva-bond Steel slats flex at a touch. And the smooth, nonporous finish keeps cleaner longer . . . resists smoky, grimy stains, even when hung in kitchens.

A beautiful choice of decorative colors

Look for this seal on the footrail of the blinds you buy for steel slats of lasting beauty.

ACME STEEL COMPANY, 2851 ARCHER AVENUE, CHICAGO 8, ILLINOIS

Contemp

PEG Palmer

Youthful Mid-Sizes

An entirely new idea ... Peg Palmer's MID-SIZES, outmoding the old half-size. Suit-dress in Wild Rice rayon crepe with rustling rayon taffeta trim. Brown and aqua, pink or blue with black. Style 704 — Mid-sizes 14½ to 20½. Priced under $18.

For your retailer's name, write Peg Palmer, 1110 Washington Avenue St. Louis 1, Missouri

THE REBEL HOUSEWIFE

(Continued from Page 206)

The hall leads into a library with big brick fireplace, upright piano, easy chairs, tall windows. Everyone gathers here. At the left are the "company" dining room, furnished with antiques, and a glassed-in play porch. Beyond is the large, well-planned kitchen wher the family usually eats. There is a lavatory downstairs—and of course a back porch. Upstairs are four sizable bedrooms and a bath, and above is the storage attic.

Walking down South Clay Street, you'll recognize No. 409, where the Smiths live, without looking at the number. The big old elm and maple trees lace branches all along the way. The homey, turn-of-the-century houses are all quite similar, with gabled eaves, wide verandas and well-kept lawns. But there's something added at the Smiths. Jeffie's tricycle and Denny's bicycle are on the sidewalk. On the terrace are a wagon or two and a pile of rocks, and up on the lawn a tub with a weary mud turtle in it.

You'll hear a commotion somewhere on the place. In the back yard, Jeffie, pint-size entomologist, specialist in anything that crawls or flutters, is chasing a butterfly, catching bugs, worms and spiders, yipping with a vibrance that would down a cloud of katydids.

Or he may be quiet—with the electric repeater tootling over and over his favorite, well-worn phonograph record, Woody Woodpecker, a character with whom he has much common. The mud turtle on the lawn, a chicken in the garage and the pile of rocks on the terrace are Jeffie's too. He upended Dorothy's garden so often grubbing for worms that she gave up, planted perennials and handed over the remains to Jeffie. Now he has added a rock collection to his varied pursuits.

Chubby Leslie Anne, despite Dorothy's vigilance, is a collector in a small way too. She wanders happily and with the unpredictable speed of lightning, picking up odds and ends, popping them into an exploratory little mouth. In the midst of a peaceful evening with everyone watching home movies, Leslie Anne was suddenly, inexplicably sick. Up came her supper and along with it—a dime! Denny, Cub Scout and prosperous paper deliveryman, better at earning money than he is at keeping it, had scattered dimes on the floor. Jeffie, of course, found one too.

Denny, with his shy, winsome smile, has provided his share of excitement. For a while he had an offhand habit of wheeling his bike into traffic. The narrow escapes were too close for anybody's comfort. Forcibly reminded by the family, he now looks before turning.

Only 8-year-old Brenda, quietly self-sufficient, goes her own serene way. Recently she, too, has been bidding for attention. The familiar "Why?" pipes through the conversation until Dorothy puts an end to argument.

If Jeffie, refusing his bath, pouts for a half hour with small, red, lower lip outthrust like a shelf, if he lops off all the tulip blossoms, planting them his way, with the stems in the earth, he makes up for it a dozen times a day, Dorothy says. The screen door will bang shatteringly and in comes Jeffie screeching with blood-curdling penetration, which to anyone less experienced than Dorothy would herald disaster, "Mom-eee, mom-eee, mom-eee!" She knows what to expect. Jeffie throws his arms about her, pulls her face down to his. "I love you, momee," he whispers in her ear, kisses her; then, with a bang, he is gone again.

"What can you do with a child like that?" Dorothy asks helplessly, completely melted by the embrace. "Oh, I do spank Jeffie sometimes, but it doesn't do much good." Then meditatively, "Of course, when Denny was Jeffie's age, he was just as stinking as Jeffie. And you see how Denny has changed? [And he has!] I'm hoping Jeffie will."

And if the irrepressible little Smiths shock the nervous systems of those less prepared than Dorothy's, there are warm bonds that bind the family group together. They are a self-sustaining unit socially. With their home movies, abundant toys, books and phonograph records, and in their pleasant big yard, they are satisfied with their home and they

AMAZING!! NEW!!

"DEW"

SPRAY DEODORANT

IN THE MAGICAL "SELF-ATOMIZING" BOTTLE

STOPS PERSPIRATION AND ODOR TROUBLES! Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure.

DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! "Dew" never touches hands. Not messy. Squeeze flexible bottle, spray on gentle mist.

ONLY DEODORANT CONTAINING "RETSELANE" to stop perspiration trouble, avoid perspiration stains on clothes. Removes odor.

WON'T ROT CLOTHES! Can't irritate normal skin.

SAVES MONEY! Full year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax Less than 2¢ a week

SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE! "DEW" ® SPRAYS ITSELF ON!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Coets

FOR MAKE-UP AND OTHER COSMETIC USES

HANDY COTTON SQUARES LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

PAIN

of headache, neuritis and neuralgia

RELIEVED

incredibly fast

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—

ANACIN ®

Here's why

Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

Stardust
Knit Undies MADE OF Save-la Rayon

Angelic You

famous for smooth fit and long wear,
your pet cuffed
and shorty styles...
with clever reinforcements and full elastics.

9¢

FAME AND FORTUNE CAN BE YOURS...
Pictured is lovely Cindy Lou Bayes, last Stardust Beauty Contest winner. Enter our 1949 contest now. YOU may be the winner of $500 first prize plus a modeling and television career with Harry Conover management, or 27 other awards! Just send a non-returnable photo with height, weight, bust, waist and hip measurements before May 1, 1949. Decisions of famous beauty judges final. Mail entry to P. O. Box 65, Murray Hill Station, New York.
STARDUST, INC. Empire State Bldg., N.Y. 1

LOOK FOR GENUINE Stardust SLIPS, UNDIES, GIRDLES, GARTER BELTS, BRAS & BLOUSES

UNIONS DOCTOR'S FAST RELIEF
never tried anything so wonderful as Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reliever of soft rubber. Relief is immediate. Hides bulge. Preserves shape of shoe, helps reduce irritation. 75c each. Sold everywhere. If not obtainable from your dealer, order by mail. Mention shoe size and whether for Right or Left foot. Satisfaction guaranteed.
DR. SCHOLL'S, Inc., Dept. BR, 213 W. Schiller St., Chicago 10, Ill.

'Musts' for the new baby!
Turknit
BABY BATH BLANKETS
Towels • Wash Cloths • Bibs
At your Infants' Wear Department

How to give
QUICK REST
to tired eyes

MAKE THIS SIMPLE TEST TODAY
Eyes dead tired? Feel like you can't keep them open?—can't go on working?—can't enjoy yourself? Then give your eyes a quick, refreshing rest with Murine.

WHAT MURINE?
Murine is a scientific blend of seven ingredients. Murine gives tired eyes that wide-awake feeling in just a few seconds. Put two drops of safe, gentle Murine in each eye and feel the blessed relief from the discomfort of tired eyes.

MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

enjoy one another. Thurman and Dorothy have a talent for playing with their children.

On hot summer evenings everyone bundles into the ancient Hudson and they are off to the drive-in for hamburgers. They ride till they are cool, then come home. Total cost of the meal, $1.65; it's fun, it's relaxing for papa and it saves work for mamma.

In answer to the question, has she any pet economies, Dorothy and Thurman laugh. "No pet economies." What about a housekeeping allowance? No allowance exactly; she gets the money when she needs it. A savings plan? Well, yes, they try to deposit $50 a month in postal savings but usually dip into it for out-of-the-ordinary expenses. For instance, the home freezer, the clothes dryer and garbage disposal which are on the tentative purchasing list, would save time but not the bank account.

The Smiths finished paying for their house last July. Besides the bargain-price attraction, $4500 in 1942, Dorothy liked its atmosphere, a happy, "lived-in" place, she felt. She wants to keep it that way. Thurman is in full agreement, having missed much of the happiness and security of a normal family life during his adolescence. His mother died when he was twelve. And though he argues for a system of planned spending, he is as reluctant as Dorothy to say "No," particularly if fun for the family or comfort is involved.

Dorothy's homemaking and acquisitive instincts are strong. Like a happy mother bird feathering her nest, she yearns over antique tables, colored glassware for window shelves, ivy-patterned chintz for Brenda's room.

Old mammy says, "I allus say ma prayers 'cause dey is jes' some things I doan know what else to do about."

These temptations are difficult to resist as the opportunity arises. Long-range planning and cool calculation definitely do not appeal.

Except for hospitalization, they are adequately covered with insurance, and payments run into $565 a year. Thurman pays all household bills except food and clothing. Dorothy manages those. This past year's clothing bills look like the national debt, she moans. Her wardrobe needed complete overhauling because of her pregnancy the year before. But she is careful about her own clothing expenditure: $30 is top price for a dress; the new brown velvet from Adler's cost that. Her only extravagance is shoes. She owns twelve pairs.

Allowances for the children? Brenda gets 25 cents for running errands and watching Jeffie. Denny earns $4.50 a week from his paper route. He doesn't save much because he pays for his own weekly movies, buys his own comics and Scout manuals. Denny loves to read, is an A student and learns too easily for his own good. He is forever buying presents for the family. When Denny and Jeffie lose Thurman's tools (which they frequently do), Denny replaces them from his own pocket money, though no one asks him to do it.

What about the budget? Oh, that headache! Thurman stoutly maintains that a family on their income (around $7000) should live on $100 a week. He is stubbornly repetitious on the subject. With no rent bill or mortgage interest, and taxes low, he seems to have a case. Exchange courtesies and good health keep medical expenses at a minimum.

Doctor Smith's organization expenses run close to $120 a year. He enjoys the sociability of the Lions, Masons, Elks and his dental fraternity, Delta Sigma Delta, and these contacts are necessary in his profession. He is also treasurer of the Frankfort Boy Scouts. Recently the Smiths joined the Frankfort Country Club. (Dues for half a year, $18.) They must entertain at home occasionally, but none of this is costly.

Thurman and Dorothy love musical shows and comedies. They drive to Indianapolis for perhaps six road hits a year such as Annie Get Your Gun and Life With Father. Their $36 subscriptions (for the two of them) to the

(Continued on Page 239)

Be glad there's something special about your hair —and give it the special care it deserves . . . every day!

Different hair problems need different care—the specialized kind of care you get with Ogilvie Sisters PREPARATION for DRY HAIR . . . or with Ogilvie Sisters special-purpose SHAMPOOS. If your hair is a problem—the right answer is Ogilvie Sisters specialized HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Ogilvie Sisters
HAIR PREPARATIONS
at drug and department stores

CASTILE SOAP SHAMPOO • CREME SHAMPOO WITH LANOLIN • PERMANENT WAVE SHAMPOO • CREME-SET • HAIRBRUSHES • POMADES • FRAGRANCES

Free! Write for "The Secret of Lovely Hair" to Ogilvie Sisters, 604 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 20, Dept. L-3.

FASHION QUIZ:
"How to look smart-yet be comfortable?"

Miracle-Tread
SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

Fitting Answer to a fashion problem

You can depend upon Miracle-Tread for the ease, the correctness that the occasion demands. Smarter styling . . . finer leathers . . . skillful craftsmanship...all add up to footwear that is truly the fitting answer to a fashion problem.

$6.95 and $7.95
A FEW STYLES HIGHER
Distant Points
Slightly Higher

The Ayers

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer

MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION
Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation Lynchburg, Virginia

Grosvenor, pattern GR 15, wave design in Silver Blue.

GOOD RECORD

...on the floor

Ever since 1878...through many changes of taste and fashion...
Mohawk has made an enviable record covering the floors of America. Their standard has always been the best...the best wools of the world, the best craftsmanship, the best selection of weaves, the best design and color, the best value. Shown here, Mohawk's Silver Blue Grosvenor, a Wilton weave.

Visit the Carpet Fashion Opening...March 1–10

See at your favorite store Mohawk's smartest weaves and colors of the season. This nation-wide show brings to you the newest fashions in floor coverings.

Be Your Own Decorator!

Send 25¢ for Mohawk's professional "Home Color Planner" kit. See this carpet and other Mohawk colors and weaves with different furniture, walls, drapery combinations. Experiment in miniature before making your final purchases. A wonderful help in decorating your home.

Mohawk Carpet Mills, Inc., Amsterdam, N. Y.
Advertising Department

NAME

ADDRESS

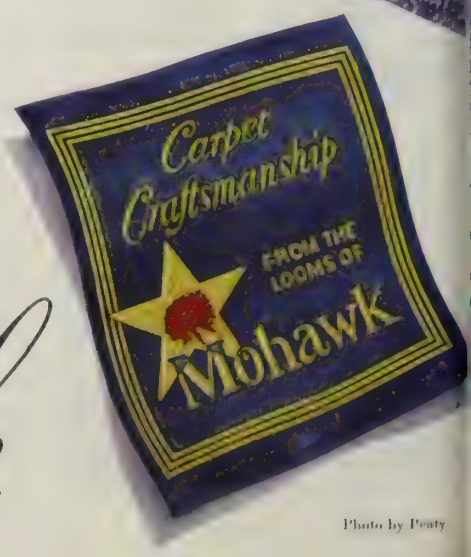

Photo by Penty

Mohawk

(Continued from Page 237)

University concerts are treats that
's such as Fred Waring, Xavier Cu-Hoagy Carmichael. Club dues, parvies and shows come to $298 a year.
y feel, would indeed be barren with-diversion.

he allotment of $200 for newspapers, agazines and the children's records ut of line worries Dorothy. But the agazines a month do double duty at n's office. "And," she reasons, "we ke vacations. We've had only one to-the fourteen years we've been mar-
Last year, Thurman took a needed nt to Arkansas on a hunting trip, pensive safari, for he drove the car.
y costs last year, $281.77, were per-it high, boosted by a few whopping s to her mother in California; and as the item of $321 for cleaning help y sitting, but that meant the differ-ween drudgery and relaxation. Food cluding milk and meat), $1825, were t whose weren't? Clothing bills and were terrific, $1132 in one year: $200

rothy's new e, $161 just ny, he out-
verything.
thy ponders,
do other manage all hings withorrying?"
f her own
seem to do it.
an plumps
s spending e'd like to try 10 per cent
ncome. And
ey are again,
same old ren a broken
raph record.
Smiths are iously wor-out the way are going, but e dogged by easy feeling ey should do
r job of man-nd nevertheless ll have fun.
ry is no
er in the old though. Only since they estab-themselves in Frankfort have they le to relax a bit and banish the grem-t previously seemed to haunt them.
an, whose father had a modest hardusiness in Salem, has worked hard f his life. He made his own way
h dental school, hashed in restaurants en greased cadavers for medical lab
e expenses and still was an A student.
when he failed to show up at dental-registration in the fall, because of lack ls, the dean got him scholarship money.

summer's night when Thurman, a sophwas vacationing at home, he wandered he Coke bar where the school crowd
ed. There he saw Dorothy, 14 years old, nated conversation. Thurman was shy d never had a girl. But he wanted this sked a friend to introduce him, dated mediately. There were movie foursomes, ing rides with the crowd in crazy jalop-
When Thurman returned to Bloomingtters whisked back and forth with in-ng frequency. Other beaus came and for Dorothy, but this romance stuck.
was a quick student, finished high school and entered business college in Indian-at 17, too young, her mother considto be on her own in the city, so she went, nd made a home for her and Dorothy's er sister, Jennie Mae.

urman was now in the University Den-hool in Indianapolis, having completed ntal work in Bloomington. He main-d that a man should be established before ying, but Dorothy felt differently. She proved of long engagements, had ed other protracted romances fade and

Southern Belle—'49 Style

LOUISE HASTINGS is mistress of a 1563-acre plantation in the "Gone With the Wind" country near Atlanta. There's rarely a week without guests in the chintz-hung guest room or a party for at least 40 celebrities and "kinfolk." But along with that, she's a clubwoman and lecturer. She makes all her own clothes, gardens, cooks "like an angel," yet is never too busy for sociable time out with her children and husband, Donald, president of the Hastings Seed Company. Read

Welcome to Floweracres

BY THELMA STRABEL

How America Lives

The April Journal

die. Six years of dental education, followed by time to build a practice, was a strain few engagements could survive, she believed.

At the end of his junior year she persuaded Thurman to toss economic misgivings to the wind, and on a sunny Monday morning, late in April, equipped with a $6 gold wedding ring, which she still wears, they eloped to Franklin, near Indianapolis, and were married in the Presbyterian parsonage.

THURMAN fidgeted and stewed through the ceremony and a long-winded sermon. The minister, recognizing an elopement, outdid himself with fatherly advice. The bride, without a bouquet, in an aging brown suit with three-quarter-length jacket, wore a cloche which came far down over her ears and helped to conceal her amusement.

The sermon nearly upset the wedding trip, a brief one, although important to the bridegroom—a return trip on the interurban train so he might get back to the dental clinic. With luck, they made the trolley, jolted back to Indianapolis, where they kissed goodby and parted until the following Saturday.

In the next five years Dorothy understood why her family had urged against marriage "on less than a shoestring." Those anxious first years tested the promises she had made so lightheartedly, "For better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness . . ."

The strain of hard work took its toll in Thurman's health. Immediately after graduation, there was a badly complicated tonsillectomy. This prevented him from making a first choice of practices that were open. He had to take a small one in the little town of Eaton, Indiana, starting on a $200 loan with second-hand equipment. There wasn't so much as a movie or library in Eaton, but they bought an $80 jalopy. Returning from a ride one night, they found Thurman's office burned to ashes. At that dark moment, Thurman heard of the opening in Frankfort. Suddenly Dorothy was taken with mastoiditis and was ill for weeks (though an operation was averted). Soon after that, Thurman was back in the hospital for an appendectomy. By the time he returned, Dorothy found she was pregnant.

Finally in 1938, the Smiths, with four-month-old Denny, arrived in Frankfort. They were still in debt. The first years were an uphill struggle. But eventually, with a growing practice, Thurman began to see light.

Scarcely on his feet from misfortune, he was confronted by the wartime order requiring doctors and dentists to volunteer professional service or face the draft. Thurman volunteered. Time and again he received notices to report, only to have them canceled.

A civilian dentist's life was no bed of roses, either. There were those, as there always would be, who were acrimonious because he was not in service. He is still unhappy about that. Then it was necessary to keep brutal hours, and take no holidays or vacations.

But gradually, since the war, it has been possible to take it easier, to be home on Thursday afternoons, to play with the children, the movie camera and the home movie projector, to picnic occasionally and to have the things which money can buy.

Still, something is lacking. At times they prefer to forget. But they know that this missing element is "security." How can one live fully, drink deeply of these precious years, yet leave the draught in the cup for the future? The Smiths want the answer. THE END

BEAUTIFUL BERKSHIRE ORGANDIES . . . so sheer, so crisp . . . and with a permanent finish that will keep them new and lovely thru years of washing without starching. Pastels, deep-tones, whites and off-whites to enhance the beauty of every room in your home. Every Berkshire curtain is vat dyed . . . guaranteed color fast.

Berkshire FINE CURTAINS

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET:
"FASHIONS IN WINDOWS" for the cleverest of new ideas in curtains. Just send us your name and address on a penny postcard. Dep't LHJ-3 Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, Inc., 40 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Berkshire® is also the world's largest producer of fine combed cotton fabrics for men's, women's and children's wear.

The William Carter Co., Needham Heights 94, Mass.

WE ALWAYS HAVE EACH OTHER

(Continued from Page 43)

"You'd have to go, you know you would," I said. "You know you think he's wonderful."

"I wouldn't do it unless he took you too."

"Listen, Sophie," I said, "I think loyalty is the most important trait anybody can have, but remember what you're always telling me. Let him take you home, and then if he asks you for another date, you can ask him to get someone for me."

"Well—all right," Sophie said. "How do you think I ought to act?"

"Oh, not exactly indifferent, but not too eager. You know."

"Betty Harris is the eagerest thing in skirts and the boys eat it with soupspoons," Sophie said bitterly.

"I know. But Betty Harris looks like Lana Turner and also has a tennis court," I reminded her.

"Oh, well," Sophie said, "if all else fails, we always have each other."

Even though she was joking, it warmed me. I would have made any sacrifice for Sophie and I liked to think she would have for me. She had plenty of battles with her mother about me, which took courage because her father didn't dare to say "white" if her mother said "black." Mrs. Jessup had the money in that family and it made her sort of bossy. Anyway, I got the idea that she didn't want Sophie to spend all her time with me when she could go around with other girls. Girls with brothers or male cousins. And Sophie never said it, but I was sure her mother had plenty to say about making friends with good-looking girls and not sticking exclusively to one who would never get a boy to take her out. I didn't much mind what her mother had said because it showed how loyal Sophie was to me.

ANYWAY, there was the party. My father took us and Sophie's father called for us. There were ten girls and eleven boys. In the beginning most of the boys stood in a group near the radio and talked about cars. I didn't mind because Sophie and I talked to the girls, and it was fun. Besides, I didn't have to worry about whether anybody was going to dance with me for a while. After about half an hour, Dick Lovell came over and asked Marion Sell to dance. She was even fatter than Sophie, but she was a wonderful dancer, and it started things off with the others. I had that feeling like a leaky faucet in my stomach, but I smiled a lot. Now and then one of the boys asked me to dance, but I didn't enjoy it as much as I should have because I kept wondering if they were doing it to be polite. Sophie had quite a few dances. She looked all flushed and pretty, and in between times when we were left to talk to each other, she acted funny, as if she weren't really listening to me, and she laughed a good deal. When her father called for us at twelve-thirty, she made faces and said she didn't want to go, but nobody else offered to take us home so we had to leave with Mr. Jessup.

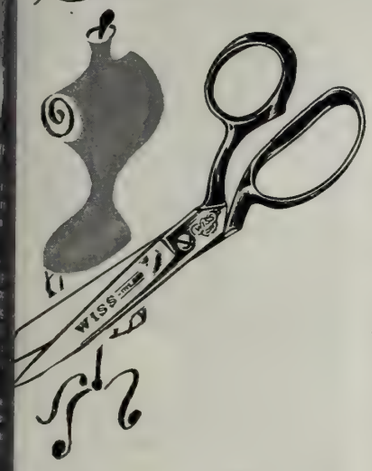
We got together the next morning and talked about the party. Sophie said the refreshments were awfully poor, and she'd be ashamed to serve so little. But the crowd was nice, she said. Really a cute bunch. I said I thought they were swell and didn't the girls look pretty. I said everybody always looked swell in summer clothes.

"Did you ever see anything like Marion's dress?" Sophie giggled. "I mean I'm overweight and I know it, but at least I wear a girdle and I stick to simple clothes."

"You looked stunning," I said. "That navy linen gives you a good figure."

"No, but really," Sophie pursued, "bright green with ruffles! Will you please tell me what a nice boy like Dick Lovell sees in her?"

"Sophie," I said, "be honest. Would you go out with Dick?"



"Not necessarily, but that doesn't mean he isn't ——"

"He's a creep," I said flatly. "How can you compare him to Gene Hay?"

Experienced Seamstresses...

Always Insist on

WISS

DRESSMAKER SHEARS

For a professional performance, these sharp, long-lasting shears are the favorite of experienced seamstresses. Wiss Dressmaker Shears have handles cleverly bent to keep your cutting-hand clear of the cloth and the blades parallel to the pattern. Always insist on Wiss . . . the world's largest manufacturers of fine scissors and shears, famous for quality for more than a century.

Illustrated No. 27 — 7 inch

Prices from $2.70

Here's everything you need for sewing!

The four necessary scissors . . . conveniently assembled in a beautiful leatherette case. Dressmaker Shears with bent handles like your tailor uses . . . Pinking Shears to give all seams ravel-free edges . . . Embroidery Scissors to rip and snip . . . Sewing Scissors for all your lighter cutting. Set GS-6—$28.95.

Prices slightly higher Denver and West.

WISS Quality for more than a Century

WISS & SONS CO., Newark 7, N. J.

"Gene danced with me three times," Sophie said, smiling.

"I think he would have asked to take you home, but Lola had fixed it for him to be with Frances."

"He seemed to like her, what's more."

"Frances! Why, she hasn't got any more figure than I have!" I yelled.

"She's little," Sophie said, "but she's rounded. You notice sometime."

"I wouldn't be surprised," I said. "Soph, you don't know how I hate my looks. I'm the only girl we know who has no figure at all. I'm a mess!"

"You're just developing late," Sophie said generously, "and look at how lucky you are. You'll always be able to eat anything you like. I wish I didn't put on ten pounds every time I have a piece of cake."

"Tell the truth, Sophie," I said. "Would you rather look like me or you?"

Sophie didn't answer that. But she looked at me sharply, and she said, "Listen, Babe, you're a lot better-looking than you used to be. You're going to be ——"

"What?" I interrupted. "An old maid?"

"Interesting-looking."

"Whatever that is!" I felt terribly let down.

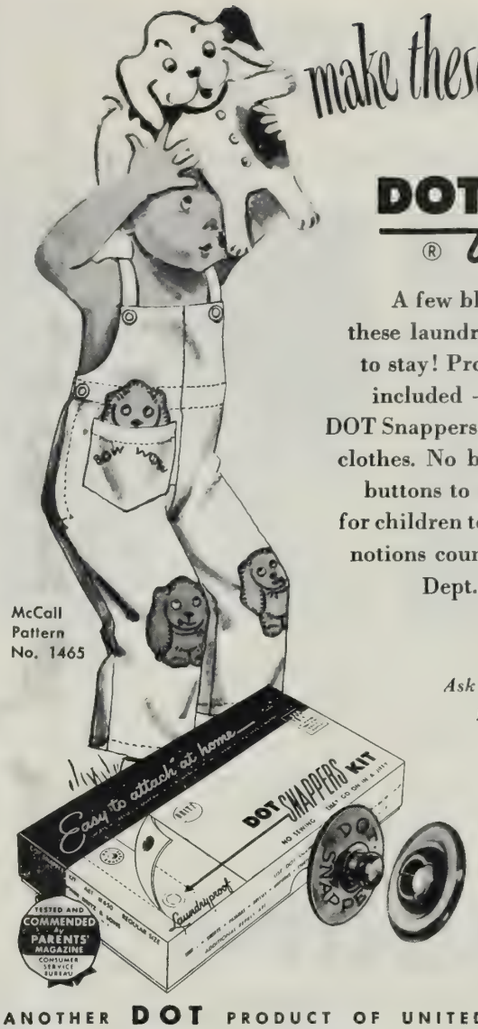
"And you have a lot of personality."



It was nice of Sophie, but it didn't make me feel any better. That night I looked in the mirror for a long time, but the more I stared, the worse I seemed to be. I was so flat, so lacking in softness. My very skin was flat and dull, and my eyes were less interesting than any dog's. And nobody, not even Sophie really, understood what a curse it was to be that thin. My mother and father were no help—they just bawled me out for not eating enough, and said I had plenty of time before I began worrying about boys. Mother said that Sophie was the kind who would appeal to one particular kind of boy and she'd go with him for ages and then marry him because there wasn't going to be anyone else. She said my day would probably come after all the dollfaces were faded, but that only made me feel worse. It separated me from the other girls, and it pulled Sophie and me apart. I wanted, with a truly terrible anxiety, for both of us to be popular now. At once.

All during that summer, we kept saying we'd give anything if only we could have dates for our birthday. We had the same birth date—September first—so it made it even more special. We used to spend a lot of our evenings imagining where we would go, what we would wear, the flowers we would receive. Sophie pictured herself in black with orchids, but I knew I'd never be the black-and-orchids type. I put myself in silver with deep red camellias. We had dazzling visions of night clubs where people gaped and celebrities begged to be introduced to us. We got so extravagant, we laughed at ourselves. Sophie's escort was always Gene Hay, but mine was no one I knew. He was an imaginary creature whom Gene would bring for me—a kind of super blind date who would fall instantly in love with me. We named him Gilbert Van Dyke, and he became pretty real to us. So real that once when Sophie said something about Gilbert in front of mother, I blushed and Sophie giggled. Mother wanted to know who Gilbert was, but I said he was just someone, and mother looked at me in that funny way she had and said, "Isn't everybody?" Then Sophie and I laughed some more, and that ended it.

Caruso also acquired fame as an enormous eater. Yet here he yielded first place to the oversize contralto, Ernestine Schumann-Heink. Seeing her in a restaurant with a huge steak in front of her, Caruso exclaimed, "Steena, you're not going to eat that steak alone, are you?"

"Certainly not," replied Schumann-Heink. "With potatoes."

—Reprinted from A TREASURY OF LAUGHTER, edited by Louis Untermeyer. Copyright, 1946, by Simon and Schuster, Inc.

McCall Pattern No. 1465 make these overalls faster

with

DOT SNAPPERS®

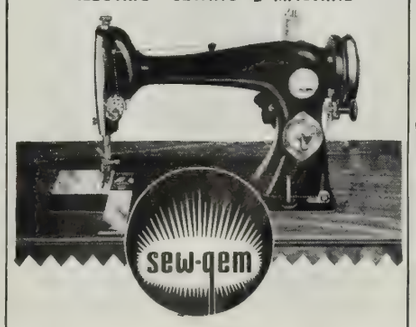
A few blows of the hammer and these laundryproof fasteners are on to stay! Professional attaching tool included — and they're the same DOT Snappers used on fine ready-made clothes. No buttonholes to make, no buttons to pop off. Quick and easy for children to fasten. At your favorite notions counter. John Dritz & Sons, Dept. LHJ3, 1115 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

Ask to see Penny Dot Snappers for the decorative touch.

DOT SNAPPERS KIT

$1.00 a box

Refills 25c



free Send stamped addressed envelope for free booklet "Dritz Tips for Home Sewers"

ANOTHER DOT PRODUCT OF UNITED-CARR FASTENER CORP.

Extra Sewing Convenience

WITH sew-gem

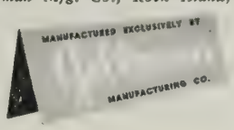
ELECTRIC SEWING MACHINE



THE RIGHT-HAND BOBBIN, an exclusive feature in the NEW Sew-Gem, makes sewing a pleasure! Conveniently located for easy removal with the right hand. Sew-Gem also offers you many other proven features of sewing machine tradition . . . more working area, lifetime silent chain drive, floating presser foot, tension control, non-glare light, and full attachments. It's "sewing made simple" when you sew with Sew-Gem.

Choose from a variety of models and cabinet styles. Secretary or writing desk . . . occasional table . . . portable.

See Sew-Gem Sewing Machines at your dealer, or write direct to Dept. LJ, Gellman Mfg. Co., Rock Island, Ill.

Peter Pan—

THE DARLING OF THE FASHION WORLD

Home sewers just love his gay, irresistible cotton designs at economical prices. PETER PAN the Constant Quality Cotton Fabric for over 50 years is: 100% washable • fast color • shrink-resistant • always fresh and cool • many Saylerized and Sayl-A-Shrunk. Dozens of fashion right weaves and designs, for all ages, all occasions.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Peter Pan

GUARANTEED FAST COLOR

For name of store in your city write HENRY GLASS & COMPANY 1071 Sixth Ave., New York 18, N. Y.

COLDS

In a minute—relief from miseries begins

Rub MINIT-RUB on chest and back.

1. In a minute, Minit-Rub begins to stimulate circulation, begins to bring a sensation of warmth. That quickly helps relieve surface aches and pains.

2. In a minute, Minit-Rub's welcome pain-relieving action begins to soothe that raspy local irritation.

3. In a minute, Minit-Rub's active menthol vapors begin to ease that nasal stuffiness feeling.

MINIT-RUB also helps soothe pains resulting from neuralgia, sciatica, rheumatism and lumbago. Try it!

MINIT-RUB is wonderful for both children and adults. Greaseless! Stainless! Disappears like vanishing cream! Won't harm linens.

Get a tube of Minit-Rub today!

GREASELESS
STAINLESS

MINIT-RUB

Available in small and large tubes

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

1000 and 1 different uses for RED CROSS* COTTON BALLS!

In the Nursery!

For First Aid!

For Cosmetics!

IMPORTANT

Red Cross* Cotton Balls are made of Johnson & Johnson Red Cross* Cotton ...the softest, whitest, most absorbent surgical cotton obtainable. It's the cotton mothers trust...the cotton found in 7 out of 10 homes where absorbent cotton is used!

Sterile! Absorbent! Uniform in Size!

65 individual applications for 29¢!

On sale at drug counters everywhere!

Johnson & Johnson

... the most trusted name in surgical dressings

*Trade marked but not connected in any way with the American National Red Cross

Somewhere about the middle of August my parents suggested a birthday party—a joint one. They said we could invite anyone we wanted. It sounded fine and we made lists. But then we found out that the most interesting and desirable people on our lists were going to be away for the Labor Day week end. I think if Gene Hay had stayed home, we would have had the party anyway, but we saw him in the village one day and he told us he was going fishing with his father and his uncle. That finished our party.

"Well," Sophie said finally, on August thirty-first, "you come over to the house for dinner. Mother's going to have a cake for me and we'll give each other our presents anyway."

"I'm going to dress up," I said. "I think I'll wear my new sand-colored dress if it isn't too hot. And high heels."

"All right," Sophie said. "I'll wear the blue, just as if we had dates."

"Listen," I said in my cynical voice, "you never know." We knew, though.

I got three cards on my birthday. One from Sophie. One from my Cousin Marjorie, who lived in California, and one from Amy Page, in school, who kept a list of everybody's birthday. My mother and father gave me a dressing table which was wonderful, and mother gave me an extra, the way she always does—a bottle of perfume to go on the table. They asked me a couple of times if I didn't want to go out with them that night—to dance or see a show in New York or anything I liked—but I said no thanks, I would rather have dinner at Sophie's. They were nice about it and daddy said well, if I changed my mind, a woman of sixteen had that privilege, and I should tell him.

I DRESSED just as carefully that evening as if Gilbert Van Dyke himself had suddenly materialized in our front hall. I did my hair a new way—pulled back and held by a barrette, with a little fluffy bang on my forehead. It took a lot of courage to cut the bang, but I felt reckless and who-cares. It didn't look bad, though. It made funny slanting hollows in my cheeks, and my eyes looked nicer. I put some of the birthday perfume behind my ears, and looked a long time at the way my feet and legs looked in the high-heeled opera pumps.

"Sweet sixteen and never been kissed," I said to the mirror. I don't know why a corny saying like that should have made me want to cry. I went downstairs sort of quietly, hoping my parents wouldn't notice me and make a fuss.

Daddy was in the living room and he looked up. "Let's see," he said.

I came in slowly.

"Your hair's different. It's pretty cute."

"Well, thanks." It helped.

"What's more, you're getting kind of cute yourself. That the new dress?"

"Oh, daddy," I said impatiently, "you don't have to ——"

"I know I don't, Baby. It happens to be true. I'm glad you're not one of those curvy, dimpled creatures with big blue eyes."

"Well, I'm not glad!" I said. "I'd give anything in the whole world to look like that!"

Daddy got up and swatted me on the backside. "Have a good dinner, Baby, and give my congratulations to Sophie. What are you giving her?"

"A compact."

"Swell," he said. "Your mother's across the street for a minute. Shall I tell her good-by for you?"

"Yes, please." I wanted to go. I felt like saying something mean and bitter for no reason at all, and it would have been rotten of me.

I took the long way to Sophie's, walking slowly and consciously in the high heels. I kept looking down and thinking how different my feet looked. The new dress was longish, too, and I felt different and not like myself at all.

Sophie met me at the door and I could tell she was excited about something. We kissed for Happy Birthday, and I gave her the package.

"Come up to my room first, Babe," she said. "I want to give you yours."

it's good taste... to show your panty . . . when it's Vanta's fancy panty-and-dress. Beautifully styled and made with the same high regard for quality which has distinguished Vanta's underwear for infants and children for over 35 years.

Pink, blue, maize, white, in sizes 6, 12, 18 mos.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Vanta

1333 Broadway, New York 18

Made by the makers of McKEM cotton knits

J. R. Moodie Company, Ltd., Hamilton, Ontario are licensees for Canada

VANTA, Dept. L-3, 1333 Broadway, N.Y.
Gentlemen:

☐ Please send me your FREE 80-page, baby-care "Book for Mothers."

☐ Send me name of nearest store carrying Vanta underwear and other products.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____ STATE _____

it's good going... for rough riders McKem's "stand-up-and-take-it" cotton knits and gabardines are a delight to busy mothers. Throw them in the washer...send them to the laundry ...they're vat-dyed and shrink-resistant with stay-put neckbands. For infants-to-teens.

TESTED AND COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

McKem

1350 Broadway, New York 18

Makers of VANTA garments for infants & children

McKEM, Dept. L-3, 1350 Broadway, N.Y. 18
Gentlemen:

☐ Please send me your FREE children's coloring booklet, combined with style information for me.

☐ Send me name of nearest store carrying McKem.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE ____ STATE _____

THEY dry in record time, indoors or out. And consider the many other advantages.

Easier to wash — their open weave permits speedier washing with pure Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Faster drying speeds diaper laundering, indoors or out.

Highly absorbent — their surgical weave absorbs more thoroughly.

Have no hems to chafe or irritate baby's tender skin.

Curity Foldline, a patented feature, woven into the fabric, for easy, convenient size adjustment as baby grows.

Endorsed by medical authorities and leading hospitals.

NURSERY PADS • BIBS • MASKS • COTTON

PAT. NO. 2,146,137

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. JN-3

Enclosed is 25c for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

We ran upstairs and she closed her door.

"What goes on?" I asked. "Don't you want to see your present?"

"Of course I do, dopey. But listen—who do you think is coming to dinner?"

"Gene Hay!"

"Oh, don't be a goop! But this is really fantastic!"

"Well, who?"

"A fellow." Sophie always said she thought "fellow" sounded better than "boy."

"Really!" I squealed. "Who?"

"The crazy thing is his name, Babe. You'll absolutely die!"

"I'm dying already. Tell me!"

"Gilbert."

"Oh, no!" I gasped. "Sophie, this is stark, staring crazy! I can't stand it! Don't tell me his last name is Van Dyke or I'll pass out."

"No," Sophie said, "it's Parkley. But the Gilbert part—isn't that something?"

"Who is he, Soph? Why is he coming?"

"Well, his mother is a friend of my mother's. She lives in Indianapolis and Gilbert's coming east to start at Princeton. He came early to have some time in New York, so he called up mother from the city to say hello for his mother, and she promptly asked him to hop on a train and have dinner with us. Daddy's at the station now to call for him."

Sophie's mother called at that moment that we should come downstairs.

"We have to hurry and be down when he comes," Sophie said. "Here's your present. If you don't like it, they'll change it."

It was a scarf. Brown. I never wore brown because it made me sallower, but I said it was swell and she said the compact was swell. Sophie combed her hair some more and then we went downstairs.

I would much rather that posterity should inquire why no statues were erected to me, than why they were. —CATO.

Mrs. Jessup said Happy Birthday to me, and added that she hoped I liked the scarf because she had helped Sophie choose it. I said it was lovely, thank you. She looked at me rather carefully.

"You look quite well, Janet," she said, "and your dress is becoming."

"Thanks a lot," I said. It was nice of her to flatter me on my birthday, but it wasn't like her at all. Besides, she had such an odd way of saying it as if I had done something clever but not very polite.

Just at that point we heard the car drive up, and the voices outside. Mr. Jessup opened the front door and then we saw Gilbert.

I never expected he was going to be so special. Tall—at least six feet—and very brown, with blue eyes and a sort of smooth look. He was about eighteen or nineteen, but he wore marvelous clothes. A gray flannel suit, a white button-down shirt and a maroon knit tie. The boys we knew at school never dressed quite like that. I felt grubby next to all his magnificence.

"Helen, dear, this is Katherine Parkley's son Gilbert," Mr. Jessup said to his wife.

"How do you do?" Gilbert said. "My mother's told me about you and what good friends you both are."

"Gilbert, this is a real pleasure!" Mrs. Jessup said. I had never seen her smile so broadly. "Come right in and make yourself at home. This is my daughter Sophie."

"How do you?" Sophie said. There was a tiny silence. "This is my friend Babe Betts."

"Hello," he said, and this time he looked at me.

I said hello, and then Mrs. Jessup said dinner was on the table and wasn't anybody hungry.

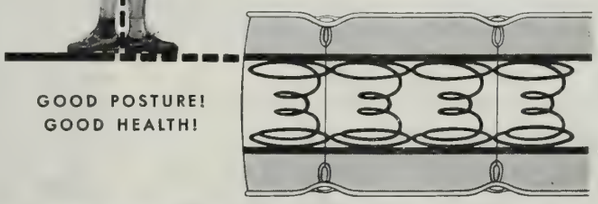
I didn't say very much during the fruit cup. Mostly Mrs. Jessup asked Gilbert about his mother and about Indianapolis, and then about Princeton. She kept dragging Sophie into the conversation, saying she'd be going to college next year and how she was growing

(Continued on Page 245)

A Major Advance in Posture Building

THE NEW

KANTWET Crib Mattress



with the Built-In

DORSAL PAD

FIRMER, STRAIGHTER SUPPORT—
Scientifically tested! Professionally approved!

The Dorsal Pad is a posture feature that distinguishes KANTWET from all other crib mattresses! It is a built-in reinforcement that prevents sagging, lumping and hollows—even after long use! It keeps the entire mattress firm and level all the way through . . . forms the foundation for comfortable, health-building sleep . . . provides the correct support for a straight, sturdy back!

Only KANTWET is "Posturized" 4 Ways!

1. Heavier than usual innerspring unit is used for greater resilience, for greater firmness . . . for better posture!

2. The Dorsal Pad covers the innerspring unit, making a firm, flat, straight-line foundation across the entire mattress . . . for better posture!

3. Extra layers of fluffy cotton felt are placed where baby's weight rests most heavily, to provide balanced, firm, relaxing comfort . . . for better posture!

4. Double-sealed button tufting anchors filling where it belongs, prevents shifting, keeps KANTWET permanently level . . . for better posture!

$15.95

Slightly higher Denver West

Gay, new covers—wetproof, washable, flame-retarding!

KANTWET—FIRST in wetproof crib mattresses—PROVEN in over 1,000,000 homes!

Sometimes women have to carry the banners

PERHAPS you'll see the story of Joan of Arc, as portrayed on the screen by Miss Ingrid Bergman.

It's a thrilling episode in the world's history, proving that sometimes a woman must take the lead in the fight she believes in.

Modern women, too, must often pick up the banners . . . in their struggle for the security and well-being of their family.

Though earning the necessities of life is primarily a man's job, sometimes it takes a woman to insure her family's future by setting them on the only sure road to security . . . through adequate, regular savings.

For the modern woman, there is one foolproof method of winning her fight for savings. It's United States Savings Bonds—an investment with the soundest backing in the world . . . an investment that pays back four dollars for every three.

And there are two foolproof savings plans, too. One is the Payroll Savings Plan, for those on a company payroll. The other is the Bond-A-Month Plan, for those not on a payroll, whereby bonds are purchased through the checking account.

If your home is your career, urge your husband, and all other working members of your family, to start now—today—on the bond-saving plan for which they are eligible.

If you are working, sign up yourself at your firm or bank, and influence the other working members of your family to do the same.

Soon the bonds will start piling up.

Soon you'll know that confidence in the future which only comes through saving.

It's a wonderful feeling for anyone. And for a woman—how doubly wonderful!

AUTOMATIC SAVING IS SURE SAVING U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Contributed by this magazine in co-operation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

ntinued from Page 243)
nd all that. Finally one of those silences came, and Gilbert turned d I didn't get your name awfully id. "It sounded like Babette. at?"

I said, feeling foolish, "it's Babe ds silly, doesn't it?"

'Babe' for?"

My parents always call me that everyone else does, only they Babe. I guess I'm so used to it think how it sounds."

n't look the baby type," Gilbert with those cheekbones. What's me?"

I said. I wanted to sink into a e none of the others were saying y were just listening.

you Janet if I may," Gilbert said. ce, so sort of sure of himself in an natural way. If I could someday with a boy like that —— going to be a doctor, Gilbert?" asked.

not that intelligent!" He grinned.

ntioned bones, and it seemed so ll, I like to fool around with art e to be an illustrator if I can talk ut of four years of college. Maybe e switch to art school after two way, I guess I notice bone struc- ple. It's what reall- makes a th looking at, if he bones are has lovely high cheekbones and hin line."

I was going to float through the t so pleased. It was the first real I had ever had from a boy. I ically, and tried to catch Sophie's was busy cutting her roast beef. ss!" Mrs. Jessup laughed. "If that desirable, Janet, you cer- raving beauty. I'm always telling nother ought to feed her better, Gilbert, because she's like a little picked chicken in her bathing suit."

"I eat like a horse," I said. I felt suddenly uncomfortable; I didn't like being talked about. Mrs. Jessup had trampled on my compliment with both feet, and it wasn't mere tactlessness.

"Of course you do, dear," she said. "I'm only joking. I almost wish Sophie didn't like ice cream and cake so well. But the boys do seem to go for curves these days!"

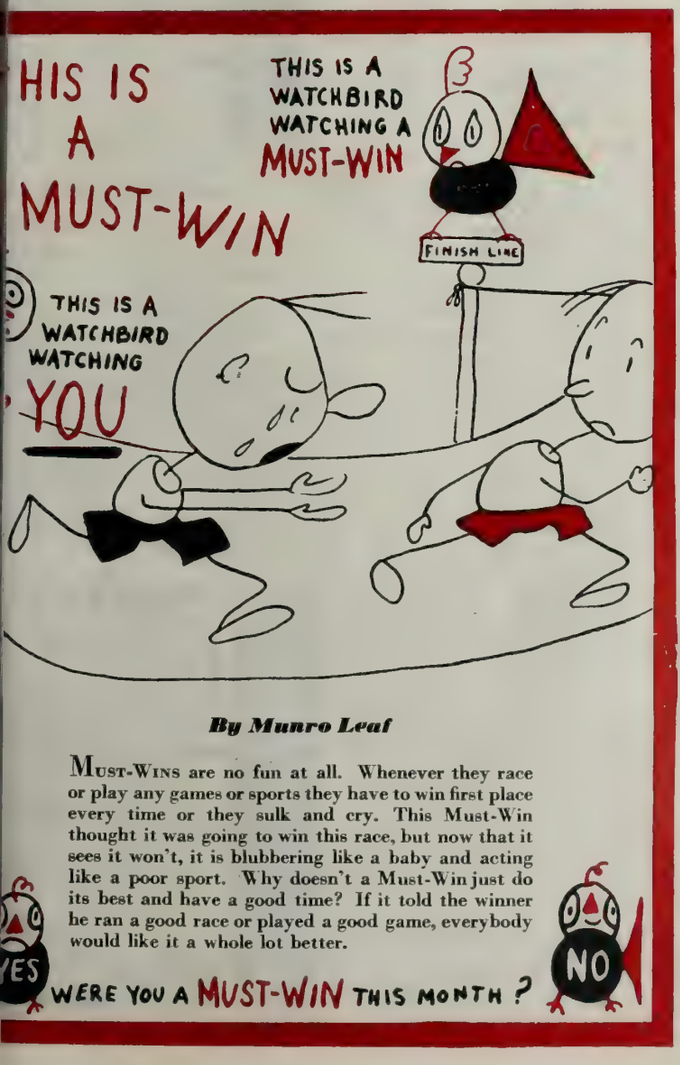
I looked at Sophie again, expecting her to say, "Oh, mother, please," the way she usually did, but she didn't say anything.

Dinner went on, through the salad, through the handsome birthday cake, and Mrs. Jessup did most of the talking. Mr. Jessup never said very much, and Sophie was unusually quiet. Gilbert talked to me once or twice, but he always had to stop to answer some question. Finally Mrs. Jessup got up and asked Sophie to help her bring the coffee into the living room because the maid always fussed if they didn't have it at the table. Gilbert walked in with me and we sat down on the sofa while Mr. Jessup tried to get something on the radio.

"How old are you, Janet?"

"Sixteen tonight."

"Is that all?"



"Why, do I look older?" I was terribly flattered.

"It's not that you look older," Gilbert said, "it's just that you have a . . . well, a sophisticated face. That's a stupid word to describe it, but I can't think of any other. I wish I could do a sketch of you, no fooling."

I was so overcome that I was on the verge of telling him how everyone else thought I was homely, but just then Mrs. Jessup and Sophie came in with the coffee.

"Janet, dear, I have a message for you," Mrs. Jessup said. "Want to come outside a moment? Sophie, will you pour the coffee, please?"

"Excuse me, please," I said to Gilbert, and I followed Mrs. Jessup way out to the back hall.

By Munro Leaf

MUST-WINS are no fun at all. Whenever they race or play any games or sports they have to win first place every time or they sulk and cry. This Must-Win thought it was going to win this race, but now that it sees it won't, it is blubbering like a baby and acting like a poor sport. Why doesn't a Must-Win just do its best and have a good time? If it told the winner he ran a good race or played a good game, everybody would like it a whole lot better.

Nothing, nothing is too good for him...

"He's the most wonderful baby in the whole world. I will give him every bit of love and care he needs to help him grow happy and secure in spirit, strong and vigorous in body.

"Right now I particularly want to give him the special help he needs to build straight, strong limbs, a fine, full chest, a well-shaped head, a strong back and a fine, sound set of teeth."

First choice the world over

Time-proven cod liver oil is first choice the world over as a source of the Vitamin D babies need. To help your baby build sound bones and teeth, start him now on Squibb Cod Liver Oil. It is an effective, wholly natural source of the Vitamin D your baby must have to build a straight back, full chest, and sound, straight legs. Squibb Cod Liver Oil also provides your baby with important growth-promoting Vitamin A. Give your baby dependable Squibb Cod Liver Oil regularly every day. Remember, it is whole, natural oil, preferred by many physicians.

Older children, grown-ups prefer Squibb pleasant Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil! Such a delightful way for youngsters who are "shooting up" to get the extra Vitamins A and D they need for fast-growing limbs. Also a valuable aid for grown-ups who feel the need of extra Vitamins A and D to help see them through the winter. Ask today for Squibb Plain or pleasant Mint-Flavored Cod Liver Oil!

SQUIBB cod liver oil preferred by more mothers than any other cod liver oil

Everybody's Praising Snow Crop fresh-frozen 'NO-SQUEEZE' juice

EVERYWHERE folks like you are saying . . . "I'll never squeeze again—SNOW CROP's so good—so easy." Yes, SNOW CROP's grove-fresh, tree-ripened goodness is causing millions of smart, budget-wise homemakers to acclaim it, "The finest juice I ever tasted!" Try SNOW CROP fresh frozen orange juice concentrate and let your taste decide.

America's New Frozen Foods Favorite

SNOW CROP'S amazing acceptance by America's homemakers is based on absolute top quality at budget-cutting prices, plus a wide variety of fruits and vegetables frozen at the peak of garden freshness. You'll find it pays to insist on SNOW CROP.

Insist on Snow Crop for controlled quality ...lower prices

A SUBSIDIARY OF CLINTON INDUSTRIES, INC.

"Dear, I'm going to talk to you, friend to friend," she said. I couldn't imagine why she kept calling me "dear." Usually she ignored me.

"Uh-huh," I said uncomfortably.

"Janet, I think I'm right in assuming you are very fond of Sophie."

"Well, of course," I said. "She's my best friend!"

"I'm glad to hear you say that, dear. Best friends do a lot for each other." She paused. "I'm going to ask you to do something for Sophie."

"Naturally," I said, feeling a lot better. "Just tell me what to do. Is it a surprise?"

"Well," she said, "you know you're getting to be a rather striking little girl."

I just looked at her. What could I possibly do for Sophie that she thought needed such a crazy build-up?

"No, really," she insisted, as if I had argued about it, "really, you've always been scrawny and rather plain, but I've noticed lately that you're filling out a bit. I honestly think that someday you're going to be quite attractive. Interesting-looking."

"I hope so," I said. I was utterly mystified.

"The thing is, Sophie has had such a dismal summer."

"We both have," I said. "Neither of us has had one single date."

"Anyway, I would like her birthday to be a really happy one. Sophie's a year older than you, and younger sisters sometimes have to give in to older sisters!" If only she wouldn't get sticky and coy. "Maybe Gilbert will ask her to go out somewhere and show him around. Frankly, dear, don't you think we should leave them alone?"

I must have been stupid because I couldn't seem to understand what she was driving at. I just stood there, and waited.

"Don't you see what I mean, Janet?" Her voice was suddenly sharper. "I think that with two attractive girls around, Gilbert would have a little difficulty giving his full attention to either one. Let's see to it that there isn't any . . . competition." She put her arm on my shoulder.

I SAW. It took me a long time, but finally I saw. "You mean that you'd like me to go home?" I asked.

"It sounds horrid, Janet dear, but you understand, don't you?"

"Sure," I said.

"You don't mind?"

"No."

"Well, you really are a good friend. Sophie's a lucky girl to have such an unselfish friend." She hugged me slightly and I moved away.

"I'll just go in and say good night, and explain that I have to go home early," I said.

"You needn't even do that, dear. I'll just explain that your mother needed you and you had to go in a hurry and asked me to say good night to everyone for you."

"But Sophie will think I've lost my mind!"

"No, she won't, dear. Sophie and I planned our little plot while we were getting the coffee. Sophie knows how loyal you are, believe me!"

"Sophie knows all about it?" I repeated. "Well—thank you for a lovely dinner, Mrs. Jessup." I began to walk away.

"Wait, dear." If she didn't stop calling me "dear," I thought, I would not be able to keep from kicking her. "My suggestion is, why not go out here by the back door so you won't have to pass the living room and get all involved in a lot of questions? Isn't that much more sensible?"

I must have stared at her for a long moment, because she got a little red, and said:

"Well, thank you for being such a sweet, loyal friend. Good night, dear."

I said "Good night" and I went down the back steps. I felt awfully sick and my knees were shaking. I looked at my watch. It was only eight-thirty, so I couldn't go home for at least another hour, otherwise mother and daddy would want to know why I was home so early.

I began to walk. I didn't care that I was crying. I didn't even know it until it started to drip into my mouth and off my chin. I walked for a long time. I passed some stores and the movie house and the library, and all you'll win high praise with this low cost soup!

Surprise the family with this "Chef's Special." It's one of the many delicious things you can do with Herb-Ox Cubes—Bouillon or Chicken. Use them to "flavor up" lower cost meats and main dishes—as a soup stock—as a gravy base. For menu book with exciting, special co recipes, write The Pure Food Co., In Mamaroneck, New York, Dept

Easy French Onion Soup

Simmer 2 c. sliced onions 10 m 3 tbs. butter. Dissolve 5 Herb-Ox lon Cubes in 4½ c. boiling wat add. Bring to boil. Simmer 20 mi ¼ tsp. pepper, 1 tsp. worceste Pour in soup plates. Float piece téed French bread on each s Sprinkle generously with grated c Serves 4 to 6.

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBE

BE WISE SELL TOP QUAL GREETING
31 new boxes. Profits to 100%. Bonus Write today for FREE Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery samples. FREE 32-page catalog and feature All Occasion Samples ON APPROVAL.
FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONAL STATIONERY
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISI North Abington 29, Ma

DELAYED ACTION

Home from a trip, a lazy husband t wife about a fine hot cereal he' called Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal. derful tasting," he said, "and nourishment."

Two weeks later, the wife rem "Laurence, remember that Grap Wheat-Meal you told me about cereal that tasted so good and ga so much energy? Well, we're ha tomorrow."

"I thought you'd forgotten," s lazy husband.

"Oh no," said his wife, chuckling two weeks ago the garage didn' cleaning."

(Adver

Wrap sandwiche salads, desserts with KV Waxed Paper. Keeps in fresh goodness of lunc work, school, picnics. P Heavy Waxed paper on your shopping list.

lew EASY WAY to BRAID RUGS

AMAZING NEW INVENTION MAKES 24"x36" RUG IN 5 HOURS

NO RAW EDGES
FOLDING—PINNING
IO EXTRA SEWING

sensational invention s rugs EASIER and
TER than you've ever ed possible. Just attach cone-shaped folders to of cloth—and braid. No seams showing. No folding creasing. Just sew strips ner with special handy Rug
e included in set. Amazing
-A-Rug braids evenly.
-proof. Rugs can be used her side as no raw edges or g shows. Use any material coats, skirts, blankets,
s, nylons—heavy or thin
ial. Introductory Offer
1.00 includes set of 3 foldug Needle and complete
ctions.

es 1000 and One Other Articles amazing new Braid-A-Rug

an also make hats, purses, olders, belts, table mats,
, slippers, any size and rugs—oval, round, square
hooked rugs!

INTRODUCTORY OFFER $1.00 only COMPLETE SET

Profitable Hobby!

Make up to $200 and more selling to friends! Many women have already been offered from $200 to $400 for beautiful 9x12 rugs—made with easy Braid-A-Rug!

EXTRA
For Prompt Action

If you hurry and order NOW, you will receive at no extra cost, one large spool of strong Carpet Warp Thread—enough to sew dozens of braided rugs!

NO MONEY—Use 10 Days At Our Risk end name and address. On arrival, pay the postman 1.00 plus C. O. D. postage. Use Braid-A-Rug for 10 f not delighted, for your $1.00 Hurry—today o

DU KANE CO. INC., Dept. 31C
500 S. Clinton St., Chicago 7, Ill.

ARN MONEY
h Everyday Cards

xquisite new 16-card All-Occasion ent at only $1. Your profit up to 50c! or Birthday, Get-Well, Sympathy, sary, Friendship, Big line 14 other making ass'ts.—All Birthday, Gift nsemble, Easter, Floral Stationery, Comic, New Imported Floral Napkins. rience. Samples on approval, write—

Write FOR SAMPLES

ACE BROWN, INC., Dept. R-9 th Avenue NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

CASH OFFER!

MEN and women wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Holiday, Jack and Jill, and other popular publications. Big Commissions. Devote spare time or full time. For details write to

URTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
0 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

NOW ANYONE AN PUTTY WINDOWS

with the

DUO-FAST PUTTY KNIFE

NEW EASY FAST

Does a perfect job. Packs—Shapes—Trims putty. Makes a hard job easy. Pays for itself on first window. Get yours, today! It will be your favorite tool!

See $1.00

Your Hardware, Paint, Glass or Lumber Dealer—OR Order Direct.

ONLY $1.00 POSTPAID IN U.S.A.

Fast PUTTY KNIFE FASTENER CORP.
Fletcher Street, Chicago 14, Illinois

enclosing $1.00 — please send me one Fast PUTTY KNIFE

ESS

STATE

of a sudden I found I was past the village, so I turned around. If I took it very slowly, I wouldn't have to get home until nine-thirty.

I didn't realize anybody was walking with me until a boy's voice said, "Hey, what are you doing all alone? I thought today was your birthday." Incredibly, it was Gene Hay.

"I thought you were going away for Labor Day," I said. I must have sounded accusing, but I didn't care.

"My mother called it off at the last minute. She wanted dad to take her someplace or other instead. Didn't you have your party?"

"No."

"Where's your side-kick? Isn't it her birthday too?"

"She's home."

"Well." He looked embarrassed for a minute, then he said, "How about letting me buy you a soda for Happy Birthday?"

"Why not?" I said.

We went into Joe's, where all the kids go after school, and we sat down at one of the tables. There weren't many people there, mostly grownups. Gene had a chocolate soda

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Lines to a Little Girl

By Ruth Mary DuBois

Dark brown braids that shine in my hands,
Slip in my hands,
As I plait them down to the rubber bands
And the bright red bow.

Slim brown body that twists and turns
And feet impatient to go.

Curious, headstrong, heart-stabbing sweet—
How shall I temper the fine-drawn doe?

How shall I know the fateful time
For you to go your way
More than mine?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

and I had a malted. I left most of it; it was still hard to swallow. We talked about people at school mostly, and I wasn't being worried, so it was easy to talk to him. I just said what I felt like saying. We stayed about twenty minutes, and then Gene walked me home.

"Well, good night," he said, when we got to my house. "I'm awfully glad I bumped into you, Babe. I enjoyed it."

"Me too," I said. "Thanks, Gene. Thanks a lot."

"Listen," he said, "if I give you a ring one of these evenings, would you like to see a movie or something?"

I wanted to say I'd love to, but I just couldn't. "Oh, you never know," I said. "Well—thanks again, Gene."

"Good night. I'll give you a ring."

"Good night," I said.

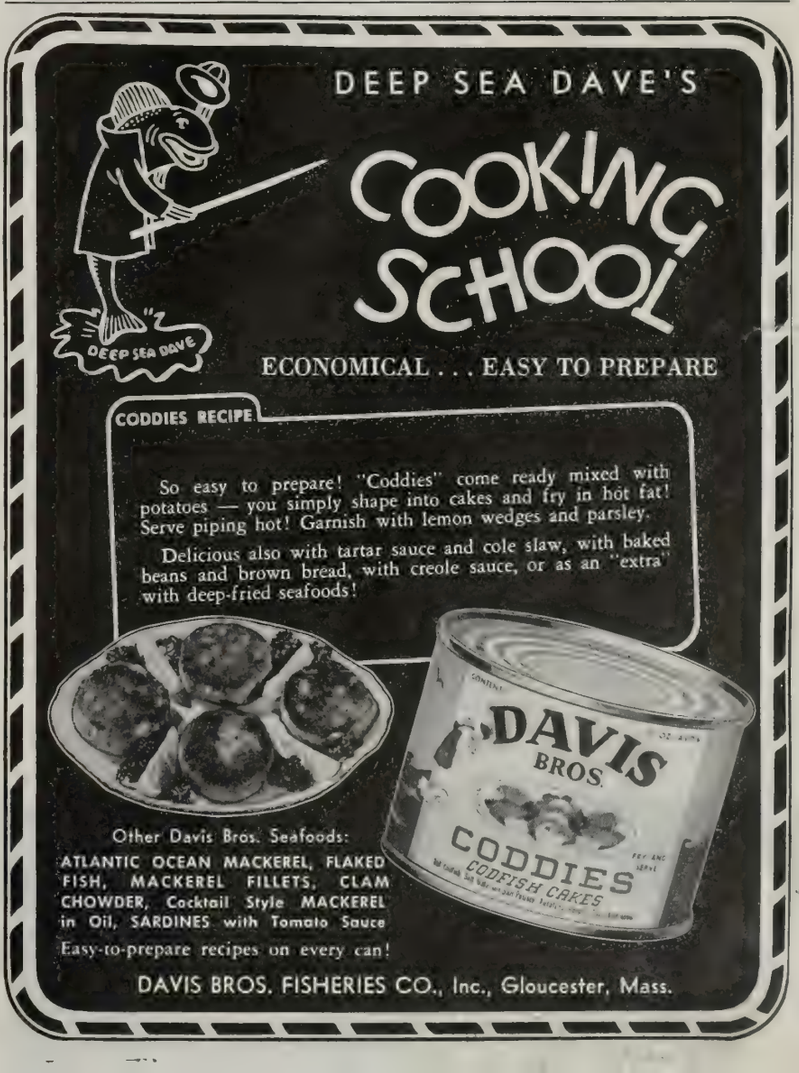
Blessedly, no one was home. I undressed and washed and got into bed. Then I got up again and turned on the light, so I could look in the mirror. I looked at myself and I thought about how Sophie would call up first thing in the morning, and tell me how sorry she was about the whole thing, and maybe she'd say her mother had made her do it. And I thought about how I would ask her if she had had a nice evening. And I would say I hoped so because I had. And then I would tell her about meeting Gene Hay, and having sodas with him, and having him walk me home and ask if I would go out with him. And after I had said it all, I should be feeling much better. It should make me feel simply swell.

But I knew it wouldn't. I knew it would make me feel awful. I put out the light again, and crawled into my bed and wished I were fifty years old. THE END

You'll be tempted like Eve!

Gorgeous Orchard Crystal
"Apple Design"—8 piece Apple Dessert Set
$1.25 per set*

Yes, this enticing "Apple" Dessert Set will gladden the heart of every woman. It's so beautiful—so crystal clear—so sturdy—so very practical. Each piece is a masterpiece of design and sparkling beauty.



Crystal loving hostesses will get a real thrill serving desserts, fruits, cereals and sea-food in these dishes. Just the thing for serving baked apples and gelatine desserts.

"Apple Design" glassware also comes in 8 pc. Tea and Toast Set, 8 pc. Salad Plate Set, 16 pc. Cup and Saucer Set, and in a variety of other sets.

Your local Department and Gift Shops have all these sets on display at $1.25 per set.*

NEWLAND, SCHNEELOCH & PIEK, INC.
1107 Broadway, New York
*Denver and West Minimum Retail Price $1.50 per set

ORCHARD CRYSTAL

DEEP SEA DAVE'S
COOKING SCHOOL
ECONOMICAL . . . EASY TO PREPARE

DEEP SEA DAVE

CODDIES RECIPE

So easy to prepare! "Coddies" come ready mixed with potatoes — you simply shape into cakes and fry in hot fat! Serve piping hot! Garnish with lemon wedges and parsley.

Delicious also with tartar sauce and cole slaw, with baked beans and brown bread, with creole sauce, or as an "extra" with deep-fried seafoods!

DAVIS BROS.
CODDIES
CODFISH CAKES

Other Davis Bros. Seafoods:
ATLANTIC OCEAN MACKEREL, FLAKED FISH, MACKEREL FILLETS, CLAM CHOWDER, Cocktail Style MACKEREL in Oil, SARDINES with Tomato Sauce

Easy-to-prepare recipes on every can!

DAVIS BROS. FISHERIES CO., Inc., Gloucester, Mass.

Adds flavor and color in COOKING . . .

New magic for meatless meals! . . . And you can lend extra variety and interest not only to Lenten dishes but to a great many meat dishes, simply by adding tomato flavor! Just open a can of Campbell's Tomato Soup, and use as is! For example:

HALIBUT GASCOYNE

1 pound halibut (or other fish)
2 tablespoons shortening
1 cup grated cheese
1 can Campbell's Tomato Soup
Hot biscuits

Broil halibut in shortening in skillet over low heat about 15 minutes, or until done. Heat soup in a double boiler; add cheese and stir while cheese melts. Remove bone from fish and break into rather large pieces; add to soup; heat thoroughly. Serve on hot biscuits. Makes 6 servings.

Clip these suggestions for your recipe file.

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

TOMATO SOUP

Delicious as a POUR-ON sauce . . .

Makes meats, egg dishes, leftovers, taste better and look better! Try this omelet:

6 eggs, separated
¼ cup milk
1 teasp. salt
Dash of pepper
1 tablesp. butter or margarine
½ can Campbell's Tomato Soup

Heat oven to 325°. Add salt and pepper to egg whites; beat until stiff. Beat yolks until well thickened; add milk. Fold yolk mixture into egg whites. Tip skillet to grease sides. When butter is bubbling hot, pour in omelet. Cover and cook over low heat until omelet puffs, about 10 min. Uncover and bake at 325° until omelet is golden brown and firm to touch, about 20 min. Heat tomato soup, just as it comes from can. Fold omelet. Pour hot soup over it and serve. Makes 4 servings.

Quick and Easys for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUEI

TIME to begin packing away winter and looking toward spring. Time to change your menus too. Sprinkle them with firsts—the first rhubarb, the first strawberries, the first tiny pink potatoes—as a lure to the appetite. Fortunately, most of the good things now making their annual reappearance in the markets take little time and effort to prepare. Follow the simple ways with them really to enjoy their best flavors.

HASTY AND HOT

Quick Shepherd's Pie
Green Salad
Rhubarb Sauce

To make a good stew takes time and long, slow cooking, unless you have a pressure saucepan to speed up the process—but you can now buy beef and gravy in cans, which makes a good base for stews or casseroles. Add leftover or canned vegetables—or top with mashed potatoes and bake. With a good salad, crisp rye wafers, rhubarb sauce and hot coffee, you will feel that you have dined well.

QUICK SHEPHERD'S PIE

Open 1 can beef and gravy. Heat with ¼ cup water and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Add 1 teaspoon grated onion. Pour into casserole. Top with mashed potatoes made with potato powder, hot milk, seasonings and butter or margarine—use proportions given on package. Potato powder is new on the market—produces good mashed potatoes instantly. Fluff onto beef. Bake 20 minutes in hot oven, 450° F., or place under broiler until freckled with brown.

THE LIGHTER SIDE

Chicken-Celery Soup
Eastern Sandwiches
Strawberries and Cream

When you're not in the mood for a momentous meal, hot soup, a hearty sandwich, topped off with strawberries and cream and coffee, make a satisfying supper. Try combining canned cream of celery soup with cream of chicken soup, for a change.

EASTERN SANDWICHES

Sauté ¼ pound hamburger and 1 tablespoon chopped onion in 1 tablespoon shortening or salad oil until meat is brow Stir frequently during the browning p ess. Season with ¼ teaspoon salt an little pepper. Beat 3 eggs slightly as yo for scrambling. Add ¼ teaspoon sal little pepper and 1½ tablespoons water. Pour over the cooked beef and c over low heat until eggs are just set. slowly as it cooks, just as if you scrambling eggs plain. Have them fl and moist. Put between slices of butt bread or toast. Serve hot. Makes 4 s wiches. You'll want 2 apiece.

EGGS AND YOU

Scrambled-Egg
Special on Asparagus
Bacon
Hot Spicecake with Applesauce

At least one night a week you're boun depend on eggs for your main dish, but needn't be monotonous. There are n ways to cook them—many versions of e You need something good to finish off meal. You could buy spicecake, but not make it from a mix and buy the a sauce instead—canned or frozen? A ho smell—that of spicecake baking. B than gardenias, if you're tired and hur

QUICK SPICECAKE

Use your favorite white-cake mix fo easy spicecake. Add ¾ teaspoon alls ¾ teaspoon cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon meg and ½ teaspoon cloves to the mix fore adding liquid called for. Follow d tions on package for mixing. Lastly, st ½ cup seedless raisins and ½ cup chop California walnuts. Bake in 9-inch-sq cake pan or a bread-loaf pan that has greased and lined with greased wax pa Bake according to directions for loaf c given on the package for time and temp ture. Cupcakes are even quicker. If you the small paper baking cups, so much better. You won't have a pan to wash. might wish to divide the mix—using for spice cupcakes or 1 layer—adding course, only half the liquid and half the above ingredients. This cake is good warm or cold—keeps well for several days. To make your meal even quicker and easier to prepare, you could bake the cake the night before.

SCRAMBLED-EGG SPECIAL ON ASPARAGUS

Break 4 eggs into a bowl. Add ¼ cup cream and 1 package cream cheese broken into pieces. Put 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in skillet. When good and hot, add eggs and scramble gently—but do not cook as firm as you would for breakfast eggs. They should still be very soft but not runny. Serve over quickly cooked fresh or frozen asparagus and top with strips of bacon. Plain boiled new potatoes cooked in the jackets and crusty rolls with sweet country butter taste good with this spring-time dish, if you happen to have them on hand.

PLENTY AFTER 8

California Shortcake
Cucumber Salad
Fruit Compote

On occasions you're very late getting home. The shops are closed. Your dinner depends on the results of a forage in the refrigerator and cupboard. Packaged mixes and canned foods on the shelf and fixing from the refrigerator can make a delicious supper—light but satisfying.

CALIFORNIA SHORTCAKE

Melt 1½ tablespoons butter or margarine in saucepan. Blend in 1½ tablespoons flour. Add 1 cup milk gradually. Stir until thickened. Add ½ cup chopped or sliced canned mushrooms, 1 cup cubed cooked ham, if you have it on hand. If you haven't, use a ½-pound can tuna fish. Drain off the oil and flake the fish in large pieces. Season with salt and pepper. Just before serving, peel ½ avocado cut into cubes and add to sauce. Serve on split hot buttered biscuits made from a mix. Toast will do if you don't want to bother making biscuits.

MARCH MOOD

Brook Trout or other Pan Fish
Sour-Cream Potatoes—Peas
Lemon Sherbet

Trout are a bit on the expensive side, but everyone is entitled to a treat now and then. Cook them simply. Remove the heads—I do, some cooks don't—dust lightly with salt, pepper and flour and sauté in hot butter or margarine. A squeeze of lemon and maybe a little chopped parsley is all the dressing needed for perfection. Butterfish or smelts are delicious cooked this way, too, and much less expensive than trout. Frozen or canned peas will speed you on to your dead line, and left-over cold potatoes heat up to perfection if done as follows. Extras to plan for: buy the sherbet and some crusty rolls. Have the coffee strong.

SOUR-CREAM POTATOES

Cut 4 or 4 leftover cold boiled potatoes into small cubes. Mix ½ cup sweet cream and ½ cup sour cream together in a saucepan. Add 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper to taste, and the potatoes. Simmer until potatoes are heated through and some of the cream has become absorbed by potatoes. A sprinkling of finely cut chives or parsley over the top is a good finishing touch when you serve them forth.

DINING OUT AT HOME

Veal with Cheese-and-Tomato Sauce
Spinach
Fresh Fruit Bowl
with Almonds or Walnuts

Have you ever eaten Veal Parmigiana in a good Italian restaurant? If you have, you've probably longed to reproduce it at home. It's a simple dish, easy to make. Italians use mozzarella cheese for this dish, but that isn't so easy to come by unless you live in a big city. Any good melting cheese does very well, whether authentic or not. Serve it with a green vegetable, bread sticks, and finish off with fresh fruit and nuts and small cups of black coffee. You'll have a good dinner and at much less cost than in a restaurant.

VEAL WITH CHEESE-AND-TOMATO SAUCE

Have 1 thin slice veal cutlet cut into servings and pounded thin. Season with salt and pepper. Dip in beaten egg, then in cracker crumbs. Brown the veal quickly on both sides in 3 tablespoons hot melted shortening or salad oil. Heat 1 can tomato sauce. Put the browned cutlets in glass heatproof pie dish and pour tomato sauce over them. Top with ¼ pound mozzarella cheese, sliced thin, if you would have your dish authentically Italian. Use other cheese, of course, if this type is not available. Run under broiler until cheese melts, bubbles and browns.

À LA CARTE

Shrimp Caprice
Green Salad
Ambrosia

We've learned a new way with shrimp. Shrimp Caprice was featured on a fancy restaurant menu at a fancy price. We tasted well and came home and produced this dish at a far from fancy price. You can dine à la carte too.

SHRIMP CAPRICE

Shell and devein 1 pound cooked or frozen shrimp. Or you could use canned shrimp, drained. Make a medium cream sauce using 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, 4 tablespoons flour and 2 cups chicken broth. Cook until thickened. Season with ½ teaspoon salt, a little pepper, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 teaspoon grated onion and 1 teaspoon fresh dill or ¼ teaspoon dried dill. Dill really gives this dish its special flavor. You can use dill seed, which comes in packages, if you can't get fresh or dried dill. Reseason to taste. Serve over freshly cooked rice.

AMBROSIA

Peel and slice 1 orange and 1 banana. Cut 4 or 5 dates in pieces and mix with fruit. Serve in sherbet glasses. Sprinkle with shredded coconut. Chill.

No work!
No worry!

When Baby eats the NEW Gerber's Meats!

This famous name ARMOUR and this famous baby are your double-guarantee of goodness. You'll find both on delicious, nutritious beef, veal and liver. For Gerber and Armour are working together to bring your baby the best possible all-meat nutrition.

Nothing but the best—with no work! Luscious, lean meats with tempting true-meat color and flavor—and complete high quality proteins. Ready to serve, because Gerber and Armour did all the work for you! No wasteful, time-consuming scraping! And like all Gerber's, from Cereals through Desserts, the meats are prepared to please you, baby—and the doctor!

Far less expensive than home-cooked meats! Safer, too, because of their scrupulous preparation. Gerber's Strained Meats for tiny infants, Gerber's Junior Meats for older babies are one modest price! And there are several servings in every can!

Accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
Fremont, Mich.—Oakland, Calif.

3 CEREALS • 20 STRAINED FOODS • 15 JUNIOR FOODS • 3 STRAINED MEATS • 3 JUNIOR MEAT

(Continued from Page 253)

So they walked away very gently indeed, but Betsy knew better than to hope she'd forget. Just one more time, to add to their collection.

They carefully didn't talk for a while. They walked to the flower market, and looked at thousands of roses, and Joel bought her three long-stemmed violets, paying a nickel. He waved away an offer of a few more, thrown in on the sale.

"We mustn't be ostentatious," he said, pinning them to the lapel of her gray suit.

They walked along the water front, and ate fish and chips from a paper bag. They called on a friend of Joel's, who sold newspapers in a neat little shack by the subway, and who gave them the latest news on Russia. They met a lady from out of town, who wanted to be directed to an address on a slip of pink paper, and they took her to the address in a taxi.

They ate steak and fried tomatoes in a smoky little restaurant where Joel knew practically everybody. That was where Betsy met Alda—at last. She had begun to wonder if there really were such a person, for all Joel had said.

Alda was slim and dark, with noteworthy legs and a smile that began slowly and then went places. She came walking in the door as Betsy and Joel were leaving. She took one look at Joel, and flung her arms wide. She did it with a flourish and a casual air, but it landed her with her arms around Joel.

"Joel, my angel—I thought you'd be in China."

"No. Not China," said Joel. He took Alda's little green hat that was cocked over one eye, and set it on the back of her head. "It's been six months. Where've you been, Alda?"

"Greece," said Alda. "Then over to Buenos Aires. Back by way of Tampico." She let go of Joel and stood back to look at him, her face bright with gladness. "Where've you been, Joel?"

"Right here," said Joel. "I've been working on a project." He looked around for Betsy and drew her forward. "Meet the project," he said. "Betsy Morris, Alda Fane."

"How do you do, Miss Morris," said Alda.

"How do you do," said Betsy, with an equal lack of mad enthusiasm.

"Well," said Joel, looking back and forth, "well, I guess we'll drift. I'll ring you, Alda. Where are you staying?"

"Same old stand," said Alda. "If you don't ring me, I'll send you a wire. So long."

Outside on the sidewalk, Betsy said thoughtfully, "So that's Alda."

"Yeah." Joel lit a cigarette, watching the process. "Guess I've told you; she free-lances for the papers. Covers ground. She wants to get around, like me."

Betsy countered that cautiously. "You don't do work like that, Joel—that has to take you all over the lot."

"No," he said. "But I get all over the lot, and I find the work when I land there."

"Crazy jobs," Betsy said. "Any old job. And you come back broke."

"Maybe it was a mistake, telling you so much," Joel remarked. "But at least I never kidded you."

"No," she said. "You never did."

She remembered the night she'd met him, almost half a year ago. When the spark wildfired between them, and they both knew. "I'm going to be crazy about you," he had told her then. "I want to see you and go on seeing you. We'll run well together, Betsy. But you might as well know, I'm not the marrying kind." And she had said, "Now that's settled, we can relax." That's how much of a fool she had been, half a year ago. Now she knew that nothing was settled. Nothing except the way they loved each other.

Going along the dim street, they turned on a brighter avenue. They weren't looking in windows now.

"I've got to get going pretty soon," Joel said restlessly. "And it's not just meeting Alda. This town is going stale on me. When the wind blows from the river, and you hear the boat whistles, and that deep roar as one gets under way—Betsy, Betsy, don't you want to go?"

Eagerness leaped in her, answering, and she fought it back. "You're talking to the wrong woman," she said steadily. "I'm Betsy, remember? I'm the dull little housewife type, remember?"

Joel touched her shoulder so she looked at him. "You're the one that stopped me. You're the one I want."

That much she had, and she held on to it for a moment. She didn't need ships and planes, when everything she wanted was Joel. And if the only way to keep him was to go with him ——

Then she held hard to the facts she knew. She had a clear picture of the years ahead, if she went with him: an endless succession of little blank rooms in boardinghouses; and Joel waking up sometime to the other things he wanted, that he'd be too old to get; and the two of them, slipping down to dingier rooms and a dingier future. You couldn't give children that kind of life.

She remembered the years she'd been on her own since her parents died, and the terror running darkly under her feet, that she would get sick and lose her job. Joel had had good luck, so far. He didn't understand that when you walked on a thin footing of good luck, you could break through it—with an accident, with illness, with your money lost—and then you sank and the dark current

"We're playing nicely together, mother. I'm making clay animal crackers, and Jill's eating them."

RICE COMES INTO ITS OWN!

New Uncle Ben's Rice Recipe

Rice and Cheese Casserole

2 cups medium white sauce:
4 tablespoons butter or margarine
4 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
dash cayenne
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
3 cups hot cooked Uncle Ben's Rice
2 cups grated American cheese
paprika
½ cup well-buttered bread crumbs

Add Worcestershire sauce to white sauce. Alternate layers of rice, cheese, and white sauce in well-greased 2-quart casserole. Sprinkle each layer lightly with paprika. Top with buttered crumbs. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) until cheese is melted, 15 or 20 minutes. Garnish with parsley and serve piping hot. Serves six.

For the first time, rice has a delicious flavor all its own. And, most important, here is rice with the natural vitamins retained! It's Uncle Ben's—and it's as different from rice as you know it as night from day!

Nothing that cooks takes less trouble than an Uncle Ben's. No steaming. No rinsing. No watching or stirring. And it always comes out light, white and fluffy. Never sticky or gummy—you can keep it covered in the refrigerator for days. Every grain stands apart.

You can get Uncle Ben's Converted Long Grain Rice now at your food store. If it isn't there, ask your grocer to order some for you.

Write for your booklet of twenty-four tested recipes. (Enclose top from package.) © C. R., Inc.

CONVERTED RICE, INC., HOUSTON, TEXAS

"Uncle Ben's" and "Converted" are trade-marks of Converted Rice, Inc.

caught you. She knew; she had lived in too many hall bedrooms with voices coming through the walls, desperate voices of the people who were caught in terror. Joel talked to many people, but not to the ones who had failed.

"Betsy," he was saying now. "Betsy, you think too much."

"Do I?"

"So let's get married and go to South America," he said, as if he were offering a brand-new idea.

"Why do you ask me, Joel, when you like being free?"

He smiled through the shadowy light. "Because I want you with me all the time."

They walked half a block before she answered. Past a golden window and a dim blue window and a tall dark doorway. "We don't have the same idea of marriage, Joel. You want a legalized permanent affair."

"At least I want it to be permanent," he said.

"And I want a home that stays in one place," Betsy said. "Where you can plant something one year, and see it come up the next. You know I'm like that. Why don't you go away and forget about me?"

"Would you forget so easily, Betsy?"

"No," she said.

"Sometimes I try to tell myself your way is right," he said slowly. "And that I could learn to stay put. And there'd be you, and maybe kids. Sometimes ——"

"You . . . might like it," she said, and once again she was hoping, and eagerness sprang into her voice. "If we had any kind of place that just belonged to us. I'd look across the room and—and see you, Joel."

"I'd wake up in the night, and you'd be there," he said. Then his voice changed abruptly. "This is no good. I'm not going to kid you or myself."

Betsy said bleakly, "You told me, Joel, the first time. You told me you weren't the marrying kind."

"I don't want marriage tied up with a house and job," he answered flatly. "I'd be like a dog roped to a wire, running back and forth."

"And yet you ask me to marry you, Joel."

"To take you with me, that's different," he told her. "I've got to have you somewhere in reach, Betsy."

He wanted to take her along—that was the difference between him and the other men of his kind, who were always moving on. That was a clue to him, she thought, but she didn't know how to read it.

"If you loved me enough, you'd marry me my way," he was going on. "But you've got marriage all mixed up with a house and a little checkerboard life."

"You don't love me enough," she said back to him. "If you did, you'd want a real life with me, and a family, and making our own place. You want your fun, and me on the side. You've never truly asked me to marry you. You don't know what it means."

He stared ahead, hands in his pockets, shoulders hunched a little. And the same weight lay on her.

"Take me home, before we get angry this time," she said.

"We haven't settled anything," said Joel.

But he took her home, and as far as the door of her apartment. And there he took her in his arms, and all the fierceness that burned behind their talk sprang free. So that no holding was tight enough, and every touch raced on to more. He kissed her savagely, but when he spoke his voice was almost gentle.

"So you don't love me, Betsy. So I don't love you. Say that again now, my darling."

She was silent, but her hands locked tighter behind his shoulders.

"You belong with me, Betsy."

"Yes." But she stood away from him as she spoke. "We don't mean the same thing. Don't talk now; I can't take it."

"I'd better go. If I come in, I'll just make it tougher for you."

"Yes."

"Good night, Betsy. Tomorrow afternoon?"

"Tomorrow afternoon."

She didn't go in till he was out of sight, and when she lay in bed she kept thinking round and round trying to find a way out. Joel had a pattern of marriage that he hated: the idea of a house, and its responsibilities, and all the ritual of chores. She'd been stupid, telling him about the kind of house she'd always wanted. If they had an apartment, would that leave him free enough? An apartment didn't lock you into a rigid checkerboard life.

There was that apartment of Stell's, vacant now. If she took him to see it the next day, maybe he'd like it. He might consider it, anyway, for a while, and they could move on when he wanted a change. There ought to be some middle ground, some way they could agree, when they loved each other so.

And so, the next afternoon, once again she was letting herself hope a little. Once again she dressed for him, carefully, slowly. Getting ready for Joel was next best to seeing him, while she could float in anticipation. Maybe today ——

Joel came for her in a car that he had borrowed from a friend. He wore a tweed suit and no hat. "We need a change of scene," he told her with one of those swift grins of his. "We'll get out of the city."

"Can we stop somewhere first?" she asked. "There's an apartment I want to look at."

"Going to move?" he asked her very casually.

"Could be," said Betsy, not wanting to go off half-cocked till he'd seen the place.

Manners are the happy way of doing things: each one a stroke of genius or of love, now repeated and hardened into usage. —EMERSON.

They went swiftly through the streets that they usually walked along slowly, and the city changed for Betsy. Now all the stretch of it belonged to them, because they could dip into and out of a street and dismiss it, they could gather rows of buildings in a glance and link them quickly with other buildings on beyond.

Stell's apartment was empty now, but the superintendent knew Betsy. He took them upstairs and left them before the opened door.

"So you're apartment hunting," Joel said, glancing warily about.

There was a square hall, and a long living room with windows that looked out on the river, and a big tiled kitchen with a dinette opening off, and two bedrooms and two baths. The space stretched out luxuriously, uncluttered with furniture.

"Look at all the kitchen cupboards!" Betsy exclaimed. "And a wonderful oven."

"What's the matter with restaurants?" asked Joel.

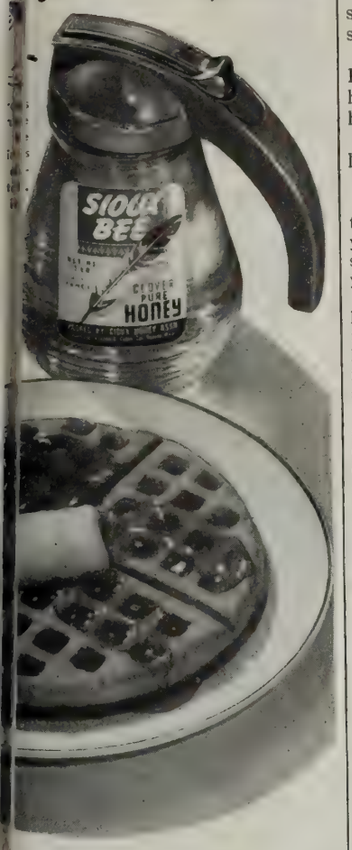
"Murals in this bathroom—look. Lovely purple fish swimming on the green walls. Imagine taking a bath with those cute fish all around you."

"When I take a bath," said Joel, "I want no fish present."

They went on to the living room, and Betsy stood there, seeing how the room could look with furniture from her own apartment; seeing it lived in; seeing a home for her and Joel. He would come home at night, and the lamps would be lighted, and he would close the door and shut the city out.

She said aloud, "If we put the lounge in front of the windows, we could sit there and see the river."

Joel rocked back and forth on his heels, surveying her, his gray eyes bright. "Betsy," he said dryly, "isn't this place a little large for you to live in alone?"



"Well ——"

"Betsy dear, are you trying to sell me an apartment?"

She grinned ruefully. "No harm trying."

"You think I'm stubborn and selfish, I guess," he said slowly. "Maybe we're two different kinds of people, and you'll always want roots, and I'll always want to keep going. But—I keep on trying, too, to pull us together. Because now I've found you, I

"CLEVER!" says SUE BEE

add
OUX BEE honey
... and Serve!

d then . . . "batter up" again, to calm ungry horde. An irresistible combi- n . . . Sioux Bee Honey and waffles. don't forget griddle cakes and hot bis- ! They're Sioux Bee affinities, too.

r delicate flavor, for jewel-bright pur- always ask for Sioux Bee Honey. The e means superior quality, carefully rolled by the world's largest honey- ers.

SPECIAL! Also try Sioux Bee Honey-Creme. Smoothly crystallized, it doesn't pour—it spreads. Delicious!

FREE! For booklet containing 93 unusual honey recipes, write Sioux Honey Association, Dept. L-39, Sioux City, Iowa.

for finest honey, say "Sue Bee"

don't want to go on alone without you. Because I love you, Betsy."

"I know," she said. And now the room stood bare, and she and Joel would never sit watching the river.

Joel was rummaging through his pockets. He pulled out a letter and opened it and handed it to her. "Letter from my mother," he said. "Maybe you'd better read it."

The writing was very clear, fat curves and loops, on heavy cream paper:

Joel my dear: I was delighted to get your letter, and I do want to know your Betsy. Now you have found the right girl, at last you will settle down. There is nothing so rewarding as your own home.

Perhaps it has unsettled you, my dear, to have heard your father's foolish talk, about all the trips he wanted to take, and the traveling he never did. But as you know, your father finally realized his duty and responsibilities, and has settled down contentedly.

You must bring Betsy to see us. And what are your plans? You will have a house, of course? Apartments are dreadful little shelves on a wall. And as soon as you are settled, I shall send Betsy the Royal Worcester china, and your great-grandmother's glass—quite a cabinet of it, you know—and since you say her own mother has gone on, I shall want to stock your house with linen. I trust you do not share the modern fancy for twin beds.

I shall be so happy, thinking of you at last safe in your own dear little home.

My love to you and Betsy,

MOTHER.

Betsy read slowly to the end, and handed the letter back to Joel. She faced him directly. "Well?" she said.

"There's not a thing right in that letter," Joel said grimly. "Except the bit about my not sharing the modern fancy for twin beds." He walked across to a window, and stood tapping two fingers irritably against the pane. "China and glass and linen, and a house tied around my neck. My dad never got content, he just gave up. They didn't go anywhere in the summer because the grass got so burned. They didn't go in the winter, because the only time dad pried her away from home for a decent trip, the pipes burst all over the basement." He added, "My mother is a truly charming person, and I'm fond of her, in case you wondered. But that doesn't stop me from seeing the facts."

"I THINK you have the facts all messed up," Betsy challenged him clearly.

Joel swung around. "Oh, yes?"

"I mean, about your mother making a home seem a duty and a drag on a man. It isn't very polite to say, but—what makes you think all women are like that?"

Joel said doggedly, "Dad said to me once, 'Pick the right kind of girl. Don't put yourself in jail for life.'"

Betsy said, "You've picked the wrong kind of girl. You'd better go back to Alda. She'd hop a plane with you any day."

"Never mind Alda," Joel told her.

"Let's get out of here," said Betsy.

As they left the apartment, she took one long look back. But Joel strode straight on ahead.

She could see how he'd got wary of settling down, Betsy thought. With his eagerness for new places, and then the years of watching his mother and father, it was understandable. But just knowing how he got that way wasn't much help.

When they were in the car again, Joel headed out of the city. He didn't talk, but once when his eyes met hers in the mirror, he smiled swiftly. They reached the river, and drove beside it. The trees grew greener and the air blew cooler, and the tall buildings were out of sight.

Joel said suddenly, "Betsy, I guess it's fish or cut bait. I'm going away. In a couple of days. Will you come with me?"

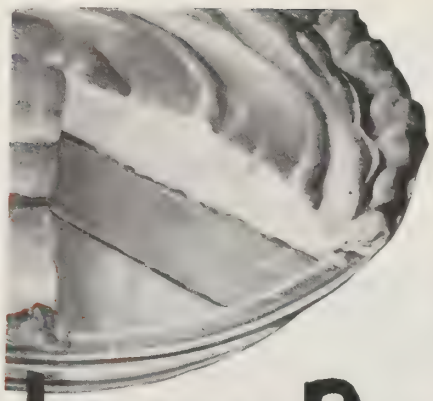
The question hung between them; and she couldn't answer. So she was up against the sharp edge of the decision, and still she didn't know.

If you loved a man, you went along with him, no matter where, didn't you? She knew very well how much she wanted to go. Married to Joel, belonging to him. And she

A MEAT meal in a MINUTE!

KINGAN'S LUNCHEON MEAT K-P !

KINGAN'S K-P is all meat—a tasty blend of Kingan's Reliable pork and beef—deliciously seasoned, delicately spiced. No waste . . . and an extra bonus in flavor that adds pleasure to every meal.



Ready to serve, hot or cold, in dozens of ways. With a few cans of this fine meat on your pantry shelf, you are always ready for good eating at a moment's notice.

15 VARIETIES of DELICIOUSLY PREPARED CANNED MEATS

Corned Beef Hash
K-P Luncheon Meat
Spaghetti and Meat
Beef Stew
Vienna Sausages
Liver Spread
Potted Meats
Chili Con Carne
Hamburger Patties
Beef with Gravy
Pork with Gravy
Pork Sausages
Picnic Spread
Skinless Wieners
Lunch Tongue

Backed by over 100 years of Reliable Meat Processing
KINGAN & CO., Indianapolis, Indiana

LEMON PIE quick-easy!

PERFECT every time!

Make the flaky Good Luck crust this easy way—Even if you never made a pie before, you can't miss with Good Luck Pie Crust Mix! So quickly and easily you can make tender, flaky crust every time. Good Luck is made with special pastry flour. Highest grade hydrogenated vegetable shortening ensures perfect freshness.

Make the Good Luck filling in less than 10 minutes—Good Luck has all sugar added! So easy . . . so quick . . . in only a few minutes you have a luscious creamy filling that's just the right consistency, has that delicious "fresh-lemon" taste. Made from a real New England recipe. Good Luck is neither too thin nor too stiff.

Good Luck Food Co., Inc., Rochester, N. Y.
Subsidiary of The R. T. French Company

Another fine French's product had never dared tell him how much she wanted to see those other countries. She had never shown him the travel folders in her bottom drawer.

"I guess it's the old people that scare me," she said, thinking her way aloud. "I see them all the time in the city. Sitting on benches, sitting in doorways. Licked and hopeless and afraid. I want to marry a man who will build his life so strongly that we'll always be safe."

The car swerved slightly as Joel's hands jerked on the wheel. But he didn't answer.

"I guess it's the irresponsible way you float around that scares me, Joel. Not just your wanting to go places, but the way you never take hold."

"Don't I?" he said. "Let's hear the rest."

"No," said Betsy. "Not now. Let's have today."

"All right," Joel said. "But you've got to decide, Betsy. Because I'm going."

No matter where they drove or what they talked about, Betsy couldn't get away from that. Joel was going. With her or without her, Joel was going.

They went past little houses, the kind of houses that Betsy wanted and Joel hated. They went past a little pond, a place to swim in summer and skate in winter, but Joel wanted seas that never froze over. They crossed little roads that led to friendly towns, but Joel believed that small-scale living was a trap.

When they got hungry, they stopped at a roadside tavern, and sat at the counter. A tall boy with heavy blue tattooing on his forearms cooked their hamburgers on a shiny grill.

"Navy?" Joel asked him.

"Yeah. You?"

"Yeah. Long time ago, wasn't it?"

"You telling me, brother? And here I sit, frying chopped-up cows on a toy stove."

"You should get a lot of trade on this road, anyhow," Joel said.

"All the time," the boy said. "Cars going one way, cars going the other way. All those guys going places, and here I sit. Someday I'm going to walk out of here, and not even stop to lock the door. And I'll keep going." He brooded over his hamburgers, and gave them a shove with a knife.

Betsy said, "You've found another soul mate, Joel. Lot of unrest in this country, isn't there?"

Joel grinned at her. "I thought we were staying off that subject."

"We seem to stumble over it most anywhere," she said.

But she didn't say any more, and listened peaceably while Joel and the boy talked over a few countries they'd been to and a few others they wanted to go to. She wondered if most men were like that, only it didn't show under the harness marks and routine pace.

Joel had told her he wasn't the marrying kind; maybe he would never stay still long enough to fall into any routine pace. It had been bad luck for him, meeting her. Marriage wasn't on his schedule, and he was trying to force it in where it didn't belong. Did she love him enough to cut loose from him sharply, so he would be really free? Couldn't she stop thinking of herself, and let him go?

Driving back to the city, she sat close to him with her hand deep in the pocket of his tweed coat. A pack of cigarettes and about ten packages of matches, and her hand, in that pocket. Her face was against his shoulder, and the tweed coat didn't smell of peat smoke or tobacco or even Russian leather; it smelled like Joel, and she never wanted to be farther away from him than that. She watched his hands on the wheel, easy and firm, and wanted them touching her instead.

But when they were back, slowing in front of the house where she lived, she told him. Quickly, while she could.

"We're no good for each other," she said. "Being together makes it worse. We'll never work it out, Joel."

She couldn't see his face clearly, but his voice was newly harsh. "You aren't going to marry me, Betsy? You aren't coming with me?"

"No," she heard herself say a long way off.

"I've nothing more to say," he told her slowly. "We've said it all."

"Tell me good-by, Joel."

He reached for her then, and one hand touched her face, and she knew that if he held her, she couldn't let him go. She fumbled for the door handle, and slipped out of the car.

"I can't do it that way, Joel. Say good-by, as if it were any other night."

She waited for him to say it, as if that would release her, as if that final word would help. But he moved abruptly, and the motor quickened and then the car shot away from her down the street. For a moment she stood there uncertain, as if he had forgotten, and would come back to say good-by. He didn't even go away like anybody else.

Well, she'd done it. She wouldn't be a drag on him. She wouldn't wander around the world with him, looking back over her shoulder at other people's houses. Then it hit her all at once that he was gone. Had she been crazy, telling him to go? Hadn't she understood what it would be like?

She didn't go inside, she walked along the street. She had expected to be hurt, badly hurt. But she hadn't expected this complete emptiness, with no place to go that mattered and no one to see who could help. The emptiness stretched away into the future, because she wasn't a whole person any more, without him. She had heard about that; now she knew how it felt.

She knew where she was walking too. She was walking to the hotel where Joel lived. She never thought that he might not go straight home, and she didn't plan what she'd say to him. She just kept on walking. And stray thoughts floated into and out of her head, with no link or control.

She'd be a nuisance to him, in the wandering life he wanted—but he had asked her just the same. He lived at a good hotel, though he'd come home broke. He made enough money, wherever he went. "I have a college degree, and I have a pair of hands for ditch digging," he'd said once. "I like the little jobs, where you don't knife another guy to get ahead," he had said. If she was afraid of the future with him, it wasn't a very trusting kind of love she had.

She knew his room number, and when she got to the hotel she went straight up. The door of his room was unlocked, and she knocked and walked in.

Alda sat in a big chair, watching the door. When she saw Betsy, a change broke across her face, too quick to read. "Welcome," she said. "Our host is missing."

Betsy closed the door, but she stood beside it. "I guess I shouldn't have come," she said.

"You don't have to worry about me," Alda answered. "I came to say good-by. I'm moving on."

"You had a key," said Betsy.

"No. Just a chummy way with maids. I told you, you don't have to worry about me. Only marry him and get it done."

Betsy said as frankly, "Why do you say that, when you want him yourself?"

"Because I haven't a chance. We found that out, some time ago." Alda picked up her hat from the table, picked up her handbag. "How long are you going to keep on stalling him? . . . Oh, yes, he's talked to me. You needn't begrudge me that; you have everything else."

"You're the right kind of woman for him," Betsy said.

"You think I didn't try?" said Alda. "And look at you, with the one thing I want—and you don't grab it. You're the only one Joel ever asked to marry him—and you don't care."

"I'd be wrong for him," Betsy said. "All domestic."

(Continued on Page 260)

He will not go far, who knows from the first whither he is going.

From The Collected Poems of Rupert Brooke. Copyright, 1915, by Dodd, Mead & Company.

It's a wo

The best tomato j cocktail you ever The blend of choi ingredients in Fren Worcestershire Sa aged and mellowe gives a wonderful flavor that always a hit! Try the easy given below.

It's a hit

Tomato juice cockta

MADE WITH FRENCH'S WORCESTERSHI SAUCE

SO EASY TO MAKE

Add a pinch of salt and pepper, a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire to each glassful of tomato juice—mix; serve cold. Serve French's with meat, too—adds delicious flavor to stews, casseroles.

TOPNOTCH QUALITY... costs less

M-m-m-mm COMPANY HAM

WITH THAT FRENCH'S FLAVOR!

EASY! Wrap a tender smoked ham loosely in wrapping paper, place fat side up on rack in uncovered roaster. Add no water. Bake ham in moderate oven (325° F.), allowing 3½ to 4 hours for 10 to 12 lb. ham.

After baking ham, remove paper and skin. Score fat surface in squares. Spread with 4 tablespoons French's Mustard. Cover surface with 1 cup brown sugar mixed with 2 tablespoons flour. Stud squares with whole cloves. Bake in moderately hot oven of 400° F. 15 minutes or until golden brown. Serve with pineapple slices browned in ham liquor.

Ham Patties . . .
Chop leftover ham, combine with equal amount cold chopped boiled potatoes and shape into patties. Brown over low flame in 2 tablespoons of melted fat mixed with 1½ teaspoons of French's Mustard.

SMOOTHER CREAMIER

blend of the finest spices and mustard seed money can buy nder French's is the nation's favorite ed mustard—it has just the right nation of zesty flavor and smooth-t brings out all the good meat flavor sn't cover it up as cheap harsh rds do. Serve French's Mustard with neats, too—use it in salad dressings ndwich fillings. French's is so creamy nds perfectly.

st selling prepared mustard in U. S. A. today
Also made in Canada

FREE!
NEW RECIPE BOOK

Send for new recipe booklet in full color, "Dining Delights". . . Thirty-two pages of practical suggestions to make food go further, meals taste more delicious!

Write to The R. T. French Company, 1509 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y., and booklet will be sent you FREE.

*Name*_____
(Please print)

*Address*_____

Miracle
"Tissuette"† made only by MUNSINGWEAR*

The most exciting foundation you'll ever wear! Weight...next to nothing! Slimming power...miraculous!
And every time you feel its sleekness, you'll thank the exclusive technique Munsingwear uses to knit their wonder-wisp "Tissuettes."
In a variety of styles, lengths and colors. Equally exciting...
Munsingwear's famed "Fan-Flair "bra.
All reasonably priced.
At fine stores everywhere.

†TRADEMARK *REG U S PAT OFF.

Also ask for Munsingwear Hosiery • Underwear • Sleeping-and-Lounging Wear

(Continued from Page 258)

"It's those—those wife things he wants in you," Alda said. "But he's afraid they'll bite him. . . . What am I doing, standing here trying to sell him to you?" She walked close to Betsy, to reach the door. She looked away. "So long."

"I see why Joel likes you," Betsy said. It was the best she could do.

Waiting a moment for Alda to go on ahead of her, she didn't look around the room. She didn't want to see his things and his room when he wasn't there. And presently she snapped out the lights and went away. She could leave a note for him at the desk. No, better, she'd go home and keep on phoning till she got him. Alda thought she was pretty weak and selfish. Probably Alda was right.

And now she knew that if she missed Joel, if he went away that night, she would follow him. Alda had given her one important thing: a humbleness she had never known before. Who started the idea that women should expect to be provided with a tidy house and a tidy life when they got married? Well, she knew better now.

She walked along the dark sidewalks, not seeing anything clearly, wanting only to get to her apartment and the phone. When she reached her own place, she climbed the stairs quickly. One more flight, one more turn.

She saw Joel, sitting on the top step. By the time he stood up, she had reached him. "I went to your place, looking for you," she told him.

He held on to her shoulders so tightly it hurt. "I drove around the block, and came back."

And then they were both sitting on the top step, and Joel held her hands, and she couldn't look away from him.

"We could go into my apartment," she said vaguely. "People will fall over us."

"Do them good, shake them up," said Joel. "Betsy, you've licked me. I couldn't say good-by. I couldn't keep on going anywhere away from you. How about apartment over by the river? How ab house with a lawn to mow?"

She was laughing now. "I couldn't to you. Are we going to take a boat plane?"

"Look out—we'll change places, and to fight all over again," he said.

"We could travel awhile, Joel. All places and jobs of yours. Maybe I'd w keep on. Or . . . maybe you'd like married, and want to put down some yourself. We could try your way fo years, and then come back and give m a try."

"Our personal five-year plan. L Betsy. It's a deal. Because I'm not to settle down yet. But—I promise we'll come back to stay. That's sure."

"Why, Joel?"

"Because you want that and need And if I can't live without you, then I' for you. Make me like it, Betsy."

"No business job," she told him. nine-to-five routine. We could do—oh, thing. We could go out west and prunes."

"Plums, you mean," Joel said, grinni her. "It's an idea."

"But first—we go away. All the p All the places you want," Betsy said.

He pulled something out of his pocke dropped it in her lap. It was the silv strainer, with the little carved dragon handle.

"You got it for me!" she exclaimed.

"You wanted it," he said.

She leaned against his shoulder, an she didn't have to send him away. His reached out and covered hers.

"We'll take it along on our travels, said. "And if we don't start back enough—if you want us to go Betsy ——"

"Yes?" she said.

"Well," said Joel, "just strain me of tea."

THE

Back and Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on Pages 66 and 67.

Vogue Design No. 6704. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 42; 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6723. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 34 waist; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 6690. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38; 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6724. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 40; 40c.
Vogue Junior Design No. 3263. Two-piece dress; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33; 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6716. "Easy-to-Make" jacket; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34); Large (36–38); 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6708. Evening skirt; 24 to 30 waist; 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6360. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 6217. "Easy-to-Make" jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 38; 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6440. Skirt, 24 to 32 waist; 40c.

How America Lives Patterns

Vogue Design No. S-4956. Two-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 38; $1.00.
Vogue Design No. 6563. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 40; 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6669. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38; 75c.

6704 6723 6690 6724 S-4956 6563 6669

3263 6716 6708 6360 6217

Printed in

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC
LIB.

April 1949 19

JOURNAL

The Magazine
Women
Believe In

Timeless Fashions

House of Storm

By Mignon G. Eberhart

How the New South Lives

By Thelma Strabel

RED ROPE MAGAZINE BINDER
Manufactured by GAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif

Journal Contents

ESTHER BUBLEY
(Photography, page 36)

"Wisconsin is my home state, but I attended the University of Minnesota and studied photography at the Minneapolis School of Art. Prospective employers there seemed of the opinion photography was a man's work, so I came to New York and started doing fashions and stills for Vogue Studios. At present I'm doing magazine and industrial photography. Illustrating the JOURNAL series on mental illness was the most interesting assignment I've had."

KENNETH P. KEMPTON

"I have taught writing at Harvard and Radcliffe for 35 years, holding the rank of lecturer. This is good because it allows students to call me any old thing instead of 'Professor.' But I almost never lecture. I try to get students to think and talk about writing, which is harder but more rewarding. I have written long and short stories and articles since getting out of the Navy in 1919. Finders Keepers (page 66) is No. 259, and it was just as hard to write, and just as much fun to sell, as No. 1."

NATHANIEL BENCHLEY
(Round Trip, page 50)

"Please return photo, as I filched it from my wife's dresser, and she probably will notice its absence in a month or two. For words to describe me, I'm stumped. Such material is usually (1) personal history, of interest to nobody except a psychiatrist; (2) a pseudo-humorous self-portrait, which the subject wishes he had never written the minute he sees it in print. I was graduated from Harvard in 1938, worked on newspapers and in the Navy. I'm 34."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ April, 1949
Vol. LXVI, No. 4

Complete-in-One-Issue Novel

34 House of Storm, Mignon G. Eberhart

Fiction

38 The Lure, Marjorie Carter
42 Special Story, James Yaffe
44 Company for Dinner, Florence Jane Soman
50 Round Trip, Nathaniel Benchley
52 Point of No Return (Conclusion), John P. Marquand
66 Finders Keepers, Kenneth Payson Kempton

Special Features

11 American and Un-American Social Security, Dorothy Thompson
11 Uncle Sam Has a Dirty Neck
31 The Woman I Admire Most, Judith Chase Churchill
36 What Is Mental Illness? Joan Younger
40 If You Ask Me, Eleanor Roosevelt
41 The Virgin With Saints, El Greco
64 People are People the World Over, John Godfrey Morris
116 The Pleasure of Childbirth, Betsy Marvin McKinney
205 How America Lives: Welcome to Floweracres, Thelma Strabel

General Features

4 Our Readers Write Us
14 Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty
23 Vocational Counselor . . . at Valdese High School
23 From School to Job, Margaret Hickey
25 Reference Library
26 Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams
28 That's What He Thinks (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Maureen Daly
33 Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town
142 Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox
176 Bringing Up Parents, Dr. Barbara Biber
199 Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber
247 Love, a Child's First Need, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
251 This is a Pointer-Outer, Munro Leaf

Fashions and Beauty

54 Hidden Possibilities, Dawn Crowell Norman
56 The Timeless Suit, Wilhela Cushman
57 Color Has a Thousand Ways to Charm . . . R. M. P.
58 White Organdy Bride, Wilhela Cushman
60 Fashion Finds of the Spring, Ruth Mary Packard
62 The Dress You Love Most, Nora O'Leary
189 A Touch of Spring, Marion Plummer
218 Around the Clock in Cottons, Nora O'Leary

Food and Homemaking

68 Spring's in the Air, Ann Batchelder
70 Line a Day, Ann Batchelder
100 Quick & Easys For Two, Louella G. Shouer
108 Kitchen Plus, Gladys Taber
122 Come Into My Kitchen, Mary Mok
212 A Thing of Beauty is a Job/Joy Forever, Margaret Davidson
216 Specialties of the House, Louella G. Shouer
228 Conversation Piece, Ruth Mills Teague
258 Help! Bugs, Margaret Davidson

Architecture, Interior Decoration, Garden

46 Brandon and Berkeley, Richard Pratt
214 Prize-Winning Flower Arrangements, Henrietta Murdock
234 Learn the Artistic Touch in Arranging Flowers, Henrietta Murdock
240 Barnyard Garden, Richard Pratt

Poetry

86 Jesse Stuart • 102 Robert P. Tristram Coffin • 115 Polly Toland
118 Ernestine Cobern Beyer • 127 Vincent McHugh • 139 Rhina P. Espaillat
153 Elizabeth McFarland • 161 Daniel Whitehead Hicky • 172 John Ackerson • 187 Ellen Borden • 195 Virginia Frances Joy • 203 G. M. White • 233 Gerta Kennedy • 253 Sara King Carleton

Cover Design by Al Parker

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1949 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada. SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance. UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed. The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Zicsing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Change of address: Send your Journal change of address to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

ean it

tect your health

suds ever could before!

More suds!
Mild-to-hands suds!

Shower!

icky any home-maker—who ousewives from coast to coast their soft absorbency ty cottons are so popular ingly or packaged.
o-welcome

Our Readers Write us

Does Cover Baby Look Like This?

New York City.

Dear Editors: Ever since our redhead arrived we have been intrigued with the little fellow on your cover. Since our

A model for Al Parker?

Stephen looks just like him from the rear, I thought you might like to see how he looks full face.

At seven months he weighs twenty-two pounds, has six teeth and a very happy disposition. How does he compare with Al Parker's "Sonny"? Sincerely,

MARGUERITE HOLT.

Standard practice with us, when we are asked to comment on friend's offspring, is to regard the infant for an appreciable time with silent awe. Then, as if we could contain ourselves no longer, we explode, "Some baby!" ED.

Sex in Modern Stories

La Crosse, Wisconsin.

Dear Editors: I've taken the JOURNAL fifty years and I'm stopping now. Why must all stories have sex someplace?

Sincerely,

MRS. W. F. BENTON.

Dissatisfied Reader

Magazines could, perhaps, get along without sex: the world would have a harder time. ED.

More Than Money

Logansport, Indiana.

Dear Editors: Articles proclaim at length the hardships, the long hours, the extra work, the worries, the social stigma of being a teacher. But they leave out the most important item—the joy of being a teacher!

I am a teacher, and I know. It is a great thrill to me to have the privilege of being teacher, mother, nurse and playmate combined to "my children."

Sincerely yours,

MARIAN C. TEETOR.

In a justifiable demand for increased salaries, many teachers find "joy of teaching" a banal expression; nevertheless, it is a pleasure to teach and all good teachers know it. ED.

Youth in Old Age

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Dear Editors: I am hoping sometime you will do an article about a middle-class, middle-aged couple, who have reared their children and perhaps helped with their grandchildren. I think there are many thousands of us, relaxed and rested a bit after the strenuous years, who are now b ginning to see through the mist. The yea of hard work, too little money, frustr tions, fears, disappointments, adjustmen and much good living leave many youth ful dreams unfulfilled. Maybe they aren dead and some of them are good. Perha in the ten, twenty or thirty years tha may yet be ours we should become so al sorbed in building up our measure of talen there would be no time for worrying o being depressed (two of my sins). I am no thinking of folks who have enough mone so that they have time on their hands. I'm thinking about people like my husban and me who have to finish paying off th mortgage, replace our shabby old car, i fact have to keep working to buy our dail bread—but we know now more surel than we did in our youth that "man doe not live by bread alone."

I am so grateful to the JOURNAL's pres ent editors. For a while before they took charge I thought it went down. I believe Edward Bok knows and approves th way Mr. and Mrs. Gould are carrying o his great work. I say "great" because i is—to inspire and educate as the LADIES HOME JOURNAL does.

Very sincerely yours,

MARY OHLSON

We hope Bok approves the Goulds. We know the Goulds approve Bok. ED.

Good Enough to Eat

Onarga, Illinois.

Dear Editors: We love the L. H. J., and the best part of it is Miss Batchelder's page of food. I have used many of her recipes for special entertaining and they never fail to steal the show. Sincerely, PEARL HERR.

Do Men Want Wives?

Knoxville, Tennessee.

Dear Editors: The number of women who are not entirely satisfied with their marriages suggests that:

1. Modern marriage is not so satisfactory as marriage was 50 years ago.
2. Modern women expect more of marriage than their grandmothers did.
3. Modern women are more articulate than their dissatisfied grandmothers.

Certainly men need to do their part to make marriage happier, but since they are usually tired of being bossed by their mothers, sisters and teachers by the time they get married, they are ordinarily stubborn and difficult to manage and must be approached from the blind side. For the mournful truth is that All Men Are Bachelors (a title for which I hope to write a story when none of the children is younger than seven; subtitle: All Most Men Want is to Be Let Alone).

Women, although more blessed than men with the capacity for social reform and the fine art of living, are ordinarily stubborn and difficult to manage, and must be sneaked up on from the blind side too. For the sad truth is that All Women Are Maidens—and for a few words of kindness, for affection and appreciation, what responsibility they will assume, what monotony endure, what love pour forth!

Very truly yours,

MRS. J. D. GOELTZ.

Men Read in Self-defense

San Diego, California.

Dear Editors: My mother was a subscriber for the very first JOURNAL, and up to the time of the cyclone in St. Louis we had the first copy. We could not keep house without the JOURNAL. My daughter and I quote its contents until the male members of the family have to read it in self-defense. Sincerely,

LOUISE WILLIAMS.

(Continued on Page 6)

dreft washes dishes so clean it helps protect your family's health as no suds ever could before!

Health Authorities say the way you wash dishes and the kind of suds you use, can mean the difference between sickness and health

• Danger may lurk in your dishpan. Doctors have found that germs breed in dishwater film. Even dishes you've washed and polished carefully can carry this film—can carry sickness to the very ones you wish to protect.

Dreft Leaves No Germ-Breeding Film

That's why Dreft actually helps protect your family's health. And this new way of dishwashing, made practical by DREFT, not only helps you safeguard those you care for—it is actually an easier, quicker, happier way of doing dishes!

New, Quick Dreft Way

Wash your dishes in Dreft's abundant, lasting suds. Give them a hot rinse (the hotter the better). Then let them drain dry. It's just as easy and quick as that!

So heed the warning of Health Authorities . . . help protect your family's health. Wash your dishes healthfully clean—with DREFT.

More suds! Mild-to-hands suds!

Have you ever wondered if you are as lovely as you could be—are you completely sure of your charm? Your deodorant can be the difference . . . and you will never know how lovely you can be until you use FRESH.

FRESH is so completely effective, yet so easy and pleasant to use . . . Different from any deodorant you have ever tried. Prove this to yourself with the free jar of creamy, smooth FRESH we will send you.

Test it. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for your free jar.

use FRESH and stay fresher

(Continued from Page 4)

More Than Any Sermon

Fresno, California.

Dear Editors: With the publication of John Gunther's Death Be Not Proud, the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL has reached a new significance. Not since the New Yorker magazine made a special edition of John Hersey's Hiroshima has a magazine rendered such a fine public service.

I have bought twenty-five issues of the February JOURNAL to distribute in my church (I only wish I could substitute it for my sermon, for it says more than I ever could say) and I intend to buy twenty-five or more copies for distribution among various Societies. It is a joyous duty for a minister to bring such witness to the grandeur of life and spirit to the attention of his congregation.

Our deepest thanks go out to Mr. Gunther and "Frances" for sharing his son's life . . . and death . . . with us. Because of this account alone Johnny has not lived, or died, in vain. Because of him others will strive toward valiancy.

Sincerely,
MIELS NIELSEN.

Everything a Girl Desires

Terre Haute, Indiana.

Dear Editors: I'm eleven years old and I love school, but I do think boys have more fun than girls, and I will admit I worry a lot about the war (by the way, I'm a girl). I like to collect things about baseball and I love to swim and skate, but most of all I love to watch a baseball game. I like to read funny comic books and baseball stories.

If I was a boy I would like to be, first, a baseball player. Second, I would like to be a comedian. Third, I would like to be a policeman. But since I'm a girl I would like to be a reporter, housewife or a Wave or Wac.

Lots of luck,
SHARON BABER.

Does Your Doctor Like You?

Alhambra, California.

Dear Editors: All of us discuss the qualities which make us like our doctors. Being married to one, I've heard the other side in case histories of people who try too hard to be good patients or are pests.

An ideal patient will be reasonably brave, but a doctor wants you to tell him when you're suffering and to feel that he will not consider it the insult direct if you ask for a consultation before a major operation. Make a list of symptoms, remembering that slight ones can sometimes be of great diagnostic value, and point to the spot that hurts. "Stomach" to the patient may mean various parts of the abdomen, and "throat," anything from an area just back of the tongue to a point so low the Johnston office would require covering.

There are perennial problem patients: those who don't follow instructions, miss appointments, buy new radios but can't pay their bills, make incredible demands (like the clinic patient who asked the doctor to cut his toenails!), come dirty, giggle, whine, or call at two A.M. for no good reason. There are women who pursue. There are grown-up babies, like the man who literally killed himself in two days by refusing to stand the minor postoperative discomforts of a restricted-liquid diet (he drank salt water from his ice bag), intravenous injections and blankets. He left a pregnant wife.

The worst are those who diagnose themselves or let neighbors and druggists do it, interpreting the uses of new drugs and procedures to suit; those who take their own medicines along with prescriptions without realizing that drugs interact (one heart case, on a no-salt diet, remained swollen with fluid for months before it was discovered he was taking baking soda daily); those who demand penicillin or X ray without regard to the ailment.

Modern doctors recognize hypochondria as an illness in its own right; of more concern are people who stay away from a doctor too long—even when they know they should go.

There are charming, co-operative people whom the doctors are delighted to see, hate to hurt and sometimes must grieve over. Even the habitually maddening patients can display a courage, strength and unconquerable humor which awe and make a doctor proud to serve.

Sincerely,
JERENE CLAIRE CLINE.

(Continued on Page 8)

if you're 5 ft. 6 in. and over

SKY-HI

Tall girls! Only Real-form makes a Raschel-Knit girdle just for you. Sky-Hi is extra long . . . stays up at top and down at bottom. It slims your thighs . . . does a super job of controlling and smoothing. Raschel-Knitted of Lastex and DuPont Rayon with satin lastex panels for up and down stretch.*

Sizes 26-32, tea rose and white, girdle or panty girdle.

Front and back panel for firm control $6

Front panel for gentle control $5

If not available at your local store write
REAL-FORM GIRDLE CO.,
358 Fifth Avenue, New York 1

*REG U S PAT OFF

20 other Real-form styles..for every figure type

Swim, sail, suntan in lovely lakelands

Autumn tints the ancient Laurentian hills

Golfing at Prince Albert National Park, Saskatchewan

Shop...sightsee...play over the border in Canada

You'll find colourful handicrafts, hand-loomed woollens . . . china . . . furs

7 VACATION "POINTERS" ... ALL POINTING TO CANADA

1. New, interesting—"foreign" atmosphere. 2. A million square miles of scenic playground. 3. Friendly cities, hospitable people. 4. Friends and relatives waiting to welcome you. 5. Lots to do—sports, recreation, sightseeing. 6. Near—easy to get to—no border "red tape". 7. Your vacation dollar buys more, goes further.

No Passport Needed.

CHOOSE A ROMANTIC new setting for this year's vacation. Help yourself to a million square miles of scenic playground . . . mountains and lakes . . . coastal shores and virgin woods . . . friendly summer colonies and casually smart resorts where you golf and swim, ride and relax.

Here, too, are cities with a foreign flavour: new sights to see, new things to do, old friends to visit, choice items to "pick up" on shopping expeditions. Plan your over-the-border vacation now. Write for detailed information, or use the coupon.

CANADA Vacations Unlimited

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL BUREAU
Ottawa, Canada — D. Leo Dolan, Director

Please send me your illustrated book
"CANADA, VACATIONS UNLIMITED."

Name . . . . . .
(PLEASE PRINT)

Street and No. . . . . . .

Town . . . . . State . . . 011164912

Are you in the know?

What would you do in this situation?

☐ Smile and switch ☐ Keep on dancing ☐ Play deaf

You're swaying on a dream-cloud with the prom Heathcliff. So? He's tagged by a stag. Sharp gals never refuse a cut-in; thus you smile and switch to the lethal lad. When your calendar tries to cut in on your bookings—switch to the comfort of the new Kotex. Talk about a dream-cloud! You'll find the new Kotex has downy softness that holds its shape for hours! Yes, because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it—dance after dance, you'll stay comfortable. (And so wonderfully self-assured!)

For the lowdown on that N.M.I.T.—

☐ Read his palm
☐ Pry into his past
☐ Ask your brother

Before dating a New Man In Town, owl up on his character. Tea leaves or palmistry won't help you, but you can depend on (guess who!)—your brother. Guys can size up guys, shrewdly. So ask your bro's advice about the mystery boy. As for girls, there are times when personal secrets must be kept. Then, depend on Kotex—to prevent revealing outlines. The special, flat pressed ends of Kotex don't show, don't tell! And that exclusive safety center gives you extra protection.

Which "shortens" kingsize tootsies?

☐ Shell pumps
☐ Buckles n' bows
☐ Dark-hued shoes

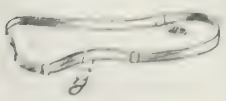
You haven't a Cinderella-size foot? Any answer mentioned above can keep you out of her step-sisters' class! Shell pumps, with low-cut vamps. Big silver or cut steel buckles or soft perky bows—to flatter your instep. Dark shoes, to make these tricks more effective. Choosing the style that's for you is important—and so (on certain days) is your choice of Kotex absorbencies. Try all 3: Regular, Junior, Super—see which answers your own needs best.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*



3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

—*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.—

How to prepare for "those" days?

☐ Be a blu gnu ☐ Break your dates ☐ Buy 2 sanitary belts

Brighten up! Freshen up! And why not be prepared with two Kotex Sanitary Belts—so you can change to a fresh belt when you change to dating togs? You see, the Kotex Belt is made to lie flat, without twisting or curling. It's all-elastic; doesn't bind. So, for extra comfort, buy the new Kotex Sanitary Belt. Buy two—for a change!

Kotex Sanitary Belt
Buy two—for a change!

(Continued from Page 6)

Something Worth a Long Look

Columbus, Ohio.

Dear Editor: What do men notice about women? It's a matter of age, my boy, a matter of age.

Fifty or more years ago, I took a quick glance at face and eyes, and a long, long look at—ahem!—their legs, if worth a long look. Now I look to see reflected in eyes and faces what the years between have taught.

Very truly,
H. R. BOWDEN.

No person is really responsible for how he looks at 20—at 60, a woman's face is what she has made it, for good or ill.
ED.

How to Reduce Hips

La Grange, Illinois.

Dear Editors: I thought you might like to pass on to your women readers a marvelous way to reduce large hips. By accident (or should I say because of tender knees?) I stumbled upon this secret. Instead of getting down on my knees to wash baseboards and floors, I stand and bend over to do the job. This requires a lot of bending up and down. It sure does the trick! Yes, I dieted, but dieting didn't do the whole job. From my waistline up I didn't lose in proportion to the ten inches that disappeared from my hips.

Yours most sincerely,
MRS. M. LAMBERT.

Lifelong Friend

Ellsworth, Wisconsin.

Dear Editors: I've had the JOURNAL since I was eighteen, and I'm now seventy-six. I still love it.

Sincerely,
EMMA S. HANSEN.

The Other Cheek

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England.

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: The German prisoner who worked for so long in my garden has gone home to the Russian Zone. "To be a prisoner of war in England was better than it is to be a free man here," he writes. He cannot go back to his own profession, and I gather he has to be very careful what he says. They have in their one room only an oil lamp, in which they have to burn crude oil. His little girl has had neither stockings nor boots for three years. Only one happiness they have: A new baby is to arrive shortly. So, in this mad world where everything seems topsy-turvy, I am now knitting madly for the offspring of my late enemy, wondering rather apprehensively whether I might divert a layette some kind person is sending me from America, in this direction. However badly off some of us are, we are not as badly off as these poor people now are, and I remember that Marshall Aid is to be no respecter of persons. But I can't help remembering the letters I had after you published that German-prisoner story of mine, so many of them implying our duty over here was not to turn the other cheek, but spit in their eye.

I have just heard the most ingenious way of getting more foreign currency to spend abroad than we are lawfully allowed. A great deal of ingenuity is going on thinking up these kinds of schemes today—the only bright spot being so few have any chance of putting them to work. You apply for permission to export a dog, which I gather isn't very difficult, and the dog must be of the female sex, well bred and mated to one of her own kind. You so arrange matters that she brings forth soon after you arrive in France, Switzerland or Italy, and there you have five or six dogs to dispose of, but only one you need account for. Neat, ain't it?

Love to you all,
DOROTHY BLACK.

Magnetic Personality

Mohamedi Manzil,
Mohammedali Road,
Bombay.

Dear Editors: The magazine women believe in has a magnetic attraction to a humble folk of male species like myself. I always run to read it.

Truthfully yours,
ZEINOOL T. BANDUKWALA.

OVER 30?
"YOU CAN LOOK YOUNGER!
says
HELENA RUBINSTEI

Estrogenic Hormone Cream

"Time writes no wrinkle" on th face that uses Estrogenic Hormon Cream! For Helena Rubinstei with her long research in Estr genic Hormones has locked int this most luxurious of creams thi vital ingredient which restores t aging skins the substance tha makes young skins glow. Her sc entific experiments proved tha constant use of this modern miracle cream can retard the loo of aging skin!

If you're over thirty—if you'r in your 40's, 50's, 60's, this is th one cream you should never b without to help prevent an smooth out the lines you deplore

Use ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREA faithfully for 30 consecutive days See how quickly your skin look younger, firmer, fresher!

ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM 3.5
ESTROGENIC HORMONE OIL . 5.0
for younger looking throat

prices plus tax

helena rubinstein
655 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N. Y

I never saw your hair so Pretty

IF YOU WANT OTHERS to admire your hair . . . if you want to keep it looking its healthy best . . . be on guard against infectious dandruff which can so quickly play hob with it.

Simply make Listerine Antiseptic and massage a part of regular hair-washing routine as countless fastidious women do (men, too.) It's simple, delightful, efficient.

Infectious dandruff is often easy to catch, hard to get rid of. You can pick it up from seat backs in cars and buses, or in trying on a hat, or from a borrowed comb. Its early symptoms—flakes and scales—are a warning not to be ignored. You see, infectious dandruff is usually accompanied by the "bottle bacillus" (P. ovale). Many dermatologists look upon it as a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

Listerine Antiseptic kills the "bottle bacillus" by millions on scalp and hair. That's why it's such a wonderful precaution against infectious dandruff . . . why you should make it a part of your regular hair-washing —no matter what kind of shampoo you use.

Even when infectious dandruff has a head start, twice-a-day use of Listerine Antiseptic is wonderfully helpful. Flakes and scales begin to disappear, itching is alleviated, and your scalp feels marvelously clean from that antiseptic action. In clinical tests, twice-a-day use brought marked improvement in dandruff symptoms within a month to 76% of dandruff sufferers.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL CO., St. Louis, Mo.

★

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC
for
INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF

THE TREATMENT—Women: Part hair, all over the scalp, and apply Listerine Antiseptic with fingertips or cotton. Rub in well. Carefully done, it can't hurt your wave. Men: Douse full-strength Listerine Antiseptic on the scalp. Follow with good, vigorous massage. Listerine Antiseptic is the same antiseptic that has been famous in the field of oral hygiene for over 60 years.

What a thrilling difference in your skin with your First Cake of Camay

There's magic in a lovely skin! The magic of love and romance! And how thrilling to know that your skin can be softer and smoother with your first cake of Camay!

Give up careless cleansing. Go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested Camay care on scores of women.

And almost all won lovelier complexions—each using one cake of Camay. Test Camay yourself—the directions on the wrapper show the way to greater beauty.

Read about this Lovely Bride

Cathie's childhood dreaming place was High Point, on the Appalachian Trail near her home. The first day she and Carlo Adams climbed up there, all her dreams came true. He proposed!

Cathie's satin-smooth complexion is something to see! It's so clear—it actually glows with beauty! She says: "My very first cake of Camay brought out the natural loveliness of my skin!"

MRS. CARLO ADAMS
a beautiful Camay Bride of Monroe, New York portrait painted by James Ays

Married a month — Carlo remembered that "first anniversary" with a red, red rose! And Cathie can't forget what nice things Camay has done for her. She's on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet forever!

Camay

THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

Ladies' Home Journal

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, Editors

Uncle Sam Has a Dirty Neck

KEEPING physically clean is a topic for family conversation only when the children forget to wash their hands before dinner. In well-scrubbed society, sanitation is seldom mentioned; but when it concerns the strength and health of a nation, perhaps it ought to be. In this cleanest of all countries, how sanitary are we? Are we getting any cleaner?

In April, 1850, Lemuel Shattuck, a distinguished Bostonian, completed the first comprehensive sanitary survey of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts "in order to ascertain the causes which favorably or unfavorably affect the health of its inhabitants." His report revealed the inadequate public sanitation of that time. He was the first in this country to dramatize the need for better housing, better water supply and sewerage, preventing stream pollution, improving refuse disposal, public-health education and other aspects of preventive medicine.

The reason for public interest in such matters is obvious: in problems of sanitation and public health no one is an island unto himself. Progress has been made since that Shattuck survey, but not enough to match the needs of a growing population and cumulative sanitation neglect.

A Nation-wide Inventory of Sanitation Needs, published in Supplement No. 204 of Public Health Reports, shows that 6000 communities in this country still lack any public water works; more than 9000 communities need sewerage systems; more than 33,000,000 people in rural areas lack satisfactory sewerage facilities of even the simplest types; about 70,000,000 people in 8300 communities need modern facilities for collecting and disposing of garbage and other municipal refuse; the past decade has seen a major deterioration in modern water supply and sewerage facilities in our metropolitan centers. In the very capital of the United States, approximately 100,000 persons still draw their drinking water from yard hydrants and rely on privies.

In many respects sanitary conditions in this country are worse than they were 100 years ago. According to Dr. Abel Wolman, Professor of Sanitary Engineering at Johns Hopkins University, "it is doubtful whether there is a single stream today that has not deteriorated in a major sense in its quality since 1849. There is not a single city in which housing conditions are not essentially worse than those at which the Shattuck report directed severe criticism. There is not a city in which the conditions of the atmosphere are not immeasurably worse than when Mr. Shattuck leveled his attack at this phase of the environment."

In making the world a better place to live in, here is a problem which does not require working with abstractions and uncertainties. It is something on which every City Father and just plain father (and mother) can lay hands and go to work.

American and Un-American Social Security

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

THERE is far too great a tendency in our country to approach every question in a partisan spirit, to make alignments according to labels, to make words into magical fetishes, and to try to categorize public persons and public measures as being for or against righteousness.

Among the words which have been imbued with white-magical power are "liberal" and "progressive," while in contrast the words "conservative" and "reactionary" appear in a black-magical light—so black, indeed, that few would admit the adjectives as applicable to themselves.

All these words have, by the form of their use, been deprived of any exactitude of meaning. The word "liberal," if it retains any part of its original meaning, indicates devotion to liberty and to a humanistic society. The word "progressive" has been given an entirely endowed meaning. It is associated with progress, which means movement forward; and that certain movements forward are bound to prove, in the long run, good for society is taken for granted. This despite the fact that while we speak favorably of progressive education and progressive politics, we also speak of progressive tuberculosis and progressive insanity.

The tyranny of words, with their constantly shifting overtones of good or evil, modern or old-fashioned, thus dulls our perception of what is being done or advocated in their name.

Actually, the words "liberal" and "progressive" are at this time adjectives used to lend a rosy aura to just one program: an ever-increasing control of the Federal Government over the incomes, expenditures and lives of an ever-increasing number of the population. Those who oppose this are "reactionaries," although the whole previous history of liberalism has recorded revolts against the power of the state over the people.

And although our forefathers, apparently better philosophically trained, always drew a sharp distinction between the state and the people and were well aware that the power of the state is always aggrandized at the cost of the people, the tyranny of words has helped to mask this fact and make the state appear as synonymous with the people and representative of the highest beneficence toward them.

(Continued on Page 12)

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman • Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Lonnie Coleman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary • Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey • Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Dorothy Counselman Selby, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Jeanne Scribner • Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Cynthia McAdoo, Eleanor Pownall Simmons, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Plummer, Lois Witherspoon, Philippa Herman, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth McFarland, Polly Toland, Leone Seastrom, Elizabeth Crawford, Elizabeth Goetsch, Joan Aucourt, Marthedith F. Stauffer.

Economy cake goes Easter-elegant with BAKER'S COCONUT!

IT'S EASTER—and your heart says, "Make a lovely cake!" while your budget says, "Go easy!" But luscious Baker's Coconut can help you do both!

First, make your most economical cake and frost as shown above. Then drift it high with tender, snow-white Baker's Coconut. And behold—an Easter Glory Cake!

Baker's Coconut is now in stores everywhere. Use it often to glorify thrifty desserts! On fruits, Jell-O, custards, rice pudding, salads.

Products of General Foods

CHOCOLATE PIE. Make Jell-O Chocolate Pudding with 1¾ cups milk. Add ½ cup Baker's Coconut. Cool. Turn into pie shell. Top with meringue, sprinkle with crunchy-fresh Baker's Coconut and brown!

NEW RECIPE BOOK! Send for colorful, idea-packed "Coconut Glamour Desserts." Yours for only 10¢! Address Baker's Coconut, Box B 49, Battle Creek, Mich.

AMBROSIA. Combine snowy Baker's Coconut and cut-up Sunkist Oranges.

Bread Pudding. Top with luscious Baker's Coconut instead of cream.

Cold Cereal. Sprinkle with coconut. Kids love it!

This is made possible by the humanitarian arguments by which all extensions of the number and power of state functionaries are advanced. The New Order is to be a "welfare state," looking after the lives of its children from the cradle to the grave. This state is made to appear in the role of a benevolent parent protecting its little ones.

That the state of itself has no resources whatever for taking care of anyone is not, of course, emphasized. The state itself cannot feed, clothe or house its own functionaries. These, and all institutions conducted by the state—education, defense, courts, penal institutions, welfare services—are supported and paid for, not by the labor of the state but by the labor of the people. The state is entirely at the receiving end, taking the fruits of labor and returning them in one form or another minus overhead charges. The overhead charges are the costs of bureaucracy and bureaucratic institutions, which are entirely parasitic on working society.

By common consent the state is a necessity. By common consent there are social tasks which can be accomplished only through the taxation power of the state and through state institutions. No thoughtful person will pretend that a public-school system is the best way to educate children through primary and secondary grades. The contrary is proved by the choice of private schools for their children by parents who can afford them, and by the better preparation of these children for institutions of higher learning. But nobody can think of how all children can obtain the rudiments, at least, of an education except through a public-school system.

Similarly, everyone recognizes that only the institutions of the state can provide for the national defense—though so far in its history the people have prevented the entire male youth from being turned over for a year or more to the armed forces, in peacetimes.

> No folly is more costly than the folly of intolerant idealism. —WINSTON CHURCHILL.

We recognize, without question, that it is the function of the state—Federal, state or local—to preserve the public domain, to build roads, to take measures to conserve the soil even when it is in private hands, to prevent floods, to dispose of refuse, to take financial measures calculated to balance the economy, and, when employment is slowing down from lack of confidence of capital, to revivify the economy by public works, and to care for those who, from whatever infirmities, are unable to care for themselves.

But always, in our American history—and until recently among all English-speaking peoples—we have opposed turning over to the state anything that can be done by the people themselves, as individuals or organized groups. The American mind never accepted the idea that there was some moral superiority or superefficiency in the activities of state functionaries over private persons, or privately organized groups. And, indeed, experience, on the whole, showed the contrary.

It is a revision of this attitude which is new—not new in the world, but new in America: to attach special prestige, benevolence or superiority to anything undertaken by the state, and to turn over to the state ever-increasing control over everyone's personal income, all in the name of "social security." The process by which this is done is to tax all current earnings on the promise of future benefits and as insurance against future hazards—of unemployment, old age and, now, illness.

Now, many arguments are made for and against these measures, along the line-up "Progressive" versus "Reactionary"—in modern translation, "Righteous" versus "Unrighteous." But, if a small voice may say so, what is actually progressing is that people retain fewer and fewer of their earnings, have less and less money to provide for their own security and receive in return dubious benefits.

If a man takes out a well-drawn [in]surance policy for the benefit of him[self] his family, its accumulation pays [in]terest; he can suspend payments [at] times by lengthening maturity, a[nd] pay it up entirely or accelerate its m[at] in good years; he can borrow again[st] an emergency; he can draw an incom[e] it in his old age; and if he dies its fac[e] is paid in cash to his family.

No state insurances have any [of] features. They pay no interest on t[he] ital invested; they cannot be delayed celerated; and they can be drawn [on] for only a single purpose. If any company offered such policies, it wou[ld] few takers.

If an earner saves money and in[vests] in a house, in an area of low taxes, h[e] antees himself a roof over his head ar[d] the possibility of income. The fam[ily] double up and take a boarder, for in[stance] If he saves money and invests it in [a farm] of land, he can, with his own industry the land support, or partially suppo[rt] If even he buys an automobile, he c[an] der necessity, turn it into a taxi; an[d] merely puts his savings into a savings it will eventually double at compou[nd] terest.

THESE are only a few of the ways Americans, time out of mind, hav[e] vided for themselves. The Americ[an] sumption has been that the average ican family can conduct its own affa[irs] spend and invest its money more effi[ciently] than the state can. And this must, in [the] be so, since every adult person best his own needs and his own talents.

Now it is pr[oposed] that every An[erican] must be compulso[rily] sured by the [state] against illness, an[d] vided by the stat[e] medical treatment ill, this care to b[e] for out of a tax on pay rolls. L[et us] entirely aside the arguments of ican physicians as to what this coll[ectivi] bureaucratization of medicine has to medical standards wherever tried ing out of account the burden that th[is] ple always bear, under such syste[ms] malingerers and hypochondriacs—w[hile] American people get their money's in return for a sum extracted from pay check?

From long and intimate acquai[ntance] with this form of state medicine in many and Austria, I can answer: The not. And admitting that serious ill are often family catastrophes, coul[d] be better helped in other ways?

Certainly. Americans have helped selves over costs of hospitalization by schemes, in which the payments a[re] than $40 a year for the entire family have helped themselves from becom[ing] by more intelligence in nutrition and ing. And there are many ways in whi[ch] state could help them, not by taki[ng] medicine and all the people under reaucracy, but by helping people to themselves.

The state can and should expa[nd] public-health services; it can and s[hould] give grants-in-aid to poorer states for ing, especially in rural areas, moder[n] pitals, open to all qualified physicians. turn for a certain number of hours per of genuinely free care to the really ind[igent] Poor people don't need taxes on pay c[hecks] They need charity and mercy. Ame[rican] physicians of the very highest capaciti already giving $1,000,000 per day i[n] services, and with widened opportu[nity] would give more.

When people are ill they need m[edical] Much financial distress from illness from having to pay doctors' bills, but losing wages. No doctor can help any over a common cold or through a viru[s] One needs to stay in bed, in order n[ot] get pneumonia. State medicine won't the victims of such illnesses that cost t[he]

(Continued on Page 121)

"Conversation Pieces" from the K

Shrimp star salad

Easter Ham "Eggcitement"

WHY don't you plant a bright border of Easter flowers around the platter that holds the resplendent Swift's Premium Ham? They're edible posies . . . of tinted Swift's Brookfield Eggs and cucumber (or parsley). To reveal all the matchless flavor of Swift's Premium, follow the easy cooking directions on the tag that comes with every ham. Then under that crackling, golden glaze each rosy slice will be juicy and tender . . . with the distinctive mild-yet-zesty flavor that never varies. Year after year you can count on this unchanging perfection . . . from Swift's Brown Sugar Cure and special way of smoking the hams over hardwood fires. You know at first taste why Swift's Premium is America's traditional favorite . . . by far the best-liked ham of all!

Details from your dealer!

. . . The good-to-eat flowers are simple to make. Ask your meat dealer for free printed instructions when you order your Easter ham . . . or write Martha Logan, Dept. PH-1, Swift & Company, Chicago, Illinois.

2 STYLES! Blue Label for easy cooking at home; Red Label for ham that's fully cooked, ready to eat.

ter feasting—
il favorite Ham

True mayonna at its finest

made with really choice ingredients, including pure

Easter Glory Cake

Make a thrifty two-egg cake using recipe on Swans Down Cake Flour box. Then go Easter-elegant with this luscious, fluffy Baker's Coconut frosting. De luxe eating—at very little cost!

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
⅓ cup water
2 teaspoons light corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups Baker's Coconut

Follow frosting directions on Baker's Coconut package. Spread on cake and sprinkle with flavor-fresh Baker's Coconut. Fill nests in coconut with jelly beans.

Economy cake goes Easter-elegant with BAKER'S COCONUT!

IT'S EASTER—and your heart says, "Make a lovely cake!" while your budget says, "Go easy!" But luscious Baker's Coconut can help you do both!

First, make your most economical cake and frost as shown above. Then drift it high with tender, snow-white Baker's Coconut. And behold—an Easter Glory Cake!

Baker's Coconut is now in stores everywhere. Use it often to glorify thrifty desserts! On fruits, Jell-O, custards, rice pudding, salads.

Products of General Foods

CHOCOLATE PIE. Make Jell-O Chocolate Pudding with 1¾ cups milk. Add ½ cup Baker's Coconut. Cool. Turn into pie shell. Top with meringue, sprinkle with crunchy-fresh Baker's Coconut and brown!

NEW RECIPE BOOK! Send for colorful, idea-packed "Coconut Glamour Desserts." Yours for only 10¢! Address Baker's Coconut, Box B 49, Battle Creek, Mich.

AMBROSIA. Combine snowy Baker's Coconut and cut-up Sunkist Oranges.

Bread Pudding. Top with luscious Baker's Coconut instead of cream.

Cold Cereal. Sprinkle with coconut. Kids love it!

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

Before . . . spring tonic . . . after

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

HUNTERS claim that the bighorn sheep are the most difficult animals on the North American continent to stalk. Their eyes are equal to man's plus a fine pair of six-power glasses. They live on inaccessible peaks. And they are very clever. According to Andrew Russell, student of wild animal life, they actually play organized games. Some friends of his saw a remarkable exhibition through binoculars. High on a mountain crag stood a ewe, below her a steep, hard snowdrift which ran down a hundred yards and then a precipice which dropped off sheer into airy space. At first alone, the ewe was soon joined by a group of lambs and young rams—her children and no doubt her grandchildren. Then, to the amazement of the binocular watchers, she jumped down into the snowdrift with her feet set, sliding straight for disaster, and, when only a matter of feet from the lip of the cliff and a terrible plunge to a sure death, made a four-legged Christi turn, and began climbing back again as fast as she could to the crag she had come from. One after another the rest of the group followed her glissade, each making that turn on the edge and climbing back for another try. They were still at it when it got too dark for the watchers to see.

•

L. H. J. readers, and Philadelphians in particular, will be interested to read QUEEN STREET STORY, a novel by Anne Paterson, a JOURNAL editor, about old Philadelphia. It is the story of a young doctor in the 1880's working in the seaport section of the city—with fascinating details about the medical practice of that day and about the dramatic life of the water front.

•

"I know a woman who is without superlatives, perhaps because she is herself superlative," writes Burges Johnson in THE LOST ART OF PROFANITY. "When most deeply moved she says nothing, though her eyes betray her. Her silences are generally so eloquent they force others into a silence of sympathy or of puzzled respect. Just as graphic artists have learned the value of white space, she too has learned it or has instinctively known it always. Her most emphatic sentences are in low tones surrounded by margins of white silence, and others pause to listen."

Ugh! She is the kind that other women thoroughly dislike. She's affected or she suffers from super self-satisfaction. But a man would fall for those long silences. He'd take them as a personal tribute. . . . Otherwise THE LOST ART OF PROFANITY is quite a book—scholarly and wise and filled with neat examples. What, wonders Doctor Johnson, would the unsophisticated visitor from Mars think of the heroic-type salesmanship with which we surround ourselves:

"With a taunt in her smile and a haunt in his kiss."

"She's murder bait—tempting, tantalizing, beautiful!"

"A story of exquisite yearning comes to the screen to storm your heart with drama and magnificent adventure. . . in fabulous Technicolor!"

Jonathan Swift suggested two hundred years ago that there might be a therapeutic value to swearing, since it vented spleen which might otherwise

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"As soon as I washed his mouth out with soap he said it again . . . but that time I couldn't blame him."

Easter Ham "Eggcitement"

WHY don't you plant a bright border of Easter flowers around the platter that holds the resplendent Swift's Premium Ham? They're edible posies . . . of tinted Swift's Brookfield Eggs and cucumber (or parsley). To reveal all the matchless flavor of Swift's Premium, follow the easy cooking directions on the tag that comes with every ham. Then under that crackling, golden glaze each rosy slice will be juicy and tender . . . with the distinctive mild-yet-zesty flavor that never varies. Year after year you can count on this unchanging perfection . . . from Swift's Brown Sugar Cure and special way of smoking the hams over hardwood fires. You know at first taste why Swift's Premium is America's traditional favorite . . . by far the best-liked ham of all!

Details from your dealer!

. . . The good-to-eat flowers are simple to make. Ask your meat dealer for free printed instructions when you order your Easter ham . . ., or write Martha Logan, Dept. PH-1, Swift & Company, Chicago, Illinois.

2 STYLES! Blue Label for easy cooking at home; Red Label for ham that's fully cooked, ready to eat.

High note for Easter feasting—
America's traditional favorite

Swift's Premium Ham

The Wise Wife Buys Waxtex!

Easy-to-Use
FOOD SAVER!

Waxtex is waxed through and on both sides to protect against air, drying out, moisture, odors. Wrap all foods in Waxtex for lasting freshness and flavor!

FUMBLE-PROOF
Dispenser Box

This wise wife saves time, avoids lost motion with the fumble-proof Waxtex dispenser box—the roll just can't pull out! Protected metal cutting edge gives easy, even tear. Lift flap—Waxtex is always at your finger tips.

(Continued from Page 14)

be harmful to the human system, and H. W. Bibbier, philosopher and scientist, supports his theory. "The Japanese," says Bibbier, "are less given to profanity than any other race on earth. Under emotional stress they remain silent. This pent-up emotion probably accounts in some degree for their readiness to commit suicide."

•

With unforgivable carelessness this column told an anecdote about an ancestress of Dorothy Canfield Fisher in which the pioneer woman "got out of the wagon at every stop." "Not much!" writes Dorothy Canfield. "This was 1764, and in the untracked heart of the virgin forest. Those lively young settlers who were the first Vermonters came in on horseback, over a narrow, winding Indian hunters' trail, the only path in all that region. There were mighty few wagons anyhow in the American colonies in the middle of the 18th century, for the good reason that there were mighty few roads." The anecdote was about the earlier Canfield lady seeking soft water, and in her note, D.C.F. adds: "We have always laid the prodigiously sound Canfield health to drinking that pure soft water."

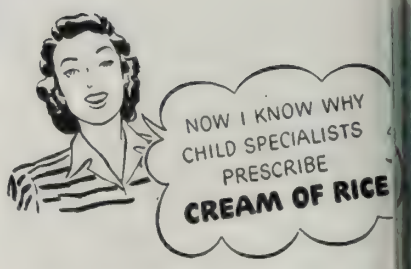
•

Double Muscadine, by Frances Gaither, is one of those mysteries that you can enjoy doubly because it is literature besides. "My goodness, Br' Kirk, you needn't be as polite as all that," Sis Hat said once as, coming in weary from hog-killing labors, she sank into the chair he sprang to set for her. "Hit's like it wears a body out to be always saying thank-you to homefolks." This may sound like hillbilly talk, but Sis Hat and her brother-in-law Kirk McLean are the aristocracy of Waverley, the finest cotton plantation in their part of Mississippi. This was back before the Civil War, when that state was coming into her glory, and slavery was a respected institution. The story concerns the trial of Aimée, a beautiful slave girl from New Orl*eens*, who had strangely enough become the cook at Waverley. She is accused of poisoning the young son of Kirk McLean, and of trying to poison the whole white household. It is an absorbing tale.

•

Come spring—"when well apparel'd April on the heel of limping winter treads"—birds and baseball players get ready for the fray. According to

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S
by Sydney Hoff



"DiMaggio, Ruth, Greenberg—they've all struck out with bases full."

scientific count, a mother wren between dawn and sunset of one day fed her babies 1217 times!

•

Maurice Hindus, traveler in Europe and Russia, commentator on people and conditions under process of political

(Continued on Page 18)

1. QUICKER NUTRITION
2. MORE ENERGY
3. EASIER TO DIGEST

3 advantages over any wheat, oat, or baby cereal

Gives more nutrition faster. New life begins to pour into the system in a few minutes! Gives more energy! And...Vitamin B_1 B_2 and Niacin are added—plus iron—for rich, red blood and better growth! Is easier to digest! Many doctors recommend Cream of Rice as one of baby's first cereals.

*Test data available upon professional request.

READY IN ONLY 5 MINUTES!

FOR EXTRA RICH BROWN DELICIOUS
GRAVY

Use
KITCHEN Bouquet

Here's the gravy secret good cooks have known for over 70 years—Kitchen Bouquet offers the easy, never-fail way to get extra rich, brown, delicious gravy! Kitchen Bouquet adds no artificial flavor—simply steps up true, rich meat taste. Helpful recipe folder with every bottle.

YOU CAN BE SURE..IF IT'S

Westinghouse

NEW! COLDER COLD MADE POSSIBLE BY THE EXCLUSIVE AUTOMATIC HOLD-COLD CONTROL

NEW "ARISTOCRAT-10" (Left)
The prize of all Refrigerator-Freezers! Oversize, full-width Freeze Chest freezes food, or stores over 43 pounds. Holds an extra 13 pounds in the Ice Cube Storage Tray. Butter Keeper, Meat Keeper, adjustable shelves.

NEW "DE LUXE-11" (Right)
Stores 35 pounds of frozen foods, besides actually freezing foods. Special Meat Keeper, 2 large, extra-deep Humidrawers for fruits and vegetables, and plenty of shelf space.

THERE'S NEVER BEEN ANYTHING LIKE IT BEFORE! This marvelous, new HOLD-COLD CONTROL gives you the intense, COLDER COLD in the Freezer that keeps frozen foods safely . . . freezes them more swiftly . . . makes ice cubes faster . . . holds ice cream firm and smooth.

IT AUTOMATICALLY HOLDS TEMPERATURES STEADY AND SAFE in the Main Food Compartment. Gives moist cold only where needed . . . for fruits and vegetables . . . keeps them market-fresh.

WINTER OR SUMMER . . . NOTHING TO TURN . . . nothing to touch! The HOLD-COLD CONTROL automatically adjusts to temperatures selected, regardless of outside climate, humidity or temperature.

EVERY HOUSE NEEDS A

Westinghouse Refrigerator

SEE THEM AT YOUR RETAILER'S

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION • APPLIANCE DIVISION • MANSFIELD • OHIO

TUNE IN TED MALONE . . . EVERY MORNING, MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY . . . ABC NETWORK

(Continued from Page 16)

change, has now visited the critical areas of the Near East. IN SEARCH OF A FUTURE is his most interesting comment upon Persia, Egypt, Iraq and Palestine. He leaves politics pretty much alone, and pays heed instead to agriculture, a subject on which he is especially knowing, having been brought up on a farm in Russia and worked on a farm in upstate New York when he came to this country.

What the Jews have accomplished in Palestine is the solution, he is certain, of the misery and low standard of living of the other nations of that region.

"No Moses guided by divine inspiration has struck with the rod," says he. "The Jews have hunted for water, have dug for it, have lifted it to the surface. They have cleared the pestilential swamps, all but one, and have vanquished the malaria-carrying mosquito which for centuries has been the scourge of the Arab population of the country." He quotes Lawrence of Arabia, writing thirty years ago about Jewish achievement in Palestine: "The success of their scheme will involve inevitably the raising of the present Arab population to their own material level, only a little after themselves in point of time, and the consequences might be of the highest importance for the future of the Arab world." However deep their enmity for Israel at the moment, Hindus adds, the Arabs can no more disregard its successful solution of problems identical to their own "than a sick man can disregard the penicillin a physician prescribes for him because it cured a neighbor whom he hates."

After all, there is nothing the Jews have done that the Mohammedans cannot do too. What about Spain made into a peninsula of fertility under the Moors, for some four hundred years, and dried up into a desert again under the Castilians?

•

Two practical books, of varying importance, have come in to this desk this month. A MANUAL FOR BABY SITTERS,

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S
by Perry Barlow

"Oh, dear! Our sitter is going to have a baby!"

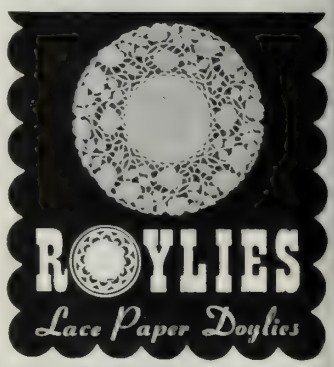
by Marion Lowndes, could be subtitled "A Manual for Grandmas." What to do with the baby left in one's care, what songs to sing to him, what games to play as he toddles, what book to read when he can understand, besides what to give him to eat at any age, and what telephone numbers to call in emergencies, is gathered together compactly and sensibly. The big impact for us was that there is a course for baby sitters! Yes, and its director, Gladys Romanoff, writes the foreword to the book! (Little Brown and Co., Boston, Mass.)



The other very valuable book is DIABETIC MENUS, MEALS AND RECIPES,

(Continued on Page 21)

How to give every me
...more appeal!

Give every meal an inviting look wi
crisp, white lace-paper Roylie place ma
Use matching Roylies under glasses, d serts, etc. Beautiful as real linen. Cost l than laundering of linens. Get Roylies every meal in many shapes, sizes, patter
At 5 and 10's, naborhood, dept. sto

Trade Mark "Royledge" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

The Most Beautiful, Colore
POPULAR-PRICED Curtains in Americ

The magnificent, colorful Beacon Luxury Sheer, illustrated, headlines a diversified array of Beacon-Net Curtains for spring. Lovely, lacy textures with beautifully colored patterns. All washable. At fine stores, or write for your dealer's name. Beacon Looms, Inc., Dept. J, 261 Fifth Ave., New York.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

beacon-nets washable curtains
FOR EVERY ROOM IN THE HOME

Spring blooms in these rooms!

Dine and shine in this Daystrom room that sings a song of Spring. You'll live lightheartedly with this new dining set, for every bright inch swishes clean with a damp cloth! The dinner-for-eight-size table is trimly topped with long-wearing, work-sparing plastic, gay as a daffodil. Two center extensions slip swiftly in when extra company comes. Woods-green Duran covers the comfort-curved chairs. All Daystrom furniture is designed for modern living, in superb chrome electroplated on sturdy steel. Thrift-priced at department and furniture stores everywhere. Dining sets, 4 chairs, from $49.95* to $144.50*. Host chair, $19.95*.

Three for tea? Anyone can cultivate a social swinging of the gate with this settee that's made for three. It's new—in three units! Deep, restful springs invite carefree lounging. And it's so easy to keep the washable Duran fresh and new—the chromed surfaces shining as sixpence! New, too, is the rakish little red roll-away that makes serving so simple. Perfect for parties and like an extra pair of hands in the dining room. 3-piece settee, $134.50*. Roll-away, $24.95*.

Don't worry! All Daystromite table tops are laminated plastic—resist heat, scratches, stains! They're even cigarette-proof!

-it's DAYSTROM furniture!

DAYSTROM
AN ASSOCIATE

Furniture for casual living—featured by stores from coast to coast

DAYSTROM CORPORATION, Olean, N. Y. • Daystrom Pacific Corporation, Pasadena, Calif.

Prices higher in West and South. Subject to change without notice.*

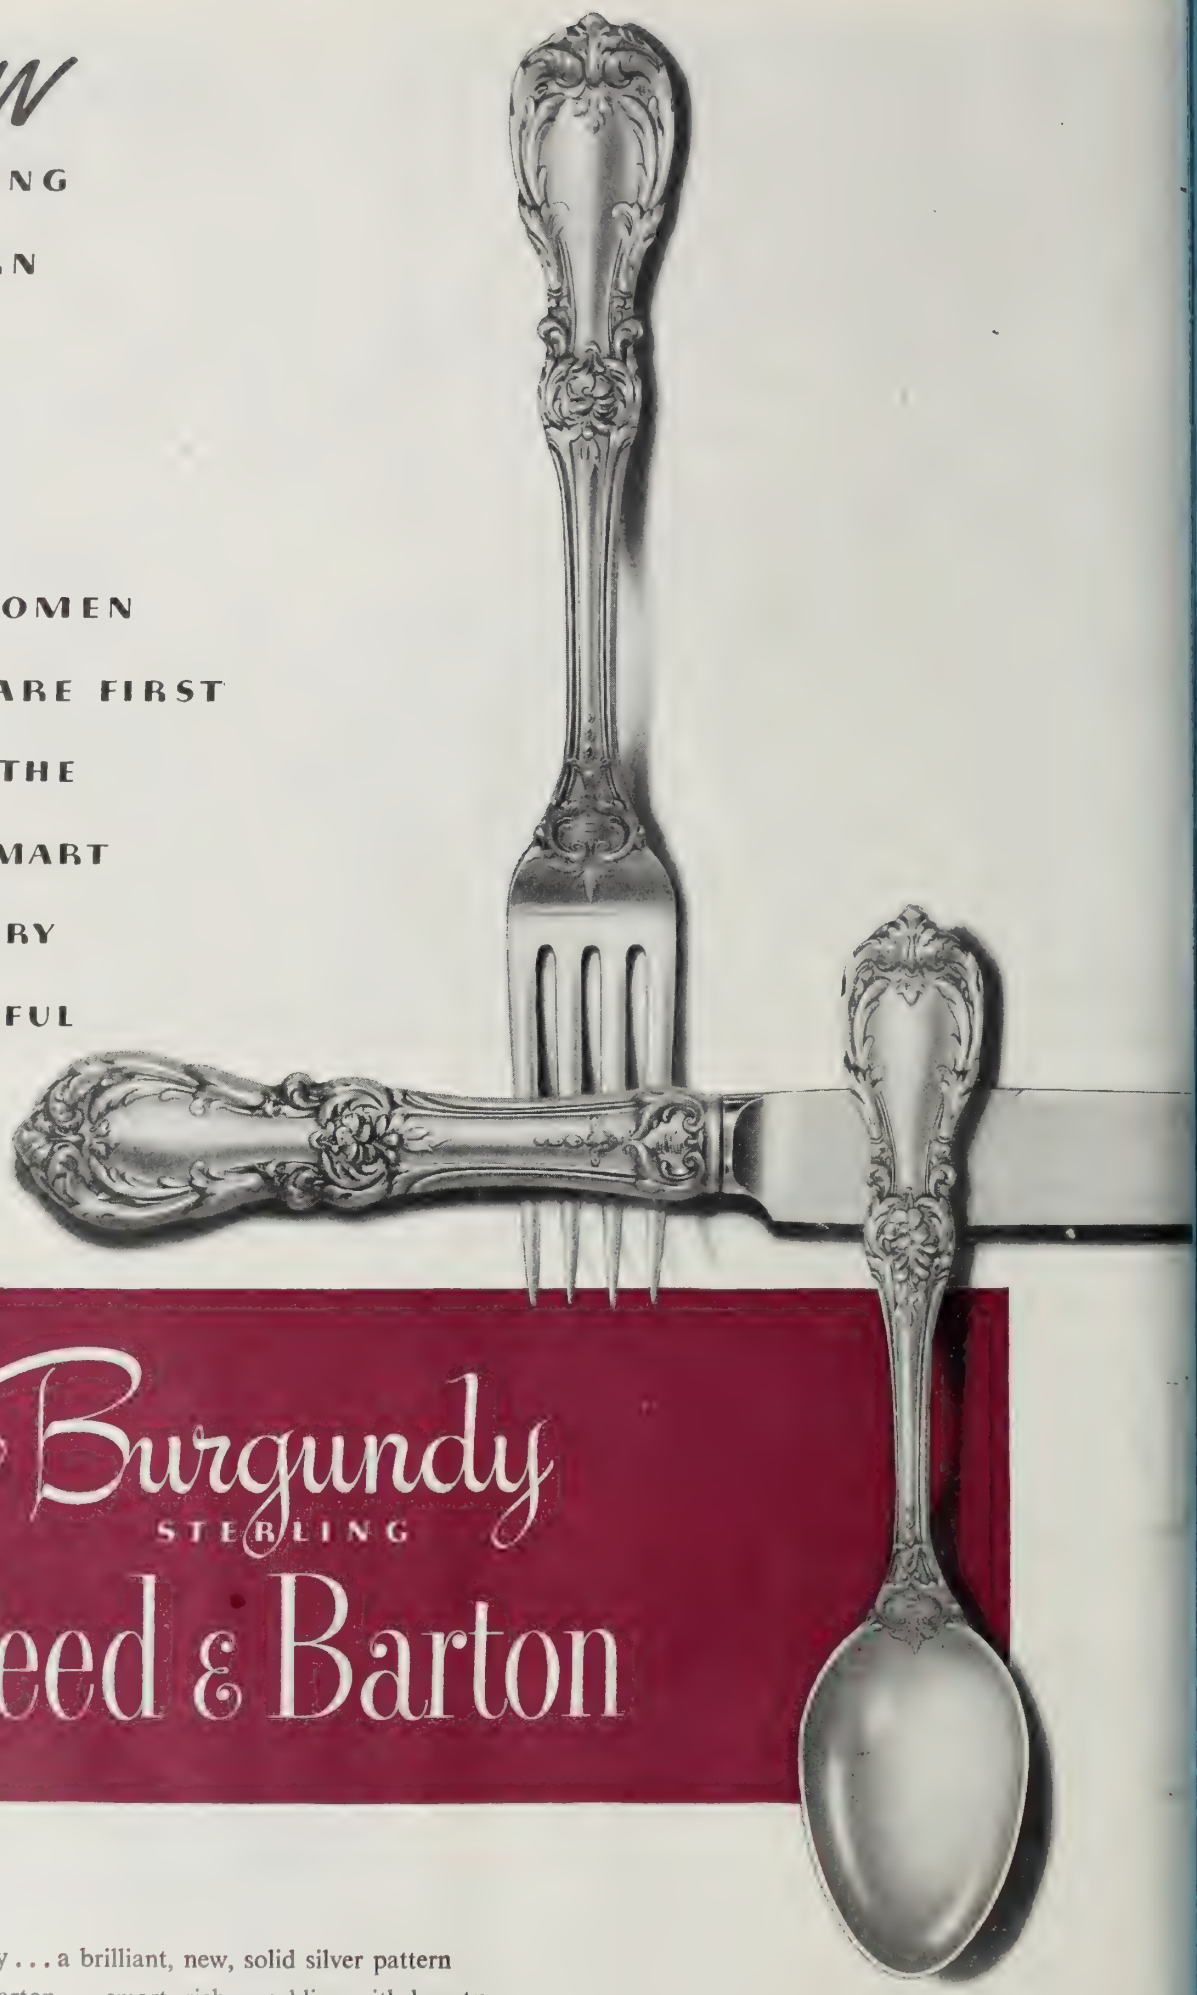
THE

NEW

STERLING

PATTERN

FOR WOMEN



WHO ARE FIRST

WITH THE

VERY SMART

AND VERY

BEAUTIFUL

Burgundy
STERLING
by Reed & Barton

$28.75 the six-piece place setting, tax included, at leading jewelry stores and silverware departments.

Burgundy . . . a brilliant, new, solid silver pattern by Reed & Barton . . . smart, rich, sparkling with beauty. A lovely, French-inspired design created for the woman who wants her table to reflect the timeless appeal of good taste.

WRITE FOR FREE FOLDER ON BURGUNDY. OR ENCLOSE 10¢ FOR HELPFUL BOOKLET "HOW TO BE A SUCCESSFUL HOSTESS." BOX 990, DEPT. L, TAUNTON, MAS

VOCATIONAL COUNSELOR . . .

at Valdese High School

THE scene was a June morning in the high-school auditorium of a small Southern town. Halfway back in the audience of admiring parents and relatives of the sixty-odd graduates sat a small smartly dressed woman. She was listening intently to the oratory of the commencement speaker.

"You are now ready," the speaker told the graduates as usual, "to enter a larger sphere of endeavor. You are about to take your place as useful citizens in a complex society."

Ready? Mrs. Dell B. Wilson frowned. She knew Bill Perkins, her young cousin, was not. In fact, she was sure he was very confused. His best friend, big Jim Thompson, wasn't ready either. Skillful with his hands, an excellent athlete, Jim didn't want college, couldn't afford college, and showed obvious talent for a trade. But the local high school hadn't offered any vocational guidance, so Jim had struggled with history and Latin. How much would they help him in getting a mechanical job? Dell Wilson wondered.

That was four years ago. Since that commencement day, Mrs. Wilson has become a full-time vocational counselor serving five small high schools in Burke County, North Carolina. She trained herself for the work, organized and introduced the service in the schools. Now she is wondering how many more minutes she can squeeze into her working day and still have time to do her best for her husband and three sons, Henry, 19, John, 16, and Douglas, 11.

Her real decision came when young Tom Bryan, with a recently acquired A.B. degree, came to her with the usual postgraduate problem. "'What can you do?' every prospective employer asks me. Why didn't somebody tell me four years ago (Continued on Page 202)

EDWARD BURKS—SCOPE

Frankie Kard, of Valdese High School, will have help from her vocational-guidance counselor in achieving her dream of happy home life on the farm.

From School to Job

By MARGARET HICKEY

DURING the war Americans learned one simple lesson: just this—the worker who does the best job likes what he is doing. Whether he lays bricks or smashes atoms, a man should have faith in his job, and faith in himself. Yet many workers potentially competent never find their niche. Guidance is badly needed. Call it what you will—job counseling, human engineering, vocational guidance—the goal is the same: we ought to find the right job for the right person.

Who needs this guidance? Many bewildered youngsters, unskilled and untrained, who have been persuaded that they can step into high and easy wages, with boogie-woogie during office hours; college students being trained for overcrowded fields in which they might be misfits anyway; adults with yesterday's skills that will be antiquated tomorrow.

Vocational guidance is a service comparable to public health and public education. It ought to be available to everybody. Fortunately, it is provided for veterans by Federal legislation. It is making jobs and brighter futures possible for thousands of our ex-servicemen who otherwise might be vocational casualties. But only 1600 of our 30,000 high schools have guidance facilities. That we have failed to make school interesting and profitable to many students is illustrated by the fact that twice as many children leave school today before 16 as in prewar years. And the number of 14- and 15-year-olds at full- or part-time work is three times as great as in 1940 (Bureau of Labor Statistics). We have failed these youngsters. For their younger brothers and sisters we must provide the counseling which will encourage longer time in school and better preparation for work after graduation.

"What can I do best? What training do I need for success?" Anyone from 16 to 60 may ask these questions of the Allegheny Vocational Counseling Center in Pittsburgh. Its doors are open to schools, to clients of health and welfare agencies, to business houses or industrial plants. A nonprofit organization supported in part by the Buhl Foundation, the Allegheny Center is an outgrowth of a war agency which tested individuals for work in war industries. Now the staff of vocational counselors, part-time physicians and a psychologist gives comprehensive physical, mental and aptitude tests for a minimum fee.

Seeing actual working conditions helps many young people gain insight and ideas about job possibilities. The Vocational Guidance Committee of McCook, Nebraska, has introduced an annual high-school "Seniors' Career Day," with visits to farms, stores, offices, shops, schools and hospitals. Last spring 400 students from 37 schools in Nebraska and Kansas registered for the day's activities. The Camp Fire Girls and Girl Scouts of Staten Island, New York, are given similar job-discovery tours through arrangements made each year by the local Business and Professional Women's Club.

Jobs for young people without college training is the chief work of the fifty-year-old Junior Vocational Advisory Service in New York City, headed by Mrs. Beardsley Ruml. This agency works hand in hand with the New York Employment Service and the Veterans Administration. The excellent staff knows job problems and job opportunities for these beginners and puts this valuable information at their disposal.

A new departure in this service is assistance to young people recently released from mental hospitals. The staff hopes soon to be able to train inmates of such institutions for gainful and satisfactory work. THE END

When you see this MADE OF Durene REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. MERCERIZED COTTON on this —buy it!

Why? . . . Because that trade-mark "Durene" is your assurance of extra strength, lasting lustre, extra comfort, easy washing. And that goes for T-shirts, sweaters, hosiery . . . yes, and a lot of other good-feeling, good-looking items. Durene is mercerized cotton. And merchandise bearing the Durene name is subject to the Durene quality control plan; which includes regular, impartial laboratory tests. Snap up anything made of Durene, and you'll do a good deed for your budget.

Reference Library

TIME ON YOUR HANDS?

EVEN a few minutes every day are reasons enough to begin a handiwork project. It may take several months to complete; but if you have always wanted a lovely appliquéd quilt or your own hooked rugs, put those extra minutes to work and begin now. You will be delighted with your progress, proud of your results.

QUILTS

2503. BRIDAL QUILT. What bride wouldn't cherish this as a wedding gift? Each block depicts a wedding tradition of different countries. Figures and designs are appliquéd. Thirty blocks make up quilt. 25c.

2349. SATURNIA SOUVENIR. A modern pieced quilt done in block effect. Lovely in white, rich red and brown. Three colors used throughout. 25c.

2348. FRIENDSHIP'S PLUME. Dark scalloped border with plume pattern forming center design. Appliquéd. Requires only two colors. 25c.

2347. IRIS. Iris-and-blade design decorates entire quilt top. Appliquéd. Not done in blocks. Narrow dark border. Three colors necessary. 25c.

2346. SUNFLOWER. Bold flowers and leaves form deep border. Appliquéd. Done in brown, yellow, green and white. Brown, yellow and green form edge of quilt. 25c.

2345. ROSE TREE. A Swiss design done in delicate feminine colors. Rose tree forms center design. Double roses form border. Appliquéd. Three shades of pink, green and white used. Narrow green border. 25c.

2344. POMEGRANATE. Another appliquéd pattern arranged in blocks. Three pomegranates on each stem. Three shades of red, green and white. Alternate blocks have single-blossom-and-leaf design. 25c.

2343. OHIO ROSE. An easy appliqué pattern with open rose in center of four buds. Bud-and-vine border. Not done in blocks. Three shades of rose, green and white. 25c.

2342. SNOWFLAKE. A pieced quilt. White background with design composed of two shades of the same color. Blue or yellow is lovely. 25c.

2341. TRUMPET VINE. A graceful pattern on a white background. Appliquéd. Slightly scalloped edge. All-over design. Two shades of red and one of green are used for the flowers. Edge of quilt is bound in green. 25c.

2340. LOTUS. A beautiful quilt done in green, white and shades of red. Inspired by an Egyptian frieze. Has scalloped edge. 25c.

PLACE MATS

2489. PLACE MATS. Fifteen different designs for table sets. Some to crochet, some to embroider, one with daisy insets. Make some for entertaining, others for everyday use. 25c.

HOOKED RUGS

2013. OXEN-AND-PLOW SAMPLER HOOKED RUG. A pastoral scene including two houses, two farmers, two oxen and a plow. The size is 24 by 40 inches. 15c.

2014. SQUARE-MOTIF HOOKED RUG. Pattern is made up of concentric squares in contrasting colors. Must be traced on burlap. Size is 24 by 54 inches. 15c.

2015. HOLLY HOOKED RUG. Holly leaves, stems and leaves form a colorful border on a neutral background. A paper pattern to be traced. Size: 27 by 40 inches. 15c.

2016. SCROLL HOOKED RUG. Graceful scrolls form border. Large floral design high-lights center. Background is done in several colors. Size: 27 by 49 inches. 15c.

2017. FLORAL HOOKED RUG. A quaint, old-fashioned design. Edge of rug is dark, design is done in light shades. Rose and buds form center. Size: 22 by 44 inches. 15c.

2018. BOUQUET HOOKED RUG. Scalloped border. Large floral bouquet in center is only design. Size: 24 by 40 inches. Can be done in four or more colors. 15c.

KNITTED DRESSES

2560. KNITTED ONE-PIECE DRESS. A lovely, short-sleeved tailored dress. Tiny collar, buttons up front of waist. Slenderizing rib stitch. 20c.

2557. TWO-PIECE KNITTED DRESS. A popular design for the younger set. Done in two-tone yarn. Cardigan top, full skirt topped with a wide cummerbund. Push-up sleeves. Collarless. 20c.

2552. KNITTED AFTERNOON DRESS. Round, shirred neckline, tiny gathered sleeves, flared skirt. Two bands of gold thread form outline yoke, also accent hemline. A narrow gold belt is worn with dress. 20c.

2479. KNITTED TWO-PIECE DRESS. Make this for summer in white and your favorite color. Collarless, short-sleeved, check-stitch top jacket is worn over all-white, rib-stitch skirt. Add a belt with a bright, unusual buckle. 15c.

OTHER KNITS FOR SPRING

2556. JACKET SWEATER. A Christine Hunter design. Buttons up front. Corners of opening turn back to form collar. Edges and pockets bound in ribbon. 15c.

2549. COLLARLESS CARDIGAN. Make this in bright yarn to wear over a light summer dress, or with a white shirt. Shaped at waist. 15c.

2548. KNITTED VEST. Smart with a tailored blouse and skirt. Tweedy look by using two tones of same color. Low V neckline. 15c.

2494. SLEEVELESS PULL-OVER. Make a smart cable-knit cashmere. Wear it inside or over skirt. Add a belt or bright pin. V neckline. 15c.

2480. SLEEVELESS BLAZER. Knit this in white with edges of blazer trimmed in contrasting color. 15c.

2474. BATHING SUIT. Bra-and-shorts style in easy-to-knit pattern. Bra is strapless. 15c.

2471. CARDIGAN. Another cashmere favorite. Neckline is trimmed with three rows of black braid, one row trims front opening. 15c.

2470. SLIPOVER TO MATCH 2471. Short sleeves, may be worn over skirt with belt. Neckline is also trimmed with three rows of braid and tassels. 15c.

2468. POLKA-DOT SWEATER. A nubby knit with short sleeves, low U neckline, just-below-waistline length. Use a bright color on white. 15c.

2467. JACKET SWEATER. This summer addition is done in basket-weave stitch. Has tiny collar, short sleeves, buttons up front. 15c.

OTHER FEATURES

Lists are sent free on request. They give title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.

1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.

1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.

2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.

2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.

1571. REFERENCE LIST OF KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.

1752. HANDICRAFT-PATTERN LIST. Things for you to make for your home, your children, gifts or yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Phila. 5, Penna.

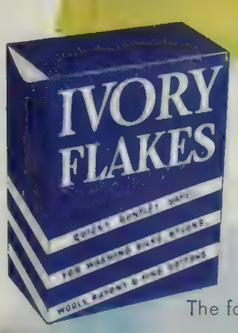
Sleepy-time clothes
...and how to keep them looking like dreams

Women who love the feel and flattery of sheer washables know they need special care. Just one careless washing with strong soap can fade delicate colors, and shrink away graceful lines. But when you give your fine washables gentle care with Ivory Flakes, colors look brighter . . . fabrics stay new-looking longer . . . keep their fit better!

Keep your washables lovelier with this special care

NEGLIGÉES WITH A DELICATE AIR, like this one, are safe in gentle Ivory Flakes. It's one soap that fashion experts recommend for all fine washables!

Robe by Perfect Negligée Company



PAJAMA SHORTIES wear longer if they're washed gently in Ivory Flakes. 99 44/100% pure, Ivory Flakes are so mild!

Gown by Textron

TOMBOY PAJAMAS AND ROMANTIC GOWNS keep their true colors and fit far longer when washed gently in Ivory Flakes. No other soap in the world is kinder to fabrics or to colors!

SHEER NYLONS, too, need nightly washings and the gentlest care! Ivory Flakes care will help them wear and wear . . . and keep that new, fresh look . . . up to twice as long!

If it's lovely to wear...It's worth

Ivory Flakes care

The fast flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory . . . 99 44/100% Pure

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Of all the ills of marriage, jealousy is the most deadly and unnecessary.

The Jealous Wife

Type I: AGGRESSIVE

Elizabeth is possessive, envious and obviously jealous. Dominant and aggressive, she burns up if her husband looks at another woman, or if another woman shows any interest in him. She creates violent scenes, and tells off the intruder in tempestuous and unrestrained language. Ever watchful, Elizabeth is suspicious of her husband's every action; demands xplanations of the most trivial incident—why was he ten minutes late getting home, what was he talking about so intently with Mrs. Jones, where was he when she phoned the office?

Type II: FEARFUL

Jane is quite different. She's a quiet, sweet girl, not pretty, but attractive and wholesome. She is married to a handsome man, debonair and charming. When he pays the slightest attention to another woman, Jane is crushed. Her usual self-consciousness is magnified; her slightest blunder produces an agony of embarrassment. Timid and hypersensitive, she silently eats her heart out, always fearing she is losing her husband. But she doesn't confide in John, and he is puzzled, discomfited and—though he is a patient man—sometimes irritated by her downcast moods, her remoteness and her too frequent tears.

Type III: REVENGEFUL

Vengeful and spiteful, Tania is constantly trying to get even with her husband. She has little evidence to suggest that her husband is involved with another woman, but it is easy for her to exaggerate anything he says or does. When jealousy engulfs her, she makes overtures to some other man, hoping to reverse the situation and make her husband jealous. Her tactics have led her to undignified, even improper conduct, and she and her husband are gradually losing their friends.

DISSIMILAR as they seem, each of these three women typifies the same basic fault—jealousy—in one of its commonest forms. All love their husbands, but by giving away to jealousy, each is risking the very thing she prizes so highly, her husband's affection. For few persons, male or female, can continue to love a jealous mate.

Elizabeth's shrewishness and unreasonableness in private, her outbursts in public, have destroyed her husband's love. Jane's morbid sensitivity, her apathy and lack of spirit are likely to drive her husband to seek fun and companionship elsewhere. Tania's scandalous behavior has undermined the respect her embittered husband once had for her. Sooner or later, unless she mends her ways, he will divorce her.

Though husbands as well as wives are subject to jealousy, women are more likely to be jealous than men. Among the many components of the jealous attitude are resentment and revenge, fear and suspicion, and lack of self-confidence.

Almost invariably, the jealous person feels inferior and distrusts her own ability. Disregarding the fact that he chose her in the first place, she doubts that her character and personality are sufficiently attractive to hold her man. She feels secure only when she absorbs his exclusive attention.

Unfortunately, many jealous people do not recognize their problem. For jealousy masquerades in many guises; it may take the form of self-pity or nagging or ridicule. If you suspect or know that you are jealous, you must accept these principles before any improvement is possible:

1. Jealousy solves nothing; on the contrary, it aggravates the problem, or may even create one where none existed.

2. Jealousy frequently has little objective basis. Perhaps your jealousy is a symptom of your own emotional immaturity.

3. A jealous person is hard to live with. Love does not flourish in an atmosphere of suspicion.

4. A husband usually resents his wife's lack of trust and may turn elsewhere for appreciation and understanding.

5. Affection, love and fidelity can never be won by demand, nor exacted as a right. They can only be earned by continuing effort.

With these principles in mind, adopt a systematic program to improve the situation:

- Accept the fact that your own emotional attitude is at least partly responsible, and concentrate on improving that, rather than trying to force your husband into a pattern acceptable to you. Easier said than done—for jealousy is one of the hardest faults to correct—but worth a try.
- Search for, and try to correct, any basic flaws in your marriage which may drive your husband to seek solace elsewhere. Friction over money, religion or in-laws makes the other woman more attractive.

Take pride in the fact that your husband chose to marry you. Realize that you first won him by competing for him (consciously or unconsciously) and that is the only way you can hold him. Are you as attentive as ever to grooming and cleanliness, to clothes, to your qualifications as a companion?

Of course, if your husband is a genuine philanderer, you have a real problem, and one which can be solved only by his conscious effort as well as yours. But even in this case, jealousy will not help.

Are You Proud of Him?

For you to take pride in any man, his achievements and habits must please and delight you. Answer yes or no.

1. Do your women friends admire him?
2. Are you proud of his personal appearance?
3. Do you respect the kind of work he does?
4. Is he cordial to your relatives?
5. Are you proud of his general reputation?
6. Is he respectful and considerate of older people?
7. Does he keep his temper in heated arguments?
8. Is he careful about cleanliness?
9. Does he compare favorably with your friends' husbands?
10. Are you proud of his community interests?
11. At a party, does he show you enough attention?
12. Does he try to get ahead in his job?
13. Are his voice and speech habits pleasing to you?
14. Does he have any special talent you are proud of?
15. Will he co-operate when you entertain women friends?
16. Does he use profanity or obscenity?
17. Is he immoderate in any drinking he does?
18. Does he often make sarcastic, cutting remarks?
19. Are any of his mannerisms offensive to you?
20. Does his behavior in public ever shame you?

All but the last five questions should be answered yes. Credit 2 points for each correct answer to the first five items and 1 point each for the last fifteen. Any score above 20 indicates real pride in your mate. With a score of 11 or less, recheck to see if you have been too hard on him.

Occupation: Housewife

MANY jobs in this world deal with abstractions, with ideas or services remote from the everyday necessities of life, but homemaking is not one of these. The tasks involved in homemaking are immediate and tangible; no wife and mother need ever feel her job is unnecessary. Yet many housewives do feel that housework, if not superfluous, is certainly frustrating. Engaged girls often resent the prospect of keeping house—though expecting to be supported. What are the objections to housework?

Monotony. Though there are many repetitive tasks in housework, so are there in any job. Train yourself to perform the routine tasks as early in the day and as efficiently as possible, and to busy your mind with ideas while your hands are occupied making the beds. Plan a little break when you have finished—a second cup of coffee, or five minutes with the paper. While you can't eliminate irksome chores, have you used all your ingenuity in minimizing them?

Housekeeping requires little intelligence. With this all too common attitude I cannot agree. Cooking, sewing, counseling your children, freshening a room by rearranging furniture—these are creative tasks demanding imagination and talent. And while washing dishes may not be very stimulating, there's always a challenge in devising short cuts for such chores.

Long hours. While there's some truth in the old saying that woman's work is never done, a well-planned schedule and a systematic approach will help. Even so, every housewife should arrange to get away from home at regular and fairly frequent intervals. If you can't afford a baby sitter, perhaps you and a friend can take turns "sitting" for each other.

Lack of companionship. Unfortunately, many housewives, especially mothers of young children, do lack adult companionship during the day. Telephoning to friends, turning on the radio, going next door for a midmorning cup of coffee—all these help; as does the plan of regularly scheduled time off for mother.

But the real solution to this problem, as to other occupational handicaps of housewives, lies in your mental attitude. Learn to regard housework as a means to an end, and the end as the creation of a home.

Efficient housekeeping keeps your house clean and orderly, provides nourishing meals punctually served. But creative homemaking lies in the winter bouquet of greens and berries gathered from the fields; in a meal assembled with an air of welcome and a minimum of flurry when your husband unexpectedly brings friends home for dinner; in knowing when to let your son disrupt the dining room to play train with the chairs. Housework is a craft; homemaking is an art. Both are essential. The craft runs your house—but the art gives it spirit.

Do You Agree?

My young wife is continually flirting with other men. Does this mean she doesn't love me?

Not necessarily—she may be continuing a girlhood habit. Have a serious friendly talk with her, pointing out how her behavior upsets you, and how it can hurt you both socially.

BY APPOINTMENT
PERFUMERS TO H. M. QUEEN MARY
YARDLEY, LONDON

As modern as the art of tomorrow.

Lotus a colorful new perfume

by YARDLEY

Lotus Perfume, $5.00 to $17.50. Cologne, $1.50 and $2.50.
Sachet, $1.50. Dusting Powder, $1.65. Plus tax.

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

That's what he thinks

THE SUB-DEB • Edited by MAUREEN DALY

. . . and nobody, but nobody, can be as self-happy and as self-centered as the high-school male who considers himself a grade-A Heathcliff, the answer to a maiden's prayer. But ask any high-school girl (and we asked ten of them just to be sure!) what little boys are really made of and the answers are enough to make a smart boy sit up and make changes. Girls like boys, naturally—but they'd like the boys even better if they would consider a few of the important pointers listed below. All summed up, it goes this way:

• "Boys seem so scared about etiquette—why don't they just read a good book on it in private and learn what is right."

"But don't overdo it because no manners at all are often better than a boy who acts like a male Emily Post!"

Girls like boys whose manners are "a natural," who remember little things like pulling out chairs, and helping a gal with her coat, not just on the first two or three dates, but always. And for an added attraction, a really swell fellow will use his best manners with a girl's family, greeting mother cordially when she answers the phone, remembering to stand when even the littlest sister comes into the room, and checking with his date early in the evening about her dating dead line, so he can deliver her to home and hearthside right on the dot! And girls prefer boys who will find out things ahead of time—just how much a dance bid costs, how to make proper introductions, or reserve a table at a restaurant, and the facts about getting on and off a bus or streetcar (the boy gets on last, pays the fare and then gets off first to help his girl down). In short, to get rated a dream and a half by the women in his life, a boy should learn the rules carefully and then follow them ~~casually~~, as if he'd known them all the time!

• "Why don't boys ever pick clothes to suit their complexions? Girls are so color-conscious, and boys should be the same."

"Suits should not be too loud . . . and boys should wear dress shirts only in white, or light, solid colors."

The size of the wardrobe should fit the size of the wallet, of course, but girls agree they like their men best in loud sports coats, corduroy jackets or bright sweaters for school, and navy or gray suits (with a narrow stripe or two) for date wear. Evening clothes for a big formal dance are extra special, but a fellow can still make out like mad in a good dark suit. The favorite shirts are white, or light colors, with button-down collars; bow ties lose out one to nine, in favor of wool knit ties, knotted Windsor style. No hats allowed on dates, the girls say; loud Argyle socks go over like Rover; and the new giant-sized crepe-soled shoes are fine for school if the boy keeps a more sober pair in his closet for nighttime wear. There was a warm vote in favor of umbrellas for boys ("You don't have to get wet just to be masculine!") and all the females agreed that Gorgeous George types with loud tropical shirts, faddish haircuts, peroxide "lucky streaks" and too-pegged pants were "just too embarrassing to date."

• "I'd like variety on my dates—not the same old movie and hot dog."

"Boys in the neighborhood too often just come over to a girl's house—why don't they ever pay back invitations by taking a girl out?"

Fellows who use the telephone techniques of "Guess who?" and "What're you doing Friday night?" are just plain lethal like Latin. Girls want to be asked for an ordinary date at least two days in advance, two weeks in advance for big occasions. And they're ma-ad, simply ma-ad about the smooth character who will open the conversation with an outright bid for a date, stating the where, the when and the what they will do that evening, so a girl can make blue jeans or blue chiffon wardrobe plans accordingly. Most girls would rather have a boy show up five minutes late for a date than five minutes early (who wants to get caught with her cold cream on?), and unless it's love like Lamour, most girls prefer double dating for fun. Only a slow schmoe would suggest "sitting this one out" at his girl's home every evening, but each girl agreed she would rather sit home playing records with the right boy than just sit home! As final chatter matter, movies as date doings get too tedious when a boy might suggest bowling, swimming, roller skating, basketball or horseback riding, and one good play or concert can be as good as three Montgomery Clift movies combined, according to many female fancies.

• "I'm tired of orchids—a couple of iris heads, a pale pink camellia or a few bright daisies are just as nice."

"Why can't we bring back exchange dance cards—variety is such fun at a formal dance."

It's all "just too sweet and you shouldn't have done it," the girls agree, for boys who send too big, too expensive or too thoughtless corsages for dances. The gals prefer the boy to ask what color dress his date is wearing, where she wants to wear the corsage (hair, shoulder, pinned to her evening dress or tied to her wrist) and then make his choice of color, size and type of flower accordingly. For a formal dance, a car is an almost "must" demand—either a cab, the family jalopy or a double-date arrangement. A good date will call ahead to a restaurant or night club for "afterward" reservations if necessary, will make brief but poised conversation with the chaperons and see that his girl gets an exchange dance or two on this special evening. And since the usual high-school gay fray lasts until well after midnight, no fellow should expect to be asked in after he brings his date for the evening to her own doorstep.

• "If a girl doesn't want to be kissed good night, never force the issue."

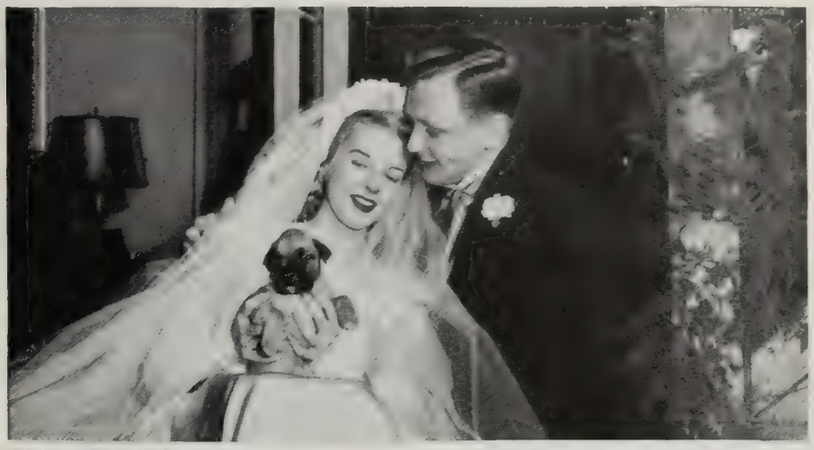
"I guess almost every girl would like to go steady sometime, but only in the old-fashioned meaning."

Only a schmoe type would force a girl to kiss him if she doesn't want to, and only a super-schmoe type would talk about it afterward if she does. Going steady shouldn't be just another way to pass time, but have the real "engaged to be engaged" meaning, even in high school. If a boy gives a girl his class ring, it's his prerogative to break it up later if he wants to—but it's a gal's choice about how to return the ring, and when. Necking is just everybody's personal problem, the girls agree, but no boy should try to kiss a girl until at least the third date, nor even mention going steady until they've passed the ten-date mark. And once the moonlight-and-roses stuff is all over (most girls "don't expect to get really engaged in high school"), no sulking, no gossiping, no telling it all to the other boys—a girl always wants to go right back where she started as "just friends."



Having Any Fun?

Movie date on Wednesday, gym dance for Friday, doggie roast on Saturday? Or are there big blank spaces on your calendar where the fun should be? Then maybe you can use a hint or two on how to be a good date. Just send five cents for the Sub-Deb booklet, RATING FOR DATING, No. 1228. Write to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

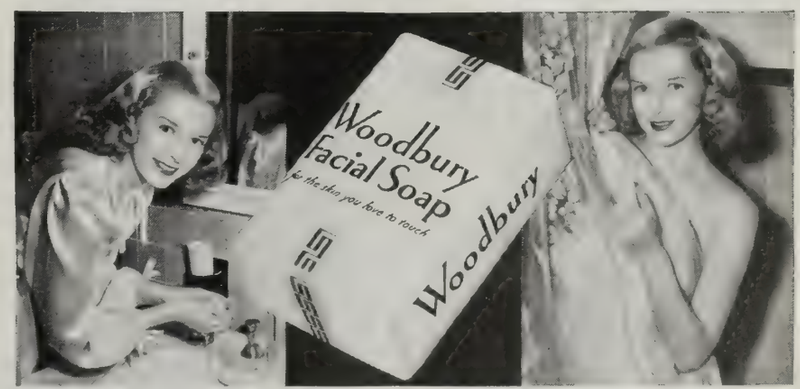
Long Island Wedding! Bermuda Honeymoon!

dding Bells Chime—sweet harmony as Frances Louise Ward weds piano-heir Charles hler White in St. Aloysius Church, Great Neck, Long Island. Charles beams his pride—ances looks luscious. Her cream-smooth complexion? Ah, that's Woodbury's beauty trick!

Who's cuddling who? That handful of Boxer puppy-appeal can't distract Charles—his eyes fasten on Frances' soft-skin-appeal. See, girls...Woodbury-skin holds a man's eyes on you—alone!

Bermuda daze! "I've been in a daze," chuckles Charles, "since Frances danced into my life!" Courtship kept him hopping. Yale! New York! Carolina plantation!

"Becoming, I'm sure!" laughs Frances. Always becoming—skin smoothed by Woodbury, made with beauty-cream ingredient.



...for another Woodbury Deb

y so alarmed, Charles? It'll taste as sweet as nces looks! Smart Frances, she knows secret sweet-to-kiss skin is—Woodbury. True beauty p, made by skin specialists. Made extra-mild.

Crowning touch! Last minute dressing that began—on Lohengrin Day as always—with Frances' Woodbury Facial Cocktail. "So my skin would look satiny, too!"

"Cream up rich lather," she shows you. "Massage thoroughly—feel how gentle! After rinses, skin's a'sparkle."

For the skin you love to touch. Marrying debs know, it's extra-mild Woodbury Facial Soap. Coaxes fresher beauty.

Beauty-Cream lather... for a beauty complexion all over! Now Woodbury in two sizes, facial and big new bath-size.

Give your skin Woodbury's plus—a rich beauty-cream ingredient!

"It's Gorgeous!"

says Lilly Daché

"It's Smart!"

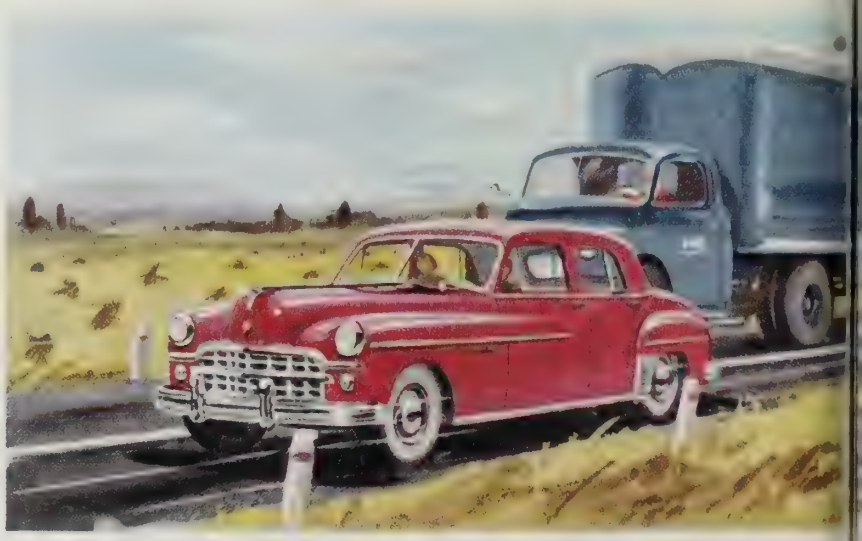
says Tina Leser

"It's Brilliant!"

says Elizabeth Hawes

"It's the new Dodge!"

. . . with the basic new style that gives you more elbowroom, headroom and legroom with luxurious interiors



Four-room car with a three-way stretch . . . More elbowroom, headroom, legroom and baggage room—yet no outside bulges and bustles to get scraped! The New Dodge is so compact, it's easy to put to bed in present-day garages!

Quiet as a kitten . . . You can't even hear the new Get-Away Engine with an ear trumpet, yet it has so much power you leave pokey cars tied to the corner when the traffic light changes . . . New Dodge is the new darling in traffic!

Climate to order . . . No more front-seat "hot foot" while back-seat passengers shiver—the new under-hood All-Weather Comfort System distributes fresh air warmth to all—and automatically, just like your thermostat at home!

Smooth as ermine with flashing get-away . . . Silken power that zips you aroun slow traffic with plenty to spare—new Gyro-matic transmission that frees you fro gear-shifting . . . and Dodge All-Fluid Drive to smooth every mile you drive.

"It's the smarter style!"

LOWER ON THE OUTSIDE . . . Higher on the In SHORTER ON THE OUTSIDE . . . Longer on the In NARROWER ON THE OUTSIDE . . . Wider on the In

See how it's done! Let your Dodge Dealer show y

The Daring New

DODGE

CORONET

★ ★ ★

The Woman I Admire Most

By JUDITH CHASE CHURCHILL

ONFRONT any man with the question as to which of all women he admires most, and he'll combine truth and safe domestic policy by assuring you it's ne feminine member of his family. But be him further, and bar these, and you'll d his admiration has a remarkable range, m a woman who exists only in his dreams very-much-alive First Lady of the Land. To unearth these private preferences of male, we asked each of these well-known n to name for us the woman he admires st, and tell exactly why. Here's what y answered. Their varied ideals confirm suspicion that few men admire women the same reason.

"The woman I admire feels that her intion is infinitely more reliable than all n's wisdom; that the rules of sportsnship and fair play are to be abided by y when she is winning; that logic is a bolical plot against her sex; and that all chanical gadgets are apt to blow up at y moment. I admire her most because re are most of her. In fact, I've never own any other kind."

—Gardner Rea.

"My girl is Lillian Russell. The only e I wish I had a few more years on my oulders is when I think I might have seen in one of those plumed Gainsborough ts. Probably it's because I'm so crazy out the theater and she represents the st exciting period of it, when Broadway s really diamond-dusted."

—J. Carrol Naish.

"The kind of woman I admire most is the er Phi Beta Kappa type. I'm all for the iny gal, the one who knows Picasso m Prokofieff and Arnold Toynbee from urman Arnold. I know there's one big ch to this. If America could produce lots such admirable women, how could we ke our men marry them?"

—James A. Michener.

"I admire the Southern planter's wife d daughter of the Civil War. Reared in tury, she found her world suddenly sted apart by a war which she knew in heart was a lost cause. She saw her n killed and her home destroyed by the s of an invading army. But from the es, she helped to construct a new world, gracious, as living, and infinitely more ble than the old."

—Frank G. Slaughter.

"The woman I admire most is Mrs. eanor Roosevelt. Because, though she is t beautiful, she has something greater d more elusive—charm. Because she can derstand the frailties of human nature, d still love humanity. Because she has a nd of her own, yet is open-minded alys toward the opinions of others. Beuse her heart is warm, and whatever misces she may make are in the direction kindness. Because she has never stepped t of her femininity and is a loving other and grandmother. Because she beves in the importance of the home, d is a hostess so gracious that kings d paupers have felt equally at home th her. Because she gave her husband stinted loyalty and support in whatever undertook. Because she was and is a eat humanitarian, combining in herself e best in women everywhere, great or mble, of whatever time or place."

—Paul I. Wellman.

"Some would call her old-fashioned. She esn't keep the radio going all the time, and she isn't always nagging me to go to the movies. Nor does she explain to me or anyone else in sight what is wrong in Outer Mongolia. When I think of all the things she doesn't do, I could give her a great big kiss. She's Whistler's Mother."

—Will Cuppy.

"I see her face dimly through a veil of suffering. Her hands are swiftly skillful; her eyes, compassionate. She really consists of three women: morning nurse, day nurse and night nurse."

—Erle Stanley Gardner.

"The woman I admire most taught me German in Pittsburgh's Central High School thirty-five years ago. She was not pretty, but her loving-kindness radiated upon all of us in the dark schoolroom like noonday sunshine."

—W. E. Farbstein.

"She was an eight-grade teacher in a little Michigan town, who had never been more than two hundred miles from home. But she gave to starved minds a sense of the world, and an insatiable thirst to know about it."

—John Tebbel.

THE WOMAN I MOST ADMIRE

The wonderful woman whom I adore
Is always exciting, never a bore.
She doesn't believe that conversation
Is strictly a one-way dissertation;
She seldom if ever has got my goat
With dull, interminable anecdote,
Or, without my interest or inquiry,
Gushed out a detailed oral diary
Of what she's seen and done and said
From the minute she first got out of bed.
She's perfectly happy when she's alone
And doesn't spend hours at the telephone.
She sometimes admits that she is wrong.
And her looks in the mirror are not too long.
In short, she has every feminine virtue
Without the feminine faults that hurt you.
BUT she's only a dream just to make you smile.
There really ain't any such animile.

—Gelett Burgess.

"The woman I admire most need have but three traits: she must be honest, considerate and affectionate. I wouldn't care what she looked like—all women are beautiful."

—Frederick V. Fell.

"I rate women highest in the animal kingdom."

—Howard Dietz.

"I still go for that old-fashioned girl who looks like she knows what to do when the baby starts crying."

—Dick Haymes.

"The woman I admire most writes all her letters with a ballpoint fountain pen, produces her own clothes with home-grown sequins on the skirt, never needs new shoes, gathers her own pearls for her necklaces, stays out of beauty parlors, and is nice to dream about on June evenings at the seashore. She seldom says a word and invariably disappears in the mist when a fellow opens his eyes. She's a mermaid, of course."

—Frederick C. Othman.

"Lena Horne—because she is beautiful. Because she is the only lady whose name outside a theater would draw me in."

—James Mason.

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

The genuine Lester Betsy Ross Spinet will add immeasurable charm to your home life.

Musically . . . it is a superb instrument built of the finest materials and backed by Lester's 61 years experience in building nothing but quality pianos.

Decoratively . . . the Lester Betsy Ross Spinet is truly beautiful in contemporary and traditional models . . . all compactly sized . . . all gracefully designed to enhance your home.

See the latest models at your local dealer . . . who will gladly arrange convenient terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

Think of Cleaning Painted Walls and Woodwork WITH THE EASE OF DUSTING!

Instantly your paint is beautifully, spotlessly, evenly clean!

Think of cleaning painted walls and woodwork with the ease of dusting by just wiping away the dirt. Well, that's exactly what you do with SPIC and SPAN—Procter & Gamble's amazing cleaning discovery! Just wring out a cloth in a solution of SPIC and SPAN—and wipe the damp cloth over the paint. With a few easy strokes, even the dirtiest dirt simply vanishes! Right before your eyes, paint comes beautifully, spotlessly, evenly CLEAN! There's nothing to rinse—nothing to wipe dry. No streaks or cloth marks. With the ease of dusting, dirty walls and woodwork take on new beauty—look freshly painted! So, do your spring cleaning with SPIC and SPAN; and with the ease of dusting, just wipe away the dirt! Get SPIC and SPAN today!

NO SOAP, NO OTHER CLEANER, NOTHING IN AMERICA CLEANS LIKE SPIC and SPAN! ®

© 1949, The Procter & Gamble Company

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

N April, 1899, this country paid Spain $20,000,000 for the Philipnes, Guam and Puerto Rico. There as a lynching in Georgia, a tornado Northern Missouri, and a miners' ot at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Wilam K. Vanderbilt was married at ewport, and Massachusetts got ound to revoking the order which anished Roger Williams in 1635.

The custom of having the gas ghted in the bedrooms in early ening and burning until bedtime obs the air completely of its freshess, and the majority of people eep with their windows shut ght. No wonder so many girls ffer from muddy complexions," ates the April, 1899, JOURNAL.

a piece called Eggrolling on the resident's Big Yard: "On the top of e State, War and Navy Department ilding is a large ball on a pole. When e children see this ball slide down the ole they know it is twelve o'clock and the watches and clocks all over the untry are regulated by Uncle Sam's me there is no question that the moent has arrived for opening the lunch xes."

Rice throwing at weddings is beg discontinued by the better eleent of people," reveals Editor ok. "Carnations are substituted, r rose petals, or dainty handfuls f violets."

Under no circumstances should eggs e boiled in a teakettle and the water sed for tea," reprimands Mrs. orer.

For a steamer trip to the Continent ut in your bag a hot-water bottle, sevral changes of muslin and flannel unerwear, hose, gloves, etc.—not foretting your visiting cards."

The summer baby requires lightweight wool shirts with high neck nd long sleeves. Flannel in some orm is absolutely necessary next o the skin."

Ninety-five per cent of all Amercans earn under $3000 a year," vrites Editor Bok.

Serving a formal dinner: "Clams nd oysters are served first, followed by soup and the fish course. Then a small entree, like chicken patty served with bread. Then the main meat dish, with one or two vegetables and fruit sherbet. Then the game course with baked macaroni or lettuce salad. A simple but elegant dessert finishes the meal, such as frozen pudding with whipped cream."

Journal about Town

JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Sally Victor's hatorium—where international accord really goes to the head.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

IT was still winter in the Workshop when Dawn Crowell Norman went up to preview Sally Victor's spring hats, making the collection look timely right now, with Easter only a couple of weeks away. Also, what the designer said to Dawn in connection with her hats seems timely too: about how wonderful it would be if people all over the world could only get together the way her hat materials get together in her workrooms. Smooth straws from the Philippines, braided straws from Italy, ribbons and flowers from France, straws from Switzerland, more flowers from Czechoslovakia, and Quaker nets from Pennsylvania. Maybe, she pondered, that would make for peace. Peace for people. With hats, however, Miss Victor makes one major stipulation. They've got to be pretty.

●

Louise Whitehouse's waiter in a restaurant a while ago asked her if she had a brand-new dollar bill she'd let him have for a few minutes. In a few minutes he brought it back, but she says she'll never have the heart to spend it, because by some fantastic folding he'd made it into a ring that fitted her finger to perfection, as you can see. But you'll have to work it out for yourself. We haven't the faintest idea how he did it.

JOSEPH DI PIETRO

A new way to carry "mad money."

●

Looking for a puppy recently to pose with a girl for a possible picture, we discovered that one of the leading model agencies now books dogs as well as girls. The dogs' owners get regular models' fees (the puppy we looked at was $10 an hour), and bring their pets to work complete with brushes, combs and other grooming accessories. Most popular breeds for pictures are cockers, fox terriers, dachshunds and great Danes. When the puppy came to the Workshop, someone here asked its mistress if her puppy had been very busy modeling lately. "Thank goodness, yes," said the owner, a model herself. "It's the only one of us who has."

●

George Bernard Shaw has suggested enlarging the alphabet from 26 to 40 letters, which brought the remark from someone that "the only practical purpose Shaw's idea could serve would be to make alphabet soup more nourishing!" . . . According to one psychologist, "Women are the stronger sex. They should help their men live longer. They should get up in busses to give their seats to men. This, and marrying younger men, would remove one of the problems of old age—those eight years of widowhood." . . . Ingrid Bergman (nearly 5'9") dislikes high heels, plays emotional close-ups in stocking feet or standing in a shallow trench, and wears high heels only in a scene depicting loneliness—"a woman walking alone on a dusky street looks far lonelier in high heels." . . . Highest average pay for stenographers is in San Francisco: $48.13 a week. Boston is lowest: $37.31. . . . The average man gets 1567 haircuts in a lifetime.

●

It's enough for JOURNAL readers to know that a new revised edition of Ann Batchelder's Cookbook will be published this month. As the jacket says, "This book has been written by the most beloved food writer in America," which is just what every JOURNAL reader knows.

●

Listening at noon the other day through our Workshop window to the carillon of St. Thomas', up the street, playing a chorale from the Bach St. Matthew Passion, we were reminded that it is the New York churches, much more than all the opera, symphony concerts and recitals, that make this the world's most musical city. The lists of programs in the papers, especially near Easter, are staggering, not only in their number and in the quality of their performance, but in the varied feast they offer the true music lover—the finest works of Bach, Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn; of older giants like Palestrina and Purcell, up through Brahms and Verdi, and on to moderns like Honegger and Hindemith—most of them free. And the more you like music, the more comfortable you find the pews.

●

If what one of the biggest fisheries out on the Coast tells Alice Blinn comes to pass, you will soon be able to get shoes with uppers of salmon leather—something like reptile skin.

●

Having heard a while back about Lois Schenck, a budding actress, who between jobs was inspired to make her living by shining shoes outside the Broadway restaurant where many producers come to lunch, we decided to check up on this pretty and very enterprising bootblack. As could be expected, she's been doing mighty well. Three television shows, twelve radio shows, fourteen modeling jobs, and a small part promised in a movie with Loretta Young. But what she wants most is a part in a play. So in bad weather she shines shoes at theatrical functions (where producers are likely to gather), and when the weather's good takes up her stand again outside Sardi's, where along with plenty of attention she attracts as much as $15 a day in fees and tips, and many offers of jobs, about which she claims she can now afford to be choosy. "Who are those girls dressed just like you, shining shoes in Shubert Alley?" we asked her. "Oh, they're rehearsing for my part here, when I leave this play," said Lois.

EUROPEAN

"Tom the Bootblack" à la 1949.

hous

My wedding dress has come, she was thinking. And I'm going to see the lawyer soon about my will and all that. . . .

of Storm

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE NOVEL

The house alone knew the shocking secret it had witnessed, but that secret held a threat for all who stayed there.

By MIGNON G. EBERHART

AGAIN the house was listening, and the passive, patient strength of its audience lapped into the room, surrounded her, flooded between her and the letter she was writing. Nonie put down her pen and listened too. It was about three o'clock of a hot, tropical afternoon, the siesta hour, so everyone else in the house was drowsing, yielded to heat and custom. At such times, Nonie had already discovered, when human alertness and authority were in abeyance, the island, the tropics, the sun, the lush green growth, the murmur of the sea came into possession, reclaiming their own.

The house itself, however, seemed never unaware, never quite subservient to the people within, or the tropics without; it always watched. And listened.

Or so it seemed to Nonie and had seemed so during almost the entire three weeks of her stay within it—ever since, in fact, she had come to the green and lovely island, in the middle of the blue-and-purple Caribbean, Beadon Island, which was now to be her home. And it was sheer fancy to feel that the house . . . well, listened. It was absurd and more than a little unfair to Royal Beadon, who was to be her husband, and to Aurelia Beadon, who was to be her sister, both of whom had welcomed her so warmly and kindly to their home. Her home soon, Roy had said, for always. So she would conquer that formless uneasiness.

Actually, the house was very quiet. There were sounds, but they were identifiable sounds. There was the sound of the sea; she was never quite unaware of that. On clear days the winds blew, rattling the stiff Spanish bayonets and the palms and the bamboos, stirring the glossy thickets of mangroves, waving the uncut cane pieces like prairie grass. And just at that instant, from somewhere in the garden came the sound of a clear small trumpet, from the throat of what the natives aptly called a bugle bird.

The shutters had been closed before noon; the room in which Nonie sat was shadowy and she had turned on the green-shaded table lamp on her writing table so there was a pool of light around her and upon the white note paper. Outside in the garden the bugle bird sang again. Nonie went back to her letter.

". . . and of course the whole island is given over mainly to sugar plantations; there is only a handful of landowners: the Beadon place, Middle Road adjoining it (that is owned by the Shaws) and one or two others. There's a tiny village, called Beadon Rock, and all through the island there are little clusters of cottages where the laborers and field hands live. None of the house servants lives in the house, but every plantation has its cluster of cottages. Roy's place, as you know, is called Beadon Gates, and is very beautiful; or rather, I should say, was very beautiful. During the war, of course, not much was done. Roy says the machinery is all but obsolete, but that's because of the difficulty of replacing it. And nothing lasts long in the tropics."

She paused. How to explain to Aunt Honoria, whose world was (Continued on Page 127)

ILLUSTRATED BY

This woman suffers from schizophrenia. She lives in a world of her own and must be cared for in every way. She is being treated with electric sh

WHAT IS MENTAL ILLNESS?

WHEN Mrs. Templeton was in her late forties, she began to cry rather easily and feel very depressed. Sometimes she'd pace up and down, moaning softly to herself. On really "bad days" she'd wake up so unhappy she didn't feel like getting up and she would lie in bed, her face pressed against the pillow, doing nothing all day except now and again when she sobbed like a child. On these days, her meals didn't interest her and neither did her family or friends; and when her husband tried to cheer her with small presents, she'd barely glance at him or them.

She also became short-tempered—quite unlike the smiling, gentle person she'd always been. She was touchy where once she'd been able to take a joke; irritable where once she had been gay and laughing. Her husband was annoyed at first in the change in her, but he was a kind and thoughtful man and he soon began to wonder if perhaps his wife was ill. He enlisted the help of their progressive family doctor, who recognized in her behavior the symptoms of involutional melancholia, an emotional illness to which women in the change of life are particularly susceptible. She agreed to go to a near-by psychiatric hospital for treatment. Within five months she was home, able to take up her normal life again, cheerful and happy.

The breakdown of Mrs. Templeton—that's not her real name, of course—is not unusual. The happy ending to her story, however, is. Had ere is hope for her recovery.

PHOTO BY ESTHER F. BUBLEY

To refuse to face the symptoms of mental illness is like locking the door and throwing away the key.

by JOAN YOUNGER

she not had speedy, up-to-date treatment, she stood a chance of from two to fourteen years' suffering—probably in a mental hospital. It made the difference between life and living death that her husband realized early she was ill—and that her doctor was knowledgeable enough to judge the nature of her illness.

Thousands of other women are not so fortunate: although shock and hormone treatments have proved tremendously fast and powerful in treating involutional melancholia in its early stages, over 3000 women entered state mental hospitals last year in such an advanced stage of this disease that recovery may take several years if modern treatment is not available.

This shocking state of affairs is common not only in cases of involutional melancholia, but in all manner of mental illness. Although by present reckonings one in twenty of us will be hospitalized for mental illness sometime during our lives, we know so little about this sort of disease that we run the risk of not knowing what's wrong with us until we're in an acute, hard-to-treat stage.

Centuries ago, people whose minds or emotions became disordered were believed possessed of demons. Despite the fact that today mental illness is as treatable and curable as is any other major disease, we still fail to understand most of those who suffer with it, and when they become too "troublesome" we have them "put away" where we hope they'll get good custody—and are indifferent, through ignorance, as to their treatment.

The precepts of good physical health are taught to first-graders, yet few adults know the precepts of good mental health. Mental illness is not mysterious, although there is much to be learned about it. It has causes and effects and general symptoms. We needn't be psychiatrists to understand when someone is mentally ill—any more than we have to be surgeons to suspect a diseased appendix when someone complains of an acute pain in his right side. On the other hand, we needn't go to extremes. It is as dangerous for the untrained, lay person to attempt to diagnose and treat the illness of the mind as it would be for a Scout with a first-aid merit badge to take out an appendix. But it is not dangerous for any of us to learn the principles of sound mental health and to know what irrational or emotionally dominated behavior and outlook is.

Let us take a look first at what mental health is, so that we may understand better what mental illness is. A state of mental health is a state of happiness; our life, our behavior, is purposefully directed toward what we want in our inner hearts. A lot of camouflage has been draped over our basic desires, probably to protect them from injury, but it's been repeatedly found that when these trappings are stripped away we all want to love, to be loved, and to have some reason for being. It is only when we have failed to learn how to live in order best to correlate these needs with socially acceptable behavior that we go astray and appear to be seeking something else.

"Let us define mental health," Dr. Karl Menninger says in his book, The Human Mind, "as the adjustment of human beings to the world and to each other with a maximum of effectiveness and happiness. Not just efficiency, or just contentment, or the grace of obeying the rules of the game cheerfully. It is all of these together. It is the ability to maintain an even temper, an alert intelligence, socially considerate behavior and a happy disposition."

When satisfaction and happiness do not come naturally, we unconsciously feel driven into a defensive position. Then—still unconsciously—we start using methods to protect ourselves from unhappiness. Usually these "defense mechanisms" are sound in the original situation, but they become fixed and part of us, and we use them in all sorts of situations where they don't apply at all, where they are actually obstacles to our happiness. Take for example a child who finds his parents harsh. To protect himself, he becomes self-effacing, meek and mouselike. He develops quite justifiable fears and worries. Unfortunately, however, as he goes into the world, he does not cast these aside. Instead he feels fear when there is no threat. He worries when there is little to worry about. He hides himself when there is nothing to hide from. He thinks he is acting "normally"—for his anxieties are very real to him. Maybe a kind and understanding person comes into his life and rebuilds some of his strength—but more likely, his anxieties grow with his responsibilities and, under special strain, he breaks down. The drive to be happy, to feel "good," seems to be a major part of our drive to survive.

Psychiatrists describe most emotions which interfere with effectiveness and happiness as neurotic emotions. If the emotion is so strong as to blot out almost all response to anything but itself, it is a sign that a psychosis exists.

Just as all of us are now well, now ill, physically, so are we all subject to bouts of mental illness in varying degrees. Just as we do not rush to a doctor with a sniffle, there is no need to call on a psychiatrist because of one fit of temper or one flood of tears. We heed the (Continued on Page 234)

The Lure

Did you ever know any good to come of trying to explain a black eye?

By MARJORIE CARTER

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

AFTERWARD, looking back, Linda thought that the turning point had come with Mr. Abercrombie. So we'll begin with Mr. Abercrombie, although there is also the time of year to be considered. And the mortgage.

Mr. Abercrombie, of course, was a man, a man in the bond department of the bank where Linda worked. But more than that, he was a straw—a revolting, double-purpose straw, which showed the way the wind blew and at the same time broke the camel's back.

The time of year was the late spring, the beginning of the Decoration Day week end, to be exact: a wonderful, impelling time of year anywhere, but especially terrific on Long Island, where, as if at a signal, awnings and lawn furniture garnish every home, boats of every kind and vintage shake out their owners' flags and putt-putt all over the bay, long lines of cars point their noses toward the parking fields at Jones Beach, and everything burgeons.

The mortgage was—a mortgage. It had been a grim necessity. It had seen Linda through school and had kept her nice little nose very close to the grindstone ever after. The paydays which might have meant mild whoopee, of one sort or another, had meant instead careful calculation on the part of Linda and her mother of how much could be saved to reduce the mortgage. And now it was all paid, and Linda fancied the tidy little red brick chimney on the Thorpe house was standing a good deal straighter, with its incubus removed.

What Mr. Abercrombie had asked about Linda had been repeated to her because the head of the stenographic department, Mrs. O'Connell, had thought it was funny.

"He asked me"—Mrs. O'Connell laughed—"if you were a new girl. Imagine his not ever having noticed you! I told him no, you had been here at the bank for five years." She looked at Linda's stricken face. "He said you did very nice work," Mrs. O'Connell finished lamely.

Linda, the Invisible Girl. Ha, ha, it certainly was funny to be invisible, at twenty-two, to good-looking men like Mr. Abercrombie!

"Why," Linda said, "that's terrible. I mean—that's terrible, isn't it?"

Personnel had chosen Mrs. O'Connell wisely. Now she sat on the corner of Linda's desk. "Yes," she said confidentially. "It is pretty terrible, Miss Thorpe. But it's not fatal, so don't look like that! You're young, and small, and slight, but you don't do much for yourself. Maybe if you tried your hair a different way ——" She drew back and studied Linda, who blushed. A buzzer sounded. "Oh-oh," Mrs. O'Connell said, "that's for me. I must run. What you need is to—to bring yourself out more, have something really outstanding, some striking characteristic. You're such a good little girl, Miss Thorpe! You'll have (Continued on Page 111)

Ed said, "I never saw such a mouse on anyone! It's a whing-ding."

If You Ask Me

by Eleanor Roosevelt

Please give me some advice in regard to necking. I will be twenty-five in two months, I am an only child, live with my parents, am considered nice-looking, and rather shy. I have been a stenographer for three years and I am a church member. I have only dated five boys several times and each date ended in a necking bout. Is necking something that everyone does and no one admits? Do girls who refuse to neck ever get married?

My dear young lady, I think you are not very grown up in spite of your twenty-five years. I would advise you to have a few more dates and perhaps you will find among your friends boys who do not insist on necking. Probably most girls today have had some necking experiences, but I do not think that really has anything to do with whether you get married or not.

Do you believe that Christianity has failed or that the United States is not really Christian but just a nation that gives lip service? Don't you think the United Churches is what is needed instead of the United Nations?

You put a great many questions into one, it seems to me, and each of them might well take a book to answer! Certainly, Christianity has not failed, but Christianity is something that is accepted or rejected by the individual, and even when he accepts it he may still not live up to it all the time or even part of the time. Nations are made up of individuals, but I do not think it would be fair to say that a nation has rejected Christianity because either among its citizens or in its government you found certain things which you did not think were compatible with your particular interpretation of the doctrines of Christianity.

Whether you believe as a Protestant or a Catholic, or a Jew or a Moslem or a Buddhist, it is the fruits of your belief as evidenced in your daily life that are of concern to your fellow human beings. If you believe in God, you naturally think that as a Supreme Being He will not judge you by your conduct alone, but also, with His infinite knowledge, for your intentions, taking your temptations into account and sometimes giving you credit for your victories.

The United Nations is an instrument, a piece of machinery, through which human beings, imperfect as they are, strive for greater perfection. The churches on earth are in much the same position, only they supposedly strive for greater perfection only in the spiritual field, whereas the United Nations has to deal with both the spiritual and the material. We cannot do away with either; they have different functions, but the two functions complement each other and are valuable together.

It has been reported that you signed a petition favoring the placing of a statue of Sacco and Vanzetti in Boston. Whether their conviction for murder was right or wrong, do you mind giving your line of reasoning whereby these avowed anarchists should receive any notice from decent people?

I did not sign a petition to place a statue of Sacco and Vanzetti on the Boston Common. I did sign a manifesto on the anniversary of their death and joined with others in suggesting that Gutzon Borglum's plaque be placed on Boston Common. It is a very beautiful thing with some very remarkable words: "What I wish more than all in this last hour of agony is that our case and our fate may be understood in their real being and serve as a tremendous lesson to the forces of freedom so that our suffering and death will not have been in vain."

It is true that these men believed in the philosophy of anarchism. Their trial lasted seven years, and many people believed that it was not a fair trial and that they never were proved guilty of the pay-roll murder with which they were charged. They were actually put to death "less upon the evidence than for the crime of holding extreme opinions."

Curiously enough, it was the same type of hysteria which swept our country at that time after World War I, as is sweeping our country again today. This type of trial has certain ties with the lynching mobs, and even with the Nazi killings of the Jews. I do not know that I agree with every expression to be found in the manifesto, and it was so stated by most of those who signed the manifesto. I believe so strongly, however, in the democratic processes, in the refusal to consider a man guilty until his guilt is proved, and in the wiping out of the kind of hysteria which stirs up in people the mob spirit in the way which is being done again, that I will do all I can to remind us of our basic freedoms. Anyone who holds advanced liberal opinions is labeled "communist" without the need of any proof these days, which creates a dangerous situation, since it endangers free speech. I have fought the ideas of the Russian communists in the United Nations and I have upheld the democratic ideals, and I believe that these ideals require us to fight for the rights of individuals to have freedom of thought and speech and action, always conditioned by the provision that one cannot advocate the overthrow of the Government by force.

An argument has arisen among some of my fellow workers and myself. Is it a tradition or custom for the presidential candidates of the two major parties to exchange votes, or do they vote for themselves?

I haven't the remotest idea what a candidate for office does about his opponent. I never asked my husband how he cast his ballot, but I would suppose that if you believed in your party and in your own ability to fill the job, you would naturally vote for your party and the electors of your party.

I am a rather young housewife who for four years has been working to help my husband make a down payment on a little home. Do you think I could safely quit my job now and keep house as I have wanted to do all my life, or do you think that conditions in the future might be such that I'd better keep my job?

Not knowing you and your husband, it is a little difficult for me to decide just what conditions you mean. If you are talking about world conditions as a whole, I would tell you that nearly all people have to make such decisions as face you without too great a sense of security. Do you suppose our ancestors, when they decided to embark on the Mayflower, were sure what conditions they would meet in the future? It seems rather improbable.

If I were you, I would talk the situation over with your husband and decide what would give you the greatest sense of achievement and happiness. Then I would go ahead and do it and meet whatever comes in the future as best you can when it confronts you.

Would it not be possible to outlaw the Communist Party in the United States, although we are supposed to be a free country where everyone can express his convictions?

I think it would be highly unwise to outlaw the Communist Party in the United States. How would you feel if you were a citizen of the U. S. S. R. and decided that you preferred to have a more democratic form of government and you were outlawed because of it? That is practically what would happen to you in Russia today, but that has never happened to us in the United States. We are a free country, we can express our convictions with only the limitation of not advocating the overthrow of the Government by force. We can use all the persuasion that lies in our power. We trust, however, that democracy will so completely meet the needs of the people that there will always be among us people who believe strongly enough in it to fight for it with words and by deeds. We must prove that the people's well-being is satisfactory because of the way we use our democracy and that there is no value in making any change.

In almost every newspaper and magazine there are articles and pictures of Europe's homeless children. There is a kind of desperate irony in these accounts to my husband and me. We have been trying for three years to adopt a child and, although we have been approved by an adoption agency, we are told we must continue to be patient because there are sixty families waiting for every available child. Cannot something be done to bring these homeless European children and childless American homes together?

Yes, I think undoubtedly something can be done, and if I were you I would go to the Joint Distribution Committee and find out from them what you can do. I am sure there are orphan children coming here whom they would be glad to place in a good home.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the Ladies' Home Journal. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the Journal.

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

The terrace light was switched on, and his father stood in the entrance, his collar unbuttoned, his shirt sleeves rolled up, his eyes blinking wearily through the glasses. With his bald head and his weary eyes, his father looked sort of vague and timid. Sometimes David could hardly believe that he was a rich man with a successful business of his own.

"You're home late," his father said. "Did you have a good time?"

"Fine," David said. "I'm a little drunk."

"Come on out. It's a nice night. It'll clear your head."

David went past his father, onto the terrace. It was a nice night, all right. The breeze was sharp against his cheek. The sky was clear, and there was a big moon. It cast a blue haze over the terrace, reflected on the glass-topped table in the center, and glinted off the three bottles of beer that stood on the table.

His father moved around to his beach chair and stretched out. There was a half-full bottle of beer on the arm of the chair. He picked it up and took a long drink.

"Have a bottle," he said.

"I've already had too much."

"Foolishness!" his father said. "Beer won't hurt you. It puts hair on your chest."

David shook his head. "I don't want any more hair on my chest." He went to the railing and looked down at the street lights flickering twenty floors below. The sound of horns honking came up to him faintly through the autumn air. He turned to his father. "Did you just get back from the club?"

"I didn't go to the club tonight. I stayed home."

David looked at him sharply. "All night? What'd you do that for?"

His father laughed softly. "I wanted to. I didn't feel like pinochle," he said.

David sat down opposite his father in a straight-backed metal chair. He continued to watch his father uneasily. "Are you sick or something?" he said. "You stayed away from the club a lot lately." You should have stayed with him, he told himself. You had no business going out tonight.

"I like to be by myself for a while," his father said. "A regular nursemaid!"

David looked at him a moment longer, then relaxed and reached for a bottle. "What'd you do all night?"

His father put down his beer and lighted a cigar. "I listened to the radio. They gave a fellow five hundred dollars to put on his wife's girdle. Can you beat that? They're (Continued on Page 102)

Company for Dinner

By FLORENCE JANE SOMAN

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

MIMI GAMBERT entered the apartment by backing in with her weight against the door, balancing her bundles carefully. A strand of hair had blown across her face, and her eyes still watered from the stinging slap of the wind on the street. All the way home from the subway she had projected herself toward this moment when she could shut the door upon the bitter day and the memory of all the tedious errands she had had to do. Now, as she placed her parcels on the hall table and flexed her aching arms, she gazed around her with an audible sigh of pleasure. The lamps glowed, the cushions on the sofa and chairs were plumped high and smooth and the coziness of the apartment seemed to reach out to her chilled and tired spirit like a comforting hand, stroking and soothing.

God bless my little gray home in the west of Manhattan, she thought.

Her mind roamed to the hours ahead. Soon Dick would be home; he would get into an old shirt and a pair of faded slacks and they would sit down to dinner, talking quietly and easily against the background of music from the radio. After dinner he would read for a while and then play the piano and she would get into bed with a book and a bag of potato chips, reveling in the security and coziness about her as the wind, whining shrewishly, shook the windowpanes. It was the kind of evening she loved. The thought of it now caused a wave of utter felicity to wash over her, flooding her heart with warmth, bringing faint tears to her eyes. I'm so lucky, she thought; I guess I have just about everything.

She put away her things, picked up some of her bundles and took them into the kitchen, humming lightly. "Hi, Agnes!" she cried to the colored woman bending over the sink. "Even the polar bears in the zoo are wearing their red flannels today!"

"Yes'm," said Agnes glumly.

Mimi sighed. That one got about fifteen on the laugh meter, she estimated. But then, expecting to get a laugh out of Agnes was in a class with waiting for the Liberty Bell to ring. "I'm late," she said, "but there's plenty of time. We're going to have an easy dinner tonight—hamburgers, mashed potatoes and salad. I brought cake."

"Yes'm," said Agnes. "Did you bring potatoes?"

Mimi's hand flew to her cheek. "Oh," she said, "I forgot. I knew there was something else."

"I wrote it down," Agnes said. She seemed resigned.

Mimi frowned. "I don't know what happened to that list," she said. "I must have lost it." And no wonder, she thought guiltily; the inside of my purse looks like a rummage sale.

"Yes'm," Agnes said again. "I'll loan some from Miz Haas. She took lemons last week."

"Do that," Mimi said, relieved. "And get through early tonight, Agnes. I don't want you to be too tired for The Dinner tomorrow night."

In her mind, the dinner for the Fergusons the following evening had long since acquired capitals. Now the thought of its imminence caused a tangled little knot of nervousness to gather in her chest. It was such an important

(Continued on Page 249)

If he forgives me this time*, she thought,

will he the next?

She was shocked at the bitterness in his voice. "Oh, sure," he said, "everything will be just fine and dandy!"

From the entrance drive, Brandon composes beautifully into central body and symmetrical wings—the design, it is said, adapted by Thomas Jefferson from English architectural plates.

BRANDON

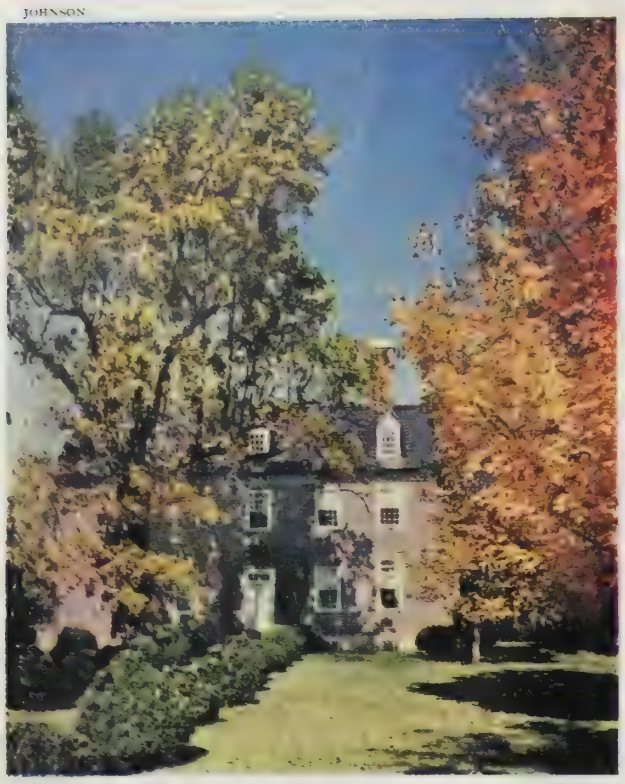
And across the James, two pages away, another Virginia masterpiece . . . Berkeley

By RICHARD PRATT

Architectural Editor of the Journal

BRANDON and Berkeley belong to that assembly of superb colonial mansions along the lower James, whose beauties were brought to your attention just a year ago in the JOURNAL with Westover, Carter's Grove, and the Wythe house at Williamsburg. All were built within a span of thirty years, beginning in 1726 with Berkeley and ending with Brandon, neither of which houses could ever have looked better than it does today. You might say the same of the neighborhood's whole pre-Revolutionary aspect.

Most of the houses, in a region whose fame in recent times has been revived by the restorations and reconstructions at Williamsburg, are in a sense hidden assets of this community; being off the beaten track and rarely open to the public. Brandon and Berkeley have never stopped keeping the plantation spirit alive. At Brandon, the present owner speaks with pride of the yield of corn; at Berkeley, they manage a magnificent herd of Herefords; life, though now in modern dress, goes on as ever. Washington, Jefferson and Patrick Henry no longer come over from Williamsburg as they did when it was a day's hard ride (now an easy hour by car); but the houses look essentially the same—just as elegantly reflecting the taste of their early days, which was something to celebrate, as you can see.



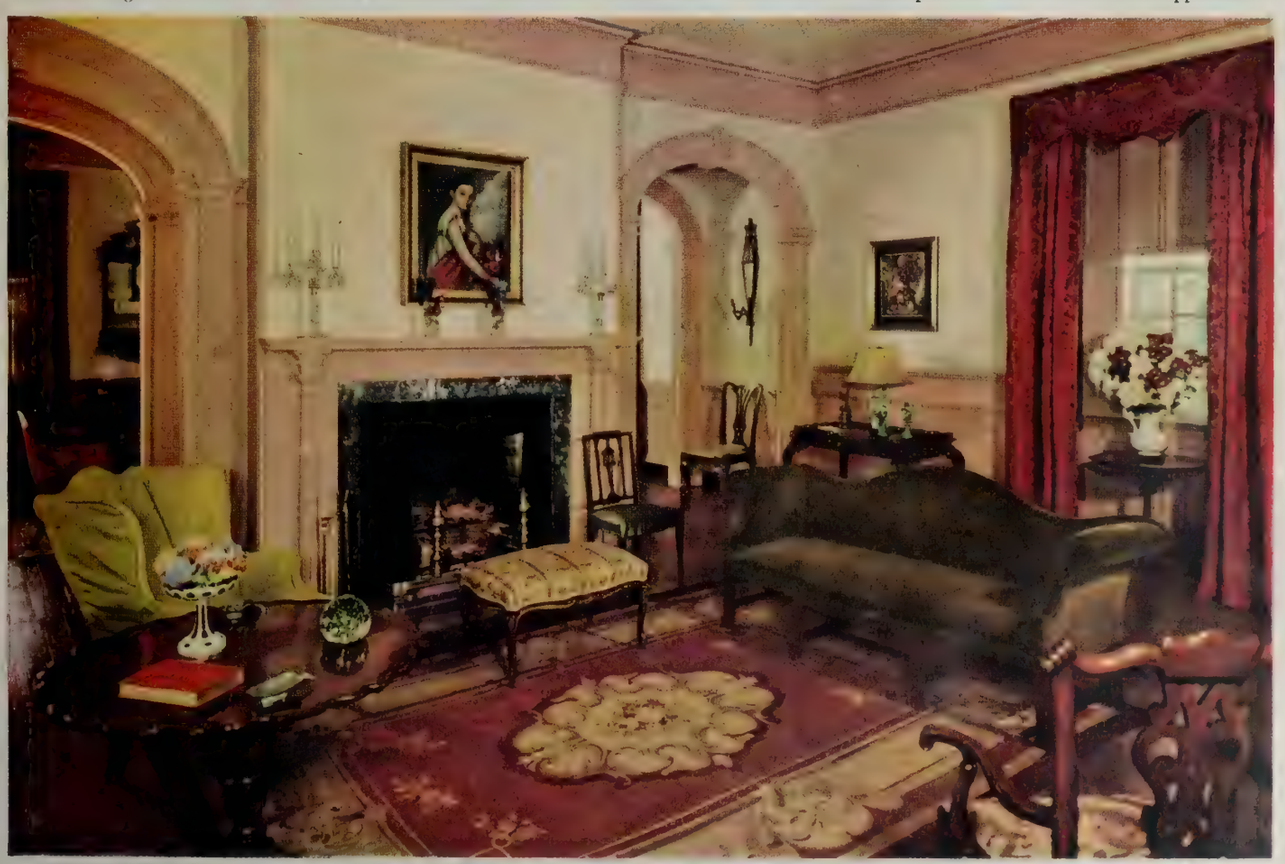
Through the doorway on the north side of Brandon's entrance hall you can see the spacious gardens leading to the James.

Sully's portrait of Peyton Randolph dominates the drawing room, with its original paneling and magnificent Aubusson.

PRATT

The river front is a fine example of the early Georgian fashion.

BERKELEY



Both Berkeley and Brandon have had their ups and downs during their long lives, but now, their careers have been resumed in the manner to which they were first accustomed. Berkeley has been more recently restored than its distinguished neighbor at some distance across the river, and was more of an undertaking, the outside of the older house at some point having been covered with plaster; and while it had never been shelled from British gunboats on the James, as Brandon was, still bearing the scars on its garden porch, it had been served rather ruthlessly at times, and its splendid condition today is a tribute to its present owners, who have had the courage to treat it colorfully to fine effect. Both houses, being private homes, are open to the public only during Virginia's annual garden pilgrimage which, this year, is the last week in April.

Handsome archways connect the north drawing room with its counterpart on the opposite page, together called the "Great Room." Barrel chair is Sheraton.

Portrait of Benjamin Harrison, the "Signer," and once owner, looks out on the old English silver, Hepplewhite chairs, Waterford glass and Chinese porcelain.

Aubusson rug and Louis XV settee add a French touch to this section of the "Great Room." Other pieces are Sheraton and Chippendale.

INTERIOR PHOTOS BY WESLEY BALZ-JOHN JOYCE, INC.

Round Trip

By NATHANIEL BENCHLEY

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

IT was on a Wednesday that James Thomas and his wife decided to take a vacation. Wednesday was the day Miss Kemp, the nurse, was off, and Lynn Thomas had their two small children to take care of in addition to her regular work around the house. This involved no especial hardship for her, since the children could be left to their own devices in the back yard, but on this particular Wednesday there came a kind of pile-up of minor irritations, and by evening Thomas was calling the airlines offices. He made reservations for Sweden, where he had never been, but where, he had heard, it was restful.

The Thomases lived in one of twin houses on the Upper East Side in New York. Thomas was a playwright, and he had bought the houses because he wanted a place where he could work in comparative seclusion, undisturbed by aspiring young dramatists, out-of-work actors and people with great ideas for plays he should write. He had a soundproof workroom built in his basement, and there only the most piercing screams of the children filtered through to interrupt his train of thought. The other house was rented to a Mr. and Mrs. Charles Perkins.

On this day, later known as Black Wednesday, Thomas arose at seven-thirty and took a leisurely bath, leaving himself plenty of time to breakfast and get down into his workroom by nine. While Lynn dressed Roger, who was three, and James, Jr., who was eighteen months, Thomas wandered down to the kitchen and started the coffee. In his mind he was organizing the dialogue for a particularly difficult scene, and he juggled three characters' lines around as he stared at the gas flame. The coffee bubbled up and he shut it off and poured himself a large cup. With an orange in one hand and the coffee in the other, he drifted into the dining room, sat down near the window and looked out into the garden.

After brooding aimlessly for a while, he drained his coffee (Continued on Page 220)

If you get far enough away, even your own kids can look like angels.

Words were no good for what he wanted to tell her.
"Don't kiss me," she said, "I've got on lipstick."

ILLUSTRATED BY ALEX ROSS

Point of no Return

By John P. Marquand

CONCLUSION

CHARLES came to New York early in January in 1930. He had taken the midnight train from Boston and he had checked his suitcase in the parcel room at Grand Central Station. He had eaten breakfast in the restaurant on the lower level, staying there as long as he decently could, reading the New York Times. He knew almost nothing about New York, but he did not feel either lonely or confused. He felt that he was in a new country.

Outside the station, the streetcars and the traffic were already running in a steady stream under the ramp at Pershing Square. The Stuyvesant Bank would not be open for two hours, so he walked up Fifth Avenue to the Eighties, then down Park Avenue and along Madison. Looking in the shop-windows was like carelessly turning the pages in a book while waiting somewhere. The depression had not fully gripped New York. There was still a sort of shining plenty.

That first morning at the Stuyvesant Bank was not very different from all the later mornings except that the details had more depth and breadth than they ever had again—the converted brownstone front, the illusion of leisure, the small fire near the front door burning in the open grate. There was none of the untidiness of E. P. Rush & Co. Everything was spick-and-span in a polite, aggressive way, as offices were in New York.

Gus, the doorman, looked younger then, but he already gave the impression of being a trusted chauffeur in a wealthy but dignified family. "Morning, sir," Gus said. He was the first person who said good morning to Charles in New York City and it had not been wholly necessary, but it may have explained why Charles went to the hospital every few days to see Gus after Gus had slipped on the icy sidewalk and broken his hip. The gesture had not hurt Charles because Tony Burton called at the hospital himself and so had nearly everyone else after Tony Burton went, but Charles had gone first and he had never thought of any favorable impression it might make.

Joe was there, too, and Joe, too, looked younger. He was already part policeman, part greeter and part club doorman. "Are you looking for someone?"

"I wonder if I could see Mr. Arthur Slade," he said, "if he's not too busy."

He always remembered that Joe did not tell him to wait, or that he would see whether or not Mr. Slade would see him. Instead he walked with Charles across the room. Arthur Slade was seated behind one of those two assistant-vice-president desks.

"I don't know whether you remember me or not," Charles said, but Arthur Slade remembered him.

When Arthur Slade asked if he would like to walk around upstairs and see the trust and the tax and the statistical departments, nothing had been said about his working at the Stuyvesant. Charles was already experienced enough to know that it was wise not to be too eager. When Arthur Slade introduced him to Walter Gibbs, who was one of the key men in the statistical department, and then excused himself because there was something he had to attend to downstairs, still nothing definite had been said. It was a compliment, though he did not know it, to be left in the statistical department talking to Walter Gibbs, but even when Arthur Slade returned and took him back downstairs and introduced him to Mr. Burton and Mr. Merry nothing was said directly. The whole problem of personnel was handled in a rather haphazard manner in those days, except in the statistical (Continued on Page 75)

★ Copyright, 1948–1949, by John P. Marquand. This is a condensed version of the book published under the same title by Little, Brown & Co ★

Hidden possibilities

Many an attractive girl who has modestly settled for a trim and tidy look has bee doing herself an injustice. What she need is a new perspective on prettiness. Here ar three types to illustrate three basic principle of beauty. By Dawn Crowell Norman

Beauty Editor of the Journal

PHOTOGRAPHS BY PE[illegible]

THE STRONG-FEATURED TYPE. "Athletic" is a description apt to haunt her. Or she's "tweedy" . . . "suity." She's popular and talented in so many other fields no one expects her to shine with feminine appeal too. But she can combine both qualities for a perfect personality balance. These pictures of June show you what can happen when a girl discards tailored severity to experiment with femininity. Prettiest changes: Shorter, curlier hair to give a new illusion of roundness to her face. A creamy powder base, warm beige powder, bright pink lipstick for her face. A soft-shouldered, tiny-waisted dress to show off her figure. Delicate accessories to add to her fragile-lady look. Beauty is often half illusion, half reality. Any girl who learns to combine the two cleverly is sure to find her prettiest self.

COLOR

HAS A THOUSAND WAYS TO CHARM . . .

A new dress comes like a half stranger to your door. You lift it from its box and tissue. You slip into it, to reassure yourself, to be sure you were right. Yes, you were right, but — in return for your critical appraisal, it gives you back an impersonal stare. It needs something. It doesn't belong to you.

Color is the top-drawer secret, used most easily, most often, by women who have "a way with clothes." It is the magic chemical that makes a thing becoming, or young, or gay. It is the mark of identity, the source of change. And the top drawer that collects bright ribbons, pins, flowers, belts and scarfs is an incomparable treasure chest for bringing ideas to the light of day.

Color near your face is flattery, plus décor. Think of the pink rose under the hat brim, the pale gold scarf tucked into the dark coat collar, the blue jewel on a black dress, the mauve blouse with the navy suit, the citron-yellow vest, the scarlet polka-dot tie.

Color at your waistline is a fashion—the coral or the sea-green shantung sash on the black shantung dress, the red-leather belt on beige wool, the cork-color pigskin on a gray coat. Color in your gloves is a pretty gesture—pink or mauve satin with a navy afternoon dress, fresh chamois yellow with any daytime wool.

And if you've loved gay-colored shoes ever since your first pair of red sandals, make a point of them now and then. They go with many clothes, and with any slim foot and ankle.

Color is close to the heart as well as the eye. Almost every woman has a natural love for a certain color. Wearing it is a tonic, and a compliment, and her own handwriting on her clothes.

If you haven't such a lifelong personality color, you may discover one suddenly, in a dress, a ribbon or a strand of beads at your throat.

Or, you may have a natural gift for putting colors together. Most of us are too conventional. Unusual combinations can be dangerous, but many we've seen are distinguished: the deep red rose on the mauve coat, the pale pink scarf with the claret-red jacket, pink and yellow carnations in a sash or at a neckline, a turquoise sweater with a purple skirt, a pink or mauve silk blouse with soft brown tweeds.

Independent thinking pays off. (Anybody can put red with navy blue.) And if color sense isn't a natural talent, it can be cultivated. These dos and don'ts should be red-penciled:

DON'T be afraid of color.

DO try colors that are in fashion, but DON'T wear them if they're not becoming. Your color never goes out of style.

DO cultivate a personality color, but don't overdo it. As your own coloring changes, you may discover a new complement color.

DO collect accessories in color, but DON'T wear hat, shoes, bag and scarf in the same bright color. Two of an accent shade are usually enough.

DO watch shopwindows, magazines, other women, but DON'T be purely parrot. Your own ideas are often best for you.—R.M.P.

We Find:

Straw cloche, inserts of red ribbon; polka-dot tie; gold safety pin.

Capezio's red pump; neckpiece of pink linen, roses, Hattie Carnegie.

A pink shantung sash with fresh pink carnations for any basic dress.

...way with pearls: tied with a chiffon ...erchief. For a simple black dress.

Darling of the spring bag collection; deep or pastel shades of linen, George Morris.

A chin-high wing-collar vestee of printed rayon to wear with a gray flannel suit.

Satchel bag, gloves and change purse to match by Renee Montague.

DRAWINGS BY BIDI

WHITE ORGANDY BRIDE . . . APRIL, MAY AND JUNE

By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

ANSWER to a dream . . . something shee white and billowing, organdy over crin with panels of fan pleats, Val lace edging.
long fringed white-taffeta sash. The wisp jacket comes off to show your shoulders white sash is changed to a blue one, an have your dancing dress for summers to

ONLY twice in a lifetime . . . do you ha complete new wardrobe—when you're and when you're married. This is a lucky for spring and summer brides, for spe modestly, and finding clothes that you Your head is in the clouds, but concen concentrate.

A SLIM crisp rayon suit, well cut, the w man likes to see it . . . a pure-silk polk dress . . . a bare-top paper-taffeta print
a jacket . . . a pretty pastel wool jersey .
gray flannel skirt with a matching cash sweater . . . a coral-red finger-length coat. T five (plus a bathing suit and a cotton d will make a trousseau.

ACCESSORIES, planned with loving care: A white ballibuntl hat, banded with leather your suit, with white beads for the taffeta .
coral-red felt cloche to match the coat, an wear with the suit or jersey dress . . . a bl leather bag, right with suit or coat, a nat raffia one with silk or jersey dresses. Sl white, gray and chamois gloves, off-w linen or straw pumps and black pumps cha about happily.

DRESS BY CEIL CHAPMAN . . . VEIL BY JOHN FREDERICS

Your veil, a white lace mantilla; short lace gloves, pendant pearl earrings;
your bouquet, white lilacs and ivy.

Coral gabardine coat goes with everything, $69.95;
in suède cloth, $45. Flannel skirt, sweater.

Bare-top jacketed taffeta for afternoon, without its jacket for evening, $69.95.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Sand-color crisp rayon suit, $25.00. Change with blouses, scarfs, hats, gloves.

Tricolor polka dots, pure-silk all-day dress, any hour, $35.00.

A lightweight wool in every trousseau.
Blue jersey, $19.95. Dress up with pearls.

COAT BY ETTA GAINES, TAFFETA BY CEIL CHAPMAN, SUIT BY ALVIN HANDMACHER, POLKA DOT BY CLAIRE SMITH, WHITE HAT AND BLACK BAG BY MR. JOHN, STRAW BAG BY HATTIE CARNEGIE.

FASHION

FINDS OF THE SPRING

By Ruth Mary Packer

These pure silks
and pretty cottons
for North,
East, South or West

Town cotton, a two-piece check for the South now, everywhere later; $25, by Ben Barrack. Cloche by John Frederics.

Pure-silk polka dots, pink and turquoise. Fashion in the slim accordion pleats and bow neckline. By Claire Smith, $39.95.

Natural silk shantung, a two-piece dress you'll love to wear with natural straw hat and bag, short cotton gloves, flower at your neckline; $29.95.

Sleeveless pretty silk print afternoon dress, design of gambling lambs, white and red; $39.95.

PHOTOGRAPH BY LEOMBRUNO • BODI

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Silk shantung suit—slim, dark and cool, for now and all summer. Bright navy blue, white pearl buttons, lovely with white hat and gloves. By Morgan Fauth, $29.95.

Two-color silk shantung—the fashion of the one-piece dress that looks two-piece; Claire Smith, $35.

Afternoon cotton, lacy printed voile with bands of black lace insertion, by Claire Smith, $29.95. Wear with a veil.

The Dress You Love Most... By Nora O'Leary

The dress you love most might be a black-and-white crepe two-piece dress that can be worn as a suit . . . or a navy blue sheer with white organdy touches. It may be a polka-dot silk classic—your own ingenuity adds the reverse-dot gloves and stole . . . or an authentic Lanvin design made up in a beautiful tie-silk print. Whatever your choice, it is sure to be the dress you feel most comfortable in, the dress you get the most compliments on, and the dress you look prettiest in. It will be made of one of the lovely new fabrics from a pattern collection of becoming new designs. It will be the kind of dress your husband or beau beams upon with pride each time you wear it.

DRAWING BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

Navy blue sheer to wear now and on through the summer. Wear with or without collar. Vogue Design No. 6720, 12 to 18.

Black-and-white two-piece casual suit. Belted jacket, slim skirt. Pate pockets open from sides. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6729, 12 to E

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in yo city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money orde from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Gree wich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Av Toronto, Ont. *Connecticut residents please add sales t

Back and other views are on page 2 15

Lavender-and-white polka-dot silk classic shirtwaist dress. The skirt can be gathered, or tucked as shown in the picture. Vogue Design No. 6765, 12 to 20.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

© VOGUE

Gray silk shantung; slim bodice, soft skirt-front. Junior Vogue Design No. 3258, 9 to 15.

Lanvin-designed dress—new in a group of Paris Original Models—now in Vogue Patterns. Vogue No. 1052, 12 to 20.

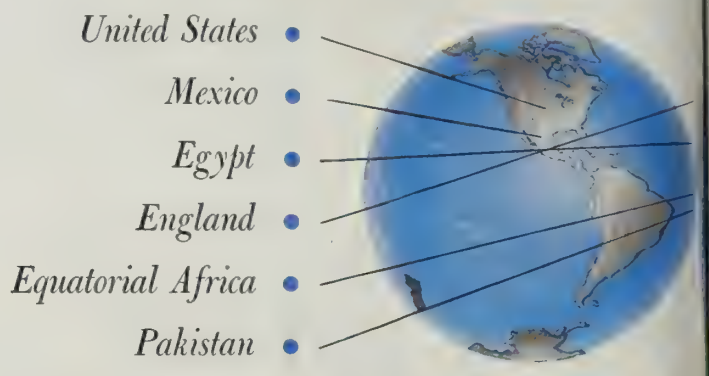
Most comfortable of dresses: kimono-sleeve top and trim midriff. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6735, 12 to 18.

Twelfth and last of a JOURNAL Series

PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER

FRANCE: The older Redouin boys have a room of their own. Two small children sleep in the kitchen with their parents, leaving another room which is "too nice" to use. The boys were quick to make souvenirs of the JOURNAL photographer's flash bulbs (left).

JAPAN: All the Okamotos have to do for fresh air is slide back one of the walls of the room. This is a living room by day, bedroom by night. The children go to bed immediately after the supper dishes are done, arise at 5:30. They wear plain cotton kimonos to bed.



GERMANY: Rolf Stieglitz, age four, is already a big boy for his crib. He shares a room with his parents and is normally fast asleep by the time they come to bed. On his pillow are embroidered the words "Gott Schuetze Dich," which means "God protect you in your sleep."

EGYPT: The three el Gamel boys sleep together in this huge four-poster bed. They wear nightcaps and galabiyas which resemble nightgowns but are worn in Egypt day and night. Their parents share a similar bed in another bedroom with a baby sister. Winter heat comes from charcoal braziers.

PAKISTAN: At dusk the Usn set their charpoys (beds) ou the night. It practically n rains here, so the family al

THIS IS THE

IT is noon in Iowa and dusk in England. While Bruce Pratt eats his lunch at school, Peter Hiatt gets into his pajamas. His sister Joan is already in bed with her favorite doll, and mother has promised to read Little Red Ridinghood—if they are good. But who wants to go to bed before dark? When Mrs. Hiatt reaches the room, bringing the bedtime cocoa, she finds a pillow fight. She is quick to forgive, and reads the story anyway.

In Europe it is the sleepy time of day. The Guercini boys kneel on the tile floor by the big brass bed to say their prayers in Italian. In Germany, Frau Stieglitz gives a good-night kiss to little Rolf, who will soon outgrow his crib. There is horseplay at bedtime in Egypt, when the el Gamel boys vault into bed. Theirs is the fanciest of all, with its four tall posts canopied with lace, and a bright pink spread. In Mexico, Señor and Señora Gonzalez make their bed on hard boards, with the baby suspended from the ceiling. In Africa, the twelve children of Zamba Aluma sleep on grass mats, boys in one hut, the girls in another, while each of his wives has a hut of her own.

ITALY: The Guercinis go to bed later than most of the other families, but are apt to siesta after lunch. They have three fine feather mattresses. Their sheets are now of cotton, whereas before the war they were linen. Furniture is all supplied by the landlord, who gets fifty per cent of their crop.

MEXICO: The Gonzalezes all tire early, as they have no el tricity to prolong the day. T parents sleep on a straw m utdoors, wearing their clothes and seldom users, as the nights are hot in the Indus delta.

UNITED STATES: Since this picture was taken the Pratts have remodeled the upstairs of their Iowa farmhouse, and now Arleen has her own room. This helps solve the problem of getting to bed at night, but makes it no easier to get up early in the morning. There are 20 cows to milk before breakfast.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

by JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

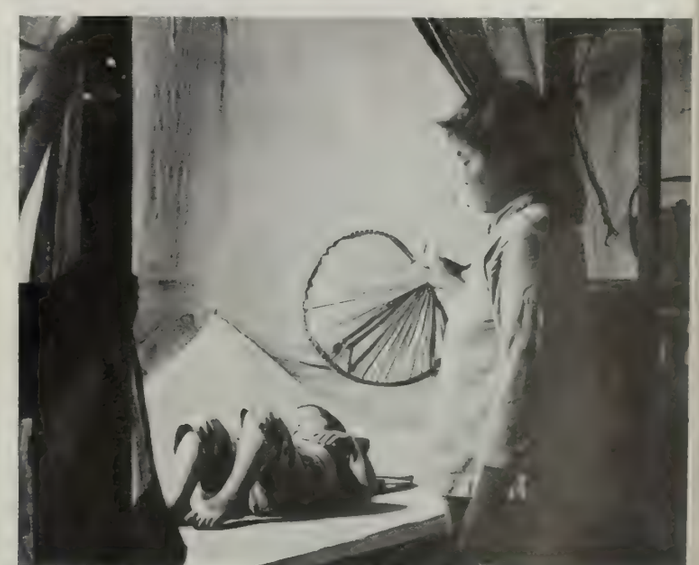
WORLD AT BEDTIME

The Balogh children, in the cold Carpathian foothills, sleep under quilts of down. The Usmans sleep through the hot night in Pakistan with only the sky for a coverlet. In China it is often humid, and Mrs. Ho fans the baby through the fretful night. In Japan the Okamotos share their resting place with the swallows that nest under the eaves. The children wish their parents a "pleasant rest," and then stretch out on straw mats, covering up with futons (quilts) and taking care not to lie with heads to the north, for that is the position for corpses.

One by one, in the firm order of age, the world's children are tucked in for the night. There is a moment of peace, a time for quiet renewal of the love between man and wife. The evening fire burns low, and finally flickers out. One hemisphere is already asleep.

For schools, "People are People the World Over" is now available in a series of filmstrips. Address Young America Films, 18 East 41st Street, New York 17, N. Y.



PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and Pakistan), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany).

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: A telltale unwashed foot projects from the bed of the little Baloghs. There are three boys and one small girl in this bed, which would seem to be about capacity; however, it makes for winter warmth. The boys wear old shirts as night dress.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA: Zamba Aluma's five sons (by his first wife; he has two more by his second) sleep in this one hut. Draga and Kili share a homemade bed while Alinda, Dada and Atige sleep like stacked spoons on the mud floor. Shorts suffice, as it is warm.

CHINA: The Hos have four bedrooms, each large enough for one small bed canopied with mosquito netting. The mattress is thick straw covered with reeds. It is the custom for boy babies to sleep with father, girls with mother, until old enough to sleep alone.

id on boards, the boys on or. They use heavy wool ts of Indian design, as
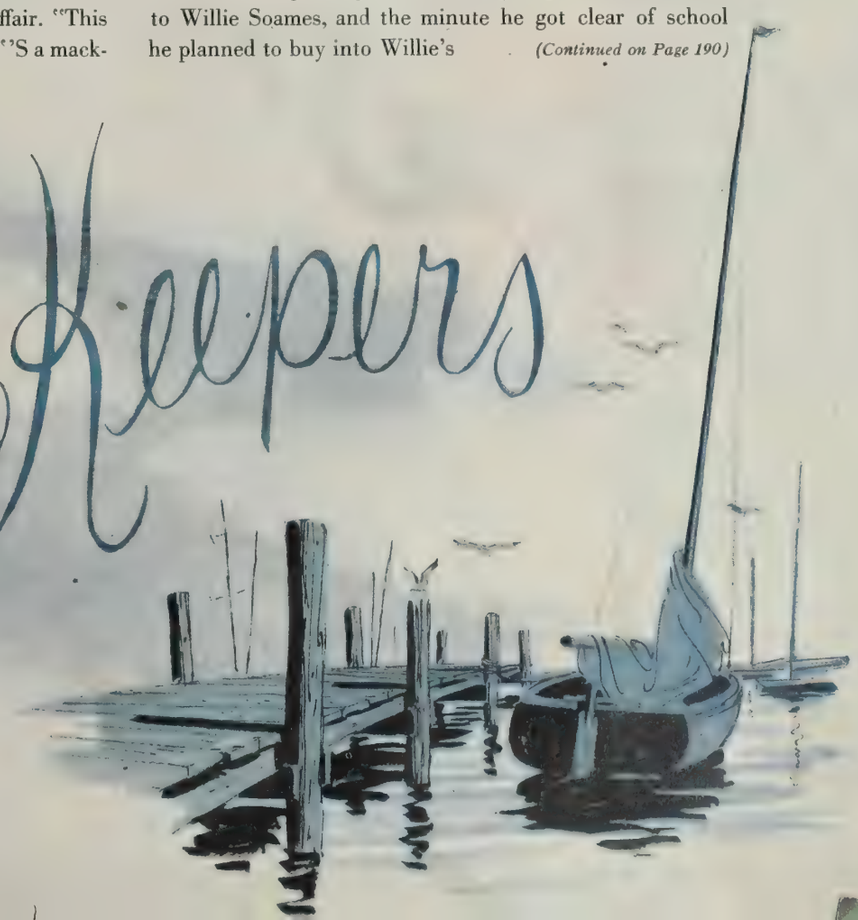
ights are often chilly.

ENGLAND: Mrs. Hiatt marvels at the bedtime energy of her son and daughter, here shown in pillow combat. They share the same room in winter, but the Hiatts separate them in summer, for they keep each other awake on long summer evenings. One bedroom is kept empty for rainy-day play.

She was crying ...

... then she slung her arms round his neck ..

..he'd put his foot in it somehow.



..and up on her toes and kissed

Finders Keepers

How long can you be in love and not know it?

By KENNETH PAYSON KEMPTON

ILLUSTRATED BY ARTHUR SARNOFF

AS usual, Andy Marr wasn't giving thought to girls of any kind. Coming up through the schoolyard before first bell, he was looking over his new mackerel jig and laying plans and feeling prime. Tinkers running in the bay at last. And he and pa, keeping house since mum passed away a year back, and mostly botching it, couldn't hardly wait to get a taste. Nobody'd wish a finer September day. Easy enough to borrow Wes Brier's skiff. High water at five would make a couple hours' fishing after school let out. No great shakes at showing how he felt, certainly, yet Andy had to let himself whistle a little, low between his tongue and upper teeth, at all this fair prospect.

There were kids all over the yard, whooping it before the bell called them inside—all grades through high in the one big building. Pete Sproule and some more of the senior crowd, guys and girls both, were loafing and kidding on the porch steps. Andy headed that way, still hefting the red jig in his hand.

"Whatcha got, whassat there?" this voice flew at him sudden as sin. He looked, and he began to grin. She was a skinny little thing, more like a boy; looked hungry, was his first idea. She'd just caught a ball and got set to whip it back, but froze there, staring over her shoulder at that jig in his hand as if it was something and then some. Wasn't raised hereabouts, that was certain.

"You ever hear," he asked her, teasing, "what curiosity done to the cat?"

She let her arm drop and stood there big-eyed, all adrift. "N-nope."

"There, no need weep over it." All girls odd, this one odder than most and kidded too easy. He knew now who she must be, one of these charity campers from beyond Middle Hill. City poor she looked, so pale, her washed-out plain dress, the way she talked and all. But how come? Two weeks was all they stayed there. That camp always closed down Labor Day. What was she, playing hooky from home and going to school down here? It was none of his affair. "This here?" He told her, since the poor thing asked, "'S a mackerel jig." He made a move with his arm like jigging, up and down slantwise, to show her.

Boy, her black eyes sparked. "You goin' fishin'?"

It was comical. "I might." He started along past.

"Lemme come?" she hollered after him. And when he turned, amazed, she drew in a vast breath, tucked up the corners of her mouth so her teeth showed, and nice and polite added, "Pl-ease?"

"Look." But you couldn't tell her. Time they got her age, girls didn't go fishing unless touched in the head. Be like a boy going up to Portland to one of these beauty parlors. Himself, he wouldn't be seen fishing with a girl anyways. Least of all an outlander.

Then the bell let go. He hurried inside, thinking good riddance. But no. In his home room, happening to look round later, there she sat a few rows off, her red mouth still saying "Pl-ease" that way at him, only now silently. Later she showed in his math and history. It wore him down. Why couldn't she pick on somebody that took to girls—Pete Sproule or Dillon Brewer or Hen Pruett? He knew he was sizing it up bigger'n it was, but couldn't seem to help it. She didn't belong here anyways. She'd stir up trouble or get into it, or both. He couldn't make out how pa and the others on the board had allowed it. Not that they, or anybody else paying taxes, had a right to act choosy. It was a poor town, poor-proud, getting poorer fast and too proud to do a thing about it. Like somebody had an ingrowing toenail but too lazy to cut it.

So he forgot jig and tinkers, fell to brooding. And, as usual, came to mind pa's proud ambition to make him into one of these sassy lawyers. Law. No more suited to that than she was to this town. He knew what he wanted. Had his plans and some money, had near five hundred saved working summers since he was ten. He liked here, not some away-off stinking city studying at law. Liked outdoor, woods and water. Liked gas engines, tinkering engines. He'd talked to Willie Soames, and the minute he got clear of school he planned to buy into Willie's

(Continued on Page 190)

Spring's in the air

BY ANN BATCHELDER

IT has been my observation, over a good many springs, that nature loves yellow. April comes and the fickle dame seems to have forgotten all about green, and goes gallivanting all over the place with yellow. Take the forsythia. Take a lot. It is draped over every post and every wall and it's so eager to get itself into the limelight that it doesn't even wait for its own leaves to come out before it is flaunting itself in a blaze of yellow beauty and, like as not, deceiving folks into thinking it's time to set out the geraniums.

Then there are the dandelions. Spring claims them for her own. They are the jewels that she loves best to wear. Some foolish people hate dandelions. And it is true that they don't add much to the billiard-table type of front lawn. But I'd worry if we didn't have them. How short their little lives are. Blown away when their span is done, they come no

(Continued on Page 97)

PHOTO BY STUART POWER

MENU
Shrimp Cocktail
with Chutney Sauce
Glacéed Ham Slice
Scallions on Toast
Creamed Potatoes in Tomato Cups
Spiced Apricots Cheese Biscuits
Asparagus Salad—Egg Garnish
Fruit Compote—Spongecakes
Demitasse
(Planned for 6)

Line a Day

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Deflation: Having taken up bridge again, after a lapse of years, I felt inclined to boast a bit. The other day I came out with, "Well, I set So-and-so at five spades, doubled," only to get the reply, "Don't you care, you can't win all the time!"

2 As far as I can make out, the slice-of-toast-and-black-coffee breakfast diet is definitely out of style. Breakfasts that are breakfasts are in.

3 Speaking of breakfast reminds me week ends in the country will be coming along soon. For those late-but-hearty eaters try this on the crew.

4 Make some good large griddlecakes, one for each person, and allow an egg to each cake. Boil the eggs about four minutes, peel, chop in a bowl, season well, adding a little cream and butter. Spread the egg mixture on the cakes, roll them up and anchor with toothpicks. Heat in the oven. Serve with crisp bacon.

5 The serene avocado wears many a new bonnet. Peel and mash a ripe avocado, beat it into puréed sweet potato, season with butter, salt, pepper and a dash of nutmeg. Add diced pineapple, and heat. Serve very hot with ham or chicken.

6 Forget the fry-and-frizzle for once, and do pork chops simmered in pineapple juice. Then put them in a hot oven, 400°F., for about twenty minutes to braise in the juice. They will be tender as chicken breast.

7 For Sunday-night supper if you tire of rarebit, peel and slice a pound of fine, firm, white mushrooms and cook for five minutes in a little cream and butter—or margarine. Don't let them brown. Set aside.

8 Chapter 2: Now cut two pairs of fine sweetbreads (prepared for cooking) in pieces and toss in hot butter until they're a delicate brown. Put the sweetbreads and mushrooms, with four hard-boiled eggs, sliced, in a large casserole. Season, and fill the casserole with a rich, light cream sauce, well seasoned, and fold together with a fork. Cover with fine cracker crumbs, dot with butter and bake until the sauce bubbles and browns. This is delicious.

9 I've just received a grand Vermont sage cheese, straight from its home base. All of a year old, creamy and soft and a little on the crumbly side, sharp but not biting—it lines up with the finest cheeses known.

10 For instance, I made some tiny baking-powder biscuits, about the size of a fifty-cent piece. I softened the cheese with a little cream, then put it between the split, hot, buttered biscuit, and it was a two-bite hit.

11 Halve some small tomatoes, fry them until tender. Sprinkle with sweet basil, season with salt and pepper. Arrange them on slices of French toast and on each put a perfect poached egg. Pour a good sharp cheese sauce over all.

12 The business of corned beef comes before the meeting now. Make it into cakes; fry them to a crisp brown. Put a poached egg on each one and cover with hot tomato sauce. This tomato sauce comes in cans, and what you can do with it is wonderful.

13 It will do no harm to try adding a little deviled ham to a spaghetti sauce. Green salad is a must with macaroni and spaghetti dishes.

14 From an old cookbook: "The young bride should watch carefully for leaks in the household economy. Many a devoted husband has turned into a barely tolerant housemate on account of too lavish a use of the housekeeping money." Eternal vigilance, and so forth.

15 Now that asparagus has commenced its annual and welcome invasion, you may sit back and practically let nature take its course. The delicious dishes where asparagus plays the leading role are legion.

16 For example, cook the tips of asparagus in boiling salted water until tender. Takes only a few minutes. Drain them, season with salt, pepper.

17 Chapter 2: Arrange the tips in a shallow casserole, cover with cream of chicken soup. Sprinkle with fine crumbs, grated cheese, and brown under the broiler.

18 Many folks are devoted to tea and teas. And they like to eat too. Little hot biscuits, split, buttered and filled with soft or shaved maple sugar, are hits.

19 Cream of mushroom soup is useful in a dozen ways. As soup, try garnishing with browned croutons.

SPRING SONG

Let there be summer in your heart,
Away with this complaining.
No leaf, no bud has any part
In sighs because it's raining.
And hark, I hear the linnet's cry,
That's rare as sleigh bells in July.

20 Scatter very finely chopped browned almonds or chopped pistachio nuts over cream soups. Both the idea and the result are very desirable.

21 If the family turn up their collective noses at spinach, make some spinach griddlecakes and note carefully (in your not-impossible diary) their reaction.

22 Cook up a batch of spinach and force it through a sieve. The purée must be thick, so don't have the spinach weeping like the bride's mother. Drain it well, for this receipt will put a new interest in the life of spinach. The next step follows.

23 When the purée is ready, make a griddlecake batter, using half milk and half cream, season with nutmeg, salt, pepper, and a teaspoon of sugar. Beat a cup of the spinach into the batter and bake like any griddlecake. Serve with scrambled eggs and bacon.

24 A good many words have been written about stuffed tomatoes. The tomato surprise is ordinarily as surprising as a collar button on a shirt. But here's one that is surprising and surprisingly good:

25 Use smallish tomatoes, peel and scoop out insides to make a container—for the surprise. Mix together canned salmon, anchovies cut fine, a little horseradish, a minced shallot and a little minced gherkin. Bind with mayonnaise, season, and fill the tomatoes.

26 A party omelet is made with lobster Newburg folded in just before the omelet goes to its destiny. Crab meat ditto is wonderful too. Creamed chicken you know about.

27 Try mixing one-third corn meal with the flour you dip onion rings in for French-fries. Soak onion rings in milk and dry first. Remember?

28 Up in New England the good cooks say, "A dish is as good as its seasoning." That is simple truth.

29 Little thin slices of freshly baked ham, spread with prepared mustard and sandwiched into hot, split, buttered baking-powder biscuits, are as popular at a party as Clark Gable at a barn dance.

30 Next month is fishing time again. When he brings home that dreamed-of string of trout, caught by himself or bought from a small boy equipped with a bent pin, give them everything you've got. Fry them in salt-pork fat or bacon. Have, to go with the trout, salt pork and cream gravy, baked potatoes and a deep-dish apple pie and cheese. And coffee ad lib. Enough said.

Just as sure as you like Chicken...
you'll like Campbell's CHICKEN SOUP

CHICKEN The delicious taste of chicken fills the golden gleaming broth. Your every sip says "Mmm, chicken!"

CHICKEN The fluffy rice that makes this chicken soup so extra nourishing is steeped in the chicken broth.

CHICKEN Tender pieces of chicken, both white meat and dark, are measured in with a generous hand.

S TO CHOOSE FROM: Asparagus · Bean with Bacon · Beef · Beef Noodle ean · Bouillon · Cream of Celery (new!) · Chicken with Rice · Cream of Chicken (new!) · Chicken Gumbo · Chicken Noodle · Consommé owder · Cream of Mushroom · Ox Tail · Green Pea · Pepper Pot · Scotch Broth · Tomato · Vegetable · Vegetarian Vegetable · Vegetable-Beef.

That unseen woman within you —can make you over...

if you will only let her

Mrs. Vanderbilt's flawless skin shows the exquisite care she gives it. "The best creams I know are Pond's," she says, "they're perfect for my skin."

MANY WOMEN feel in their hearts that they have missed full self-realization.

Many live always with a numbing sense that they are of little importance.

Yet they need not accept this—help is within themselves. You can feel it within you—an inner drive for happiness. The close interrelation between this Inner You and the Outer You, the almost uncanny power that each has to change the other—can change you from drabness to joyous self-fulfilment.

Never think of yourself as cut to a set pattern. You are not—you are changing every day. You can direct this change. Let the strong, beautiful Inner You help you to lift your life up.

This inner force in all women is tied inextricably with need for physical attractiveness. This is the real reason that nothing so shakes your confidence, your whole outlook, as the uneasiness that comes from not looking as you should—not appearing at your best.

It is also the reason that nothing so bolsters your faith in yourself as the warm, sweet knowledge that you look lovely—and that this outer loveliness is actually drawing others closer to the true You within.

Right now—today—start an inspiring new way of living, that will send a new and lovelier You flooding out through your face and lift you right out of the class that nobody notices.

Base this new way of living on the great laws of health and beauty: Exercise each day—so circulation keeps renewing you! Relax—let go a few minutes at least twice each day. You'll be amazed how this soothes and lifts your spirit. Enough sleep regularly. A balanced diet. Enough water. Cleanliness.

And then—your face—that constantly changing outer expression of You that always seems more fascinating than anything else about you. A new understanding of its care will bring the real Inner You singing through it for all your world to see and love.

New "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

Never underestimate the little miracles that can be wrought by simple daily habits. That luminous look—for instance—which true cleanliness gives to skin. The fineness and softness of texture that can come to you through faithful, meticulous grooming. Yes—the gratitude of skin for the care you give it is a lovely thing to see.

You'll find it takes no time at all to give your face this Pond's new "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment that acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—the Pond's Cold Cream is softening, smoothing and cleansing your skin, as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this new treatment is stimulating the blood in your cheeks to beauty-giving activity.

Mrs Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr.

Mrs. Vanderbilt's charming, mobile face sends a fascinating challenge from her vivid Inner Self ... gives to all who see her a lovely, stirring picture of the truly magnetic person she is.

You really should not wait another day to give your skin this rewarding new beauty care. Do it always at bedtime (for day face-cleansings, too) —this is the way:

Hot Stimulation—splash your face with hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl Pond's Cold Cream—lots of it—all over your face. This will soften and sweep dirt and make-up from pore-openings. Tissue off well.

Cream Rinse—swirl on a second Pond's creaming. This rinses off last traces of dirt, leaves skin lubricated, immaculate. Tissue off.

Cold Stimulation—give your face a tonic cold water splash.

Now—see your face! Rosy! Sparkling clean! So soft! This new "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with Pond's Cold Cream is beauty care you'll never want to miss—because it works! As lovely Mrs. Vanderbilt says, "This treatment leaves my face feeling refreshed and immaculate. Pond's is a beautiful cream!"

Is yours Dry Skin? Is it "After 25" Skin?

Dry skin requires a special cream—one that will give your skin more oil. From 25 on, many women find their natural skin oil starts decreasing. Lots of you will lose as much as 20% of this natural oil before you are 40. If you have any tendency to dry skin, give your face the extra softening help of lanolin-rich homogenized Pond's Dry Skin Cream. A wonderful cream—very rich, yet never sticky—you'll love the way dry skin really seems to drink it up.

For Powder Base— a special greaseless cream

If yours is skin that does not like a heavy foundation, it will like the different featherlight foundation Pond's Vanishing Cream gives. Completely greaseless—it leaves no "coated" look. You have no shade problem. It leaves only a smooth, protective film that's transparent on your skin. Powder goes on smoothly, looks more natural—and lasts!

Discover, too, the quick "beauty-lift": a 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream can give you. Just cover your face (except your eyes) with a cool, snowy mask of the cream. After 1 full minute, tissue off. See your skin look clearer, brighter, silkier—immediately!

Have the "Angel Face look"

You look sweet and smart and completely natural when you wear Pond's Angel Face—the newest kind of new make-up that is actually foundation and powder all in one. Not a cake make-up, no wet sponge; not a greasy foundation, no smeary fingertips—Angel Face goes on with its own downy puff. It gives you a complete make-up that stays on much longer than powder. It's never drying, it's never greasy. And it can't spill in your handbag or "snow" over dark dresses. You are just bound to love Angel Face—and you can choose from five heavenly shades.

Then—for your lips—you will find there is subtle flattery in Pond's satiny-pink "Lips" shade—"Dither." A perfect shade for Spring—it is completely adorable on blondes—and is downright bewitching on brunettes.

Don't ever just take your face for granted. Every face needs loving care and understanding to look as lovely and happy and bright as it should. What are you doing for your face? It is the You that others see first, remember. Do, then, help it to show this You with real charm and distinction—at your very best.

Always remember—The you that others see first is in your face!

It is not vanity

to develop the beauty of your face. You owe it to those who love you—you owe it to yourself. The lovelier you look, the happier you'll feel—and you will find this greater happiness brings the real Inner You closer to others.

Seven favorites among the beauty aids Pond's makes for You—used and trusted by lovely women the world over

Spring Garden

THE GLORIOUS NEW DESIGN IN SILVERPLATE BY HOLMES & EDWARDS

Sweet Spring Garden! So gay, so adorable!

At last, all the bright glory of springtime has been captured in silverplate by master designers.

First, you see tiny flowerets deeply carved upon a gleaming surface . . . and at the very tip, a gay surprise! Bursting forth in all its fresh beauty, is a delicate budding flower. A brilliant touch, that forever will give distinction to Spring Garden.

See Spring Garden at your favorite silverware counter today. The beautiful 52 piece service for 8 is only $68.50 with chest. And it's Sterling Inlaid* silverplate, to stay lovelier longer . . . a pattern you'll love and cherish forever.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

MADE BY THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.

Special Introductory Offer!

1 Five O'Clock teaspoons new Spring Garden design, for only $1.89. Ideal for desserts, ice cream and sherbet. At all jewelry and department stores for a limited time . . .

*The most used surfaces and faces of the silverplate are protected with two blocks of sterling silver at backs of bowls and handles . . .

Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. °Reg. U. S. Pat.

POINT OF NO RETURN

(Continued from Page 53)

artment. Arthur Slade must have vouched him because the conversations were all eral and no one asked him anything defi- about his previous experience. An hour t have elapsed before Charles said he t not take any more of Mr. Slade's time thanked him for showing him around. It only then that Arthur Slade asked ther he would like to try it in the statisti- department.

"You can't tell," Arthur Slade said. "It ht be worth trying. How much were you ing at Rush & Co.?"

f course they could not pay him what he been getting at Rush & Co., but there a future in the statistical department. were a part of the family. It was like . Rush & Co. again—one big happy fam- as though all families were necessarily py. Yet the Stuyvesant may have been e like a family than many other business nizations. There were the same jeal- es, the same incompetent poor relations, same feuds. There was also a sort of loy- , as much as there could be loyalty to as and grim an institution as a bank.

harles had been like a mountain climber ging to a precarious foothold up there in statistical department. There were no a desks, so he had been stationed at a le in the corner, and one day Arthur Slade come up from downstairs, which was sual. Arthur Slade was a little like a com- sioned officer that morning, entering the erly room to speak to the sergeant major.

"Oh, Walter," he said to Mr. Gibbs, here's that analysis?"

Charles was beginning realize already that lter Gibbs had lapses moments of forgetful- s.

"I've just finished cking it," Walter Gibbs d. "I was going to send it down. I didn't ow you wanted it in a hurry."

"Where is it?" Arthur Slade asked. "Those yers are meeting us tomorrow. It should e been in the mail last night. That's all t, it's my fault. I should have told you." was probably not his fault because he er slipped up on things, but Arthur Slade s always careful never to blame anyone en it was not necessary. "Jessup's just n telephoning," Arthur Slade said. "It ght to be given to him personally. Is there yone here you could send down to Pine eet?"

"Why, yes," Walter Gibbs said, "there's ay."

All law offices, particularly in New York, arles often thought, had a self-conscious nosphere, which was very much like their tionery. Their pictures and chairs and les and the personnel of the outer offices re all selected to create an air of erudition, urity and ponderous judicious calm. The y who greeted Burrell, Jessup and Cock- rn visitors noted Charles' name and that the partner he wished to see on a memo- ndum pad. Then he rose slowly and walked wn a corridor, leaving Charles seated by a nd mahogany table with his brief case his knees.

HE office boy came back and led the way wn a corridor to the partners' offices. You can go right in," the boy said.

It was obviously Mr. Jessup's office be- use his name was on the door, but when harles opened the door he was in another ter office. Behind a mahogany secretary's sk Nancy was sitting, typing a letter.

He stood watching her because she did not ok up when he came in. Her fingers moved er the typewriter keys easily, almost con- mptuously. She wore a plain silk shirt- aist. Her light brown hair was done up in a not. Her lips were pressed in an even line nd her whole face looked cool and aloof. er skin was as clear as her white silk waist, ut there was a faint natural touch of color her cheeks. There was no lipstick. Nancy never used it in business hours. She did not look up until she had finished the paragraph she was typing and then she looked straight at him but she did not smile. Her eyes were greenish gray and they were wide, almost too wide, apart.

"Do you want to see Mr. Jessup?" she asked. "Or do you want to leave something for him?"

"I'm from the Stuyvesant Bank," Charles said, and that was the first thing he ever said to Nancy. "They sent me over with some papers. I'm supposed to hand them to Mr. Jessup."

"YOU'RE supposed to," Nancy repeated, and she sounded as though she were faintly amused, but there was no way of telling. "What are they about?"

"They didn't tell me."

"Well, Mr. Jessup's busy now. You can leave them with me and I'll see that he gets them."

"I'm afraid I'd better wait."

"Haven't you got anything else to do back at that bank?" Nancy asked. "I'll see he gets them. I'm pretty good at handing people papers."

"So am I," Charles said, and he smiled.

"Mr. Jessup's in conference," Nancy said, "and he won't be free for half an hour."

"I'm supposed to give them to him personally."

"What are you in that bank, a messenger?"

"No, I'm in the statistical department."

"Have you been there long?"

"Of course I haven't," Charles said, "or they wouldn't be sending me on errands. This is the first important job that's been offered me."

Then she smiled. It was the first time he ever saw her smile. "Well, take off your overcoat and sit down, if you want to waste your time."

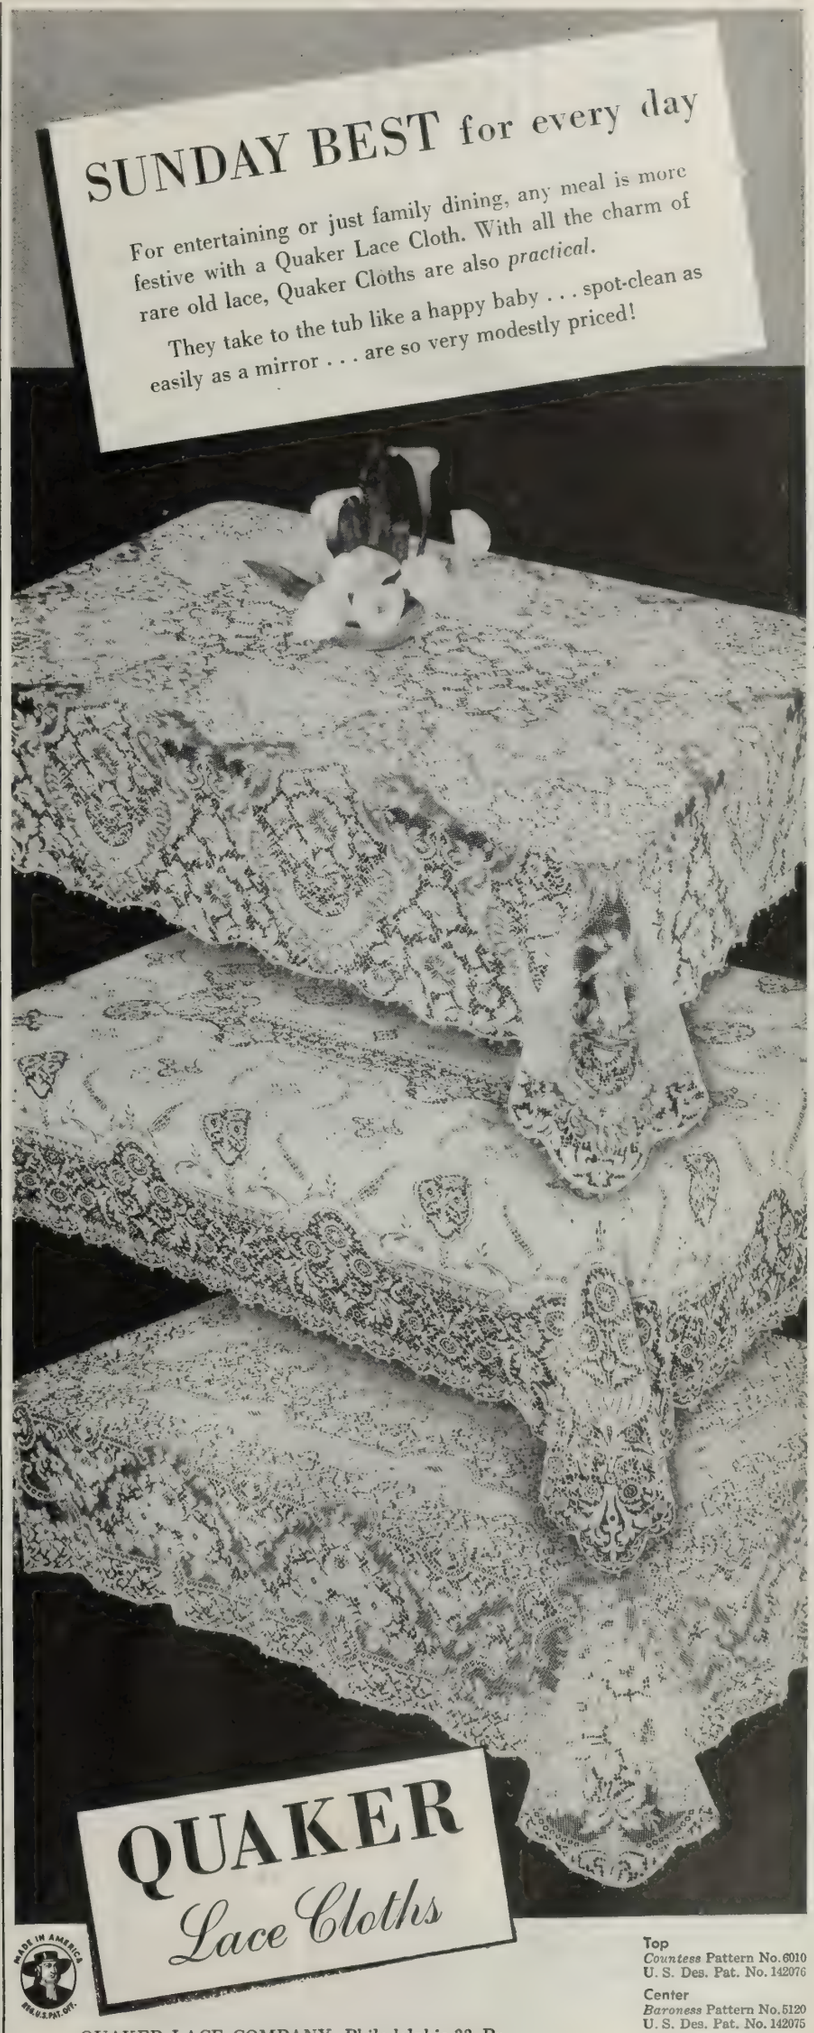
She was not much farther along than he was then. She was Mr. Jessup's private secretary and she was being paid forty-five dollars a week and they would never have been married if she had not kept that job.

"If I bother you waiting here," Charles said, "I can wait outside."

"You don't bother me. This is my last letter."

He never bothered her, she always said, right from the beginning, and most men did, and there were a great many maladjusted junior partners in that office.

"You didn't seem to have me on your mind," she told him once. "We just sat there and talked. And sex didn't seem to enter into it, but I suppose it did. It was all perfectly natural." But then everything always was with him and Nancy.



The cars on the branch line that led to Clyde were always antiquated. As they rocked and rattled on the uneven roadbed, you could tell from the sounds exactly where the train was, especially as it was approaching Clyde. There was a stifled roar as the train passed through the cut that came just before Brainard's crossing. Then came the hollow rumble of the trestle that spanned Whiting's creek. After the train crossed the low farmlands just outside of Clyde there came the louder roar of the short tunnel and with it an instant of darkness, always startling no matter how often one had experienced it, and the brakeman's voice mingled with the roar and the darkness.

"Clyde," he always shouted. "Clyde." And if it was the three-thirty train out of Boston he always added, "Please leave no articles in the car," an admonition that was never heard, as far as Charles could remember, on any other train.

He had been looking out the window. He had seen the sodden April brown of the fields. He had seen the muddy banks and the low tide of Whiting's creek. He had put on

(Continued on Page 77)

Who writes love letters grows thin; who carries them, fat.

QUAKER LACE COMPANY, Philadelphia 33, Pa.
Sales office: 330 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N. Y.
Also makers of Quaker Net Curtains and Quaker Nylon Hosiery

Top
Countess Pattern No. 6010
U. S. Des. Pat. No. 142076

Center
Baroness Pattern No. 5120
U. S. Des. Pat. No. 142075

Bottom
Gala Pattern No. 4120
U. S. Des. Pat. No. 148624

It's Thriftier, it's Tastier--it's Treet!

Some like it hot . . . and here's that unmatched Armour blend of tender pork shoulder and sugar-cured ham in a fix-easy feast that makes all eyes stop, look, and glisten! Just top Treet squares with half apricots; stud with cloves. Glaze with brown sugar and apricot syrup. Bake at 400° F. for 20 min., basting occasionally. Dip bananas in beaten egg, roll in mixture of crushed corn flakes and melted butter, bake last 10 min. with Treet squares. (Treet's all rich, nourishing meat). Flash! Treet now slips out of tin whole with new Middle-of-Tin Opener!

Some like it cold . . . but cold or hot, you've got meal-time magic at your finge tips when Treet's on your pantry shelf! In mere minutes you can whip up goo lookin', grand-tastin' meals with thrifty all-meat Treet. (See how the ne Middle-of-Tin Opener brings Treet out whole)! For Treet-wiches pictured: cut Tre into thin slices. Put together like sandwiches with 1 pkg. Cream Cheese softene with 1 tbsp. drained horseradish. Just grand with avocados and melon ball (Treet's so good so many ways . . . baked, broiled, or fried). Try it!

Tune in HINT HUNT—CBS Monday through Friday;
STARS OVER HOLLYWOOD—CBS Saturday

The best and nothing but the best is labeled
ARMOUR

© ARMOUR AND COMPANY

New! Middle-of-the-tin opener!
Only Armour has it!

ich time to see Nancy and the children, but haps I will get time if everything turns out ht. We live in a place called Sycamore rk." He found himself speaking more ickly, more easily. He was laying out his ole life on the dining-room table, just as ough he were dealing from a deck of cards, d it sounded rather well.

"We have a picture of the house," Mrs. ason said. "It looks so new and lovely th ——" She did not finish because the orbell rang.

"That's May and Jeffrey," Mrs. Mason id. "I guess they thought we'd be finished pper."

May and Jeffrey Meader were in the dining om and everyone was standing up and the om seemed very crowded, with those who ere there and those who were not. The mo- ent he saw May Mason he thought of the mmer afternoon when May had been sit- ng alone in the back room trying to play e waltz from The Pink Lady and he had ought her that note from Sam; and he new that May, stoutish, middle-aged and ay-headed, remembered too.

"Charley," she said, "I guess I've got to iss you." He knew from the way she spoke at it was an unusual action, an impulsive reak from what she had planned to do or ay. "You look like Sam."

"I've thought of you a lot, May." It had a rittle, banal sound and he wished he could ave thought of something better. "I'm aw- ully glad if you think I look like Sam." It was very public, awkward moment, because ev- ryone was listening.

Jeffrey Meader was pudgy, with horn- immed spectacles, and almost bald. He ooked like someone in a small real-estate and nsurance office, but then his was exactly the way he should have looked. "Why, Charley looks like good prospect," he said. "Hi, Charley."

"Hi, Jeffrey," Charles said.

"And here's Edwina," May went on. "You member Edwina, don't you? She was orothea's flower girl."

May's daughter was standing in the door- y, looking just as May had once looked ex- pt that her blond hair was cut in a page-boy b instead of being long and tied up in a t, and she, too, must have been the ttiest girl in her class at high school.

"Why, I'd know Edwina anywhere," he id. "She hasn't changed at all."

"Malvina's married," May said. "She's ving in Brockton and as long as we're just e family I'll tell you Malvina's news. What o you think—she's expecting, Charley."

"May means Malvina's going to have a baby," Jackie said. "I wish you wouldn't put it that way, May. It sounds local."

"All right, all right," Jeffrey Meader said. "No matter how it sounds, May's going to be a grandmother any time now and that sounds pretty funny, doesn't it?"

"Now you're here," May said, "how long are you going to be here, Charley?"

He was a visitor again, that successful isitor from the city who had left them long o, and his voice sounded polite and meas- ed when he answered. "Only over tomor- v, I'm afraid. I'm sorry I can't stay longer, perhaps some other time ——"

There are certain people Charley ought e before he goes back," Jackie said, "and 'll be talk if he doesn't. I'll make a list o over it with Charley."

ey all trooped back to the parlor, and Charles took part in the conversation it e speaking a language which he had well a long time before and which he ill speak, although he was unfamiliar latest idioms and his tenses might ally be confused. In his absence aloof and indestructible, had been through a turbulent sea, but Clyde le for trouble. Nothing could en- ter its values. Everyone still knew and there was a place for everyone. es had forgotten that everyone went arly in Clyde until he saw Mr. Mason d then he said he would have to be getting back to the hotel, he meant the inn, and that he had had a wonderful time; and they all said it was like old times, seeing him, and they would see him again tomorrow.

"I'll go back to the inn with you," Jackie said.

He had begun to speak that forgotten language of Clyde so fluently that he and Jack Mason seemed to have picked up something which they had both dropped years before. He knew that Jackie admired him for the same reasons he always had, and he liked Jackie, too, with the same old reservations. They were walking toward Johnson Street and the houses were growing larger and more beautiful. He did not want to see Johnson Street, but if he had to, he was glad that Jack Mason was with him.

"The old place hasn't changed much," Jackie said. "It's still about the same." It was one of those rare occasions when you could say almost anything. "Charley, I wish you'd never gone away."

It was not what Charles would have wished, and he thought of what might have happened if he had stayed in Clyde. They had turned at the corner of Spruce and Johnson Streets and there was the Hewitt house, all dark, and the Lovell house diagonally across from it. He made a deliberate effort not to look at it, but he still knew it was there.

"I couldn't have stayed," he said, and it was a great relief that he had not a single doubt about it.

"Of course, it might have been a little difficult at first"—Jackie Mason hesitated—"but nothing would have affected your position. For instance, take the library," but he did not go on about the library.

It was very natural to be walking down Johnson Street with Jack Mason talking about position. Jackie did not mention that his grandfather had been a druggist, but it was still on Jackie's mind.

"Or take the bank," Jackie said. "You would have been in just the right position, the first time there was a vacancy on the board."

If he had stayed in Clyde, he might certainly have been a director of the Dock Street Bank. He might even have been president of it if he had done the right things at the right time.

"Well, never mind it," he answered. "You're the one who's got position now."

"Oh, I haven't done anything much," Jackie said, "except in a small-town way."

A sad note in Jackie's voice made Charles realize that Jackie wanted him to be impressed with everything he had done, and after all, he was a trustee of the public library and a director of the bank. He had gone a long, long way. Charles had to answer properly and he could not sound patronizing.

"Everything you do depends on where you are," he said. "Do you remember what Julius Caesar said"—he was like his own father, groping for an apt quotation—"about preferring to be the first man in Ostia to the second man in Rome? I'm sure it wasn't Ostia, but let's call it Ostia."

He could not see Jack Mason's face in the dark, but he was sure that he had said the right thing, neither too little nor too much.

"That's awfully nice of you to say that, Charley."

"It isn't nice," Charles said quickly, "it's the truth."

They had crossed the street and they were in front of the Clyde Inn before Jackie spoke again. "Don't think I look on myself as the first man in Ostia. I'm a long way from it. Er—Charley, do you mind if I come up to your room with you? There's something else I want to tell you."

"Of course I won't mind," Charles said. "What is it, Jack?"

"I'll get it off my chest in just a minute, but I can't tell it in front of everybody."

There was no one to tell it in front of at the inn except the clerk, who looked surprised to see them enter the place together.

"Hello, Edgar," Jackie said. "Mr. Gray wants his room key. I hope you've given Mr. Gray a good room."

Never marry a penniless maiden who's proud of her pedigree. —SCOTCH PROVERB.

no work...

no worry...

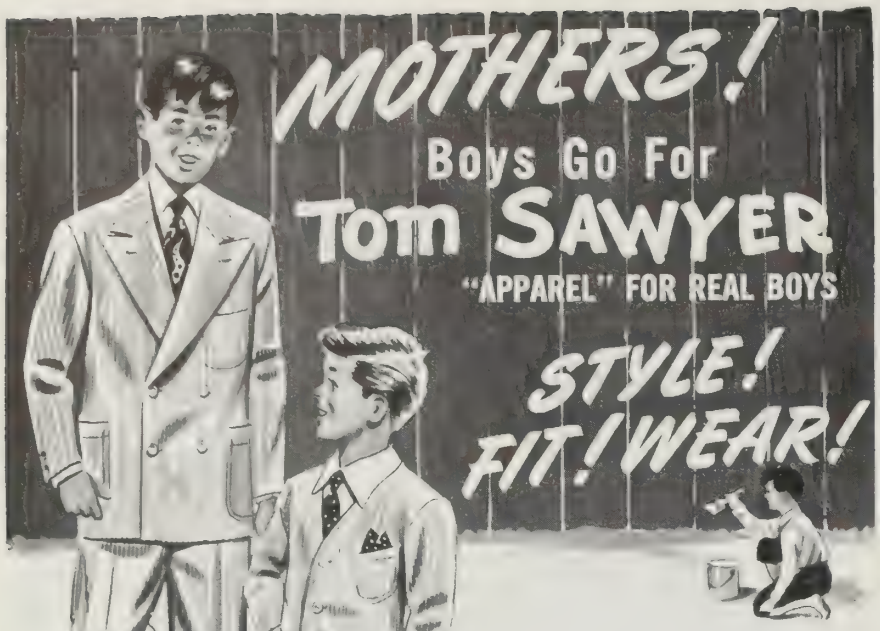
No Moths!

no work . . . Expello Ex-ray Vapor does it all for you. Simply put Expello Hangers in closets and sprinkle crystals in chests, trunks, drawers. No spraying, shaking, airing of garments necessary.

no worry . . . Expello Ex-ray Vapor penetrates every seam and fold of a garment, protecting each fiber—probing into spots that cannot be sprayed—protecting areas not effectively reached by other types of moth repellents.

no moths . . . Expello Ex-ray Vapor kills all forms of moth life. Moths, moth worms and moth eggs cannot escape penetrating, probing, Ex-ray Vapor. The Expello Ex-ray Vapor method of protection is the sure, easy, economical way of giving clothes complete—not partial—protection. At department, drug, grocery and hardware stores.

Expello

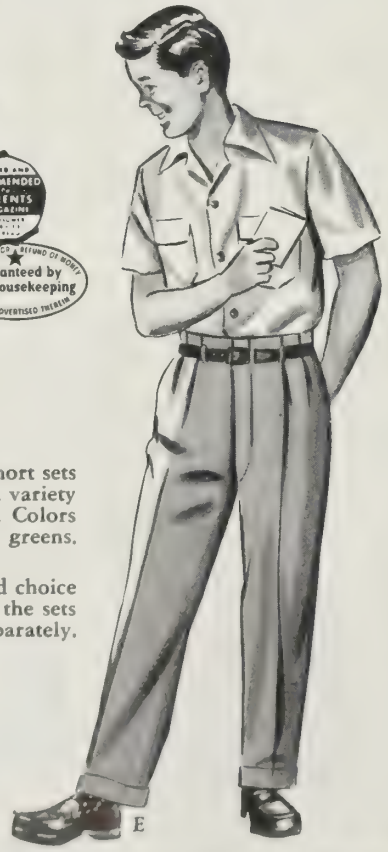


ex-ray* vapor

*invisible . . . penetrating

Copr. 1949, Judson Dunaway Corporation

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, DOVER, N. H.



Mother—if you have not yet discovered the wonderful plus that the Tom Sawyer label in your boy's apparel represents, wait no longer. Make sure your son's new Spring clothes are Tom Sawyer Apparel for Real Boys. Here is dominant value and quality . . . outstanding style and wear.

"A" is a fine, dressy longie double-breasted suit that comes in 3 different materials: Washable tropical rayon; Sanforized Cramerton cotton cords (as illustrated); Wool gabardine. Also comes in colorful blazer striped coat, contrasting pants. Wide range of colors. Ages 4 to 12.

"B" is a smart, trim Eton suit in the same fabrics and colors as the longie suit. Ages 2 to 8.

"C" is one of many different types of boxer short sets for you to choose from. They come in a grand variety of colorful cotton sport shirts or knit shirts. Colors range from Wild West reds to Cape Cod greens. Sanforized, of course. Ages 2 to 10.

"D" is a boxer longie set with the same grand choice of sport or knit shirt tops. Ages 4 to 12. Buy the sets as ensembles . . . or buy pants and shirts separately.

"E" Slacks! Prep . . . and . . . Junior. Take your pick of materials: Cotton and wool gabardines; twills; suitings; rayons and many others. Colors galore. Prep sizes made with new, popular continuous waist bands. See illustration. Junior sizes made with elastic sides and belt. Preps: 25 to 32. Juniors: 4 to 12.

For your dealer's name, write Dept. 15

ELDER MANUFACTURING COMPANY • SAINT LOUIS

"Good evening, Mr. Mason," the inn clerk said. "I didn't know you were acquainted with Mr. Gray."

"It would have made all the difference, wouldn't it?" Jackie said, and he laughed. "I'll tell you what to do, Edgar," Jackie said. "Just get me a bottle of rye and charge it to me. You like rye, don't you, Charley?"

Charles said that it did not matter, he did not care for anything particularly, and Jackie may have been sorry for his impulse, because he was careful to conceal the bottle beneath his overcoat as they walked upstairs.

"Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," he said. "I'm afraid Edgar was a little surprised. I don't do this sort of thing very often except in a business way, but seriously, it does mean a lot to the town, having an inn like this, and this isn't a bad room, is it? I'm glad you have a quiet one that opens on the back."

Charles' room had a country, chintzy look, and was furnished in yellow Colonial maple.

"Yes, it's going to be quiet here," Charles said.

Jackie put the bottle of rye on the table. "Here, let me pour the drinks," he said. "There ought to be some glasses in the bathroom. Dear me, I should have ordered up some ice."

"Oh, never mind the ice," Charles said.

It was a little like the war, sitting in an unfamiliar room with a bottle of rye whisky and tepid water. It was not at all like Clyde.

"Well, now we're here," Charles said, "what is it you want to tell me?"

Jackie cleared his throat and his worried look returned. "Well, Charley, I think I ought to talk to you about Jessica Lovell."

CHARLES knew, of course, that he could not avoid his past involvement with Jessica Lovell and that at some time when he was in Clyde he would have to meet it face to face. Mentioning Jessica was like opening a box filled with things you would never use again but which could not be thrown away.

"I'm glad you brought up Jessica," he said. "I've been meaning to ask about her. How is Jessica?"

"Oh, she's very well. Very well and busy. She has that same interest in things, but then you know Jessica."

"I don't know her now," Charles said, and he smiled. "I've been pretty busy too."

"I don't want to bring up any painful memories," Jackie said. "Of course I know how you must feel."

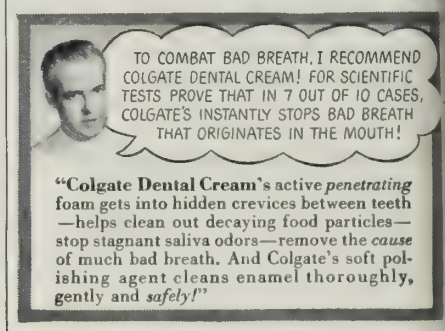
"No, you don't," Charles said, "because I don't feel anything." He was saying just what he wanted to say. "I hope Jessica's well and happy and I'm glad we didn't get married because it wouldn't have worked—and that's all there is to it, except I always supposed she'd find someone else. Why didn't she ever marry?"

Jackie gazed at him reproachfully as though he had not assumed the serious attitude the circumstances demanded. "She just never did, Charley."

"Well, I don't see why she didn't," Charles said, "unless it was her father again."

"No," Jackie said, and he sighed. It seemed to Charles an elaborate, overdramatized sigh. "I don't think it was entirely that. I think she always hoped that you'd come back."

"Maybe she did for a year or two," Charles said. "She knew I'd married, didn't she?"



"Yes. Jessica's a wonderful girl. She's always wanted you to be happy, Charley. She's always wanted to hear about you."

"Well," Charles said, "I think I'll have another drink."

He remembered what Nancy always said about drinking after dinner and he knew that he would be better without any more; but still he poured himself a drink.

When Charles went into the bathroom to fill his glass with tap water he glanced at himself in the mirror above the washbasin, as he did usually at the bank. His tie was straight, his soft collar was smooth. He looked as he should have, like someone from New York, and suddenly he realized as sure as fate that he could have come back to Clyde, he could have married Jessica Lovell. Her father could not have stopped them, nothing would have stopped them if he had come back, but until

"Colgate Dental Cream's active penetrating foam gets into hidden crevices between teeth—helps clean out decaying food particles—stop stagnant saliva odors—remove the cause of much bad breath. And Colgate's soft polishing agent cleans enamel thoroughly, gently and safely!"

LATER-Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!

Always use
COLGATE DENTAL CREAM
after you eat and before every date moment the idea had never crossed his

d. He walked out of the bathroom holding glass and sat down again in the stiff-ted chair.

Well," he said, "I never did come back."
never would have. He would have been proud.

I thought I ought to tell you, Charley," cie said. "I thought you ought to know."
e still could not understand why Jackie ght he ought to know except that Jackie always found it hard to keep things to self. "Did Jessica tell you this?" Charles
d. "It doesn't sound like Jessica."

Well, you see"—Jackie Mason looked too e for the small upholstered chair in which at; his face looked moist and he pulled a neat handkerchief from his breast ket—"you see, Jessica had to talk to eone and I suppose I was elected—just ause I knew you. She still talks a lot ut you, Charley. Jessica was in love with for years. She really was. I think that nen seem to stay in love longer than men, e they fall in love."

Maybe they do," Charles said. "It's sible."

You see, I thought you ought to know s so that you won't misunderstand. I've ays seen a lot of Jessica." Jackie laughed precatingly. "I guess Mr. Lovell thought I s pretty harmless, but things can't help nging and that's what I want to tell you.
sica and I are engaged and are going to be rried in June."

Somehow Charles had thought of everyng else, but not of that. He was reconciled Jackie's being a library trustee, a director the bank, but he had never thought of his rrying Jessica Lovell. He could not think t he resented it or that vas jealousy he felt, or
vy. He was mainly dis-bed because of some-ng in the whole picture
t was malformed, some-ng that should not have
en. He was thinking of at Jessica used to say about Jackie Mason, t as Jackie said, things changed if you saw neone long enough—and it had taken a g, long time. It was all as dry as dust, nost repellent, and for once he did not say
e proper thing.

"Why, Jackie," he said, "it looks as ough you have everything," and he heard ckie's nervous laugh.

"Oh, I wouldn't put it that way, and I ow Jessica and I are a little old to take this p, but we've known each other so long."

"I wish you'd tell me," Charles asked, ow Mr. Lovell took it."

"Well, I was a little suprised," Jackie said.
He didn't seem to mind. It's funny, when I d my talk with him, he kept calling me arles. Of course, his mind isn't what it was fore he was ill last winter, but he's really a nd old gentleman, and we'll all be living ere together. He couldn't live without ssica."

T last Charles said the right thing. He said thought it was splendid and he knew they uld be happy.

"I'm awfully glad you think so, Charley," ckie Mason said, "and now there's one ng more. I hope you'll call on Jessica torrow. She knows you're here."

Charles picked up his glass and was surised to find it empty. He rose. "No," he
d. "No, I don't think so, Jack. It"—his ice was unexpectedly hoarse—"it wouldn't lp anything."

"But, Charley"—Jackie looked deeply rt—"I wish you'd think of Jessica. Every-e will know you didn't see her."

It was that old phrase again, everyone uld know, but it was something he could t do. "I can't," he said. "I suppose I ought but I can't. I'm sorry, Jackie."

No matter what Jackie Mason said, he uld not go. Jackie Mason was still his end and Jackie was always loyal, but he did t have to see Jessica or Mr. Lovell or the vell house again.

"Why, Charley," Jackie said, "if you ally feel that way. But just think it over d we'll talk about it again tomorrow."

"All right," Charles said.

"And now I'd better be going. It's getting awfully late."

"Wait a minute," Charles said, and his mind was back to where it should have been. "There's something I've been meaning to ask you. What do you know about the Nickerson Cordage Company?" His voice sounded the way it should have through all that conversation.

For a minute or two after Jackie Mason closed the door and after the sound of footfalls ceased, Charles Gray had the illusion that he was in a hotel room somewhere else and that Jackie Mason had appeared unsubstantially and that all that conversation had been one of those fantasies. A sense of emptiness and futility hung darkly over him. It was late, but he wanted to call up Nancy. He had never wanted so much to speak to anyone and he felt better already when he gave the number at Sycamore Park.

"Ring me when you get it, will you, please?" he said.

THEN he walked to the single window and opened it and stood breathing the cool night air. There was the sound of a train in the distance. It would be the eleven-thirty going north to Portland. The timetable had not changed. It was a dark, cloudy night, but the sky was lighter than the earth and he could see the blurred shapes of the elms and the houses on Fanning Street. The town was asleep, but it was still alive and as full of blind instinct as a beehive.

He thought again of Jackie Mason, beset by this instinct and wanting to get on according to the rules, and he had seen the result that night, a preordained and sterile ending. The worst of it was it somehow reminded him of his own career. He had been living carefully according to other rules. Someday he might be a vice-president of the Stuyvesant Bank in New York City. Still, Jackie Mason was engaged to Jessica Lovell. He wished that the night were not so dark. He wished that everything were not so deathly still. There was not even a sigh of wind in the branches of the trees.

Vanity is the quicksand of reason.
—GEORGE SAND.

The sharp ring of the telephone broke those thoughts and he was relieved to hear the vague and sleepy sound of Nancy's voice.

"What are you doing? Where are you?" she asked.

"I'm here in the hotel in Clyde," he said. "Did I wake you up?"

"Yes, you did. Never mind it. Are you all right?"

Nancy always hated wasting money talking aimlessly on the long distance and he disliked it, too, but nothing could have made him stop talking.

"I'm fine," he said. "Are you all right? Are the children all right?"

"There's no perceptible change," Nancy said. "Molly Blakesley came to call."

"Oh. What did Molly Blakesley want?"

"She didn't want anything."

"What else has happened?"

"Well, Bill cut his lip. A baseball hit him. And that man you've got to see about the roof, he never came."

"Well, never mind," Charles said. "How about the car?"

"Why do you want to know about it?"

"I don't know. I'm just feeling lonely for you and the car."

"It's a nice association of ideas," Nancy said. "How lonely are you?"

"Very lonely. There are too many ghosts up here."

"Well, when are you getting back?"

"The midnight tomorrow. I had supper at the Masons'."

"Oh. The Masons—those people who lived next door?"

"Yes, they're the ones."

"Well, what about that Lovell girl?" He knew that Nancy would ask about the Lovell girl. "Have you seen her yet?"

"No. She's going to marry Jackie Mason. What do you think of that?"

(Continued on Page 86)

What YOU Can Do About Cancer

Great strides have been made in diagnosing and treating cancer. While it is still the second major cause of death in the United States, the mortality rates from some forms are declining.

Medical science is constantly at work increasing its knowledge of this disease. Better techniques for diagnosing cancer exist today than ever before. For example, a recent development has raised the percentage of correct early diagnosis of one type of cancer from 36 to 95 per cent.

Advances in hormone and chemical therapy have proved valuable in relieving pain and prolonging life. Improved methods of treating the disease have cured, in some instances, cases that formerly were considered hopeless.

Present knowledge can be fully utilized only as more people learn the warnings of the disease and come for examination without delay. Cancer must be discovered early and treatment promptly started to get the full benefit from medical science.

1. Early Recognition

It is wise for everyone, and especially those past 35, to keep alert for cancer's danger signals. The American Cancer Society believes that many thousands of lives could be saved every year if cancer's warnings were recognized early and treated immediately.

2. Prompt Attention

When any of these warnings appear, prompt medical attention is advisable. The doctor may suggest a more complete examination at a Cancer Clinic or by a specialist. It is encouraging to know that the majority of these examinations reveal that cancer is not present.

3. Proper Treatment

If cancer is discovered, the specialist will explain that the best treatment is surgery or radiation. He will point out that patent medicines for cancer and so-called "cancer cures" are often dangerous, and may give cancer time to spread.

These Are Cancer's "Danger Signals"

- Any lump or thickening especially in the breast, lip or tongue.
- Any irregular or unexplained bleeding.
- A sore that does not heal, particularly about the mouth, tongue, or lips.
- Noticeable changes in the color or size of a mole or wart.
- Loss of appetite or continued indigestion.
- Any persistent hoarseness, cough, or difficulty in swallowing.
- Any persistent change in normal elimination.

Pain is not usually an early symptom of cancer.

COPYRIGHT 1949—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE CO.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

To learn more about this disease, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 49-J, "There Is Something YOU Can Do About Cancer."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

It's sweeping the country! It's

NEW WASHDAY

No soap—no other "suds"—no other washing product known—will get your family wash as CLEAN as Tide!

World's CLEANEST wash!

Yes, ma'am! Tide washes clothes cleaner than any soap or any other washday product you can buy! And that goes for your whole family wash—everything from company linens to greasy overalls. Tide, with its new miracle suds, not only leaves even your heaviest wash free from dirt, but actually removes dingy soap film, too. There's never been anything like Tide!

Actually BRIGHTENS colors!

You'll be thrilled to see the way Tide brightens colors that soap washings have dulled. Try it on your wash print dresses, aprons, tablecloths . . . watch them come wonderfully brighter as Tide makes dulling soap film disappear. And safe? Yes, indeed! With all its terrific cleaning power for heavy work clothes, Tide is safe . . . yes, truly safe for all your gay washable colors!

World's WHITEST wash!

Just wait till you see your white things after a Tide wash! Why, in hardest water, Tide gets sheets, towels, shirts—yes, all your white things—whiter than any soap or any other washing product known. What's more, Tide keeps them dazzling white, week after week! Never turns them yellow . . . no matter how often you wash them or how long you store them.

TIDE

GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY OTHER WASHDAY PRODUCT YOU CAN BUY

...yet TRULY SAFE for colors

TIDE WORKS EXTRA MIRACLES IN HARD WATER!

t's Procter & Gamble's

MIRACLE!

New miracle suds!

More suds in hardest water! kind-to-hands suds that look different, feel different! Wonderful in the dishpan, too! Try Tide for dishes...see how they sparkle, whether you wipe them or not!

PROCTER & GAMBLE GUARANTEES EVERY PACKAGE OF TIDE!

Tide will do everything claimed for it in this advertisement. If you are not completely satisfied, return the unused portion of your package to dealer and the purchase price will be refunded.

OCEANS OF SUDS! NO WATER SOFTENERS NEEDED!

Here's practical Decorating help

FREE! EVERY MONTH IN Kyanize Color Recipes

1. Now, choose a paint color scheme from the rooms featured in the current month's magazines.

2. Ask your Kyanize Paint dealer for a free Kyanize Color Recipe packet.* Each month, it contains easy directions for matching the paint color schemes of the most interesting rooms.

3. Decorate with Kyanize Paints. They do it better . . . easier. Kyanize Paints are self-smoothing, flow on easily, leaving a surface without brush marks. Walls, ceilings, trim and furniture fairly sparkle...look like new. And remember, there is a Kyanize Paint for every surface.

* If your dealer is out of Kyanize Color Recipe packets, send 10¢ in stamps or coin with your name and address (please print) to Department C-4, Boston Varnish Company, Everett Station, Boston 49, Massachusetts.

© 1949, Boston Varnish Company

DECORATING'S EASIER WITH Kyanize
Self-Smoothing
PAINTS
... from Color Schemes to Finished Rooms!

(Continued from Page 83)

"You mean the boy next door is marrying the girl in the big house?" Nancy said. "I've never seen him, so how should I know what to think?" It was wonderful to hear the indifference in Nancy's voice. "Now wait a minute. Is that why you're lonely?"

"No," he said, "it isn't. I wish you were here."

"Well, I'm glad you do. Listen, we're not getting anywhere and we've been talking more than three minutes. Come home as early as you can on Friday, and don't worry about anything."

"About what?"

"You know what. . . . And Charley, I didn't really mean what I said—about its not being much but its being the only thing we had. It was a silly thing to say."

"Now wait a minute." At least he was no longer thinking about Clyde. "Have you heard anything, Nancy?" he asked her.

"No, I didn't mean it that way, darling. Don't sit alone there worrying. I'll see you on Friday. Good night, dear."

He set down the telephone and stood up, conscious of a new sound which he had not noticed while they had been talking. It was the rushing sound of rain. It was pouring rain outside.

Charles checked his suitcase in the morning at the Vanderbilt Avenue checkroom, just as he had checked his suitcase when he had arrived from Clyde that other time. There was the same sleepy emptiness in the Grand Central Station. It was as though all events had been miraculously rubbed out since 1930.

He was sitting in the restaurant in the lower level, holding the New York Times and telling the waitress that he wanted orange juice, bacon and eggs and coffee. He had left Clyde and he was in New York again following a familiar procedural pattern. It was only when he read the headlines in the morning paper that he had a startled sense of having traveled a long, long way. One of those interminable conferences with the Russians was breaking up in London and there was the unmistakable possibility of another war; but when he turned to the financial page he was back in a world he knew, an impersonal world where everything was translated into terms of literal value.

It was a quarter before eight when Charles arrived at the bank, too early for anyone to be there except Martin, the night watchman, and his assistant, Francis. Martin opened the side door carefully.

"Good morning, Mr. Gray," Martin said. "You're pretty early, aren't you?"

"Hello, Martin. I'm just down from Boston."

"How is the weather up there?"

"Rainy," Charles said.

The banking floor was very still and the curtains were drawn over the windows. The officers' desks all had their tops closed tight and his own desk and Roger Blakesley's stood side by side on the edge of the green carpet, impersonal and bare. Charles laid down his briefcase and took off his overcoat.

"Well, it's nice to be back," he said. "I feel as though I've been away for quite a while."

He opened his briefcase and pulled out his notes. He began to write his memorandum to Mr. Burton. If he could get it fini before he was interrupted, the whole would run more smoothly and on sche

He did not realize how late it was unt felt a hand on his shoulder. It was R Blakesley. "Well," Roger said. "Did blow in on the midnight?"

"Hello, Roger," Charles said. "Th right. On the midnight."

"Well, it's nice you're back. How things up north?"

"Fine. It was a nice trip, Roger."

"Well, everything's just the same he Roger said. He lowered his voice. "I they'd get this thing settled, Charley. getting on my nerves." It was the first either of them had mentioned the Thin the other.

"So do I," Charles said. "It gets on nerves too."

"Anyway, it's nice to see you back, fel

It was no time look at Roger sharply. He co only wonder whet anything had h pened while he away to make Thing get on Rog nerves.

The three-two fr Grand Central wi slow train, stopp at nearly every p alone the line. Cha could tell where was by counting stops, and instead looking out the w dow, he read World-Telegram a the Kiplinger Wa ington Letter. It w a beautiful, brigh sunny afternoon, n a reluctant New En land April afternoo but more like mi May. When h stepped off the tra the station platfor gave off a warm, tan smell and the air w cool but languid. Th waters of Long Islan Sound in the distanc had a blue that wa almost like the blu of summer. It w suburban-New Yor weather and so warm that he did not nee an overcoat.

When he saw the car he knew that Mi Marble must have called Nancy or th Nancy had called Miss Marble at the bank At any rate she was waiting for him, and Bi and Evelyn were with her.

"Why, Nance," he said, "I didn't expec to see you all here." This was not exactl true, because he had half expected them, an the best of it was they looked just as they ha when he had left them, Nancy in her green ish tweed suit, Evelyn with her braids an her low-heeled shoes and Bill in his gray lon trousers and his coat that was too short in th sleeves.

"I called up Marble," Nancy said. "Sh said you were going to take the three-two,"

"Here," Bill said, "let me carry that fo you," and he took his suitcase.

"Hello, Evvie," he said. "Do you know what I did in Boston? I bought a bottle of that after-shaving lotion."

"Evelyn, get in back with Bill," Nancy said, and then she held his hand for a mo-ment as they walked to the car. "I've got to pick up my dress at the cleaner's. That's all we have to do."

"What dress?"

"The almost new one, with flowers on it, for tonight."

"Oh, yes," he said, "tonight," but there was a long while until evening. He felt pleas-antly tired and he could not be worried

(Continued on Page 88)

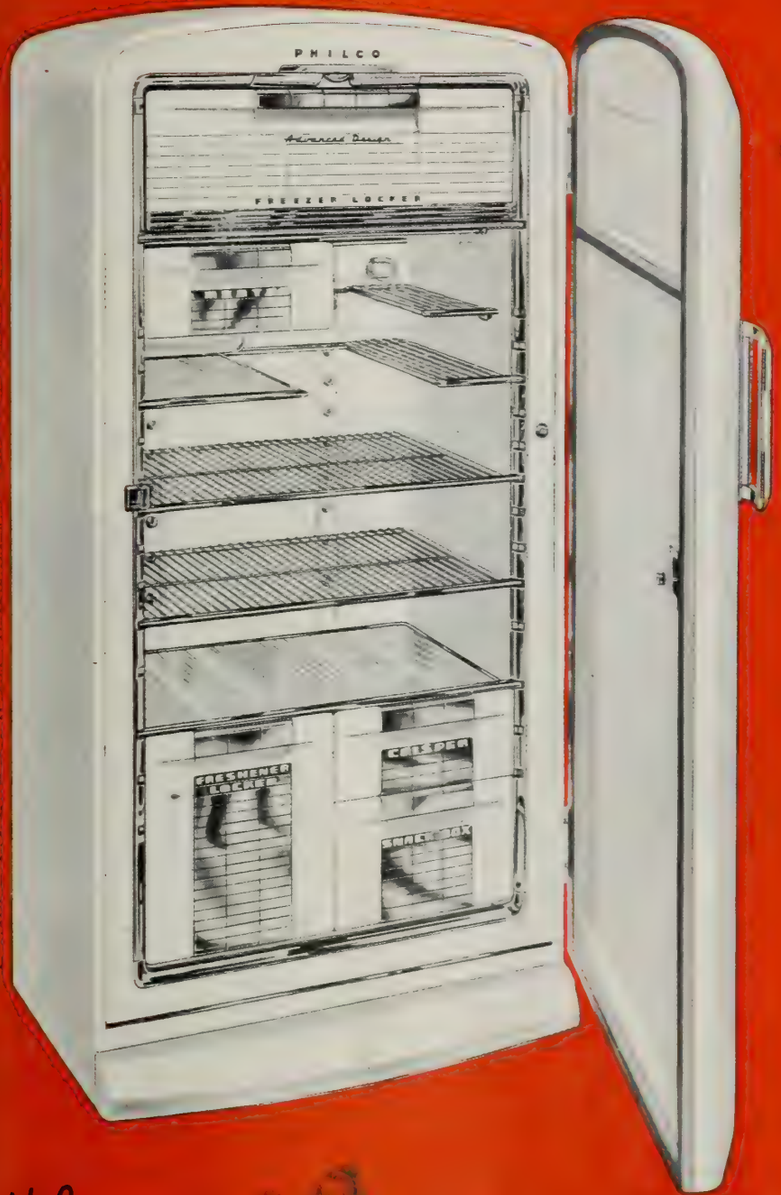
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

April Music

By Jesse Stuart

Naomi Deane has loved the music here
In early springtime in Kentucky's woods;
She always goes with me this time of year
To visit in the April solitudes.
No one loves more than she the wild primrose
That grows beside the lichen-gray sandstone.
She thinks it is the prettiest flower that grows,
But yet, I think, percoon can hold its own. . . .
No plowman has a sweeter love than mine,
No fairer love than my Naomi Deane.
She climbs high hills beneath the oak and pine,
I carry her across the streams between. . . .
She walks with me to hear the music in
The April torrents and the pine-tree wind.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



New for 1949!

EVERY INCH A REFRIGERATOR RIGHT DOWN TO THE FLOOR...

THE REVOLUTIONARY NEW

Advanced Design PHILCO

Here it is . . . the revolutionary new Philco 1095 with full-length door . . . every inch a refrigerator right down to the floor. It's Philco Advanced Design for 1949, with brilliant new engineering developments that do away with wasted space . . . give you tremendous increase in capacity without increase in size . . . exclusive service features new to refrigeration . . . and sensational extra value. Before you buy, COMPARE . . . see Philco Advanced Design for 1949 at your dealer now.

Huge Increase in Food Storage Space

Big 10.7 cubic foot capacity in an 8-foot cabinet!

1. Built-In Home Freezer
Big, unobstructed frozen food storage space . . . with separate, superfast freezing shelf for ice trays.

2. Adjustable Shelves
Arrange the shelves to suit your needs, accommodate all sizes and shapes of food.

3. Freshener Locker
Huge locker for all kinds of food, large quantities, beverages. Easily removable for bulk storage.

4. Snack Box
Protects against transfer of odors . . . for cheeses, spreads, snacks—or butter.

It's a WONDERful Refrigerator!

PHILCO Famous for Quality the World Over

Tune in Don McNeill and the Breakfast Club, Mon. to Fri. mornings. See your paper for [illegible] station Eliminate the guesswork from your next home permanent!

Rayve ..the new HOME PERMANENT with exclusive Dial-a-Wave is personalized for your kind of hair

YOUR "RAYVE NUMBER" IS YOUR PERSONAL GUIDE to the perfect permanent for your hair. You simply set the Dial-a-Wave . . . and your own "Rayve Number" appears on the dial to tell you the best timing procedure for the texture and condition of your hair and the kind of wave you prefer.

RAYVE IS FASTER, YET GENTLER . . . EASIER, TOO—waving times are up to twice as fast as ordinary home permanents. Yet Rayve's improved formula makes waving action much gentler. And it's all so easy. Picture-booklet directions make every step crystal clear . . . and you don't even wear a turban.

LONG-LASTING . . . YET SOFTER, MORE NATURAL—From the very first day your hair is satin-soft . . . with no frizz, no kinky ends. Any way you wear it, your Rayve wave looks and acts so like naturally curly hair that you'll never again be satisfied with any other kind of wave.

COMPLETE RAYVE KIT with 60 "easy-wind" plastic curlers, step-by-step picture-booklet directions, and "Dial-a-Wave". $2

RAYVE REFILL KIT with "Dial-a-Wave". Complete except for curlers and bands. $1

At all leading drug and cosmetic counters

FROM THE FAMOUS PEPSODENT LABORATORIES

(Continued from Page 86)

about that dinner at the Burtons'. "It's funny," he said. "I feel as if I'd been across the ocean. The climate's different here."

"I know," Nancy said. "It must be very difficult to pick up all the threads, but don't try too hard, just give yourself time."

"It isn't so hard," he said, and he laughed.

"It's nice to know it. The first thing for you to do is to get to know the children all over again. I can come later and more gradually. We all may be a little shy with each other at first, but we can all adjust together."

The grass was beginning to turn green and forsythia was out already and there were tomato plants and forget-me-nots in baskets in front of the hardware store.

"Mother," Evelyn said from the back seat, "I don't know what you're talking about. Daddy's only been away two days."

"Oh, put on another record," Bill told her. "Don't you know when mother's being funny?"

Charles felt relaxed and tired, but pleasantly tired. "We ought to buy some garden hose," he said. "I wonder whether they have any decent hose this year."

"Never mind it now," Nancy said. "Let's just go on home and maybe you and Bill had better rake the lawn, or perhaps we might just sit around and do nothing for a while. I'd rather like to do nothing." She glanced at him quickly. "How did it all look when you got back?"

"Oh," he said, "the general situation?"

"Yes, that situation."

"It looks about the same," Charles said. "I only saw Tony Burton for a minute. He came in late and he was busy but he said he was looking forward to tonight, that he had something on his mind."

"Is that the way he put it, looking forward?"

It was awkward, talking in that veiled way in front of the children. "Nance," he said, "there isn't anything more I can do. Let's try to forget it, shall we?"

"Just as long as it gets over," she said, "one way or another. You haven't forgotten about that payment on the mortgage, have you?"

He could understand the association of ideas. They were turning into the gates of Sycamore Park and he could see the white-washed brick of their house already.

"No, I haven't," he said. "Can you name one time when I've forgotten about the mortgage?" The lawn had never looked so green and the house had never looked so well. "Do you know what I think?" He spoke more loudly because he did not like to think of Bill and Evelyn in the back seat trying to piece their words together as children always did. "I think it's about time Bill and Evvie learned to sail." The idea must have come to him both from the products of the Nickerson Cordage Company and that glimpse of the Sound from the station platform.

"Learned to sail?" Nancy repeated.

"I don't see why not. Here we live right near the water and we've never had a boat. I don't see why we shouldn't. An eighteen-foot knockabout or something." Then he checked himself before he said any more. He sounded exactly as his father had. Even the words were almost the same.

"Do you really mean that about a sailboat?" he heard Bill asking.

"I don't know why not. We'll have to think about it, Bill."

The car had stopped and Bill and Evelyn were on the graveled driveway.

He and Bill and Evelyn were still talking about that hypothetical sailboat when Nancy opened the side door and called him. The idea of the boat kept interfering with other things he was thinking, and while they raked oak leaves from under the rhododendrons, everything he thought was also mingled with the persistent rustling and crackling of the leaves. They made a sound like the lapping of small waves. He had put on sneakers and a pair of khaki trousers from one of his old uniforms and a white shirt with a frayed collar which Nancy had saved for him for working around the place. He Evelyn raked and Bill packed the leaves a bushel basket and carried them to a s place by the side of the garage where were going to make a compost heap.

"You know," he said, while he rake leaves, "we might all go up to Clyde summer. We really ought to get around I don't see why we shouldn't drive up t if I can get some time off. It might be a car. I've got my name down for one."

"Never mind about the car," Bill "Let's talk about the boat. If we g where would we keep it?"

"Don't spill all those leaves," Ch said. "We could moor it somewhere. father was always talking about getting boat and a pony, but he never did and m I won't either."

"Well," Bill said, "we could get a m zine and look at pictures."

Yes, they could look at pictures and haps no one believed entirely in the h but then Evelyn was saying that Mr. S had one, with an auxiliary engine, but he was not Mr. Swiss and he did not wan be Mr. Swiss.

"Now, listen," he said, "let's stop all about a sailboat. We'll probably never h one. I don't know what we'd do with o we had it."

"You said it wouldn't do any harm to about it," Bill said.

"It doesn't matter what you talk abou think about," he said, "as long as you k what's real, and it's pretty hard to k what's real and what isn't. A lot of pe never learn." He rubbed the sleeve of frayed shirt across his f head. "This is a pr tough world, Bill."

My wife has a whim of iron.
—OLIVER HERFORD.

Bill and Evelyn loo at him with that h astonished, half-bored pression that always ca over the children wh grownups spoke of the hardness of world.

"Why is it such a tough world?" I asked. "You're doing pretty well, are you?"

"Well," he said, "there's always room improvement."

Then Nancy opened the side door. "Ch ley," she called, "you'd better come in n if we're going to get there on time."

They always got everywhere on time. Th both felt the same way about punctuali but he had completely forgotten about t dinner with Tony Burton.

Upstairs in their room Nancy pulled at t zipper of her housecoat and looked critica at the long flowered silk dress spread out the bed, fresh from the cleaners. "I suppo she'll wear a long dress." She was referri of course, to Mrs. Anthony Burton. Nan had the same watchful, determinedly ple ant expression that she always assumed those semiannual occasions when the B tons asked them out to Roger's Point, ne Stamford. It was quite different from the pression she assumed when they went to t Merrys' or when they used to dine with t Slades.

"Nance," he said, and he put his ar around her.

"Don't kiss me," she said. "You'll mu my hair and I've got on lipstick."

"All right. All right."

"I put your studs in for you. It's your ne shirt. I've laid out everything."

Everything was laid out, as she said it wa on the fresh candlewick spread of his twi bed.

"I don't see why I should wear a sti shirt," he said.

"Because you're going to the Burtons that's why. He never wears a soft shirt Charley."

"You mean he expects it of me?" he sai Everyone always dressed like Tony Burto It was a small matter and he could not under stand why he should have given it anothe thought, but he had pulled open his secon bureau drawer. Nancy had her flowered dres over her head, but she heard the sound.

(Continued on Page 90)

New color...a light dancing red...red...red

Revlon's "Touch of Genius"

For Spring!

The fresh new red you always hoped you'd find!

You've looked! You've found it! And call it what you will...intuition...genius... Revlon gives you now a lively vivid red to set you tip-toe. Watch the excitement! See how heads turn...your clothes sparked by "Touch of Genius" have caught the magic, too!

A red so rare as Spring, long-awaited as first love...a dancing red ..."Touch of Genius" for the smartest matching lips, fingertips and face!

Matchbox...1.60 plus tax

Lastron Nail Enamel...Lipstick...Fashion Plate Face Make-Up...Face Powder

PHOTO: RAWLINGS. COSTUME: DIOR. MAKE-UP: DEL RUSSO OF REVLON. JEWELS: HARRY WINSTON. ©1949 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP. COLOR ON LIPS AND FINGERTIPS AS ACCURATE AS PRINTING METHODS ALLOW.

NYLON run-proof tricot for these newest jewels by

MUNSINGWEAR*

Proud-fitting beauties...flawlessly tailored by Munsingwear in NYLON run-proof tricot. The slip clings to your curves—snugs in beautifully at the waist. So sleekly do the panties fit, you sit into...not out of them! Both wash and dry quick as a wink. Slips and panties, reasonably priced...at fine stores everywhere.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF

Also ask for Munsingwear Hosiery
Foundation Garments • Sleeping-and-Lounging Wear

(Continued from Page 88)

"Charley, what are you doing?"

No matter what she said, he was going to wear a soft shirt to the Burtons'.

The car was by the front door, where they had left it after the trip from the station.

"I'll drive," Nancy said.

"Let me drive over," Charles said. "I'd like the kids to remember that their father can drive a car."

Bill and Evelyn were standing at the end of the walk. It was seven o'clock, the right time to be leaving for the Burtons', with a little leeway in case there should be heavy traffic on the Post Road. He stepped on the self-starter and the engine sounded smooth and quiet.

"Good-by," he called. "We'll be back early, I guess."

"Wait a minute," Nancy said. "Evelyn, will you please water the begonias in the dining room, and, Bill, be sure to close the windows if it rains. Mary always forgets."

"Is that all?" Charles asked.

"Yes," Nancy said, "that's all," and she opened her white bead bag to be sure she had not forgotten her lipstick, her compact and a clean handkerchief.

They were alone and there always was a change in tempo when they were alone together, because there was always a slight façade, a different set of manners, when they were with the children. Now they would have to talk about facts, plain contemporary facts.

"Well, tell me everything," Nancy said.

What he wanted to say to her might have been possible in their room just before she had told him not to kiss her because of lipstick and her hair, but it was not possible in the car on their way to the Post Road. He wished he could tell her everything. At that moment, for example, he wanted to tell her that he loved her. He wanted to tell her that she and the children were all that mattered and that he had wanted to tell her so when he had called her up from Clyde, but it was not the time or place.

"Charley," she said, "don't drive so fast."

"All right. Nance, we've been through a lot together, haven't we?"

"I always have that feeling after you've been driving for a while," she said. "Aren't you going to tell me about everything?"

"Well, it was queer going back to Clyde. It was quite an experience." He stopped. They were coming to the intersection with the Post Road.

"You don't have to slow down. The light's turning green."

"Well," he said, "anyway, Jackie Mason's got everything," and he turned left on the Post Road.

"Who?" She was obviously thinking of something else and there was no reason why she should not have been because she had nothing to do with Clyde. Nevertheless, it was exasperating when she asked him who.

"Jackie Mason. You know Jackie Mason."

"Oh, yes. Of course. Well, what about him?"

"WELL, there isn't much except that he's got everything. He's a director of the Dock Street Savings Bank, and he's a trustee of the public library and he's going to marr Jessica Lovell, but I told you that, didn't I?"

"Well," Nancy said, "you could have done that too. I always told you so."

"Well, I'm glad I didn't." He took his right hand from the wheel and put it over hers.

"Darling," she said, "I wish you'd look where you're going."

"All right. I'm looking." He took his hand away. "But at the same time he hasn't got anything; that's what I'm trying to say."

"Who hasn't got anything?" Nancy asked.

"Jackie Mason. I was telling you, Jackie Mason."

"Well, to hell with Jackie Mason. There isn't any reason to shout. He hasn't made a touchdown. Besides, I thought you said he had everything."

"All right. Never mind it, Nancy."

Luck sometimes visits a fool, but never sits down with him. —GERMAN PROVERB.

It was well after seven o'clock and the on the road were switching on their lig She moved closer to him and patted his h as he held the wheel.

"I'm sorry, Charley. I just can't con trate. Let's stop trying to talk as though weren't both thinking about the same thi

"Yes, I know."

"Charley,"—her voice was sharp "what's the matter?"

THERE must have been something in voice, but then they knew each other too for either of them to conceal anything. said, "I wish everything weren't so c trived." They were right back where t had been that morning when she had ta him to the station.

"How do you mean, contrived?"

"I mean it's all so superficial. The b president and the big job, and what will h pen to Junior, and whether a boiled shirt help. The values of it are childish. It has any values."

"I know." Her voice was softer. "You said it before."

"Nance, I wish you wouldn't be so ter This isn't as important as all that."

"Charley,"—she sounded steady and c trolled, a great deal too controlled—"do say it. I can't stand it if you say it."

"Don't say what?"

"Don't say"—her voice sounded ha and strident—"don't say we have each otl We have got each other but I don't want hear it and you're just getting ready to that, aren't you? It's been in your mind afternoon. I knew it when you were out th on the lawn being sweet to the children. S it later, but don't say it now."

"Nance,"—his o voice was edgy—"I done everything I c Let's change the subjec

It had been a long wh since his nerves had be so on edge, but at le they were almost at Roger's Point. Th were passing walls of dressed granite a carefully raked driveways.

"Haven't you ever thought what you' going to do?"

"I'm sick of thinking," he said.

The threads had broken and he saw th she was crying. It was the worst possible tir for this to happen, just as they were a proaching the private road to Roger's Poi He stopped the car. At least if anyone sa them he could pretend to be lighting a ci arette.

"It isn't fair," she sobbed. "It isn't fair

"Never mind, Nance." He put his ar around her. "We've got lots of time and doesn't matter if we're late."

She was already opening her beaded b "I'm all right now. I didn't mean to let y down."

"You haven't let me down."

"I'm all right," she said. "Start up the c This wouldn't have happened if I'd be driving. Don't look at me, don't say an thing, and to hell with everybody."

The light beneath the brick-and-sandsto porte-cochere shone on the steel-and-gla front door and on the potted hothou azaleas in rows beside the steps. The doo had swung open and Jeffreys, the Burton bu ler, had stepped outside and was sayin good evening.

"You go in, Nancy," Charles said. "I' better put the car somewhere."

"There's no need to move it, Mr. Gray, Tony Burton's butler said. He was wearin a dinner coat with a stiff shirt. "There's n one else this evening."

"Oh," Charles said, "if you're sure it's a right." He had never been able to speak eve an intellectual language with Tony Burton' butler. "It's a beautiful evening, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir, Tony Burton's butler said "It's balmy for this time of year." The Charles saw that a maid was behind him relieving Nancy of her cloak.

It was impossible to forget Tony Burton' house once you had been inside it. In summe

(Continued on Page 92)

The Amazing Story of Virginia Browder

How a Wife and Mother, 26, Overweight for Years, Lost 48 Pounds in 135 days, became "the Most Beautiful Girl in Tokyo"

FOR nine years the DuBarry Success Course has been helping women and girls to make themselves over in face, figure and fascination. More than 350,000 have found the Course a way to greater attractiveness. Hundreds of them have told their success stories for publication—but never have we had the privilege of publishing a more thrilling true success story than that of Virginia Browder.

VIRGINIA BROWDER had always had a weight problem. As a girl of twelve in San Antonio, she was teased because she was fat. At 19 she married an army captain; at 23, went with him to Japan, where she has lived for two and a half years. Ever since college days, she had been thinking about taking the Success Course. But let her tell her own story:

"For five years or more," she writes from Tokyo, "I had read those exciting statements by others whom the Success Course had helped to happiness and success. It all sounded too much like a miracle really to happen to me, so I just went on my depressed way, putting on more weight and becoming increasingly unhappy. After my second baby was born, my weight went up to 170. I then decided to take the step I had so long considered. Now I, too, have been through the adventurous miracle of the DuBarry Success Course, and a new way of living a happy and beautiful life is mine.

"In four weeks I lost 20 pounds, and nothing in the world could have stopped me. In four and a half months I lost 48 pounds and achieved an almost perfectly proportioned figure. My new knowledge of skin care, make-up and hair styling has given me an increased beauty and smartness such as I had only dreamed of as possible for me. Sometimes, when I suddenly see myself in a mirror, I can hardly believe my eyes—but it's true, the miracle has happened to me!

"Now compliments on my appearance come thick and fast. I was matron of honor at an important wedding in Tokyo. I was appointed teacher in our nursery school—a position for which I had been turned down a year before. My husband is so proud of my appearance, he asks me for 'dates'! My little four-year-old daughter says, 'Mother, now you look like the girl on the magazine cover.' And several people have said to me: 'You are the most beautiful girl in Tokyo.'

"I hope you won't consider me immodest in telling you these things. It's only that I am so unbelievably happy, after all those years of discouragement. This I know: thanks to the DuBarry Success Course, I am a new woman—head to toe, inside and out, with the poise and the vitality to enjoy life as never before. Best of all, I know how to keep myself always slender and lovely and attractive."

Virginia Browder has proved what so many other women and girls have happily discovered—that the DuBarry Success Course is a plan that really works. Wherever you are, you can enjoy this plan at home. Yet when you enroll, it's like stepping into the famous Richard Hudnut Salon on Fifth Avenue, New York, where beauty-maker Ann Delafield has been working her "miracles" for years. Through a confidential personal information form, you virtually say to her: "Here I am, here's how I look, how I feel, what I weigh, what I measure. And here's my greatest problem. Tell me how I can become the more attractive woman I want to be."

Back to you comes an analysis of your needs, an individual goal and a plan for achieving it. You eat tempting, delicious foods while pounds fade away; follow fun-to-do exercises; learn the right make-up, the right hair-style for you.

In a few exciting weeks you learn not only how to make yourself over, but how to be your own beauty expert the rest of your life. You save money on beauty shop bills; on clothes alterations; by being able to wear smarter, less expensive junior miss sizes instead of matronly styles. No wonder women say the Success Course saves its small cost over and over.

YOU CAN START AT ONCE. You can enroll for the Success Course right now, today. Simply fill out and mail the special coupon below. You'll be thrilled with what comes hurrying back to you, all charges prepaid—your first lessons, your Portable DuBarry Beauty Tray, and a generous supply of DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations and Richard Hudnut Hair Preparations. Don't miss this chance to get started without delay.

All these luxurious DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations and Richard Hudnut Hair Preparations are included with your Course. They come to you with an entirely new Portable Beauty Tray, an appropriate setting for these fine quality cosmetics. Included are:

DuBarry Cleansing Cream
DuBarry Skin Freshener
DuBarry Special Cleansing Preparation
DuBarry Lubricating Cream
DuBarry Derma-Sec Formula
DuBarry Foundation Lotion
DuBarry Hand Beauty Cream
DuBarry Rose Cream Mask
DuBarry Eye Cream
DuBarry Make-up Base
DuBarry Lipstick
DuBarry Cream Rouge
DuBarry Eye Shadow
DuBarry Face Powder
DuBarry Lash Beauty
DuBarry Dainty-Dry

Also, Richard Hudnut Enriched Creme Shampoo, Creme Rinse, Creme Hair Dressing, Dandruff Treatment.

BELOW: Virginia Browder when she weighed 170, just before starting the DuBarry Success Course.

RIGHT: The glamorous Virginia Browder of today, with a slenderness and beauty she knows how to keep.

Before

After

Virginia Browder's Measurements:

	Before	After	Change
Height	5'4½"	5'5"	+½"
Weight	170	122	—48
Bust	40	35¼	—4¾
Waist	32½	26	—6½
Abdomen	40	30	—10
Hips	47	37	—10

The New DuBarry Success Course

ANN DELAFIELD, Directing
RICHARD HUDNUT SALON, New York, N. Y.

RICHARD HUDNUT SALON
Dept. SR-2, 693 Fifth Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

Please enroll me in the New DuBarry Success Course on the plan which I have marked X.

☐ I enclose $28.50 as payment in full.

☐ I enclose $7.50 and will send $7.50 each month for three additional months.

(Send all payments by check or money order payable to Richard Hudnut Salon. Do not send currency.)

Miss
Mrs. _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

(If under 21, consult parent or guardian and have their consent before taking this Course.)

Accepted for advertising in publications of the American Medical Association

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Please let us have the following important information so that we may send you DuBarry Beauty and Make-up Preparations for your type.

Color of Hair _____
Eyes _____ Lashes _____
Skin: Dry ☐ Oily ☐
Height _____ Weight _____
Skin Color: Cream ☐ Fair ☐ Med. ☐ Dark ☐

If you want more information before enrolling, fill in only name and address and mark an x here ☐

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

You can be dainty, fragrantly appealing . . . with this bewitching fragrance men love!

Do you want the fragrant, romantic appeal of so many popular girls? Then do as they have done for 80 years. Bathe every day with Cashmere Bouquet Soap and surround yourself with the delicate, haunting fragrance men love! A lingering fragrance that comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes far more costly than you would expect to find in any soap. Today, tomorrow, and every day . . . use Cashmere Bouquet Soap in your bath, for your complexion, too!

Cashmere Bouquet

Cashmere Bouquet

Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love—

(Continued from Page 90)

or winter the air in the hall was balmy like the evening and fragrant with the scent of hothouse flowers. It was a huge oak-paneled hall, with a double staircase and a gallery and a Romanesque fireplace. For a second he and Nancy stood in the shaded light of the hall almost indecisively. There was a certain feeling of timidity when one went there, a furtive sense of not belonging. Yet in another way he was perfectly at ease, for on these semiannual occasions Tony Burton had always made them feel most welcome. Mrs. Burton, too, always made the bank wives feel comfortable. The bright light from the open parlor door shone across the dusky hall and Tony Burton was already in the oblong of light, a white carnation in the lapel of his dinner coat, holding out both hands, one for Nancy and one for him.

"Home is the sailor, home from the sea," Tony Burton said, "and the hunter home from the hill. I wish you wouldn't always surprise me, Nancy my dear. Why are you more beautiful every time I see you, or do I just forget?"

"It might be that you just forget, mightn't it, Mr. Burton?" Nancy asked.

Tony Burton laughed. "We've really got to do something about seeing each other more often. It's been too long, much too long. Why don't you come to work some morning instead of Charley? I'm getting pretty sick of seeing Charles around." He laughed again and slapped Charles on the back and they walked behind Nancy into the drawing room. "Althea," Tony Burton said, "I told you Nancy Gray would be wearing a long dress."

"Oh, my dear," Mrs. Burton said, "I should have called you up. Tony's getting so absent-minded lately. He spoke of it as supper. There should be set rules for short and long. Now just the other evening at the Drexels' the same thing happened to me. I thought it was dinner and it was supper. But the men thought this up. We didn't, did we?"

"Charles should have told me," Nancy said. "Why didn't you tell me it was supper, Charley?"

"It's always some man's fault, isn't it, Charley?" Tony Burton said.

"That's one of the truest things you ever said, sweetheart," Mrs. Burton said. "Everything that happens to a woman is always some man's fault."

"JEFFREYS can bring us almost anything," Tony Burton said, "from sherry and a biscuit to Scotch on the rocks, but Charley and I will stick to dry Martinis, won't we, Charley? What will you have, Nancy?"

"A Martini," Nancy said, "and if I don't like it I can blame it on the men."

"But not on Tony," Mrs. Burton said. "Blame it on Jeffreys. Tony mixes terrible Martinis. Don't you think so, Mr. Gray, or have you ever tried one of his Martinis?"

It was characteristic of that relationship and perfectly suitable that Mrs. Burton should call him Mr. Gray. It meant that he was one of Tony Burton's business friends or "associates" might have been a better word who had come to supper on business with his little wife. She knew how to put Tony's business friends and associates at their ease, but there were certain limits and certain degrees of rank. They could meet on common ground by calling Mr. Burton Tony and referring to Nancy as my dear.

"I'm not in a position to say what I t of Tony's cocktails," Charles said, "ex that Tony is always right."

"You all lick his boots so," Mrs. Bu said. "That's why he's so impossible whe comes home. . . . Sherry, please, Jeffreys. Is Mr. Gray impossible when he comes ho my dear?"

"Usually," Nancy said. "Normally possible."

"I wonder what they do at the bar Mrs. Burton said. "I have a few va ideas. That blond secretary of Tony's. We can compare notes after dinner."

THE oil of small talk smoothed the t bled waters, if there were troubled wat Mrs. Tony Burton was putting Nancy at ease.

Jeffreys, the butler, was passing ro pieces of toast with cream cheese and chovies on them, and a maid followed reys carrying an icy bowl of celery, raw rots and olives.

"I hear that raw carrots are good for eyesight," Charles said to Tony Burton.

"That's one of those new ideas." T said. He looked bright and alert as he alw did before din "It's on a par with one about alcohol ing good for hard ing of the arter Have you heard new one about T man?"

Tony Burton ways enjoyed th stories. Formerl had been Franklin Roosevelt, thou Tony was hardly w you would call a R sevelt hater, and it was Truman t were about.

"Tony," Mrs. B ton called, "if you stop talking busi with poor Mr. G we might all go in dinner."

"Now, Althea Tony Burton s "Charley and I h a lot of other thi to talk about. I w you would get it o of your head that always talk busin wi the boys."

The dining room with its heavy oak cha and an English leather screen placed befo the pantry door, and its ornate Tiffany sil upon the massive sideboard, was a long w from Clyde. The table, set for only fo looked too small for the room but imposing beautiful with its Venetian tablecloth, water and wine glasses and its bowl of tuli He was glad there were only four of th because the conversation would be gene and he would not have to talk to Mrs. B ton. He saw Nancy glance at him quickly he sat down and he smiled at her. It was be ter to let the Burtons start the conversatio

Tony Burton was asking Nancy about t children, as though he knew them very we and while they talked the plates were chan ing. There was soup and guinea hen and the a salad and then dessert. He was glad that was not a long or complicated dinner. Ther was no obvious feeling of strain, but all th while he felt that Tony Burton was watchin him.

"I wish," Tony Burton said, "ther weren't so many words, or it may be becaus I'm getting old that they confuse me mo than they used to. Somehow they kee having more shades of meaning. Now eve with Charles and me it's difficult. I say word and he says a word and we can look i up in the dictionary but it doesn't mean th same thing to either of us and it would mea something a little different to Nancy and i would be a little different even to you. I don' suppose this is a very new thought of mine but it's a thought."

(Continued on Page 94)

Next Month

"I can't believe in love between men and women," he said heavily.

THIS was the man she was going to marry: William Prescott, whom the town called a robber, a swindler, a barbarian and a fool. Ursula knew that he had been all these things, and William made it plain why he wanted to marry her. His child needed a mother. ("She will know there is no sentiment involved," he said.) But Ursula knew that, from the first, sentiment had been involved. William would not admit it, and Ursula could not forget. Can any woman be happy married to a man to whom she can never speak the truth? Taylor Caldwell's new serial

Let Love Come Last

beginning in the May JOURNAL.

Mrs. Washington Irving

Young Society Matron of Manhattan . . . wife of a descendant of the distinguished author, diplomat, and Hudson River Valley squire.

She made the Camel 30-Day Mildness Test and she says:

"Camel is the mildest cigarette I ever smoked."

FAMOUS as Palm Beach for sunshine, or Sun Valley for snow . . . that's how famous Camels have always been for mildness. Cool, cool mildness.

Millions of smokers testify to that!

But . . . if, by some chance, you're not one of these smokers . . . if you've never given Camel a real day-to-day tryout . . . well, start your own 30-day test of Camel mildness now.

The same test the socialite Mrs. Washington Irving made.

Try the cool mildness and rich, full flavor of Camels in your own "T-Zone." That's "T" for Taste and "T" for Throat. It's your proving ground for cigarette mildness and smoking pleasure. Try Camels and see how mild a cigarette can be!

According to a Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

Doctors smoke for pleasure, too! And when three leading independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors what cigarette they smoked, the brand named most was Camel.

Naturally this picture of Mrs. Washington Irving is taken against a background of early nineteenth century Americana. For she's married to a descendant of the great literary figure of that age, the immortal creator of "Rip Van Winkle" and "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow".

In a recent test of hundreds of people who smoked only Camels for 30 days, noted throat specialists, making weekly examinations, reported

NOT ONE SINGLE CASE OF THROAT IRRITATION due to smoking CAMELS!

Camels for Mildness

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, North Carolina

(Continued from Page 92)

"I can't imagine what you're talking about, Tony," Mrs. Burton said.

"But Charley knows," Tony Burton said, "don't you, Charley? We all may be worrying about the same thing but we worry about it in different ways."

It was startling to find that Tony Burton was thinking during dinner exactly what he had been thinking earlier.

"Yes," he said. "I know just what you mean."

He saw that Nancy looked startled, too, and he saw Tony Burton glance at her and then look back at him triumphantly.

"I wish we could all get together," Tony Burton said, "and we might do something with the world, but of course we never can get together. That's the exasperating thing about it."

"Really," Mrs. Burton said, "I don't know what you're talking about, Tony."

Charles himself could not gather what this was leading up to, but as he watched Tony Burton he could see that Tony's face was set in the expression he always wore when he was about to say a few graceful words before a group of people.

"Perhaps I'm being cryptic now," he said, "but all I'm saying is that I wish we might all be friends. I really hope we can be, in spite of anything that may happen in the future, and the future isn't as clear as it used to be. That's all I'm trying to say. Now if you girls will excuse us, I'm going to take Charley into the library."

MRS. BURTON stood up and as Charles rose he felt a slight wave of nausea. He could put only one interpretation on that hope for friendship. He knew the final answer to their little talk already. He felt the back of his chair biting into the palm of his hand, but he still had to say the right thing.

"Why, of course," he said, "we'll always be friends, Tony."

"Don't stay too long and get too interested," Mrs. Burton said. "I don't see why Tony can't ever get through his business in New York."

Charles was no longer thinking clearly as he walked with Tony Burton from the dining room. What he desired most was to behave in such a way that no one would have the satisfaction of seeing how deeply he was hurt. That desire was partly discipline and partly human instinct for concealment. Yet after that first moment the shock was giving way to relief. He suddenly felt free and a weight was lifted from him. There was no reason for him to try any longer, not the slightest reason.

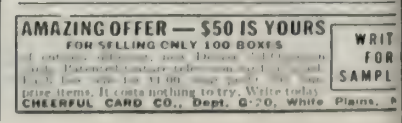
It was not far from the dining room to the smaller room where men customarily gathered. They were walking across that gloomy hall without speaking and space had lost its significance. He was actually walking also over the road of his career, a feeble little human track like the progress of a sea creature in sand. It stretched all the way from the accounting department in Wright-Sherwin, to Johnson Street, to Rush & Co., to the day his father died, to New York, to the day he met Nancy downtown, and now the track was ending in that walk across the hall. There would never be the same hay in the bundle again. The ass would never have to walk after it so assiduously. He might still be useful, but in a business way his career was as good as over. He had gone as far as he could go.

Tony Burton's room had always reminded him of the corner of a men's club. It was filled with the mementos of the travels of Tony Burton, gathered on that trip to Bagdad and on two world cruises, but Charles was no longer obliged to be interested in them. He seated himself in a comfortable armchair without waiting to see if it was Mr. Burton's chair or not.

"Sugar and cream, sir?" Mr. Burton's butler asked.

"Just coffee, thank you."

"And brandy, sir?"



"No, thanks. No brandy."

"Try it, Charles," Tony Burton said. "It's some of my father's brandy. There isn't much like it left."

...your hair can be Much More Colorful and Glamorous

NOREEN
ER COLOR RINSE
Glorifies your hair with
NDANT TEMPORARY COLOR.
new, convenient, easy-to-apply

incerely believe that NOREEN eally do what you have always d a color rinse to do.

use Noreen bountifully augments
tural color of your hair with added rizing shades of gold, bronze red, brown gold, coppery brown, deep rown, or lustrous black.

use Noreen lusterizes white or gray
akes out yellow, and adds cool tones
l-blue, blue-gray, or deeper gray.

use Noreen amazingly blends in to tural shade the unwanted gray in g hair.

ns of discerning women now know perb COLOR qualities of NOREEN re's always a NOREEN shade to beautify and glorify your hair.

ADVERTISED AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PUBLICATIONS

14 COLORFUL SHADES
Sold in 4 and 8 rinse packages...Each rinse in an easy-to-use capsule. Price 25¢ and 50¢ (plus tax)

Leading Cosmetic Counters
Beauty Salons Everywhere

EN Dist., 450 Lincoln St., Denver 9, Colo.

Tampon Users...

Fibs*

is the Tampon

h Rounded Ends...

he only Tampon

ilted" for Comfort...

ilted" for Safety...

Next time try Fibs

.Reg.
.OF.

(internal sanitary protection)

Tony Burton was still standing up. He should have waited until Tony sat down, but he no longer had to try so hard.

"Nancy always says I shouldn't drink after dinner," he said, "but all right if you're going to have some. Tony."

Tony Burton was still standing and again he wore the look he customarily assumed when he prepared to say a few graceful yet pointed words. "Close the door, please, Jeffreys, when you go out," Tony Burton said. It was like a meeting in the bank directors' room when someone who came in with papers was told to close the door when he left. "This friendship in business," Tony Burton said. "It's always bothered me. They shouldn't be mixed together."

"They don't mix together," Charles said. "Don't try to make them, Tony." It was the first time he had ever spoken to Tony Burton exactly as an equal, and it was a great relief.

"And yet they must mix," Tony Burton said. "None of us can help it. If you see somebody every day, if you have any human instincts at all, you get interested in him. I like everybody at the bank. They're like members of my family. Now take Blakesley. What do you think of Blakesley, Charley?"

It was not a fair question and there was no reason to give a fair answer and, besides, it did not matter what he thought of Roger Blakesley. "What do you want me to think?" he asked, and he was glad to see that Tony did not like the answer.

"It isn't what I want." Tony Burton gave his head an exasperated shake. "Do you like him or don't you?"

"All right," Charles said. "He's conscientious, energetic and well trained, but I don't like him much. Why should I?"

Money will buy a pretty good dog, but it won't buy the wag of his tail. —JOSH BILLINGS.

"I rather like him," Tony Burton said. "He's been on my conscience lately. He's been so anxious, so much on his toes. He's always in there trying."

"I don't know what else you could expect," Charles said. "I've been trying pretty hard myself." He had never realized that it could be such a delightful moment, to sit sipping Tony Burton's brandy, entirely free, entirely without thought control.

"Not in the same way, Charley." Tony Burton shook his head. "You're subtler. You've developed, you've matured."

"Thanks," Charles said, "but I wouldn't say that I've been very subtle."

Tony Burton shook his head impatiently as though he were being diverted from his train of thought. "Of course I'm out of touch with things, being where I am, but I've been getting an idea lately. I wish you'd tell me, Charley. You're in a position to know Blakesley. It seems to me that he has some idea that we're considering him for Arthur Slade's place. Do you know anything about this?"

He had a hysterical desire to laugh and then found that he was laughing. "What did you think Roger was considering?" Charles asked.

"I didn't give it much thought until about ten days ago," Tony Burton said. "I'm glad if it amuses you. It doesn't amuse me. When anyone gets ideas like that it's a problem what to do with him later. You never thought that any of us were considering Blakesley seriously, did you? He was useful while you were away, but he is not the right material. Of course there had to be a decent interval after Arthur died, but it never occurred to me that you'd have any doubts about it. Your name's coming up before the directors on Monday. Now what do you think we'd better do about Blakesley?"

Suddenly Charles felt dull and very tired. "You'd better tell him something, Tony, instead of teasing him to death."

"I suppose I'll have to on Monday. I don't suppose I can put it off on anyone else," Tony Burton said. "I'm sorry about the

(Continued on Page 97)

Chap-proof* your hands with TRUSHAY

FASHION says, "Yes!" to giant red roses flirtatiously tilting the brim of this huge new hat! But fashion says, "No!" to red hands. And they're so needless now!

Even if you do dishes or brave wintry winds, you can keep your hands smooth and lovely with different Trushay.

For Trushay has a unique "beforehand" extra that guards against chapping. Yes, you can use Trushay two wonderful ways!

To soften and smooth. Just a few drops make your hands feel like satin! Use fragrant, creamy-rich Trushay any time!

To chap-proof. Smooth on Trushay before doing dishes, light laundry, or before going outdoors. As long as Trushay is on your hands, they're protected against water chap and weather chap!

For evening-soft hands all day long . . . begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

The lotion with the "beforehand" extra!

*Applied before exposure to hot, soapy water—or wind and weather—Trushay protects hands against the red, rough, dried-out condition known as chapping. When soap-and-water tasks are prolonged—or weather is severe—renew application at more frequent intervals.

Berkshire's Easter Stocking Fashions

featuring Color Harmonics

It's the wonderful new way to make beautiful costume color harmony with longer-lasting, sheer clear Berkshire Nylons and Nylace Kantruns. The stocking color illustrated is Taupe Tone, a Berkshire Color Harmonic, cued to a subtle taupy-grey wisp of veil, the tender spring grey of a suit.

$1.35, $1.50, $1.65, $1.95 . . . at your favorite Berkshire store.

A Kraus Original Suit for Filene's, Boston.

sheer sheer Berkshire Stockings

Nylace Reg. U. S. Pat. Off For the loveliest legs in the world . . by the world's largest manufacturers of full-fashioned stockings. © 1949 Berkshire Knitting Mills, Reading, Pa le thing, but perhaps he had better re-

(Continued from Page 95)

."
was like the time at Dartmouth when he won the half mile at freshman track. He dull and very tired.
That was all I meant in the dining room."
y Burton shook his head again. "Now we'll be working together more closely, rley, I hope that we'll always be friends."
ony's voice seemed to come from a long off. There was a weight on Charles again, same old weight, and it was heavier after brief moment of freedom. In spite of all e years, in spite of all his striving, it was arkable how little pleasure he took in l fulfillment. He was a vice-president of Stuyvesant Bank. It was what he had umed of and yet it was not the true tex- of early dreams. The whole thing was trived, as he had said to Nancy, an in- able result, a strangely ow climax.

We grow old as soon as we cease to love and trust.
—MME. DE CHOISEUL

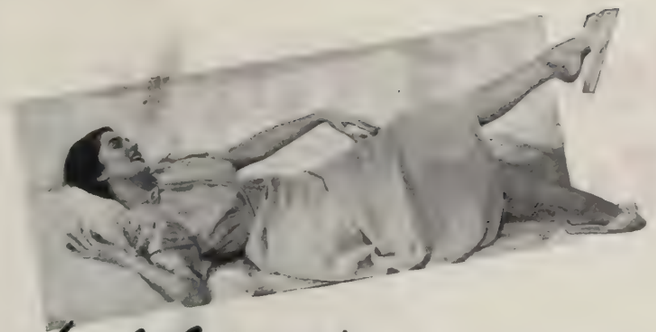
Well, Tony," he said, "I ss that means I can send ior to Exeter," and y Burton was asking / Exeter? He would not d a boy of his to Exeter.
hey were on a different basis already, v that he was a vice-president. Auto- tically, without volition, his thoughts e running along new lines, well-trained, hanically perfect thoughts, estimating a v situation. For a moment he thought of . Laurence Lovell on Johnson Street, but . Lovell would not have understood, or sica either, how far he had gone or what neant to be a vice-president of the Stuy- ant Bank. Nancy would understand. ncy had more ambition for him than had for himself. Nancy would be very ud. They would sell the house at Syca- re Park and get a larger place. They uld resign from the Oak Knoll Club. And n there was the sailboat. It had its com- nsations, but it was not what he had amed.
'A week from Saturday there'll be a little ner. It's customary," Tony Burton said. ou'd better be ready to make a few re- rks."
"All right," Charles said, "if it's cus- nary."

"And now we'd better go back and see what the girls are doing, unless you have something else on your mind."
"No, Tony," he answered, "I don't think there's anything else."
They would have to turn in the old car as soon as he could get a new one. There were a great many things to think about, but they could wait till morning.
Nancy and Mrs. Burton were sitting on a sofa in the living room and he thought they both looked relieved to see the men come back.
"Well," Mrs. Burton said, "I hope you two have settled the affairs of the world. You look as though you have, and poor Mr. Gray looks tired."
He saw Nancy look at him and Nancy looked tired too. He wanted very much to tell her the news, but it would have sounded blatant. Then Tony Burton must have noticed that there was a sense of strain of another kind.
"I don't see why you keep on calling Charley 'Mr. Gray,'" he said, "when Charley's in the family—or at least he will be on Monday." Then he must have felt that he should explain the situation, because he turned to Nancy. "I don't suppose this comes as any great surprise," he told her. "Charley's name is going before the directors on Monday, but I've spoken to them all already. There won't be any trouble."
If it meant more to Nancy than it did to him, it made everything all the better, and he was very impressed at the way she took it.
"I can't say I'm surprised," she said, "but it's nice to know definitely, Tony."
They were in the family. A minute before she would never have dreamed of calling him Tony, but it sounded very well.
"As long as we're all in the family," Tony Burton went on, "I was just telling Charley that I've been worried about Blakesley lately. Do you suppose he really may have thought that he was being considered?"
"Now that you mention it," Nancy said, "I think perhaps he did—a little."

SPRING'S IN THE AIR

(Continued from Page 68)

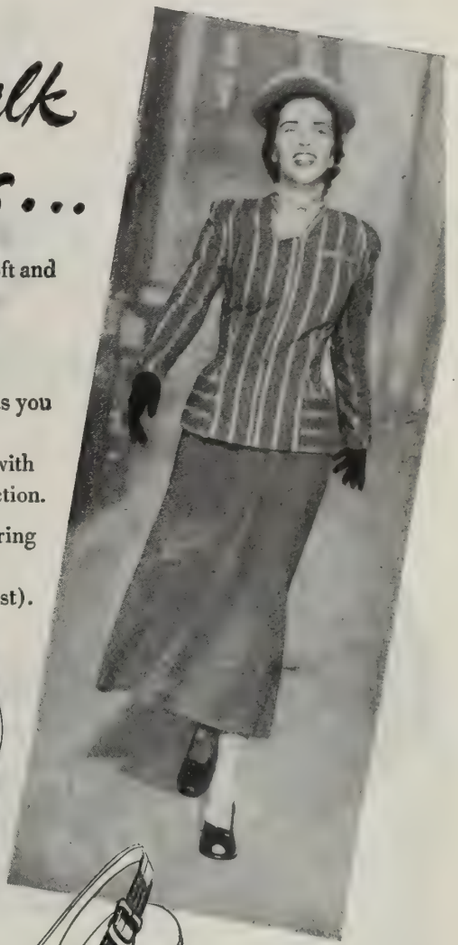
re until another spring, although I will mit that they do multiply exceeding fast. d they, like the gold of Ophir, are unde- ably yellow. April's earliest promise of at is around the bend. And all this yellow th clear blue skies above adds up to one ing: spring's in the air.



l this being so. If ever there was a ason for stepping out and doing something little different, it is the very things I've en talking about. Appetites get jaded— at's the word I want, isn't it?—over the ng winter. Every time I see or speak or rite those two words, "long winter," on cond thought I think how short winter ally is. Come to look at it—and you have unless you run South or somewhere hot— hangs on only about three months, four at e most.
I expect to hear from this remark. And at's all right too. I'll stand on my own et, as it were. Stand up for winter.

et us celebrate. Well, since it has been uite a while since I wrote about the weather, 've been pretty liberal on the subject this me. And now to the meal you are waiting r—the meal that celebrates the coming of pring—and to the ways if not means thereof.
The first item on the agenda is, as you can ee, a shrimp cocktail with a new dress. hose cool, coral-bewitched little shellfish gure in many a good dish. Someday I'll tell ou how I make a fish scallop, and shrimps re gainfully employed in this. It's one of hose dishes that you have whether it's Fri- lay or Tuesday. You make it whenever there's an excuse for doing so. But—no more. I'll wait until another day.

SHRIMP COCKTAIL—CHUTNEY SAUCE



It will take about 2 pounds of fresh shrimp for 6 cocktails. These are cooked with celery, parsley, lemon slices, salt, pepper and bay leaf in the water—simmering slowly so you won't make them tough as an old shoe. Drain them. Cool. Shell and remove the black vein. (Canned shrimps, drained, are all right and do well.)
Chutney Sauce: To 1 cup mayonnaise add 1 teaspoon curry powder, ¼ cup chili sauce, 3 tablespoons drained chutney, chopped, and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. This makes a good and different sauce—but you could still use the old favorite. (I trust you have old favorites in your repertory.)

What are we waiting for? Now for my money, you may give me ham 'most any day, any time. When Easter comes it has to be ham—in my scheme of things. A big, whole ham (if possible) dressed up in spring flowers, ones made to be eaten along with the ham. A ham baked and so full of good juices and dripping with spice and sirup that each thin, pink, delicious slice is rarin' to be consumed so the next slice can get a chance.
The next best is a handsome slice of the tenderest ham that ever went to table, glazed for flavor and beauty; and what could be better for this spring celebration dinner than this very dish? The answer is—nothing that I can think of.

feel like this...

and walk like this...

What a wonderful idea! Shoes soft and flexible as slippers... that turn city pavements into grassy turf under your feet.

And yet they support your feet as you swing along in graceful stride. They're Walk-Over Easi-Gaits* with new, exclusive Vel-Flex construction.

Smart town/country styles in Spring tans and other colors of calf. Styles shown $16.95 (Higher West).

FLARE

ROMP

Walk-Over
EASI-GAITS*

SIDE SADDLE

Walk-Over prices from $12.95.
Geo. E. Keith Company,
Brockton 63, Mass.
Hat, Irene... Suit, Maria Krum
*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Here's Finer Tuna...

There's a delightful surprise in store for you when you try Star-Kist New Chunk Style Grated Tuna! Here is fine, light-meat tuna in convenient size chunks...just right for use in salads, hot dishes and sandwiches! It's tuna with a distinctively delicate flavor...the flavor of the smaller, better-tasting tuna packed under the Star-Kist label. Whether you buy the New Chunk Style Grated or the ever-popular Fancy Solid Pack—you can depend on Star-Kist for quality tuna!

FREE TUNA RECIPE BOOK

Makes Menu Planning Easy

Send for your copy today! It's a complete tuna recipe book, full of new ideas, and it's FREE! Contains 24 pages in color. Kitchen-tested recipes for every occasion. For family dinners: thrifty, delicious casseroles! For parties and luncheons: unusual salads and souffles! For supper treats: tasty, hearty, hot dishes! Everything you need in one book! Send name and address to: Star-Kist Tuna, Terminal Island, Calif., Dept. 40.

Buy Solid Pack or Chunk Style Grated

...Star-Kist quality is the same!

GLACÉED HAM SLICE

Select a 2-inch-thick slice of "tendered" ham, weighing about 2½–3 pounds. Cut slits in the fat around the edge to prevent curling in cooking. Stud the fat with cloves. Heat a large frying pan, a heavy one—but heavy. Sear the ham well on both sides. Then add ¾ cup brown sugar and ½ cup sirup drained from spiced apricots or pickled peaches. Simmer the ham slowly about ½ hour so that the sirup glazes the ham plenty.

How do, little scallion. Once I referred to a scallion as a young and inexperienced onion. That definition is, I still believe, not to be gainsaid. It is an onion, but such a baby onion, only out of the nest, as it were, a short time ago. It is a delicate little fellow, a very frail little thing, and mostly it has been at home only in salads.

But wait. Take this weak and dependent kin of the lusty and robust onion clan, and put it right out in the front row, and make it a companion to the ham. And the ham is as friendly to this little fellow as it is to its grown-up brothers. Here is what you do, and I'll bet on this one. Want to bet?

SCALLIONS ON TOAST

Wash and peel and remove roots from 3 bunches scallions. Cut them at the top so they'll be pretty nearly the same length. Tie them up in bunches with string so there will be 6 bunches. Cook these in boiling salted water 2 minutes. They aren't used to hot water and get in a "tizzy" if allowed to sit around in it longer than that. Lift the bunches out with a strainer spoon. Simmer them in melted butter a minute or so. Remove the strings and serve on toast. Dress them with the butter they were simmered in.

Thinking-cap stuff. You get to thinking about what you can make that looks different, tastes different, maybe is new, and a sure-fire success. That's thinking. Or you fall to just glancing through, as you intend to do, a cookbook you hadn't noticed before. And you wind up, as I do, taking it to bed with you, the way Presidents are supposed to take thrillers. Anyway, the cookbook gives you ideas, and you translate them into deeds. Am I right? So here's something from the thinking end. And that is thinking-cap business.

CREAMED POTATOES IN TOMATO CUPS

Slice off tops of 6 firm ripe tomatoes. Scoop out to make a good firm shell. Salt well inside and turn upside down to drain. Now sprinkle inside with a little sweet basil. Remember? Prepare a rich cream sauce with 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 3 tablespoons flour and 2 cups milk and cream. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Add 2 cups diced cooked potatoes. Cut them small. Fill the tomato cups with the potatoes and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 20 minutes or until browned on top and the tomatoes are done.

Now if you aren't in a rush to get out to the garden or whatever, make up those creamed potatoes I've described so rapturously so many times. You know—cook diced raw potatoes (peeled, of course) in milk and cream. Cook them slowly, stir them often, don't overcook them and add paprika to the other seasonings. And try these in your tomatoes.

Cheese and I. I love cheese. Why, I guess if all the cheese I ever ate was figured out into one big cheese, it would be about the size of Texas. That will show you. With me it's cheese all the way.

And, to make everything square, I have put cheese and then more cheese into biscuits, so tender, so meltingly delicious that you will make up a batch, and then knock out about two dozen cheese croquettes. So they'll be ready for tomorrow. And I'll be doing the same.

CHEESE BISCUITS

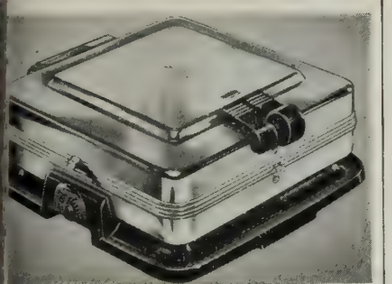
Sift together 2 cups flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder and ¾ teaspoon salt. Cut in ¼ cup shortening. Add ⅔ to ¾ cup milk. Mix lightly. Turn out on lightly floured board or pastry cloth. Knead ½ minute. Don't ma it. All biscuit dough should be dealt wit gently. Roll out to not over ¼ inch in thickness. Cut out biscuits with a small biscuit cutter (1½ inches in diameter). Brush top of rounds with melted butter or margarine and sprinkle with grated Cheddar cheese. (You will need about ⅔ cup grated cheese.) For each biscuit take 4 of the rounds and stack them one on top of another. Pinch the edges together halfway around and place the biscuits upright, fantail-roll fashion—having the open edges at the top—in each cup of greased muffin pans. If you have any remaining rounds, cut them into halves. Tuck one half, rounded side up, between the leaves of biscuits in each cup. This will give you more rounded biscuit when baked. Bake in hot oven, 450° F., 15–18 minutes. Makes biscuits.

When asparagus rears its lovely head. The asparagus proves it—spring is in the air. And no matter whether it comes from your own garden—but oh, what that is, to cut it yourself!—or comes from far away, it is without a dissenting vote, the most elegant, delicious and most-to-be-desired vegetable of these early-spring months. (When you cut it

"I wonder if he'd pick us again as his parents if he had it all to do over again."

NEW ARVIN
UAL-CONTROL

ds Guesswork Ironing!



clusive Magic Watchman saves clothes—saves effort!

lls you when the heat is right! No more k of scorching with a too-hot iron! No re wasted effort with a too-cool iron!

Extra Long 8-Foot Cord

the features you want most—long oot cord, easily reversible for right left hand ironing; light weight; fast at; bevel edge soleplate for "buttons d bows". Treat yourself to the latest ironing efficiency and avenience! $12.95

ARVIN LECTRIC COOK

RILLS! FRIES! BAKES! TOASTS!

merica's most versatile cooking appli-nce! Bacon and eggs for breakfast, asted sandwiches for lunch, pancakes waffles for dinner, hamburgers for a owd—they're all easy to fix with ARVIN ECTRIC COOK! Cooking area equals ree 10-inch skillets; converts in sec-nds to fully automatic waffle baker. A preme gift! See it at your ealer's—now! $27.95

Cooking area big enough to do 16 hamburgers at once . . .

. . . or 4 full-sized sandwiches . . .

. . . or 4 generous crispy waffles!

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC.
Columbus, Indiana

Also makers of famous Arvin Radios cut under the earth. You may reap where you never planted. In other words, you may grow another stalk. It is worth it.)

ASPARAGUS SALAD—EGG GARNISH

Cook 2 pounds fresh asparagus in boiling salted water (prepare for cooking as you usually do). Cool. Marinate in French dressing. Hard-cook 3 eggs. Shell. Cut lengthwise. Remove yolks and put through sieve. Gash rims of whites in V shape with a sharp knife if you want to make the egg cups look pretty. To serve salad, arrange 5 asparagus spears on a bed of chicory or other greens on salad plates. Sprinkle with sieved egg yolk. Fill the whites with a well-seasoned salad dressing and arrange at side of plates.

Not April, exactly—but —— No, I haven't garnered any strawberries—yet—but I am told that in some parts of our country strawberries are hiding and blushing and acting like a Victorian maiden at her first proposal in April. But when you find them behind their fans of soft green leaves, they richly repay. They are the top-drawer berry of the season. And, oh, the shortcakes looming in the future! Intend to whip up a few myself. And eat my share, which is always a generous one. In the meantime we in the North will hark to the song of the first—and perhaps the only—robin while we attend to the business coming up now—a fruit compote, made with the early rhubarb and frozen strawberries or some sent in by our Southern neighbors.

FRUIT COMPOTE

Defrost—no, not the refrigerator, but a carton of frozen pineapple, or maybe you will have a fresh one. Hull and wash 1 pint strawberries. (The frozen ones do all right too.) Sprinkle with sugar. Combine the pineapple and sugared berries with 2 cups cold stewed rhubarb. Have everything cold. Serve with spongecakes.

What could be sweeter? There are a lot of things to do to and with spongecake. Little ones are as dainty as lace on a ribbon garter. The kind they say brides should wear. Little spongecakes—you know, you may decapitate them, hollow them out, fill them with jam or jelly, put the tops back on and they become a spongecake surprise. Copied that idea from our old friend and sometimes lifesaver, the tomato of the same name. Here's a receipt—and go as far as you like.

SPONGECAKES

Sift together four times 1 cup sifted cake flour and ¾ teaspoon cream of tartar. Mix 1¼ cups sugar and ½ cup water. Bring to a boil and cook until sirup spins a thread, or to 250° F. Beat 6 egg whites with ¼ teaspoon salt until stiff but not dry. Pour hot sirup over egg whites in fine stream, beating as you pour. Wire whisk is best, so you can keep both hands busy, unless you have a mixer. Beat 6 egg yolks until light, thick and lemon-colored. Fold into egg-white meringue. Fold in sifted dry ingredients a portion at a time. Add 1 teaspoon orange extract. Set tea-size paper baking cups (use two cups, one inside the other, to help hold their shape) in muffin pans. Pour in the batter. Bake at 325° F. for 20–25 minutes. Cool and pull off the paper. Top each one with a flower made with decorative icing, using your pastry tube. Or you can pour into a sheet pan, 9 x 13 x 2", and bake at 325° F. for 35 minutes. Cool and cut into squares. If you use small paper baking cups, this amount of batter will fill 3 dozen.

So to my stint. Now I must leave you. But leave you with as neat a little spring setup as you'll find in many a long day. It is my hope that you will agree with me on this.

The garden beckons me. Speaking of leaves, you should see them. Too wet to rake. But somebody told me, last fall, to "let 'em lay" and the lawns would be as the hills of Lebanon, come spring. That's what they said. Do they come up to clean the place? They do not. That's Annie's lookout. Well, be on my way. Spring's in the air! THE END

For Lower Food Costs Better Meals—

Ruddy Heinz Tomato Ketchup is the simple flavor secret of this marvelous mainstay dish, planned with both your budget and your family's enjoyment in mind

TRY this glorious HEINZ DISH

Baked Tuna Rice Ring (with Ketchup Sauce)

Combine 4 cups cooked rice, a 7-oz. can tuna fish, drained and flaked, ⅓ cup chopped green pepper, 2 eggs, beaten. Grease ring mold pan. Pour rice mixture into pan. Set pan in water; bake 1 hour in a moderate oven (350°F.). Serve ½ cup heated Heinz Tomato Ketchup with ring. Serves 6.

HEINZ Tomato Ketchup

Makes Low-Cost Meals Delicious!

57

Your simplest economy dishes—casseroles, leftovers, low-cost meats—take on new zest when you add Heinz Tomato Ketchup! Keep this marvelous, mellow blend of "Aristocrat" tomatoes and spice handy when you're serving hamburgers, hash or frankfurters. Heinz Tomato Ketchup is so "flavor-rich", so concentrated, that just a little does the trick!

Housewives in 29 states and the District of Columbia are in luck! They are buying Durkee's Margarine all colored a tempting, table-ready yellow—and packed in convenient quarter-pound prints!

Durkee's is the finest spread because it's made of the finest ingredients. Delightful, too, for all cooking and baking. It's mild and sweet and country-fresh in flavor. Every pound enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A the year 'round.

Now on sale yellow in Alabama • Arizona • Arkansas • Colorado • Florida • Georgia • Indiana • Kansas • Kentucky • Louisiana • Maine • Maryland • Massachusetts • Missouri • Mississippi • Nebraska • N. Jersey • N. Mexico • Nevada • No. Carolina • No. Dakota • Oklahoma • Rhode Island • So. Carolina • Tennessee • Texas • Utah • Virginia • W. Virginia • Dist. of Columbia.

©1949

Durkee Famous Foods

Chicago, Ill. Norwalk, Ohio — Glidden — Berkeley, Cal. Elmhurst, L. I., N. Y.

Quick & Easys For Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

GOOD evenings, these, now that April's here. In order to spend more time out of doors, you will have to do a bit of kitchen alchemy to make it possible. Abracadabra gets you nowhere. You have to plan your week's needs ahead, make your menus short and snappy. Here are some might-haves for your platter dates.

Quick Switch

Meat Balls in Onion Sauce in Mashed-Potato Nest
Asparagus or Peas
Frozen Cherries
Sour Cream

Ground meat is usually on your weekly shopping list. It's economical and you can do so many things with it. You'd planned to bake a meat loaf—your husband likes your kind, but won't eat it in a restaurant. Things were humming at the office today. Late conference—late home. You'll have to give up the meat loaf this time—but make him just as happy, if not happier, with

MEAT BALLS IN ONION SAUCE

To ½–¾ pound ground beef and pork mixed, add 1 beaten egg, 2 tablespoons bread or cracker crumbs soaked in 6 tablespoons milk, ½ teaspoon salt, dash of pepper and 1 tablespoon minced onion. Mix well and shape into small balls. Dust lightly with flour. Fry in 1 tablespoon shortening or salad oil. Drain off any excess fat and add 1 cup canned onion soup. Simmer till heated through. Thicken with 1 tablespoon flour blended with cold water.

FROZEN CHERRIES—SOUR CREAM

Partially thaw cherries to the stage where they are still semifrozen. Serve with sour cream and a sprinkling of sugar.

Two at a Time

Asparagus-and-Egg Casserole
Sliced Tomatoes
Baked Peaches Tropical

April weather is capricious. Some evenings your apartment is so warm you can't bear the thought of heating up the oven for a casserole. Come a cool, rainy night—it's cozy to have the oven going. Whi you're at it, bake your dessert along wit the main dish. Now's your chance. T morrow may be sunny and warm.

ASPARAGUS-AND-EGG CASSEROLE

Slice 3 hard-cooked eggs. If you do as I d in my own ménage, you hard-cook ½ doze eggs at a time, keep in refrigerator to use i salads and quick casserole dishes. Drain small can green asparagus tips. Melt tablespoons butter or margarine. Blend i 2 tablespoons flour and ½ teaspoon dr mustard. Add 1½ cups milk gradually Cook, stirring constantly, until thickened Season with ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoo pepper and a pinch of celery salt. Crumbl enough packaged potato chips to make cup. Save out ¼ cupful. Arrange alternat layers of sliced eggs, potato chips and aspar agus in individual casseroles or a smal 1-quart casserole. Pour sauce over all an top with saved-out potato chips. Bake 2 minutes in moderate oven, 350°F.

BAKED PEACHES TROPICAL

Put 1½ cups sliced canned peaches in fla baking dish. Slice 1 banana over then Sprinkle with ¼ cup brown sugar. Pou ¼ cup orange juice over all. Sprinkle wit 2 tablespoons shredded coconut and 2 table spoons fine dry bread crumbs. Dot wit butter or margarine. Bake in a moderat oven, 350°F., 20–25 minutes.

Skillet Skill

West Coast Omelet
Green Salad
Strawberries and Cream

Does the thought of making an omele frighten you? It shouldn't. Never try t make too big a one—but do have a biggis skillet. The thinner the layer of egg, th easier it is to roll or turn. Even if your breaks the first time, it will taste just a good. Practice, and you'll be wanting t

WHAT LIES BEHIND JIMMY'S pink cheeks

Behind that glow of health and vigor lie the orchards and vineyards of American farmers, whose premium fruits are transformed by Welch into wholesome deliciousness for all happy youngsters—everywhere.

For 80 years it has been Welch's business to bring to the families of America the purest and finest of fruit products . . . first, famous Welch's Grape Juice—then, jellies and preserves—now, delicious ripe fruits and nectars in cans . . . all expertly processed in the most modern plants with a devotion to quality that accepts nothing less than the best.

The Welch name is your guarantee that Welch's Grape Juice and all other Welch products are definitely better—now and always.

THE WELCH GRAPE JUICE COMPANY • WESTFIELD, NEW YORK

Waxed-through . . . Cut-Rite wax paper is not just surface-waxed but waxed through and through—keeps costly meats fresh and juicy for another meal. Keeps sandwiches always "just made" delicious.

Easier to Handle . . . Cut-Rite is so perfectly pliable it doesn't split or break wastefully even when you twist it! And its famous cutting edge tears evenly, right where you want it to. A Scott Paper Product.

CUT-RITE REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

...famous cutting edge

tears easily

More women choose it
... love to use it!

(Continued from Page 102)

"Well, after this Wolff spoke, old Gottlieb nodded his head and said, 'Mr. Levy understands that, sir, and he is willing to abide by the rules of the club. He told me, in fact, that he would refuse to join the club unless he were admitted in the customary way, just like any other member. And so, gentlemen,' said old Gottlieb, standing up, 'I'll be here with Willie Levy on Tuesday afternoon. Is that satisfactory to everybody?'"

The breeze was stirring up a little, and the terrace was getting colder. His father gave a little shudder. He rolled down his shirt sleeves and buttoned his collar.

"I was young then," he said. "It was my first year on the committee. I hadn't begun to make any money yet. Was I excited! I never met anyone as big as Willie Levy before. That's all I could talk about for three days. Willie Levy, Willie Levy, all over the house. One day your mother said to me, 'What are you so excited about? He puts on his pants the same as you, don't he?' Your mother was a fine, common-sense woman. She was right. I was too excited. But you can see how I felt, don't you?"

"I would've been excited, too," said David.

His father nodded his head vigorously. "That's right. That's how I felt. So anyway, Tuesday came finally, and we all got together in the meeting room, waiting for old Gottlieb to bring in Willie Levy. None of us said much, except this Wolff. He kept talking about his new line of minks, and how beautiful and expensive they were. He looked so happy, I should've guessed he was planning some dirty trick.

"Pretty soon the door opened, and old Gottlieb came in. After him came Willie Levy. I don't know what I expected. Some kind of big giant, maybe, with horns and fire coming out of his mouth. For a minute I was disappointed. Willie Levy was an ugly man; he had a long nose and thick lips, and his hair wasn't combed. Old Gottlieb introduced him around, and he shook hands with everybody, and smiled and said, 'Pleased to meet you!' He said it just like that, in a loud voice, with a Bronx dialect. Just like this: 'Pleased to meet you!' Then I understood it, Dave, what a great man he was. Because he could smile and shake hands and say 'Pleased to meet you' in a Bronx dialect. And still he could be Willie Levy, who was giving orders to the mayor."

His father stopped to take a breath. Then he went on:

"He even shook hands with this Wolff. Then he sat down in the big easy chair in the middle of the room, and he said, 'So, gentlemen, let's have the Inquisition.' Nobody said a word for a long time. Then old Gottlieb laughed and said, 'Well, I guess that se... it. Why don't we retire to the bar and ha... drink?' But just then, this Wolff stands ... 'Not so fast,' he said. 'I want to ask Wi... Levy a few questions.'

"Willie turned to look at this little fell... He studied him for a while, and then he s... 'You're Mr. Wolff, is this right?' Wolff n... ded his head, and Willie said, 'You got a fi... in your eye, Mr. Wolff. I'm glad you sp... up. I don't like I should get anything with... a fight.'

"Wolff was sort of surprised, and then ... said, 'I don't want to fight, Mr. Levy. I ... brought up to believe that fighting is vulg... That was the exact word he used, Dave. 'V... gar.' Can you beat that? Then he said, 'I j... want to ask a few questions. Nothing p... sonal, you understand. About your busin... affairs. Mr. Levy, is it true you are a law... who takes money from gangsters and m... derers to defend them for their crimes?' ... those days, see, Willie Levy was a big cri... inal lawyer. It wasn't till later that he we... into corporation work.

"Willie stared at this Wolff, and then ... smiled, very friendly. 'Maybe you don't kno... Mr. Wolff,' he said. 'It's still legal in th... country for a lawyer to defend crimina... Some crooks I'd trust better than some ho... est people.'

"Wolff glared at him and said, 'All rig... Mr. Levy, but that's not my main objectio... Is it true that you spend much of your ti... in pool halls and gambling dens and spea... easies and other low places? And that y... frequently carry a gun in your pocket, li... some cheap thug?'

"Willie still smiled. 'What's the matt... Mr. Wolff? You want I should go into tho... low places without a gun?' Then the smi... disappeared. 'Mr. Wolff, you should lea... someday, even us cheap thugs are human b... ings. Did you ever look in garbage pails at th... age of five years, so your family could hav... food? Did you ever grow up in a Polis... ghetto? You should try this sometime, Mr... Wolff. Maybe you would learn, like I did, thi... is a tough world, and a man has to be toug... to get along in it. I made a lot of money in m... life, Mr. Wolff, and I had to go out and ge... every nickel of it by myself. Nobody hande... it to me on a platter. I got it for myself. S... that's why you see me at those low places ... That's where I belong.'

"Wolff was quiet for a minute. Then h... said, 'Well, that's not my main objection, ei... ther. What about your moral life, Mr. Levy? ... What about the way you act with women?'

"Willie broke out laughing at this. 'Mr. ... Wolff,' he said, 'you must be a magician or ... something. I don't for my life see how you

(Continued on Page 106)

What can a mother do for the child who lags behind?

IF HE'S THIN AND NERVOUS—HERE'S SOMETHING YOU CAN DO—BEGINNING TODAY!

When a child is frail and nervous or underweight, it may be due to a number of things. But the most common correctable cause is faulty nutrition. And this cause is one which you, the mother, can do something about.

In situations like this, many mothers are now turning to Ovaltine. For Ovaltine, mixed with milk, is a rich supplementary food—a protecting food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes of an otherwise "good" diet. It contains, in addition to essential high-quality proteins and quick-energy foods, the important vitamins A, B_1, C, D, G, Niacin, and the valuable minerals Iron, Calcium and Phosphorus.

You must also bear in mind that a child needs proportionately 2 to 3 times as much protein, calcium, iron, vitamins B_1, C and Niacin as an adult. That's another reason for a supplementary food like Ovaltine—to give the under par child extra amounts of the protecting things he needs in extra amounts.

It is also important to know that Ovaltine is specially processed to make it very easy to digest. A child with a "delicate" stomach will usually digest and absorb Ovaltine very readily. Ovaltine even makes milk more easy to digest.

So when you give 2 to 3 glasses of Ovaltine in addition to everyday meals, you can be certain that you have done just about everything you can do to improve your child's nutrition.

A New Flavor

Ovaltine is available in plain and in an improved, sweet, chocolate flavor which children really like. So, why not give your child Ovaltine every day for 30 or 60 days and carefully note the results.

FOR ADULTS—Ovaltine is also widely used by adults, as a protective supplementary food to guard against deficiencies in the diet.

OVALTINE

THE PROTECTING SUPPLEMENTARY FOOD-DRINK

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES

YOU GET IN OVALTINE

MIXED WITH MILK

HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN—essential in building body and nerve cells.

HIGH-ENERGY FOOD—needed for keen vitality.

IRON—necessary to maintain good red blood.

VITAMIN B_1—required for good appetite, digestion and healthy nerves.

VITAMIN C—necessary for healthy gums and all connective tissue throughout the body.

VITAMIN D, CALCIUM & PHOSPHORUS—all needed for straight, strong bones, good teeth.

VITAMIN A—a deficiency prevents normal growth—affects vision—may cause night blindness.

NIACIN—for normal functioning of nervous system and digestive tract.

VITAMIN G (Riboflavin)—essential to normal growth—and health of eyes and skin.

Here's rich, reflective beauty . . . long-enduring yet mirror-fine. Here's smart yet thoughtful styling that challenges all fashion change. Best of all, here's perfect toast every time—to everybody's taste. Yes, enjoyment is what you get from the famous "Toastmaster" Toaster . . . enjoyment for a long, long time. For people tell us how happy they are with "Toastmaster"* Toasters they've been using for twenty years . . . and over! So why settle for less than the one you'll be so proud of? Make yours America's most-wanted toaster. Just remember to . . :

Look for the TOASTMASTER name on your toaster . . . others will!

PERFECT TOAST ALWAYS
The famous Superflex toast timer automatically pops up perfect toast every time.

EASY TO KEEP CLEAN
Touch the button and the crumb tray opens instantly for quick, easy cleaning.

SAFE, COOL HANDLES
Lift the toaster easily and safely by the large, cool, finger-fitting handles.

TOASTMASTER Automatic Pop-Up Toaster

*"Toastmaster" is a registered trademark of McGraw Electric Company, makers of

(Continued from Page 104)

could know anything about the way I act with women.'

"Wolff said, 'Everybody knows, Mr. Levy. Every night you're with a different girl. Always a new pretty girl. And sometimes she's even married.'

"Willie said, 'I don't get you, Mr. Wolff. What is it you don't like, that the girls are pretty or married?'

"Wolff stamped his foot and said, 'You know what I mean. A man's wife isn't safe with you. I'd be afraid to have you around my house.'

"We all laughed a little at this, because we knew Wolff's wife, and we were sure that Willie Levy had better taste. Then Willie said, 'Mr. Wolff, I got to admit your point. That's the kind of man I am. I love life. And women are the part of life I love most of all. Any real man would understand this.' He looked hard at Wolff for a minute. Then he said, 'Is that your main objection?'

"This Wolff was mad now. His face was getting red, and his voice was squeakier than ever. 'No, that's not my main objection. I'll be frank with you, Mr. Levy, and nothing personal in this. I don't like your manners,' he said. 'I can't imagine how you were brought up. Look at that suit you're wearing; no man of taste would wear stripes that color. Look at all those rings on your fingers; we know you're a rich man, Mr. Levy, you don't have to force it down our throats. Look at your hair; you didn't even bother to comb it for this committee. But worst of all, Mr. Levy, listen to the way you talk. It's not American, Mr. Levy. You talk like—like an immigrant, like someone who just got off the boat, like Weber and Fields. Mr. Levy, you are the type of . . . person who, maybe through no fault of your own—understand me, Mr. Levy, this is nothing personal—spoils things for the rest of us.'

"Nobody said anything. We just sat around feeling foolish and not looking at Willie Levy. All we could hear was old Gottlieb wheezing. Then Willie Levy spoke. 'Mr. Wolff,' he said. We all looked up at him. His face was calm; he didn't look mad at all, just sort of tired. 'Mr. Wolff,' he said, 'you don't like my manners, so I don't like your manners any better. But one thing I think you should know: my manners are good enough to get me invited to any house in the United States of America. Houses, Mr. Wolff, that wouldn't let you in through the back door.' Still very calmly, Willie stood up and said, 'Your club I don't need, Mr. Wolff. You I don't need especially.' Then he nodded to the rest of us and started for the door.

"Old Jake Gottlieb followed him, pulling at his arm, talking fast. 'Don't go, Willie. He didn't mean it. Sit down, Willie. Mr. Wolff, apologize to Willie Levy. There isn't a big man in the country who doesn't respect Willie Levy. Mr. Wolff, apologize.'

"Wolff looked a little pale. He raised his voice and said, 'I won't apologize. Let him go. He's such a big man; why does he want to join our club? He knows so many big people; why should he want to know us? That's all I ever hear, how many big people he knows. He's too big. No man is that big. He must be small. He must be smaller than any of us. Let him go. He's not so big!'

"Willie was almost through the door. But now, when Wolff said this, he turned around. His eyes were wide, he was breathing hard, his fists were clenched. I remembered a story I heard once, how he nearly killed a man with his bare hands over a poker game. 'That's enough of it,' he said to Wolff. 'Nobody says I'm a liar. From nobody am I liar. Name a famous man. Any famous man in the United States of America. Name him, and I'll c him up on the telephone. And you can a him what he thinks of Willie Levy.'

"We were all quiet, waiting to hear wh Wolff was going to say. Wolff was quiet, t staring at Willie. Then a look came into eye, like when a fellow is going to put son thing over on you in a business deal. You c always tell that look and that's the look th came into Wolff's eye. Then he said, 'All righ Mr. Levy, I'll take you up on that. Call President Harding. President Warren Gam liel Harding.'

"It was a moment. Dave, I'm telling yo that was a moment."

His father paused triumphantly, one fing raised in the air, and finished off the last his beer. A shiver went down David's spi A sudden shiver, as if an icicle had be touched against the back of his neck. It wa familiar shiver, and David knew that, no ma ter how many times his father told the stor no matter how late at night, no matter ho bored or distracted David might be, whe ever his father came to that great moment would always feel the shiver down his spi It was the same shiver he had felt when heard the story for the first time, long ag years and years ago, when he was only six was one of his first real memories, it was th long ago. He was sick in bed, he remember It was winter, and used to have a lot colds during the wint and he spent a lot time in bed. It was ni There was no scho The sheets were co He could lie there day and read con books and find o men's faces in the pa tern of his wallpape

But that night, remembered, he wasn feeling so good. His hea hurt him. He couldn get to sleep. He d his head hard into th pillow, trying to ja away the pain. Then started to cry. Th the door opened, and h father came in to hi and sat down besid him on the bed. He remembered how su prised he was, because usually, when he crie at night, it was his mother who came to hin But his mother was away somewhere. H couldn't remember where at first, and the he remembered a week before, sitting in ten ple for a long time, then going out to th country in a long black car, then standing u for a long time in the graveyard. And his f ther was looking down at him now, ar smiling and speaking in a low voice.

"Dave, go to sleep," his father said. "G to sleep, son, and I'll tell you a fine story

And then his father started laughing an then he started talking. He talked for a lon time, and David couldn't understand most it. There was a good man, he understood tha and he was big and strong and very rich, an everybody loved him very much, and he ha a great many subjects. And one day all h subjects gathered together to bow down t the good man. But there was a bad ma among them—a little dwarf with a squeak voice, who could change himself to a wolf and he stepped up and challenged the goo man to a fight. And then, suddenly, every thing stopped. Someone said a magic word It was a long, magic word, and it ran through David's head for days and days afterward Warren Gamaliel Harding. And then the shiver went down his spine. And then, as he lay stil and listened, his father went on talking:

"Willie Levy didn't even blink. He looke at Wolff awhile, and he began to smile again and he said, 'Why not?' Then he got up from his chair and went over to the telephone and asked for the White House, Washington, D.C After five minutes, he got the White House Then he asked for the President's secretary A few minutes later, he got the secretary Then he asked for the President himself, and the secretary told him the President was jus

WITH THE CHILDREN

"This is a report card and it only tells what one person thinks of you, so don't forget that!"

When a slightly older child asked to join a group of moppets playing house he was promptly told he could not. However, he kept persisting and was told by an aggressive little "mother": "All right, you may play with us, but you have to be the grandfather who never comes to visit with us!" (The older child complied.)

"We had the loveliest time in school today; our teacher made a mistake."

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

Delicious
Old Virginia
CORNED BEEF
HASH

GET ONE CAN Absolutely FREE!

Once you've tried Old Virginia Corned Beef Hash, you'll make a scramble for it every time you hear the name. To acquaint you with the delicious flavor of Old Virginia Corned Beef Hash, we make this amazing offer. Present this coupon to your grocer and receive one can of Old Virginia Corned Beef Hash Free!

CLIP AND TAKE TO YOUR GROCER!

This offer closes April 30, 1949. When properly signed, this coupon will entitle the bearer to one free 16-ounce can of Old Virginia Corned Beef Hash. Offer RESTRICTED ONE TO A CUSTOMER!

Customer's Signature _____

Customer's Address _____

Grocer's Signature _____

Grocer's Address _____

TO GROCERS: Virginia Products Company, Inc. will redeem this coupon at retail value.

IF YOUR GROCER CAN'T SUPPLY YOU, TELL HIM TO WRITE TO:

VIRGINIA PRODUCTS COMPANY, INC.
P. O. BOX 671, RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

sitting down to dinner, and he told the secretary, 'Get him up from dinner, it's Willie Levy calling.' And the secretary said he would certainly get the President right away.

"We waited ten more minutes. Suddenly we heard a voice over the phone. It was a deep beautiful voice. It was a voice we all recognized right away. It said, 'Hello.' Willie Levy said, 'Hello, Warren, you're well, I hope?' They chatted awhile, and then Willie said, 'Warren, here's Mr. Sigmund Wolff who has a question to ask you.' Then he shoved the receiver into Wolff's hand.

"Wolff took it shakily, like he expected it to jump away from him. He stuttered a bit, and then he squeaked into it real loud, 'Mr. President, tell me your honest opinion. What do you think of Willie Levy?'

"There was a long pause, and then the President spoke. 'In my opinion,' he said, 'Mr. Willie Levy is the salt of the earth!'

"Wolff stared at the phone for a minute, then he handed it back to Willie. Then he said in a loud voice, 'Gentlemen, you can expect my resignation in the morning!' Then he walked out of the room without another word, and three minutes later we elected Willie Levy into the club."

But David scarcely heard his father's last words. The pain was leaving his head, and he was getting drowsier and drowsier. When his father stopped talking, he felt sort of warm and soft and peaceful. He didn't know what his father had told him, but he knew everything was safe, everything had come out all right. So he turned over and went to sleep....

THE cool breeze was blowing across the terrace. And it's the same today, David thought. It's not like the other stories. It's a special story. There's still the safe, warm feeling.

"What do you think of that?" his father said. "That's the kind of man Willie Levy was."

Something in his father's voice made him look up sharply. "Was?" David said.

"Didn't I tell you?" His father gave him a puzzled look. "Willie died this afternoon. On Long Island, where he had his winter home. There's a big article in the papers. He had a heart attack. He was sixty-four years old." Slowly his father turned over the newspaper on his lap and handed it to David across the table. "Can you see it in this light?"

David had to squint to make out the headline and the picture next to it: "W. Levy, taken twenty years ago." It was a heavy face, a large blunt nose, small sharp eyes, a mouth grinning in contempt and triumph. It was a young, powerful face, and David suddenly found himself thinking: Can Willie Levy die? Old Jake Gottlieb dropped dead in the middle of a pinochle hand. Mother died, too, on the operating table. Warren Gamaliel Harding is also dead. But can Willie Levy die?

The moon moved suddenly behind a cloud. The terrace was completely dark. In the darkness, David stared fascinated at the glow of his father's cigar, the small spot of orange moving through the darkness in a lonely arc.

"A big man," his father was saying. "It's hard to believe he's dead. Only last week I was playing pinochle with him." The moon appeared again, and the terrace was blue and hazy. His father sighed. "But all of us die someday, and that's the truth."

David looked up into his father's face. He thought of the face that looked down at him as he lay in bed that night long ago. And he thought that this was not the same face. This face was older. There were lines around these eyes. There were wrinkles in this forehead. As his father raised the cigar to his lips, David saw how his hand was trembling, how softly. He reached across the table to give his father the evening paper, and for a moment their fingers touched.

His father gave a quick little laugh. "It's a silly story, I guess," he said. "You've probably heard it before."

The story is special, David thought. Always the shiver, and always the feeling of warmth, and now, all of a sudden, this terrible pang of loneliness and helplessness, knowing he loved his father more than anything else, understanding more and more it was not enough.

"It's a fine story," said David. "And I've never heard it before." THE END

Mrs. America's FAVORITE coffee pots...

*The coffee pots that went to college!

* A great American university conducted exhaustive research to find the best coffee-maker design for making good coffee every time. Wear-Ever perks and drips are built to those scientific specifications.

Made of gleaming, friendly-to-flavor Wear-Ever Aluminum.

Strong, durable and long-lasting . . . built to take the abuse of everyday use.

PERCOLATORS	DRIP POTS
4 cup . . . $2.50	4 cup . . . $3.25
6 cup . . . $2.75	6 cup . . . $3.60
8 cup . . . $2.95	8 cup . . . $3.95

(All prices slightly higher in the West.)

See Wear-Ever Coffee Makers at your favorite housewares store NOW! Ask for prices on other sizes.

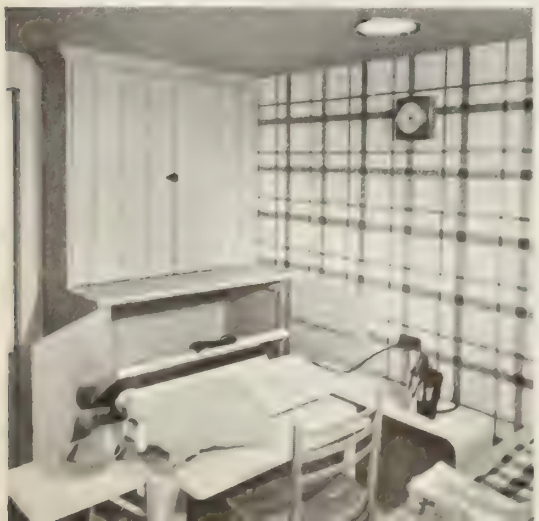
Send for the free Wear-Ever folder on "Secrets of Making Better Coffee." It includes recipes featuring delicious coffee-flavor treats. Write Margaret Mitchell, Director of Wear-Ever Test Kitchens, 1804 Wear-Ever Building, New Kensington, Pennsylvania.

GOOD COFFEE EVERY TIME WITH

WEAR-EVER

ALUMINUM COFFEE-MAKERS

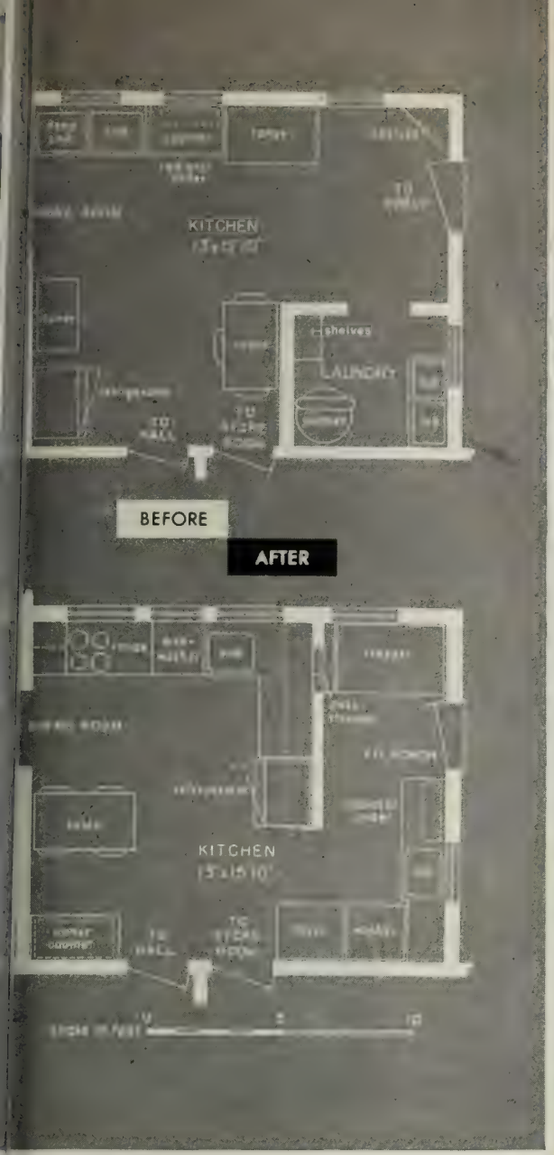
THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL COMPANY, NEW KENSINGTON, PA.



Light streams in, and the family looks out on a wooded hill through new windows. Under these and against a new partition, an L arrangement of the kitchen center is compact and spacesaving. In the old kitchen, supplies were kept in a storeroom—now they are right at hand. The old room lacked work space—now there is a counter beside each appliance.

Kitchen

With ironer in working position, table is handy for finished work. Flat-plate ironer does most of wash in jig time—hand iron is for touch-ups.



Change in wall and door opens corner for laundry. Washing dovetails, yet doesn't interfere with, kitchen activity. Ventilator draws off heat and moisture.

Home freezer is connected with kitchen by pass-through in new partition. Metal Venetian blinds at the windows are lightweight, colorful and washable.

Plaid paper on the wall sets apart the place where the family sits down to relax for informal kitchen meals. The ironer wheels into the lower part of the cabinet, and dishes for kitchen use are stowed away in the upper section. Chief structural changes: removing old walls around laundry, adding new partition to support cabinets, and new windows.

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

Plus

By GLADYS TABER

A cooking-dishwashing center, a laundry corner, a freezer nook and a pleasant place to eat.

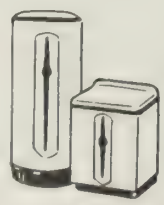
THIS kitchen solves a problem that many, many women are faced with in new houses, old houses and middle-aged houses. Especially mothers of young children. Leaping up and down the cellar stairs to answer the phone, fish a child out of the best symphony records, start the vegetables, and at the same time get the washing done—this is an old story to a lot of families. So is lugging a basket of clothes to the line way out back of the garage and vaulting back with one sheet half on the grass when a small voice calls, "Mommie, she smokes!" Burned carrots to throw out.

Then there is the blessed home freezer, which is so new an addition to our lives that only houses still hot from the oven have any place to put it. I know freezers in the cellar, on the back porch, even out in the garage. I know one family that cannot have one because they don't want it in the upstairs bedroom!

The JOURNAL chose this month's kitchen problem with all this in mind. There are five in the family which includes three little girls, and the pleasant house is set on a lovely lot not far from town, against a steep hillside. The mother does her own work, having no regular maid, and there is plenty of it with the little girls aged seven, four and two. Since an attack of infantile paralysis resulted in her being lame, step-saving is of particular importance. She leads an extremely

(Continued on Page 110)

ONE ACCELERATOR GIVES YOU ANY SPEED IN A CAR . . .



ONE SWITCH

gives you any temperature—not just 3 or 5 or 7

in an L&H AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC RANGE

You are in charge when you cook with an L&H! No need to guess whether "high, low or medium" is the right heat. No need to depend on fixed temperatures. The infinite control of the L&H Vari-Speed Switch gives you every temperature from simmer to sizzle! . . . not just 3, 5, or 7. Heat comes on like power in your car when you step on the accelerator . . . smoothly, gradually as you turn the switch. That's why results are so superior, foods so temptingly delicious when prepared on an L&H. Other features to delight you . . . oven is big enough for an entire meal, cooker lifts up to form extra unit, smokeless broiler, automatic time control for oven, cooker, appliance outlet and one top unit. See your L&H dealer today or write A. J. Lindemann & Hoverson Co., Milwaukee 7, Wisconsin.

L&H Electric Water Heaters 10-year warranty!

THE RANGE THAT MAKES GOOD COOKS BETTER!

©1949

active, regular life, but a few less miles to fare would make a terrific difference.

Moreover, to hang out the clothes she had to climb that steep hill behind the house, almost impossible in icy weather. "And the steps up the cliff are rough and steep and long." So the job was to bring the cellar upstairs, move the clothes drying inside and put the home freezer on the same level, and you have a solution! And incidentally it would make the kitchen workable and easy.

Although the kitchen was cheerful and spotless, with all that running to and from pantry, refrigerator and dining room, and all that cleaning under the pelican legs of range and sink, I couldn't imagine how anyone managed to feed the lively family, do the washing and ironing, and even sit down to mend the socks, much less to read a book!

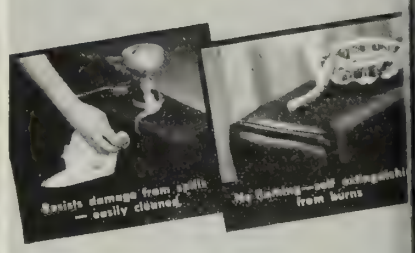
The problem, then, resolved into rearranging the kitchen equipment to make room for storage and work space, fitting in an eating center for five people, and making room for a complete laundry, including the wished-for drier. At the last minute, the family decided that now was the time to install new appliances, so they could be enjoyed while the kitchen was new. And they added a new 8-cubic-foot freezer to the list. What to do with that!

The room was 15′ 10″ by 13′ but it was not easy to fit everything in place. The family had long ago arrived at the same conclusion I had, that it couldn't be done. It reminded me of those maddening puzzles in which you always have a piece left over, no matter how hard you try.

A kitchen as difficult as this requires the making of many rough drawings to explore the possibilities. In fact, ten different sets of plans were made before the final solution was reached. But plan No. 10, which used every inch of available space to best advantage with the least remodeling, really made this kitchen meet the needs of the family.

One thing those plans showed will be especially helpful to many homemakers. When you have not enough wall space to line up the equipment in a convenient arrangement, a new wall extending part way into the room may be the answer. This gives wall space for more equipment, divides work centers, and it may be low or high and with a pass-through. It is a step-saver, too, for it keeps the working equipment closely centered, particularly in larger rooms.

In this kitchen, the old wall dividing off the closet-size laundry was found to be unimportant structurally, and a real inconvenience planwise—so it was torn down. A new partition to enclose pipes and cables was built out from the window side of the room, and the laundry area and the freezer efficiently installed around it.



In this kitchen, the wall was ceiling-high, so needed wall cabinets for storage could be hung on the kitchen side. The place for the freezer was perfect, for it is a cool corner out of the main traffic, and yet there is a pass-through where food can be pushed through to the counter where meal preparation goes on. Also, there is a window above, giving good light for packing or sorting. In my own freezer, we have to peer in with a flashlight even at high noon, and then we may come out with strawberries when we were after fillet of flounder!

The new laundry arrangement pleases them especially. The automatic washer has the drier right next to it, so there is no more trudging up the rocky, steep path to get the clothes on the line, and no more worrying about the whims of the weatherman. In the same corner is a deep laundry sink, with a handy sorting counter on both sides of it. A ventilator fan went into the wall, to draw the moisture, cooking odors and heat out of the room.

To complete the laundry, an ingenious shallow cupboard, recessed between the supports in the new partition, made room for the ironing board, the iron, laundry supplies and freezing equipment. Open shelves against the wall, over the washer, hold soaps, bluings and starches in most demand. The ironer is housed in a cabinet near the eating center, where it can be pulled out into the middle of

Duran all plastic UPHOLSTERY COVERING

first for beauty that will last

Duran has everything for upholstery beauty! Pastels! Deep colors! Pliancy and satin-smoothness . . . AND DURABILITY. Scuffing won't show. Sunlight won't fade it. Resists most stains. Just the whisk of a damp cloth keeps Duran fresh.

Look for Duran, identified by the tag on fine upholstered furniture.

Furniture manufactured by Hickory Chair Co., Hickory, N. C.

Only genuine Masland Duran bears this tag.

THE MASLAND DURALEATHER COMPANY
3278-90 Amber Street, Philadelphia 34, Pa.

n. Here it is light and airy for the stint. The top part of the cabinet n for dishes used at the eating table itchen.
important structural change in the
as the installing of new steel casement s that opened on the lovely hillside logwood will soon spread its silver ne windows are placed so the equips under the sills, and they open easily ne spring air in.
e new plan there was room for all the steel cabinets, a modern range with utton switches, and a refrigerator.
automatic dish-
r, set into the top, saves steps
ne for the mother
e young children.
reakfast dishes for ole family can be the dishwasher,
the time the beds
ide, the dishes are
And when the girls
der and have the n, they can stack pcorn bowls and cocoa mugs in the and turn the control, and the kitchen
ay trim and in order.
tric wiring was installed with the new -control wiring for switches. They is means that a small wire like that or your front doorbell, instead of the load-bearing-circuit wire, runs to the plates, and this costs less than the arrangement. I never have understood, ever shall, anything about electricity,
did like the idea of turning on lights
you need them, without having to light ole kitchen up like a firehouse. And I ne recessed lights used in the low ceil-ecause they never hurt your eyes, and ast no shadows.
original floor of mottled dark green lt tile was in good shape, and a nice my in the midst of such redoing was to fit in new matching tiles where the old corner-nook walls were removed.

This problem kitchen had a color problem, too, because there was so much all-white equipment and cabinets. However, the magic of color added the perfect note, and the JOURNAL decorating touch gave this kitchen plus a plus in colors too.

Since the floor was not to be changed, the room was keyed to the dark green of the tile. A bright, gay green plastic was used for counter tops. Wallpaper in a dynamic and generous plaid in green, blue and white instantly removed any hospitallike feeling from the white. Valance boards over the windows were covered with this paper too.

The eating table and chairs were lacquered a heavenly blue, and the ceiling and ironer cabinet were painted blue to match. Green, blue and white is one of the most satisfying color schemes, I think, for it is restful and spacious-feeling, and gay without being theatrical. Accents of geranium pink were used in accessories and chair cushions and table covering.

"The kitchen is perfect," they say. "Not a single meal have we eaten in the dining room, all for love of this!"

The washing is done now in jig time, with a determined line of little spectators watching every movement. And how they love to hear purposeful swishing of water as dishes are being washed.

"You should see how gay we look at night, and how cozy we are, eating supper with the lights all off but the ones over the counter and candles on the table. Every meal is really a joy—it's so easy to prepare and so pleasant to eat it right here in the kitchen."

A happy ending for what was a haphazard kitchen.

When Grover Cleveland was elected governor of New York he wrote his brother, "Do you know that if mother were alive, I should feel much safer."

—GAMALIEL BRADFORD: American Portraits (Houghton, Mifflin Co.).

THE LURE

(Continued from Page 38)

ink of something which will make you out in a crowd." She patted Linda's der. "Work on it over the week end," dvised. "I must run!" She ran.
d now, Linda sat before the mirror of ressing table, in the house in Cluttered
s, that exclusive residential community ong Island's south shore, and walloped rown hair with a stiff hairbrush. "What care?" she murmured. But then she ght of Mr. Abercrombie, who looked and polished, and she did care.
aybe when I begin to get a decent tan on gain, I'll look better. But she had had a derful tan last summer, and what had it ner? Absolutely nothing. You couldn't blame Shelby Perkins on the tan.
elby Perkins, she thought now, under spur of the Abercrombian question, is something that happens to people of low ility, like me. Her lower lip wobbled etically. He probably liked her because was inconspicuous, and dull, and safe!
ne twisted her hair experimentally into a blob on one side of her head, looked at nd let it fall. Through the open window ed the voices of her mother and Miss kins, Shelby's somewhat older sister.
two Perkinses lived next door, an ac-edly convenient arrangement.
Yes, they think the world and all of da at the bank." Linda had heard those tical words so many times that ordi-ly they would have passed unnoticed.
v they fell as salt in a new wound.
And why wouldn't they!" It was Miss kins, agreeing again. "As Shelby says, a quiet, sensible girl ——"
inda shuddered in the late-afternoon sunt, and closed her window.
n the mirror, her eye slid past her own ction and fell upon her neat, well-brushed hes, hanging properly upon their hangers he closet. They were clothes into which could slip with the speed of light, clothes which took one sensibly upon the 7:15 express to New York each morning, carried one unnoticed through a day in the Town Bank for Savings, saw one quietly home on the 5:23 out of Penn Station each night. They did not actually bunch, but there was certainly too much of them in the wrong places, and they all seemed to be useful colors. It could not possibly matter which of them she wore for her date with Shelby that evening.

It was a date to go out to dinner, and for Shelby Perkins to indulge in such an orgy of extravagance could have but one meaning.

"Mr. Perkins is such a gentlemanly man," fluttery Mrs. Thorpe had said, feeling perhaps that it was the right time to have a little intimate talk with her daughter. "It is a great compliment that a—a mature man like that is interested in you, Linda. It may be that you are the type which attracts older men."

"If any," Linda had said, and then had been sorry. It was not her mother's fault.

Biting the tip of her thumb thoughtfully, she considered what Mr. Abercrombie might be supposed to think of Shelby. Um-hum, she thought, with a surprising moment of fellow feeling for Abercrombie. And so do I!

"Come down, come down, Linda!" There was excitement in her mother's gentle voice. "I can see Mr. Perkins backing his car down his driveway!"

Linda ran downstairs, kissed Mrs. Thorpe and walked out to where Shelby sat waiting in his car, any excitement he might be feeling heroically concealed. She opened the car door and got in.

As they drove out along the Parkway, the delicious spring twilight folding itself around them, he asked politely if she minded the radio being on.

"Not at all," Linda said, wishing that the well-manicured hands on the steering wheel looked a little younger.

(Continued on Page 112)

Picture your home decorated in America's Most Desired Colors!

Why be satisfied with "just imagining"? You can "re-do" room after room now—easily and inexpensively—with Pabco Floors in colors voted loveliest by thousands of women who comprise Pabco's nation-wide board of style advisors!

Choose either Pabco Linoleum or Printed Floor Coverings—you're sure to get the "whitest white," "truest blue," and many other outstanding colors! Plus Pabco long wear and easy cleaning*!

Luxurious Pabco Linoleums (Patterns No. 9047 and 9003 shown above) are Soil-Sealed to resist dirt. Pabco Printed Floor Coverings—in rugs (No. 9811 shown below) and wall-to-wall styles—have the famous "Stainless Sheen" surface!

Send ten cents in coin for "Decorate with Pabco"—sixteen full-color pages—to Dept. 119 L nearest office below.

Doubly Easy With Pabco Linoleum Cleaner and Pabco Floor Wax*

THE PARAFFINE COMPANIES, INC. · NEW YORK 16 · Chicago 54 · San Francisco 19

Pabco Inlaid Linoleums and Printed Floor Coverings

Styled in California . . . . Approved by all America!

SALEM DINNERWARE—the ideal gift for Mother's Day

Parsley

One of several new patterns on the new Salem shape, designed by Viktor Schreckengost. Styled for casual living and festive entertaining. Surprisingly moderate in price. Open stock. See these, as well as other attractive Salem patterns, at your favorite store.

American Dinnerware of Distinction

THE SALEM CHINA CO.

SALEM, OHIO

Over the air waves, a short-winded young lady was surrendering body and soul. Linda looked out of the corners of her eyes at the solid citizen beside her. Oh, no! she thought with a feeling of panic.

"Linda"—he cleared his throat nervously and addressed himself directly to the windshield—"let's tell the folks when we get in tonight that we are engaged. I—ah—I love you, Linda."

("Body," said the young lady, unheard by Mr. Perkins, who was concentrating on the business in hand, "and soul!")

"We aren't getting any younger, you know, and if you feel about me the way I feel about you ——"

To her horror, Linda found herself giggling helplessly. He threw her an uncertain, sideways glance.

"It's not funny," he pointed out. "And it's nothing to make you nervous, my dear. You must have known ——"

I know a lot of things, she thought bitterly as he talked on and on. I know that you aren't going to get away with proposing to me before dinner! I can accept, and it is our engagement dinner; or I can refuse, and we'll turn around and go home, combining the best features of a planned economy and your broken heart. Fiddle your dee, Shelby Perkins, a girl can be pushed just so far!

"——and as I said to sister," he was going on, "Linda has an old head on those young shoulders."

That's what the man said, the goaded girl thought. She turned toward her impassioned lover as inspiration came to her.

"Shelby." He had to bend his head to hear her. "I—I have to think about you a little bit, first. If I'm—if I'm the right person for you. Who you marry is very important, you know, and you are an important man, and will be more important ——"

She felt as if the needle had stuck — Can't I say anything but important? she thought desperately—but it had apparently stuck in an acceptable groove. It was a historic moment: her first attempt at finesse. Shelby considered her remarks with a smug approval; he drove her to a really good spot, and he bought her a lobster dinner, the one all the way down the menu, the one that cost the most.

"And what happened then?" Mrs. Thorpe asked; she was getting a bowdlerized version at breakfast next morning.

"Then he talked about his investments," Linda said. "Mother, will you need the car today? If not, I think I'll go down to the beach."

"My dear, go ahead. Stay all day, if you like. You'll want to be alone with your thoughts, I know." Mrs. Thorpe sighed happily. "It's a whirl. We're to go to the mov with them tonight."

"Whee," Linda said.

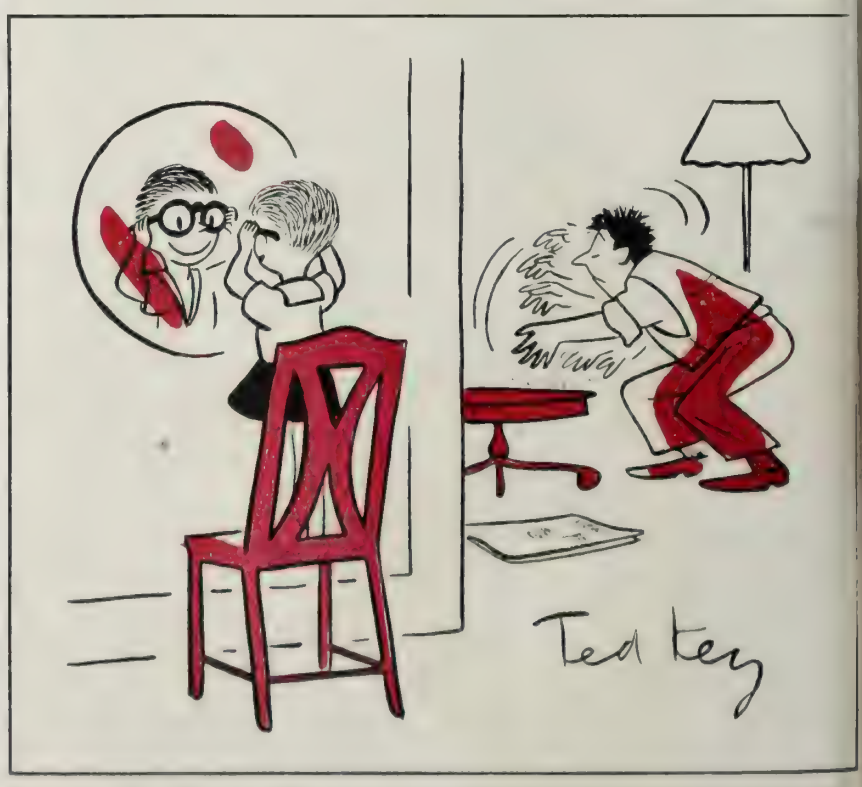
It was still very early when she reached beach. It was deserted, and entirely love Sandpipers chased the creaming waves acr the sand, a gull dipped into a breaker fo spot of nourishment. The Atlantic Oc was all hers, she would take her first swim the year while she was sole owner. She thr her arms wide in a gesture of delight and r to the water's edge.

Unhesitatingly, she fastened her swim c walked into the water with a little, involu tary gasp, dove capably through the curl a big green comber, came up beyond it, p her head down and gave with her sol businesslike crawl.

She never saw the log. It must have be hidden behind a whole ruck of waves. It her with outrageous force, on the forehea Pain and the paralyzing conviction that s had encountered a shark all but overca her. This is the end of me! This is the en Water filled her nose and mouth, she thrash desperately. Then her head began to cle and with a strong instinct for survival s clung to the slippery waterlogged wood un her strength returned. After a few minut she felt able to kick herself away from t timber. Swimming and coasting, saving l wind, she made shore. She wobbled up where she had spread her beach rug and herself down upon it.

Whether she fainted then or whether s slept, she never knew. A voice said, "H are you all right?" and she opened her ey One of the lifeguards was crouched bes her, one of the most terrific lifeguards, s noted automatically, that she had ever se long and dark and handsome. When she tri to smile, her face felt funny.

"Yes," she said without smiling, "I'm right."



He continued to look at her solicitousl "I've been waiting for you to wake up," said rather diffidently. "I wanted to mak sure you were all right. It was the first thi I saw. Your eye, I mean. I never saw such mouse on anyone in my life! Such a blac eye," he explained when he saw her bewi derment. "It certainly is a whing-ding."

"Have I a black—I mean, did it—yo mean, my eye is discolored?"

"Sister," said the lifeguard, "that is paroxysm of understatement."

He handed her the beach bag for which sh groped. Finally he took it back and found th mirror for her himself. Linda stared at th glass, and gulped. It was very definitely whing-ding of a black eye, with subtle ove tones of green and purple as promise of bett

(Continued on Page 114)

Buy it now! Be glad for years!

IT'S TIME YOU HAD a really fine, really modern refrigerator in your kitchen.

It's time to buy a new General Electric Space Maker!

Why not look at one today? You'll fall in love with it on the showroom floor! But what's most important, you'll stay in love with it through years and years of everyday use!

For General Electric Refrigerators are made to keep you happy with your purchase.

More than 2,000,000 have been in use ten years or longer—an unsurpassed record for dependable, efficient performance!

The chief reason, of course, is the famous General Electric sealed-in refrigerating system. Air-tight and oiltight, this dependable system has never been excelled for efficient, economical operation . . . year in, year out.

Make up your mind now that you won't be content with anything less.

General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Conn.

The new 1949 General Electric Space Maker Refrigerator

You'll bless these features . . . every single day!

lolds more food! The G-E Space Maker ives you ⅓ more refrigerated food storage the same kitchen floor space.

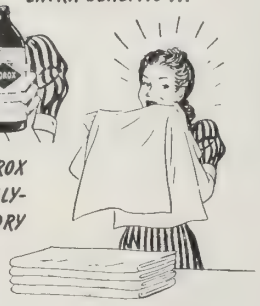
Ample frozen-food compartment! Holds 21 packages of frozen foods, plus four ice trays (20 cubes each).

Butter conditioner in door! Keeps butter at just the right temperature for easy, wasteless spreading.

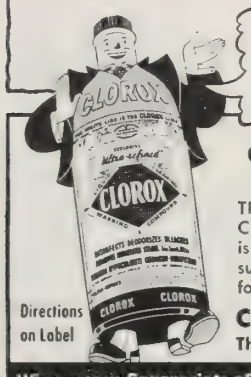
Big meat drawer! Full 6 inches deep, will hold a standing roast. Keeps all meats in best condition.

More than 2 million G-E Refrigerators in use ten years or longer

GENERAL ELECTRIC



Give your wash extra whiteness ... plus these 3 extras, too!



1. LAUNDERING WITH CLOROX MAKES YOUR WHITE COTTONS AND LINENS EXTRA-WHITE... SNOWY-WHITE...(BRIGHTENS FAST COLORS, TOO).

2. IN ADDITION, CLOROX GIVES YOU THESE THREE EXTRA BENEFITS...

3. CLOROX REMOVES STAINS...EVEN SCORCH AND MILDEW. CLOROX HAS GERM-KILLING POWER... MAKES LAUNDRY HYGIENICALLY-CLEAN, SANITARY. CLOROX DEODORIZES... GIVES LAUNDRY THAT "SPRING-BREEZE FRESHNESS," EVEN WHEN DRIED INDOORS. MAKE ALL THESE EXTRAS YOURS WITH CLOROX!

Directions on Label

CLOROX... FIRST WITH AMERICA'S HOUSEWIVES BECAUSE IT OFFERS BOTH:

GENTLER Bleaching Action... Longer Life for Linens!

There's no gentler bleach than Clorox in laundering. For Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

GREATER Disinfecting Efficiency ...Added Health Protection!

Because Clorox is caustic-free, it works faster in killing germs... does a better job of disinfecting. Give your family the extra health protection of a Clorox-clean home!

CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS

There's only one CLOROX... it's always uniform... always dependable!

Wipe messy fingerprints off doors and woodwork with BOON... the ready-to-use liquid cleaner made by the makers of Clorox. BOON wipes dirt and grease from washable surfaces quickly, easily.

Eye-Winning Windows

Yes, you too can always have eye-winning windows, if you standardize on Wat-a-set finished curtains. It's simple to do this because Wat-a-set — the ORIGINAL lasting finish for cotton, rayon and nylon marquisettes, ninons and casements — is available on many different brands of curtains in a wide variety of styles and prices.

Wat-a-set gives you eye-winning windows indefinitely, because of the following features:—

1. It makes curtains WASHABLE,— even rayon marquisettes; keeps the threads in place — prevents distortion of delicate open weave.
2. It reduces shrinkage. Makes starching unnecessary.
3. It helps tailored curtains to hang straight.
4. It repels rayon-eating silverfish.
5. It resists moisture—prevents crinkling.
6. It resists dirt. Dust shakes off.
7. Wat-a-set curtains are dyed with colors which have good resistance to sunlight.

Ask for Wat-a-set finished curtains at your favorite curtain counter, and look for the Wat-a-set insert label. It's tucked loosely in a fold of the curtain. Mount Hope Finishing Co., North Dighton, Mass.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Wat-a-set THE ORIGINAL LASTING FINISH FOR COTTON, RAYON AND NYLON CURTAINS

(Continued from Page 112)

things to come. If Linda had wanted something to make her stand out in a crowd, she had it!

She looked at the lifeguard, who was watching her anxiously, and she gave a funny little one-sided grin. Wait until Mr. Abercrombie saw this! Oh, and Shelby Perkins—why, he would not be seen dead with her, as long as she looked like this. And then came the realization that in all the years she had been swimming at Jones Beach, this was the first time that a lifeguard had ever, ever spoken to her. Linda slowly lowered the mirror.

"Do you blame me?" he asked.

"I wouldn't blame you for anything," she said with enthusiasm. "And as for this"—she touched her mouse gingerly—"it was entirely my own fault." Her grin widened. When you look like the smallest clown in the circus, there is no point in being shy. I look so awful, she thought with a feeling of actual release, that there is nothing left for me to do.

"YOUR own fault," he repeated delightedly. "You're wonderful! I was sure something nice would happen to me today. I'm not on duty for another hour. Are you the girl I'm buying a cup of coffee for?"

"I am," said Linda.

Over the coffee, he told her his name was Ed Smith. He also advised her not to go into the water until he could go with her, purely for reasons of safety, of course. Purely for reasons of safety, she agreed.

It was quite a day. There were the times when Ed was off duty, when they went a short distance down the beach to where he could tell her about the University of Michigan, from which he had just graduated, and other important matters. There were also the times when Ed was on duty, when she moved back to a spot not too far from his platform, and ever so many people she had known in high school and afterward came up to ask her about her eye. Even Mike Bainbright, scion of one of Cluttered Acres' wealthiest families, stopped to marvel and to tease her about it. The other lifeguards, clustering about fraternally, were friendly to her, but they kept trying to find out too. Only Ed never asked.

Linda said, "You ought to see the other fellow!" And she said, "I think it is better for me to say nothing." When she used that one, she tried to sound ominous. And she said, "It was really entirely my own fault." And she knew she looked funny, and she did not care a bit, because she was having a perfectly wonderful time.

Once Ed looked down at her and muttered cautiously out of the corner of his mouth, "Now what are you grinning at? Tell me, I'm your friend!"

The casual expression warmed her absurdly. "You wouldn't understand," she laughed up at him.

"Try me," he implored. "I'm fairly bright."

"I was thinking about a man named Abercrombie," she said honestly.

"That I don't go for. Think about us!"

"Okay," Linda said.

"Think about what are we doing tonight?"

"I have a date tonight." There was a wholly unconscious sadness in her voice as she thought of that date. He grinned.

"I might have to stop in and see how your eye is," he threatened.

A bright, intelligent little boy with a carrying voice shrilled, "The lifeguard's girl's got a shiner!"

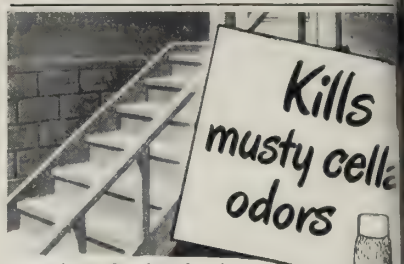
It was quite a day, but not so good for thinking seriously about Mr. Perkins.

When Linda reached home, Mrs. Thorpe screamed.

"Darling, it's all right. I'm all right. The eye hardly even hurts."

"But it looks terrible. It looks so—so rough. What happened to you?"

"Nothing that need cause you the least concern," Linda said soothingly. "Did you ever know any good to come of trying to explain away a black eye?"



"I never had that problem," her mother said with dignity. "Tell me at once exactly what happened."

"Why, dear?"

IT SHINES BRIGHTER ★ IT

★ At Hardware, Paint, Linoleum, 5&10c-$1 and Department stores. ★

Kills musty cellar odors makes air pine fresh in kitchens, cellars, closets, living rooms, bathrooms dispels bad odors

from fish, cabbage, onions, cauliflower, garlic, tobacco

WIZARD WICK BRAND DEODORIZER

"Pull up the wick—stops odors quick" ONLY 39¢

COSTS LESS! KEEP SEVERAL BOTTLES HANDY

SURETY TURN-CUFF
NATURAL RUBBER OR SURESEAL SYNTHETIC HOUSEKEEPING GLOVES

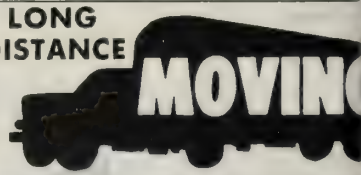
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping



Perfect hand protection for scrubbing and cleaning, doing laundry or dishes

CUFF UP—No dribbles on your arms, no trickles inside the glove

CUFF DOWN—Two-inch longer gauntlet

At chain stores, drug and department stores, or send $1.00 for two pairs in natural rubber, postpaid. State size. The Surety Rubber Co., Dept. G, Carrollton, Ohio

LONG DISTANCE MOVING

Over 500 agents. See classified phone book for agent near you.

Call us for quick, safe moving to any part of the nation. Trained personnel. Modern vans! Get our estimate on packing, moving and storage.

North American VAN LINES, Inc.
General Offices: FORT WAYNE, IND.

Hi-Life

9 out of 10 DOGS LIKE IT!

CANNED DOG FOOD

Vitamin Rich

At your Grocer

Hi-Life Packing Co. Chicago

No More Wet, Dirty Hands from Wringing Mops!

DeLuxe MOP WRINGER PAIL

Does the Work Easily ...Quickly!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

With the amazing new De Luxe Mop Wringer Pail, you get mops absolutely clean and dry without fuss or muss. Just open wringer with a touch of your toe, rinse mop in water, step on treadle and lift out mop. No stooping, no splashing; no wet, dirty hands! Get the De Luxe at your Hardware or House Furnishings store.

SCHLUETER MFG. CO. • ST. LOUIS

GOLD FISH FOR POOLS

There is a fascination about Goldfish which only experience will enable you to understand. Goldfish from Three Springs display gorgeous coloring and inherent vitality. With our brood stock you will have spawn the first season. You will be delighted at seeing dozens of little Goldfish turn gold as the season advances. Send for your free catalogue today so that you can order early, for the demand for Three Springs stock is so great that the supply is always exhausted early in the season.

THREE SPRINGS FISHERIES
2249 Spring Lane Lilypons, Maryland

Grand Ideas

TO MAKE BATHROOMS, KITCHENS MORE LOVELY!

Have unusual effects! Modernize, remodel quickly, easily with Upson Dubl-Thik Fibre-Tile. Apply it unfinished right over old walls. Then have it enameled in any color from the rainbow! Smooth, fuzzless surface. Easy to clean—keep clean. Positively crackproof. Ideal for new homes too!

Send for helpful Idea Booklet! Thirty-two pages in full color. Arrangements by America's leading decorators. Scores of ideas. Sent postpaid—25c. Mail coupon!

UPSON PANELS

THE UPSON COMPANY
332 Upson Point, Lockport, New York
I enclose 25c for your booklet, "New Interiors For Old." I am interested in remodeling ( ) building a new home ( )

Name_____
Street_____
City State

"Why? Why, so that I may know how best to explain to Mr. Perkins."

With difficulty, Linda brought herself back from remembering how she and Ed swam together, matching their strokes, from the sound of his voice saying, "You're good"; saying, "I'll never dare to beat you up when we're married, if you wow people like this with a black eye!" The goon!

"Mr. Perkins," she said absently, "will have to take this on faith."

"But he won't. Mr. Perkins is a man of the world."

It continued through dinner, her mother's tireless, gentle interrogation.

"Darling," said Linda, "I'm not talking."

She wore white, a cryptic smile and the mouse when the Perkinses arrived.

"Why—what —" they chorused.

"Linda will not tell us how it happened," Mrs. Thorpe said.

"But of course she will, and at once." Mr. Perkins rubbed his hands together. "And we will take whatever steps we deem necessary."

Linda, thinking of Mr. Perkins deeming it necessary to step into the ocean after the naughty log, giggled. The three others looked at her with varying degrees of disapproval.

"Linda has never in her life given me a moment's worry," Mrs. Thorpe confided.

"For which I'm sincerely sorry," Linda said.

"Don't be smart, Linda," her mother said.

"There is someone at the door," Miss Perkins warned.

"I'll go," Mrs. Thorpe said, relief in her voice, and fled. They could hear her gently urging someone to sit on the porch for a few minutes.

"A sweet, a charming lady, your mother," Mr. Perkins said. He looked at Linda, at the raffish black eye, with active irritation. "Linda," he said cautiously, "about what you said, in the car, you know, last night?" She nodded. "You may have been right," Mr. Perkins said.

"Oh, I was. I was!" Linda said.

Mrs. Thorpe appeared in the doorway looking flustered. "There was a Mr. Bainbright and a Mr. Smith," she said. "Mr. Bainbright thinks he got his dates confused, and he will telephone you. But the one named Mr. Smith says he has an engagement with you."

Mr. Perkins looked like an agitated hen. The resemblance was heightened by the clucking noises he was making.

"It's a whirl!" Linda said. She kissed her mother, and she kissed Miss Perkins, and she kissed Mr. Perkins. She blew a kiss in the air for Mr. Abercrombie, wherever he might be, for having asked the sixty-four-dollar question. She ran toward the door. "If Mr. Smith says he has an engagement with me, he has!"

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

We Do Not Need Slim April

By POLLY TOLAND

We do not need slim April,
Washed in slanting crystal rain,
Nor her wind-high pale peach blossoms
To make summer drowse again;

For when crust of frost has whitened—
Crisped the tendrils, cracked the trees—
Spreading snow and icy powdering
Where we took our August ease

We will find in frozen field grass
Of the winter-tightened heart
That April's frail green finger
Cracks the chilly bones apart.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

New look!

try these new patterns on your kitchen shelves

Make your kitchen dance with glorious color—for only a few pennies—with merry, "new look" Royledge Shelving! Most delightful patterns you've ever seen—dazzling reds and yellows, subtle blues and greens—the perfect pattern and color to make your kitchen brighter, more inviting than you ever thought possible. See new doubl-edge Royledge Shelving now—at 5-and-10's, neighborhood, hardware, dept. stores.

STARTING APRIL 22, see Royledge Carnival of New Spring Patterns at 5 & 10's, naborhood, hardware, dept. stores

Royledge

Shelving Paper and Edging all-in-one

9-FT. PKGS.

Royal Lace Paper Works, (Inc.), Brooklyn 1, N.Y. Trade Mark "Royledge" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Pattern above, "PRIZEWINNER" . . . below, "BREAKFAST NOOK" . . . in top picture, "DAFFODIL"

this is COMPACT...

EMPTIES COMPLETELY IN JUST 5 SECONDS

Just unsnap lid, lift out dust bag. Empty it, replace, close lid. It's that easy!

THE ONLY ALL ALUMINUM VACUUM CLEANER

Cuts fatigue to a minimum. Light, easy to use, to carry, to store. Lasts a lifetime.

UNDERWRITERS LABORATORIES APPROVED

1. Most efficient rug tool ever designed. Suction action penetrates deeper...yet picks up hair, threads, surface lint.
2. Non-marking rubber bumpers and cord prevent furniture and wall scars.
3. Tops in style and eye-appeal. Graceful modern design.
4. Ten all-purpose accessories included with each "Compact" for scores of cleaning jobs around the house.
5. Quiet, extra powerful heavy-duty motor never needs oiling.
6. Can't upset. Rolls on wheels and runners, turns easily.

Enjoy a brighter, cleaner home with less fatigue. Let "Compact" take over. So efficient...so easy to use...and guaranteed! See it, try it...you'll want it. Many thousands already in use. Write for name of your "Compact" dealer.

A QUALITY PRODUCT OF Interstate ENGINEERING CORP., EL SEGUNDO, CALIF.

Dealer franchises still available in a few good territories.

"THE WAY DEXTER Twin WASHES CLOTHES CLEANER IS AMAZING!"

Mrs. Melvin Sladek
7801 Kingston
Chicago, Illinois

"I'M CONVINCED DEXTER IS BEST!"

Yes! Mrs. Sladek and millions of users know Dexter Twin washes quicker, cleaner, easier. It's the only washer with two washing tubs. Turns out the weekly washing super clean in ONE HOUR OR LESS. It's TODAY'S BIGGEST WASHER VALUE. The Dexter Co., Fairfield, Iowa.

DEXTER TWIN TUB

CUTS WASHING TIME IN TWO

2 INSTEAD OF 1

Free! Before you buy any washer, get DEXTER'S 16 page illustrated booklet on DOUBLE SUDSING

MAIL COUPON TODAY

DEXTER CO., Dept. L-49, Fairfield, Iowa
NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ STATE _____

So many uses for this handy

MIST-MAKER SPRAYER

Look! Saves time and work for dampening clothes; spraying plants with water or insecticides, applying moth proofing liquids direct to clothes, rugs, furniture, etc. Metal parts are heavily nickel plated; clear glass container is 13 oz. size.

If unavailable locally, order direct from Federal Tool Corp., Chicago 45, Illinois

FEDERAL Practical HOUSEWARES

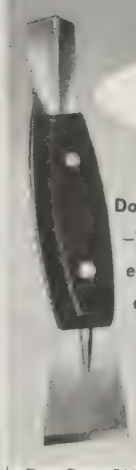
49¢



AT DEPARTMENT, HARDWARE, 5c to $1 STORES

NOW ANYONE CAN PUTTY WINDOWS

with the

DUO-FAST PUTTY KNIFE

NEW EASY FAST

Does a perfect job. Packs—Shapes—Trims putty. Makes a hard job easy. Pays for itself on first window. Get yours, today! It will be your favorite tool!

See $1.00

Your Hardware, Paint, Glass or Lumber Dealer—OR Order Direct.

ONLY $1.00 POSTPAID IN U.S.A.

Duo-Fast PUTTY KNIFE FASTENER CORP.
867 Fletcher Street, Chicago 14, Illinois

I am enclosing $1.00 — please send me one Duo-Fast PUTTY KNIFE

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ STATE _____

The Pleasure of Childbirth

By BETSY MARVIN McKINNEY

MY recent experience of childbirth is without qualification the most ecstatic, interesting, adventurous, exciting, enjoyable and personally triumphant accomplishment I have yet known. It is for those who would like to enjoy—and I mean enjoy—having a baby naturally, with full consciousness, that I am writing this account. Not to mention the pleasure it gives me to remember a joy commonly thought of as an ordeal.

The detailed instructions which make such an experience possible can be found in Grantly Dick Read's remarkable book, Childbirth Without Fear. His theory, very much oversimplified, is that childbirth, a normal, natural function, should cause no more distress than any other function of the body. He believes it a great emotional deprivation to make a woman unconscious through anesthesia at what should be the most alive, exciting moment of her life. All this can be achieved comfortably, without anesthesia (he is speaking of normal, not pathological conditions), through full education and instruction in the phenomena of labor, plus a calm mind and a relaxed body. Tension, usually created by fear and ignorance of how to manage one's mind and body in labor, is the main cause of labor's excruciating pain.

As the mother of three, the first two born by conventional medication and anesthesia methods—my first with the aid of forceps—I would say the great difference between conventional and natural childbirth is the complete absence of suffering. It may sound like double talk to differentiate between pain and suffering; I can only speak from my own experience and assure you there is a profound difference.

Of course what constitutes pain is a moot point in itself. Unquestionably a measured degree of pain may be felt differently by different people. I am a notorious sissy about such things as headaches and the tiniest filling at the dentist. And, being high-strung and emotional, I suspect that my own pain threshold is very low indeed. If anyone were going to beg to be given anesthesia during labor, that person ought to be me—and was in the past.

The interesting point is not that I felt pain; I did. But not once did I feel pain that was in any way unbearable, in strong contrast to my two other labors, especially the first, which was nightmarish. And not once was there a particle of suffering connected with the pain—again a marked contrast to the other deliveries. Throughout labor there seemed to be two entities: one which was having contractions, some of them thoroughly uncomfortable; the other, myself, watching what was going on, interested and much entertained. It is a very difficult sensation to describe; it was a fascinating one to experience.

I AWOKE Friday, the day the baby was born, with an ache low in the pelvis, which disappeared as soon as I got up, to be replaced with slight contractions low in the groin and back. These back pains were different from the cramplike ones I had been having for some days previously, and I was hopeful that at last the real thing was beginning.

I tried to practice relaxation each time I recognized the onset of a contraction, lying down quietly, face peaceful, jaws and mouth lax, arms, legs, everything as nearly immobile as possible—though comfortably, not tautly so—breathing a little deeper, until the contraction had reached its peak and was on the wane. It helped, there is no doubt of it, though I do not know whether the d comfort physically decreased because of t relaxation, or whether I simply thought it w less, since my body was thereby unable register pain by the usual tension reactio of speech, frowning, fist clenching and on. Pain as such was negligible for ma hours to come.

As the day of my baby's birth wore c the contractions, though no more unco fortable than at the beginning, seemed be increasing in strength and duration. with high hopes I put my two small boys bed for their after-lunch naps, and call Doctor Betts.

THOUGH not a previous practitioner Doctor Read's technique, my obstetrici had been most co-operative and interest in my desire to witness the birth of my ch as a rational woman. We were both looki forward to the delivery with intense intere both a little anxious about its chances success, both hopeful, though I would s Doctor Betts was less convinced than I. had witnessed a few natural, painless lab in his many years of fine obstetric practi but not enough to persuade him that it co be achieved by any normal, healthy wom who really wished to. And he had, after delivered my second baby (he did not atte the first), at which time I suppose I p formed just as any average woman in average medicated lab performs. He thought was letting myself in f untold agony, but was wi ing to give me every chan to prove him wrong a sincerely hoped I woul

We had agreed on trous oxide—which Re makes available to all h patients—as a light inhalant, not an ane thetic, should I wish it toward the end labor. And if worse did come to worst, if t method didn't work, I could still be p under as I had been with my former babie

On the basis of the ensuing examinatio my husband and I left the doctor's office f a few hours at the movies. Doctor Bet thought labor was probably beginning, b that it would be some time before I wou need to think in terms of the hospital, a the movies seemed a good way to keep m mind off my body in the interim. Besid having wished my babies good-by at n time, I simply could not face going home a second farewell scene—sure to inclu tears from both if repeated! But as I walk down the steps from the doctor's office, fairly strong contraction went with me. my husband started the car there was a other, and before we had driven five block a third.

We hunted up a near-by newsstand, whe I bought a couple of magazines for lig reading, and called Doctor Betts. He agre with me that it would probably be more s assuring to wait the remaining time at t hospital.

We arrived at the Albany Hospital a fe minutes before three, where I made anoth stop at the cigarette stand for a bottle Coke. Thus fortified with Coke and mag zines in one hand and my trusty, belove honest copy of Childbirth Without Fear the other, we arrived on the maternity flo Contractions were about five minutes apa by this time, and I sat considering the trying to relax, and ostentatiously displayi Childbirth Without Fear in the wild ho someone who was going to assist in labor delivery room might recognize it, or at lea ask questions without prejudice.

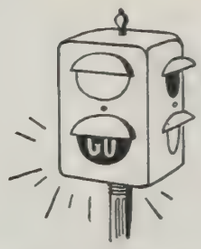
My biggest worry the entire time had be that of moral support. It was one thing have a baby without medication or ane

(Continued on Page 118)

By Nature's kindly disposition most questions which it is beyond a man's power to answer do not occur to him at all. —GEORGE SANTAYANA.

THE BIGGEST



One product—
NEW LA FRANCE with LUMINESS
—truly does all these things:

Actually adds whiteness to clothes—Because of its new light-reflecting ingredient Luminess, the New La France makes white clothes whiter than new. You can see the difference!

Actually brightens colors—Again, it's the Luminess that helps New La France to do what no other bluing can claim: make colors brighter instead of duller!

Safe with any washable material—Beautiful as the new materials are, some are mighty delicate. New La France treats them all with unfailing gentleness. Kind to hands, too!

LAUNDRY NEWS

Better than any other bluing—Most bluing covers up "yellowness" with a light tint of blue. Many bluings over-blue, leaving a blue tint. New La France makes clothes whiter by adding whiteness.

Can't streak, spot or cause rust spots—Old-fashioned bluings can do all three, unless used with great care. La France can't . . . because it goes in with the soap and is completely dissolved during washing.

Perfect with soap or detergent—Use any soap or any detergent, new La France was made with soaps and detergents in mind.

Works as well in washers as in tub laundry—La France works just as wonderfully in the new automatic washers as in agitator type washers, or hand laundering.

SINCE DETERGENTS!

Easy to use as adding salt to recipe—All you do is add a quarter box of La France when you add the soap. It's easy as that!

Guaranteed or double your money back—If you can't see the difference in whiteness and brightness when you wash with La France, mail the box to General Foods, Hoboken. We'll send twice the price you paid.

Costs only pennies per week—What a mighty pile of work it does for small pay! Get New La France today . . . try it next time you wash!

LA FRANCE BLUING FLAKES

with whitening—brightening Luminess!

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

AMAZING SELF-POLISHING SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

OUTSHINES THEM ALL!

Costs less to use because it lasts longer!

Millions of housewives are switching to Self-Polishing Simoniz. They find it gives longer wearing beauty and keeps their floors brighter. For the same lasting loveliness that makes Simoniz so famous for cars—insist on Self-Polishing Simoniz for your floors.

Sold by grocery, hardware, variety, drug, paint, 5 cents to $1, auto accessory, department stores—linoleum dealers everywhere. THE SIMONIZ COMPANY, CHICAGO 16, ILL.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SELF-POLISHING SIMONIZ FOR FLOORS

FOR LINOLEUM, FINISHED WOOD, ASPHALT OR RUBBER TILE AND TERRAZZO FLOORS

(Continued from Page 116)

thesia with Doctor Read in attendance, quite another to attempt the same method and result with nurses and interns schooled in the belief that childbirth entails agony that must be routinely relieved by drugs and anesthesia. I did not relish being my only supporter, and I feared even more either contradictions or ridicule from whoever might be assisting.

While they were preparing to admit me a pretty young nurse, Jane Welder, came by and glanced at my book.

"Oh! Are you going to have your baby by that man's method?" she asked. "I've always wanted to watch a natural birth—I'm sure he's right."

Her words were music to my ears, and when I found out that she could assist if I wished to engage her for the period as a special nurse, my joyful hopes hit a new high.

The second pleasant surprise was Doctor Arkelian, the intern who was to check me from then until I was ready to deliver. He had witnessed a Chinese woman give birth naturally and apparently without pain, so he, too, was both interested and sympathetic.

No two people could have been kinder or more helpful than they, and I believe a great deal of our mutual success was due to their goodhearted acceptance that my performance would in all probability be successful and was not just a mad whimsey.

The third and almost best surprise of all was an empty labor room! I would be able to finish up the first stage by myself without anyone else in a near-by bed to distract me!

By the time I was ensconced on the hard, narrow labor bed, giving Doctor Arkelian my history and sipping Coke (oh, blessed foresight!), the contractions were about four minutes apart and becoming, some of them, distinctly uncomfortable. Each time, I would go as lax and loose as possible, stop talking and concentrate on making absolutely no facial or bodily movement of any kind, breathing easily and only as deeply as was necessary, going utterly limp in every part of my body.

Arkelian thought it odd at first and would repeat questions; then he caught on and would stop talking himself during a contraction. The quiet was almost silly—but certainly efficacious, both peaceful and strengthening. The more uncomfortable the contractions became, the more truly and gratefully I would think, "This is certainly the way to have a baby; no fussing at all, neither energy-consuming nor upsetting." That is a minor sample of what I meant by pain without suffering.

When the history was finished and dilation checked again, Jane began reading me appropriate excerpts from Childbirth Without Fear, the best therapy she could possibly have performed. We had already achieved first-name status with each other, feeling that "Mrs. McKinney" and "Miss Welder" would shortly sound pretty foolish.

ANOTHER most relieving and helpful thing she did was to press hard against my lower back as the contractions involved more back pain. That pressure on the sacrum along with firm massage, suggested by Doctor Read where severe backache persists, is a most marvelous relief and I recommend it to all women who are lucky enough to have someone on hand to help at that stage. Another perceptive and helpful thing Jane did: when a painful and strong contraction set in—the only indication was my breathing, which would become very rapid, almost to the point of panting—Jane would say, not brightly but sincerely, "My, that was a good one, wasn't it!"—not, "That was pr painful, wasn't it?" She constantly un lined the remembrance of progress, not

When Doctor Arkelian had left the time with the promise of return in hal hour to check dilation again, I asked how long it would be before I delive "Not too long," he had answered—on those awful hospital answers I had alw objected to in former deliveries.

"Can't you give me something more nite? Ten hours? Five hours?"

HE replied that he thought it would less than five hours, which satisfied me. T is one of the beauties of conscious childbi You can not only ask rational questions, demand and get understandable answer had never, for example, asked questions been given answers on the progress of d tion, though it is a great help in keep track of how near you are to the second st and delivery. (The first stage, incidenta is completed with full dilation of the cer the second stage, from full dilation up to including the actual birth of the child; third stage, from birth through the exp sion of the afterbirth.)

It was about a quarter of five w Arkelian returned. Contractions were ofte now, and harder. Jane said she thought would run down f bite of supper, an replied she had bet and run, if she wan to be on hand for next step. She offe to give up sup but that seemed si so she left as Arkel checked me again.

I was beginning feel very tired, a told him so, and a told him that acco ing to Read this on of lassitude and tigue, coupled w harder-to-take c tractions, meant d nitely that the fi stage was neari completion. H agreed, said he wou return again in a h hour, and that if needed attention in the meantime, to ri the bell. He went out, leaving me alone.

The contractions were really gripping this time, reaching way up my back as w as around in front. I did not care for the at all. The lassitude I felt was tremendou the contractions frequent, profound a long, and I began to feel a little discourage wondering just how much longer I was su posed to keep on relaxing, putting up wi this sort of thing in a passive way, wonderi how much worse they were going to get a when. Then again I remembered Read's assurance that the last six or eight contra tions of the first stage were the most tryi part of the entire labor, and that they we proof the second stage was at hand. I al remembered—from what seemed mil away—Read's prediction that with ent into the second stage there was a defini lowering of consciousness.

"My goodness!" I thought, sudden awake. "I'm in the second stage!" An without more ado, rang the bell. Arkelia appeared as if by magic. "I think I'm star ing the second stage," I said groggily. H took one look. Sure enough. "How far d lated?" I asked, quite drunk.

"Fully dilated" was his brief answe calling an attendant, and I was wheeled int the delivery room. "Where's Welder?" I as sured him she would be back shortly.

As they wheeled me into the deliver room, all pain of every sort suddenly ceased a most delightful sensation, though the con tractions continued. This joyful state mad me even more delirious.

There seemed to be about a thousand at tendants gathered around, though when counted there were only half a dozen—medi cal students and interns and a couple o nurses. I imagine this is a larger group than

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

To David at Easter

By Ernestine Cobern Beyer

You live in Janeth's laughing eyes,
You speak with Barbara's tongue;
And Richard, reticent and wise,
Is you when you were young.

Love's roots grow deeper than the tomb.
Beyond the reach of frost,
One flower will fall, one flower will bloom—
But spring is never lost!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Just Whistle...

by Bissell

What do you do when your cherub child trails cookie crumbs over your newly cleaned rug? Spank? No . . .

Just whistle . . . and get out your Bissell Carpet Sweeper. See how that new "Bisco-matic"* Brush Action gets the dirt, at a touch! No need to bear down . . .

This miracle brush adjusts itself automatically to any rug nap, thick or thin. Sweeps clean under beds and chairs, with the handle held low!

Save your vacuum for occasional cleaning, and whisk through quick everyday clean-ups with your "Bisco-matic" Bissell®!

Exceptional values. "Bisco-matic" Bissells with "Sta-up" Handle and easy "Flip-O" Empty as low as $6.45. Other models for even less. Illustrated: the "Vanity" at $8.45.

Bissell Sweepers

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Mich.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's patented full spring controlled brush is ordinarily required to attend a simple delivery, and that some of them must have shown up just to watch. I tried to get all their names, but found it difficult to concentrate in my semistuporous state.

Then Doctor Betts walked in. "Hello, Betsy," he greeted me. "How's it going?"

"It works, Tom! It really works! And it doesn't hurt a bit!"

"Good," he replied. "But it isn't over yet." And he started scrubbing up.

"I feel as if I'd had five Martinis," I muttered hazily and happily to no one in particular—I was still enjoying an utterly painless period—and heard a masculine voice in back of me, half laughing, half mystified:

"She feels as if she'd had five cocktails; she hasn't even had medication."

A new male voice with a delightful accent broke in excitedly. "You see? She isn't in any distress, she's having a good time! I've seen this over and over again in Austria."

I swiveled my head around and met Doctor Kripp, resident obstetrician at the hospital. "Don't you leave! You stay right here!" I grabbed his hand. "You're just the man I want around. You've seen this kind of birth before?"

"Many times," he answered.

The back pains had disappointingly returned, but so had Nurse Welder. The atmosphere was as dreamlike as Alice in Wonderland. She was again at her blessedly relieving task of pressing against my lower back. But the contractions were suddenly bewildering. Where was I? At the bearing-down stage or still at the end of the first stage? Should I relax through them or between them and push? It didn't feel right to relax any more.

"What should I do?" I asked.

"Still just try to relax, Betsy," said Jane. "They have to prepare you for delivery."

"Unless you feel like bearing down. Go ahead if you do." This from Doctor Betts.

I LOOKED around. "Heavens! Are you still scrubbing? How long does that go on?" For ten minutes, it appeared. "Tom, did Mrs. O'Brien go as far as this?" She was another of his patients who had read the book and started out to follow the technique, only to change her mind.

"Not quite—but you're not finished yourself yet. No, she didn't go quite as far as this."

"Goody." I felt fretful, and childishly pleased.

Then began what to me was the musical-comedy part of the delivery, never before having really observed how a delivering woman is arranged and managed in conventional births.

First, two people got hold of my legs, at which I told them to cease and desist. "Leave me alone, they're comfortable that way! Darn it, I'm not drugged, I'm conscious! Tell me what you want me to do, and I'll do it." This surprised them, but they left my legs alone.

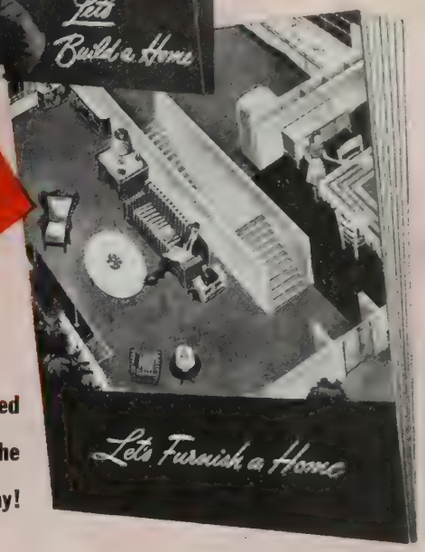
Then somebody brought over a Torquemada arrangement with shoulder pads, and started to fit me into it.

"Now what's that for?" So I wouldn't move out of the Sterile Field, it seemed. I felt like a horse being tethered. "Well, I won't. If I do, tell me, and I'll move back." So they took the shoulder arranger away. Somebody brought over a set of stirrups next. The horse feeling was unavoidable.

"She won't need those," said Doctor Betts, and they too vanished.

Then they put on sterile leggings, and over those a sterile sheet, folded, on each leg, held on by great clamps, outsize versions of the ones small boys use to keep their trousers out of bicycle chains.

"Now this is going to hurt and hurt a lot, Betsy, for about a minute," said Tom.



"What is it?"

"Methylate," said Jane. "It's a disinfectant. For the sterile field." Horses again. She took her hand from the small of my back where it must have been nearly broken by that time, and held mine. I reached out on the other side and found the nice firm grip of a young med student, and then they poured the stuff on.

2 Free Idea Books that every home-lover should have...

Full of practical suggestions on how to make your home more attractive and livable with STEEL

Lavishly illustrated in full color. Send the coupon for your copies . . . today!

HERE are two noteworthy additions to your "dream house" file. "Let's Build a Home" deals simply and practically with the many ways in which steel can contribute, structurally, to the lasting beauty, strength and safety of your new home. "Let's Furnish a Home" discusses in equally simple and helpful terms, how you can get more for your money by investing in steel equipment for your home . . . including furniture, appliances, fixtures, wall coverings, heating systems, etc. Between them, these 2 books present perhaps the most complete information yet collected on the use of steel in modern residences. Illustrated in full color. 32 pages packed with useful ideas and information. Don't fail to get your free copies. Mail the coupon today!

MANUFACTURED FROM USS STEEL UNITED STATES STEEL

United States Steel Corporation Subsidiaries
2075 Carnegie Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Please send me, without obligation, your two free, illustrated booklets on the use of steel in the home.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

this label is your guide to quality steel!

The U·S·S label at left is one of a family of U·S·S labels. Some say "Premier Spring Wire," or "Vitrenamel" or just "Steel" . . . but all have the big letters U·S·S prominently displayed. Whenever you see these letters U·S·S—the trade-mark of United States Steel—you know the steel is good.

LISTEN TO... The Theatre Guild on the Air, presented every Sunday evening by United States Steel. American Broadcasting Company, coast-to-coast network. Consult your newspaper for time and station.

Subsidiaries: AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY · AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE COMPANY · CARNEGIE-ILLINOIS STEEL CORPORATION
COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY · CONSOLIDATED WESTERN STEEL CORPORATION · CYCLONE FENCE DIVISION
GERRARD STEEL STRAPPING COMPANY · NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY · OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & RAILROAD COMPANY · UNION SUPPLY COMPANY · VIRGINIA BRIDGE COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY COMPANY · UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY

USS

UNITED STATES STEEL

ONLY

Sunbeam

AUTOMATIC

MIXMASTER

has all these advantages

DIAL YOUR FAVORITE RECIPE

New AUTOMATIC JUICE EXTRACTOR

The only juicer that automatically jog-gles the strainer to shake the juice out of the pulp. Fast. Easy-to-use. Easy-to-clean.

Famous MIX-FINDER DIAL

All the every-day mixing speeds are plainly indi-cated. Easy-to-see, easy-to-set.

A nylon button on one of the beaters forms bowl automatically, keeping beater-speed and bowl-speed UNI-FORM. You never need turn bowl or slow it down by hand.

New AUTOMATIC BOWL-SPEED CONTROL

POWERFUL MOTOR

Patented governor-controlled motor delivers Full Power at a Speed. Beaters never vary their speed as batter thins-out or thickens-up whether jet flow, or float, for EVEN mixing.

AUTOMATIC BEATER-EJECTOR

Tilt the handle—out drop beaters individually, for easy cleaning. No pulling. No messy fingers.

PORTABLE

Pull trigger and lift off motor-and-beaters.

ENJOY NEW FREEDOM FROM THE TIRING ARM-WORK OF COOKING, BAKING, GETTING MEALS

Only the new Sunbeam Mixmaster gives you all these special advantages you want and deserve when you buy a food mixer. So be sure the mixer you get (or the one you receive as a gift) is the original and the ONLY Mixmaster. There's only one by that name. Mixmaster puts that EXTRA delectableness, EXTRA success into every recipe. Over five million enthusiastic users are its best advertisements. Though tremendous popularity has made Sunbeam Mixmasters scarce, despite constantly growing production—hold to your purpose and be richly rewarded. See your dealer.

SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Ill.

Canada: 321 Weston Rd., So. Toronto 9

Betts was right, it certainly stung. Both the med student and Jane must have thought the methylate had been poured on them before the minute was up, I squeezed their hands so hard, but soon it was over.

"Now I'm going to rupture the membranes," said Tom. "It won't hurt a bit."

I begged him to let me do it myself, fearing that any artificial interference would spoil Nature's and Doctor Read's plan, but before the sentence was finished the membranes had been ruptured—it was only a second's work—and with sudden, violent force a bearing-down contraction had taken hold of me, and I pushed wildly and involuntarily, making a perfectly dreadful face as I did so, also involuntarily.

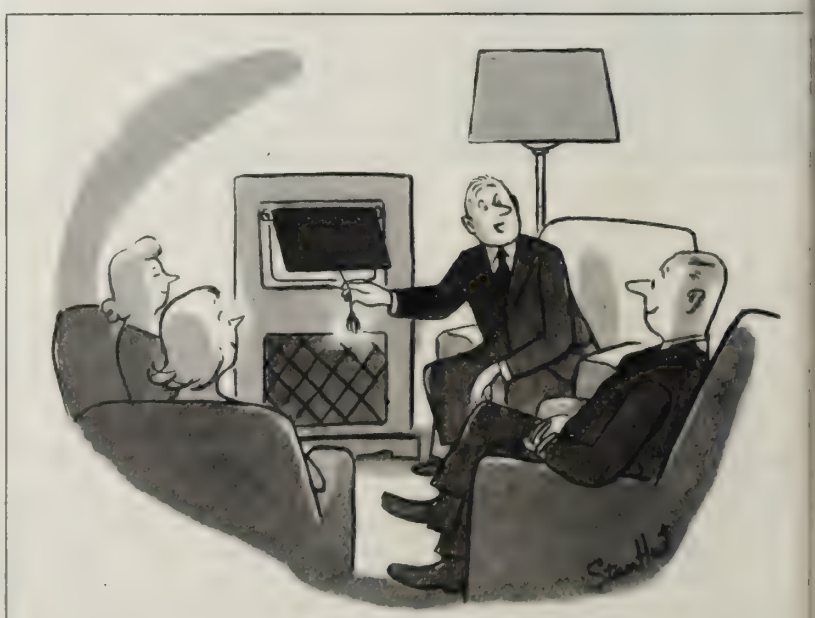
The effort was so great and sudden I lay back moaning after it, and Tom said, "From now on, Betsy, any time you want gas you can have it, all you want." He was so kind and reluctant to have me suffer. I realized that, but was so enraged at the mention of gas, when all I wanted was to be told I was doing fine and didn't need it—also so busy working—all I could say was, "Shut up!"

They had brought the nitrous-oxide tank in by that time, and I had almost wept, thinking I smelled ether and was sooner or later to be duped into missing the big event. They finally convinced me it was truly nitrous oxide, and that it would be administered only when and if I wished it.

Labor continued with the bearing-down contractions becoming ever more insistent and irresistible. I pushed harder than I thought it possible for a human being to push without splitting in two. There was a most terrible urge to rid myself of the baby, and again Jane Welder's and the med student's helping hands must have been squeezed almost to pulp, since I was using them for leverage.

My animal reactions to labor must have indeed presented a harrowing picture of agonized suffering. When I pushed with a contraction, quite dreadful loud sounds and grunts accompanied the effort, together with a face contorted beyond anything my face has been able to accomplish before or since. As I half rose from my lying position with the force of a contraction, I could see it in the mirror, and it certainly looked as if I were suffering the tortures of the damned. As soon as a contraction waned, I would sink back exhausted, uttering the most piteous agonized moans and groans, thinking to myself, "You darn fool, you sound like a calliope, and you're frightening your obstetrician." He had offered me gas numerous times only to be rudely answered "Shut up!" Yet, I simply could not help myself.

The noises that issued forth had practically nothing to do with pain, everything to do with labor. The grunts were the r of effort, the moans, relief from effort mental distress that the baby was still i and was continuing to make me feel s utterably full and unrelieved. Each traction was a relief from each rest, an chance to push the baby out, each r relief from the effort of the previous traction.



There was certainly pain during this dle second-stage effort, some of it simil though not so severe as the last contrac of the first stage, but the Herculean involved in giving birth was so tremen and all-engrossing I just didn't have or energy to bother much about it, bothered by it. Again, pain wit suffering. And I found what ever knows: that with each contraction, pain lasted only until I could gather m together, take a couple of deep br and bear down. The harder and long pushed, the quicker and more complete relief.

Toward the end of the second stage backache disappeared. I tried to pre myself for what Doctor Read had predi would be a horrid sensation of split and a feeling, not of pain, but of the i nence of pain. I remembered that spli sensation dimly from the previous eries. By now I was experiencing it in full force. Also the feeling, as predi that I was about to be hurt, and badly.

I tried, as the head came down, to what I thought was the perineum, for states that with a relaxed perineum a can be born with almost no sensation soever to the mother. But something wrong. (It was three days later I discov to my chagrin, what and where the perin actually is! I was totally unaware of its rect location, confusing it with the medically known as the vulva.) What relaxing I was doing between contract didn't seem to be having the right e and had I moaned less and relaxed mor result would probably have been b But with each contraction now, that fe of splitting and imminent pain was ge closer and closer, frighteningly so.

"What should I do?" I begged of any "Tell me what I ought to do!"

This part of labor was definitely not g according to Hoyle, or Read. Obvio with wrong ideas in my head, I was b to have trouble at this point. But I d know that then. All I knew was that time nobody answered me except Jane, had, along with others, encouraged praised and between contractions urge to be quiet and relax. But with no aut tative answer or instructions I sud realized that in regular obstetric pract and I couldn't have had a finer or mor

"For commercials."

or more co-operative obstetrician—con-tion with the patient during birth is a upsetting departure.
course. Ordinarily by that time the pais completely out, leaving the obstetrifree to concentrate on his delicate job out interruption. Instructions to the nt, naturally, would also be absent, unnecessary.
r the first time I realized the unhappy n of a sentence in the book, which had e me laugh when I first read it: "Modern ce has emphasized the art of obstetrics out calling attention to the fact that there ually a woman present as well as a reproory apparatus." There I was, but except he part that was producing the baby, e I wasn't. It was a frustrating feeling,
I was much too occupied to explain or tion further.
ne head was being born, it was hurting was going to hurt worse, I was con-ed—and when Betts said, "Will you some now, Betsy?" I gasped, "Yes!
!" and immediately the gas cone was put my face and I gulped it feverishly.
hen I heard the worst threat yet, again red out of kindness. "And leave it on!"
's not easy to talk with one of those gs on your face, but I managed to get
"No! Take it off!"
Ve had a brief, rather absurd passage at
s. "Don't you do it!"
Take it off! I'm rational and I know
t I'm saying. Take it off!" ittle Jane backed me up, and off it came,
in time for me to realize the relaxing wasn't right, and to recognize the same tting pain again. I took another whiff bore down, but this time the mask was oved immediately and without question.
I bore down the last time, there was the st curious feeling, as if a little fish were ggling out—and—no more pain.
It's stopped hurting!" I cried.
"Of course," said Betts. "That was the of the baby. It's born, and it's a boy.
k down and you can see it."
There he was, the cutest thing I have ever eld in my life, still attached to the long, tening cord. He was glistening and shintoo. In fact, the whole world was shining h a joy I expect I shall never reach again ess I have another baby. I was exhausted l ecstatic both, and near crying with det and triumph. "I'm so happy! I'm so ppy! But Larry will be furious!" I ghed as I said it, knowing he had wanted girl; we both had, though I knew neither us was going to be anything but delighted.
For the next few minutes I watched with erest as the baby was tended to, the cord t and clamped. Then Betts took the cord his hand, asked me to bear down again, ich I did, expelling the afterbirth with e greatest of ease and not a twinge.
"Any lacerations?" asked someone.
"I'm just going to find out," said Doctor tts.
There was a small tear which would re-ire two stitches. He asked me if I wanted
s for them, and I said, "Sure," indifferent, w that the big event was over. So I inhaled nitrous oxide while the first stitch was put in, and then realized to my horror that if I kept breathing it I would really go under. I had no intention of missing whatever else might be going to happen, and again told them to remove the mask. There was a short argument again, and this time as the mask was removed they wheeled the tank away.

"Well," said Betts, "he's gone and there's still another stitch, so you'll have to have it without."

When I felt the pricks of the insertion, just about the equivalent of a couple of quick hypodermic injections, I could have kicked myself for bothering with anything for the first; it was that innocuous. Read had said that the whole area was more or less without sensation for some minutes after birth, and he was right. He also said sensation returned very shortly, and he was right about that too. About ten minutes later I began to feel a soreness such as I have never before experienced. As they were massaging my abdomen, I remarked to one of the nurses that what I was feeling now was certainly worse than anything labor had offered in the way of honest pain, and before long I was given a sixth of a grain of morphine, which made things more comfortable.

There is not much more to tell. The postnatal hour in the delivery room passed quietly with my abdomen being massaged while I looked at my new baby, held him and gave the awe-struck nurse (Jane had left by then) a jumbled digest of Childbirth Without Fear.

I could not describe the utter calm, peace and happiness of that time, nor the marvelous sense of completeness and content. It has to be experienced to be known, and the moderate discomforts I had undergone—far far less than anyone who has not experienced or seen a birth of that sort would believe—were no price at all for this perfect reward.

When Doctor Betts made his first postnatal call, and after we had discussed the way I had sounded in contrast to the way I felt—which was a surprise to him—he told me frankly that the kind of birth we had experienced was rather more trouble for the obstetrician than routine deliveries. I felt badly, and apologized for being a bother.

"Bother?" he said gruffly. "Bother! Who said you were a bother? I wish every woman would have her baby like that!"

"But I thought you said it was more trouble for you."

"So it is, Betsy. But what's that got to do with it? I don't care how much trouble a delivery is; what I care about are a healthy mother and a healthy child. I only wish all my patients could have their babies the way you did."

At the end of my hospital chart is the following notation, which sums up briefly all I have said at length.

"This 33-year-old woman, gravida five, para three, had her complete delivery without anesthesia of any kind. Her pain was minimal and she was co-operative throughout. Labor was 10½ hours long, second stage 55/60. Both mother and child are in excellent condition."

AMERICAN AND UN-AMERICAN SOCIAL SECURITY

(Continued from Page 12)

ousands of days' wages every year. And ie difficulty of paying exceptional medical ills is meeting them when they are resented.

The state would do better to guarantee ans, through the banks, at 2 per cent, pay-ble in, say, two years, to enable people to ay off the costs of emergencies, these loans uaranteed on character alone. It would cost r less money than present plans, make charcter a negotiable asset, and prevent people emergencies from becoming the victims of nconscionable loan sharks.

The state could help everyone provide for is own old age by allowing the deduction rom taxable income of a certain percentage
f earnings, this to be invested in Governnent bonds and subject to taxation only hen cashed.

In short, the essence of a good American Social Security system is to find every possible means of helping people to help themselves without a vast extension of parasitic bureaucracy. Nobody can eat, drink, wear or live in card catalogues and red tape, but everyone has to pay for them.

The history of the all-embracing state, from the Roman Empire to the present day, has been a history of progressive decay in the vigor and productivity of society, and the independence of the people.

And the form of welfare state we are now moving toward originated in Germany under Bismarck and was for two generations the world's outstanding example. Bismarck's aim, openly stated by him, was to create a population docile to the state. He succeeded.

THE END

Sunbeam
AUTOMATIC
COFFEEMASTER
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

a perfect cup of coffee every time

ALL YOU DO IS PUT IN THE WATER AND COFFEE.

COFFEEMASTER coffee is ALWAYS delicious—because everything is automatic. The secret of delicious coffee-making is correct water temperature, agitation, and brewing time, just as a perfect cake requires perfect baking time and temperature. In Sunbeam Coffeemaster, the water is always at the same high heat—automatically. Brewing time is always the same—automatically. Coffee is kept piping hot, at the perfect drinking temperature, after it's made—automatically. You get all the requirements for perfect coffee in Sunbeam Coffeemaster every time—automatically. You can't miss.

AND LISTEN TO THIS! Whether you make one cup or eight, you always get the same perfect cup. That's because ALL the water rises. Not a drop ever remains in the lower vessel to dilute the coffee when it comes down. Sunbeam Coffeemaster is the ONLY vacuum-type coffee-maker that gives you this important advantage. Be sure your coffee-maker is the Sunbeam Coffeemaster to get the same clear, taste-tempting perfection in every cup. The only truly automatic coffee-maker. See your dealer.

SET IT! FORGET IT! Read the paper, dress the children. In a few minutes, click! . . . it shuts itself off when coffee is done. Resets itself to keep coffee hot.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Illinois • Toronto 9, Canada

PHOTO BY DI PIETRO

Foreign foods are as familiar to the Moks as baked beans and corn on the cob.

By MARY MOK

NO. 5 SERIES BY HOUSEWIVES

The day-by-day meals of actual housewives, cooking in their own kitchens, who have agreed to share the benefits of their experience with other JOURNAL readers. They make no pretensions, but do the best jobs they know how to do, to provide their families with healthful food, frequently on limited budgets.

I GREW up in a small town, where we raised our own chickens, cows, vegetables, fruit and berries. The variety and abundance of fresh, delicious foods were tremendous, but my parents never quite succeeded in teaching me to extend my taste range beyond meat and potatoes. I married a European, and my mind, if not my waistline, was broadened.

Under my husband's influence, I soon overcame my prejudice against sea food, shellfish and a large number of other things which I now consider to belong among the grand gifts of Nature. I even, believe it or not, have become fond of smoked eel, and my favorite breakfast nowadays (yes, he is a Hollander!) consists of fruit juice followed by crisp hot rolls with Cheddar or Munster cheese and coffee.

In our present world, rent by strife and sharp divisions, there is, it seems to me, nothing more important in the education of children than the teaching of tolerance. We must train our youngsters not only to know that there are other languages besides English, other customs and traditions besides American ones, but also to believe that those languages, customs and traditions are at least as good as ours and certainly just as dear to the hearts of the peoples who speak, practice and observe them.

The nursery and, a little later, the family dining room are excellent places to start, for I am sure that to teach children to enjoy foreign dishes in some subtle manner helps them to be receptive to new and strange ideas in art, music and literature.

In any case, that's how it has worked out in our home. I adhere to the old-fashioned notion that youngsters should learn to eat whatever is put before them, and I began quite early to include such foreign delicacies as Swedish meat balls, German pancakes, minestrone, borsch, and even mussels, salami and kippers in the children's menu.

Aside from other considerations, the variety is good for them. Moreover, should they have the good fortune to make a European trip, as my eldest son, then seventeen, did last year, they will be able to order something besides ham and eggs in Paris and to think of a few items more interesting than spaghetti when in Rome. And, while they are still small, they will not get themselves disliked when visiting friends and relatives by complaining that "I don't like this" and "I can't eat that."

This is how it works out with us—the foods of foreign origin are as familiar to us as baked beans. I plan each menu with the whole week in mind and order accordingly.

On Monday order eggs, fruit, meat for two or three days, vegetables, dried fruit, tomato juice, and so on, so that you have everything on hand when needed. For example, for Monday dinner I have planned tomato-juice cocktail because I will need a little juice for my stroganoff.

When making puddings, make enough for dinner one day and lunch the next day. While making spaghetti sauce Tuesday, also cook dried apricots and prunes separately. You can then have the apricots one day and combine them with prunes for a compote the next day. While cooking the sauce, other household duties can be done, which should leave the afternoon entirely free, since the spaghetti is boiled at the last minute and the salad can be mixed at the table.

On Thursday buy half of a ham, which you boil for dinner. Sandwiches are made of it the next day for lunch. Put it in the icebox and forget it on Friday. Saturday the ham is glazed and baked and seems like an entirely (Continued on Page 125)

HOW-TO-DO'S

● To keep cheese fresh, wrap in a muslin or linen cloth that has been sprinkled with vinegar, then dipped in water and wrung out. When the cloth is no longer damp, after a few days, repeat the procedure. You can also wrap the cloth-enclosed cheese in wax paper so the odor does not get into the refrigerator.

● To retain flavor in corn on the cob, stand the ears, unhusked, in about ½ inch of water in a pot until ready to cook. Into the pot in which the corn is to be cooked, put about ½ inch of water and an equal amount of milk, and 1 tablespoon of sugar. Bring the water-and-milk mixture to a boil, stand husked ears upright in pot, cover tightly and steam 5 minutes. Remove and serve immediately.

● To keep knives sharp, a holder that sharpens the knives as they are removed from it is a great asset in the kitchen. Attach the holder to the wall near your worktable or sink.

● In washing walls or any other flat surface, always begin washing at the bottom, to avoid making dirty streaks. You will find that the water does not mark the clean area below if it runs down.

● To make iced coffee that tastes like a Broadway soda, add a little prepared chocolate sirup, instead of sugar, to your iced coffee.

● To season your frying pan, never wash it! Does this shock you? A fine French chef gave me this advice. After using pan, wipe out with a paper towel, cover with wax paper, and put away until used again. The pan will not retain odors; it simply becomes seasoned like a wooden salad bowl. Under no circumstance must you use the pan for anything except frying.

● To keep pots and pans handy, handsome and homelike, I like the way our ancestors hung the pots and pans over the range. Have a molding put up over your range, the same length as the range, put in hooks at regular intervals, and hang up your pots and pans within easy reach. Naturally, the pans must be kept shining or the whole effect is spoiled.

● Instead of saying "No" when a child asks for something or begs permission to do something, stop and consider if it is not possible to say "Yes" instead. Often it is. Everyone is much happier in a home where there are not too many "No's."

● To slap or not to slap. I do not believe in physical punishment. When my children were smaller and I was tempted to spank or slap a child, I always tried to imagine how I would feel if a giant should come along and hit me every time I did something wrong, and I were unable to hit back. We are all giants to our children, benevolent or mean, as the case may be.

CHIQUITA BANANA SAYS:

Try these with meat—

PAN-FRIED BANANAS

To Pan Fry
Use green-tipped or all-yellow bananas

Luncheon Surprise—Banana Peanut Butter Sandwiches

Bananas sealed by nature in a germ-proof package

Between-meal Pick-up Banana Milkshake!

How to make PAN-FRIED BANANAS

Peel all-yellow or slightly green-tipped bananas. Fry slowly in butter or other fat until tender . . . easily pierced with a fork . . . turning them to brown evenly. Sprinkle lightly with salt. Serve hot as a vegetable.

Cut bananas crosswise into halves or quarters before frying, if desired.

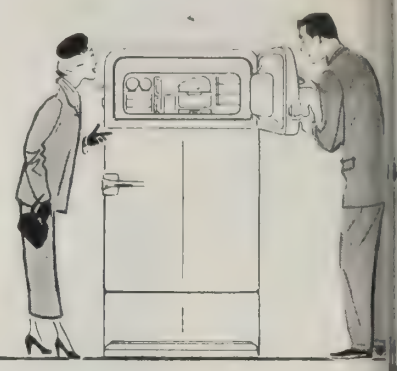
. . .

Pan-fried Bananas make an excellent dinner plate partner with fish, poultry, eggs, cheese and other vegetables.

Use all-yellow or slightly green-tipped bananas

UNITED FRUIT COMPANY

M'mm. Banana Shortcake! Cake, sliced ripe bananas and whipped cream!



Look what's in 'em:
Fruit sugars
Vitamins
Minerals

EASY DINNER MENU
Soup or Crisp Celery
Meat Loaf Buttered Carrots
Pan-Fried Bananas
Bread or Rolls
Apple Pie Beverage

Want room for 70 lbs. of frozen food in your new refrigerator?

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show it to you in America's No. 1 Refrigerator— the one that's different from all others!

What a beauty—smart, modern lines and gleaming white surfaces that stay gleaming!

This sparkling Cold-Wall Imperial is more than a refrigerator—its spacious Locker-Top is actually a built-in home freezer. It keeps up to 70 pounds of frozen foods safe—lets you stock up at your convenience, skip shopping any day—or days—you like. And it is heavily insulated to keep safe frozen food temperatures—economically.

The food compartment below holds more than ever before, has room for tallest bottles, biggest melons, largest roasts. The full-width Hydrator protects fruits and vegetables with super-moist cold which keeps them crisper, fresher.

And this is Frigidaire's famous Cold-Wall model—it needs no defrosting for months, keeps foods at their moist, flavorful best longer!

But your Frigidaire Dealer will show you more than space, convenience and eye-catching beauty. He'll show you the vitally important difference between Frigidaire Refrigerators and all other makes—the famous Meter-Miser, one of many reasons why Frigidaire is America's No. 1 Refrigerator. It's the simplest of all refrigerating mechanisms—the key to the long, trouble-free life of your refrigerator.

Your Frigidaire Dealer will demonstrate all 9 Frigidaire models—all backed by the experience of building more than 10 million refrigerating units. He will help you select the one that best fits your kitchen, your family, your eating habits. Also see the Frigidaire electric ranges, automatic washer and other home appliances.

Look up the name of your Frigidaire Dealer today—in Classified Phone Directory; or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ont.

Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights, CBS.

FRIGIDAIRE Refrigerators

Simplest cold-making mechanism! The one-and-only Frigidaire Meter-Miser works without belts or gears, without attention from you. No wonder it's so dependable, so wonderfully easy on precious electric current.

Yes, leave foods uncovered—even butter and fish if you wish! The Imperial uses the Frigidaire Cold-Wall principle—keeps food moist, and fresh-tasting far longer. Food-drying circulation of air is kept to a minimum.

Here's ⅔ of a bushel of fruits and vegetables in the exclusive Hydrator. Glass-topped for full visibility, the Hydrator keeps these foods crisp, fresh. It rolls out smoothly, effortlessly at a finger touch.

Ice Cubes pop out when you pull an easy-working lever—no muss, no fuss. This fast, handy service is yours with Frigidaire's exclusive Quick ube Ice Trays.

(Continued from Page 122)

ish. On Sunday, leftover bits of ham led to the scrambled eggs, and the bone i as the basis for lentil soup. In this very bit of ham is used without mo-
, and one spends a minimum amount e in the kitchen.

MONDAY LUNCH

Egg-Salad Sandwiches
on Whole-Wheat Bread
Fresh Fruit — Beverage

MONDAY DINNER

Tomato-Juice Cocktai'
*Beef Stroganoff
iled Potatoes String Beans
Grapefruit Sections on Lettuce
French Dressing
Lemon Ice — Beverage

BEEF STROGANOFF

½ pounds stewing beef into long thin
. (Use top sirloin when prices come .) Dredge with flour. Chop ¾ pound mushrooms. Sauté meat in 2 tables shortening, browning it well. Sauté, ately, mushrooms and 2 medium onions,
ed, in 2 tablespoons shortening. Com-neat and vegetables. Add 1½ teaspoons ⅛ teaspoon pepper, 2 tablespoons vinand 3 tablespoons tomato juice. Cover immer 1 hour or until meat is tender.
1 cup thick sour cream just before serv-Heat up well. Reseason to taste. Stir in spoon paprika, if desired.

TUESDAY LUNCH

Vegetable Soup — French Bread
Chocolate Pudding — Beverage

TUESDAY DINNER

Spaghetti With *Meat-and-Vegetable Sauce
Grated Parmesan Cheese
Mixed Green Salad
Stewed Apricots — Beverage

MEAT-AND-VEGETABLE SAUCE FOR SPAGHETTI

wn ½ pound chopped beef in 3 table-ns shortening or salad oil. Dice fine 2 stalks celery, 1 peeled carrot, 2 onions and ¼ pound mushrooms (optional) and 1 green pepper. Add to meat and sauté until golden. Add 1 small can tomato paste and 2 cups (2 cans) tomato sauce. Season with 1 bay leaf, crumbled, 1 teaspoon salt, and pepper to taste. Turn heat low, cover and simmer 1½ to 2 hours. During the cooking, add water to sauce when it becomes too thick.

WEDNESDAY LUNCH

Poached Eggs on Toast
Lettuce and Tomatoes
Russian Dressing
Chocolate Pudding — Beverage

WEDNESDAY DINNER

Consommé Madrilène
*Hutspot
Green Salad With Roquefort Dressing
Baked Apples — Beverage

HUTSPOT

(Hudgepudge—a traditional Dutch dish.)

Three hours before dinner, brown a 2-pound pot roast in a heavy pot. Season with salt and pepper. Add 2 tablespoons water, cover tightly and simmer. After 1 hour add 1 pound carrots and 1 pound onions cut into pieces. Cover and simmer another hour. One hour before dinner add 1 pound small whole potatoes, salt and pepper. Cover again and simmer until ready to serve. Remove meat and keep in warm place. Remove the vegetables and mash exactly as you would mash potatoes. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Skim off excess fat from meat juices in pot. To serve, place mound of mashed vegetables on hot platter. Slice meat thin and arrange on top of vegetables. Serve meat juices in a separate bowl.

THURSDAY LUNCH

Sandwiches Made From Leftover Hutspot Meat
Bananas and Cream — Beverage

THURSDAY DINNER

Fruit Cup
Boiled Ham — Applesauce
*Baked Beans ("doctored") — Coleslaw
Compote of Apricots and Prunes
Beverage

"DOCTORED" BAKED BEANS

Fry 3 slices bacon and drain on paper towel. Slice 2 onions and 1 green pepper. Sauté in bacon fat left in pan. Stir this mixture into 2 cans baked beans. Pour mixture of beans and vegetables into casserole, sprinkle with grated cheese. Arrange bacon strips on top. Bake in slow oven, 300° F., about 1 hour.

FRIDAY LUNCH

Ham Sandwiches
Celery and Radishes
Custard — Beverage

FRIDAY DINNER

*Fillet of Sole Normandy
Baked Potatoes Sliced Beets
Lettuce Hearts With Russian Dressing
Danish Pudding — Beverage

FILLET OF SOLE NORMANDY

Have 1 large flounder cleaned and filleted at the market, but save bones, head and trimmings. First make a bouillon in the following manner: To the bones, trimmings and head add 1 cup water, 1 clove garlic, 1 onion (cut up), 2 stalks celery, 3 sprigs parsley, ½ bay leaf, pinch of salt, and boil 15 minutes. Add 1 cup cider, simmer 7 minutes. Strain. Butter casserole and arrange fillets in it. Barely cover fish with strained bouillon and poach in moderate oven, 350°F., for 10 minutes. Remove from oven, carefully drain off bouillon into saucepan. Cover casserole to keep fish warm.

Blend 1 tablespoon flour with a little cold water to make a smooth paste. Stir into hot bouillon and cook a few minutes, stirring constantly. Beat 2 egg yolks slightly with 1 tablespoon milk. Add hot bouillon to egg yolks gradually. Pour this sauce over fish and put under broiler long enough to color a little and set the egg. Now it is ready to serve. On special occasions you can add a few cooked shrimp or cooked mushrooms to sauce before putting under broiler.

SATURDAY LUNCH

Buckwheat Cakes With Maple Sirup
Beverage
(No dessert necessary.)

SATURDAY DINNER

Cold Fillet of Sole Normandy
(Served like a crab-meat cocktail.)
Tomato-Cocktail Sauce
Baked Ham Scalloped Potatoes
Broccoli
Apples With Cheese (Liederkranz)
Beverage

SUNDAY LUNCH

Scrambled Eggs
With Bits of Leftover Ham
Toast
Danish Pudding
(I use the packaged product which has a combination of currant and raspberry flavors.)
Beverage

SUNDAY DINNER

Lentil Soup (made with ham bone)
Roast Duck — Applesauce
Brown Rice Peas
Mixed Green Salad
*Trifle

TRIFLE

Make or buy a plain layer cake. (Stale cake may be used and is even better.) Break cake into pieces, or split layers. Moisten with fruit juice or sherry. In a glass dish or casserole arrange alternate layers of cake, boiled custard (vanilla pudding may be used) and shredded almonds (optional). Dot with currant jelly. Top with sweetened whipped cream. Decorate with shredded almonds. Put in refrigerator until ready to serve.

THE END

"Imogene, NOT you! How could you!"

Lashed to the Kitchen sink?

Don't let a crusty broiler get you! Don't scrub away at caked-on grease with a slipsy dishrag! Use a square metal-fiber Brillo pad! Fast! Easy!

Shine pans easy with BRILLO

Brillo is tops at cleaning grimy pots and pans. A sturdy Brillo pad-with-soap whisks off every stubborn speck of cooked-on food and greasy scorch. Leaves grimy pans clean as a whistle —and shining! Wonderful for aluminums! Use Brillo every day to keep 'em gleaming!

There's jeweler's polish in BRILLO!

Brillo makes your pots and pans sparkle like new—bright as the day you bought 'em! Why? Because Brillo's special-formula soap contains shine ingredients that jewelers use to polish precious metals!

★ RED box—soap-filled pads
★ GREEN box—pads and cake soap

Shines aluminum fast!

M-M-GOOD! FRESH!

Kellogg's CORN FLAKES

The ORIGINAL W.K. Kellogg

Kellogg's CORN FLAKES

Fresher! Crisper! Grand!

That's why more folks go for dee-licious Kellogg's Corn Flakes! Good nourishment for you, too. Get this all-time favorite in Regular or Family Size Packages.

Choose the one you love the best:
Kellogg's Corn Flakes, Pep, Rice Krispies, Bran Flakes, Shredded Wheat, Krumbles, Corn-Soya.

CORN FLAKES...famous favorite in Kellogg's VARIETY PACKAGE!

Choose your own better breakfast from Kellogg's delicious VARIETY PACKAGE. 10 generous boxes. Your pick of nourishing wheat, corn, soya, or rice—flaked, shredded or popped! ALL KELLOGG-FRESH! All help breakfast become the hearty meal you need. So change to VARIETY PACKAGE—the most popular assortment of all, because . . .

Kellogg's

MOTHER KNOWS BEST!

HOUSE OF STORM

(Continued from Page 35)

ıded by limits which were defined and accustomed, the indefinable nature of tropics? The lush, rapid green growth, warm moist air, the fine salt spray—all led to resist such things as houses and s. So iron grew rusty, brass corroded, ors were blotted with misty shadows, d rotted and machinery fell into mysteri- disrepair overnight.

ıe had been struck with a sense of that lthy power with her first glimpse of don Gates. She had already seen pictures ıe place. Roy had had them; her father looked at them approvingly; had he ı guessed, with the prescience of ap- ıching death, that it was to be a safe and py harbor for the daughter he knew then vas going to leave?

: was only when one lived at the planta- that one began to see small obstinate ks, not of neglect—no one could have e pride in their home than Roy and Au- ı Beadon—but of heat and wind and rain rust . . . of, in brief, the tropics.

he must get on with her letter; she must, eed, get to the real reason for writing that er. She took up her pen again, wrote, ıd now I have a surprise for you. Roy and re going to be married," and paused. 'erhaps it would not be such a surprise! remembered Aunt Honoria's telegram:

RGE YOU ACCEPT INVITATION BEADON AND. BEST POSSIBLE THING FOR YOU T NOW WOULD BE LONG VISIT CARIB- AN. YOUR AFFECTIONATE AUNT.

Nonie smiled. Aunt Honoria had already, ıost in so many words, given this mar- ge her blessing. This marriage? Her mar- ge. On Wednesday.

The room seemed suddenly too shadowy, sed in and breathless; she rose abruptly d went to the window, where she un- ched the heavy shutters.

A shallow balcony was outside, with pur- bougainvillaea twining luxuriantly around coral-rock balustrade. The sea lay on the ıer side of the house; Roy's room faced that y with its wide windows opening upon the ı deck which was the first-floor-veranda of, and Aurelia's lay at the end of the cor- or, also overlooking the sea. Nonie's room s the largest guest room, and from its bal- ıy there was a view of green lawns and rlet hibiscus and yellow cannas, and the nding white driveway that led out of sight tween thick green hedges toward the en- ınce gates. Beyond the near-by greens ere was a glimpse of misty blue hills, and yond them, on the horizon, a rim of hazy ht marking the meeting of sky and sea.

HE light and air dispelled the shut-in feel- g of the room; she stood for a moment, inking of her unfinished letter. Phrases nt through her mind:

Perhaps it will not be such a surprise, dar- ng; long visit Caribbean, indeed! A long visit the Beadons, you meant, you darling; long ough for a marriage to come of it; but it dn't need a long visit, dear little aunt! It ppened on the boat coming down from New ork; he asked me then to marry him and I id yes. I am a lucky girl. Roy is everything rybody would want in a husband; he's hand- me and intelligent and dignified and sophis- cated all at once; he's got plenty of money, so ine doesn't make any difference. I think my ther would have wanted me to be his wife. The land is beautiful and so is the house; Aurelia as been kindness itself. So you needn't worry bout your orphaned niece ever. Roy and I are be married next Wednesday.

Well, she couldn't say all that. But she'd o back now into her room and finish her letter.

It was a large room with a soft green tiled oor and high ceiling. The great pearwood rmoire almost touched the ceiling; the bed ad an enormous canopy from which mos- uito netting fell like a rather limp and un- ashionable wraith. She sat down at the able, but, again as she began to write, a mul- itude of things she wanted to say crowded nto her mind:

My wedding dress has come; it's white with lace and a pink hat. . . . The dress has a tight basquelike top and I'll wear mother's pearls; I've sent to the lawyers for them. They ought to be here by now. I hope they are not lost, and I didn't write sooner because life has been so full. But I wish you could be here.

She bent over the white note paper and wrote, "I'm going to see the lawyer about business things, my will and all that. Since there was no reason to wait, we decided to be married very soon—next Wednesday, in fact. It will be a small wedding, of course; there are not many people here: the vicar and his wife; the doctor—that's Doctor Riordan, who sees to everybody; Lydia Bassett ——"

She paused, seeing Lydia, thinking, That's Mrs. Bassett; she's a widow; she's an old friend of Roy's and Aurelia's; she's very beautiful with her red mouth and coppery hair and vigorous graceful body; she doesn't like me, but she's very polite, too polite. Lydia Bassett.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Lily of Dolsero

By Vincent McHugh

Here come Jinny with her bride clothes on,
Here come Jinny with a rose in her hair;
Bird was singin' in the tamarack tree
And the night was almost gone.

Here come Jinny so gentle and brown,
Woman a man would fight to see,
All dressed up with her bride clothes
on,
Ridin' down slow past the tamarack tree.

If ever I had a heart for Jin
I told no woman an' no man
knowed,
Throwed my saddle onto my roan
An' I rode where the cold winds
blowed.

An' I rode where the cold winds
blowed.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

She wrote, "The Shaws will be there too. That is Miss Hermione Shaw, who owns and operates Middle Road plantation, adjoining Roy's plantation, and her nephew, Jim Shaw." She hesitated again, but then went on, "Oh, yes, and Major Fenby will be there—he is Hermione's factor, a retired army officer and a dear; and the magistrate who lives in the village, Seabury Jenkins. And of course the house servants, and Roy's overseer, Smithson. Darling, this just about comprises our island society! But I like it, and it is a sensible marriage, a rational marriage, we are the best of friends. So we'll be very happy."

So we'll be very happy. Except—a thought touched her lightly, brushed past her as if it were a bird and had wings: Did she really want to be happy that way?

Well, that was nonsense too; that was a flight of the most erratic fancy; as purposeless, as willful as, indeed, the flight of a bird. She'd think no more of that.

From the balcony she could see the driveway that led, winding between tall hedges, to the big, square coral-rock gates which gave Beadon Gates its name. Now briefly through a space in the hedges she saw a man, walking rapidly along. A man with a steady swing in his walk, a steady poise to his solid shoulders; his face from there was blunt-looking and foreshortened and brown; his hair was black and crisp. It was Jim Shaw, and he carried a traveling bag and a raincoat and instead of his usual sport shirt and shorts wore a gray city suit.

Jim! Where was he going?

Obviously, wherever he was going he was coming there, to the house, first, and Roy was out somewhere on the plantation and Aurelia was asleep. Nonie turned quickly inside her room and stopped for an instant to look at herself in the mirror over the dressing table.

HER hair was dark brown; the sea air and the gentle humidity of the tropics made it softer and, somehow, darker. She looked at her face rather scrutinizingly; just a face, of course: blue eyes that were rather good, she'd always thought, candidly, dark blue with black eyelashes; regular features; nothing wrong with her face, nothing particularly beautiful about it either. She picked up lipstick and leaned nearer the mirror. Just an ordinary face. Except all at once it was extraordinary.

She stopped, struck with that unusualness; what exactly was different? The same face she'd always seen in a mirror; the same nose, same shape, same chin, same ——

She couldn't—indeed, she wouldn't—analyze that difference in her face, but she did know that Roy Beadon's bride ought not to look like that, just then. Because Jim Shaw was there, because she had seen him come; because she was going down now to meet him.

A happy marriage; that was what her marriage to Roy was to be.

Again a thought touched her like the fan of tiny wings against her cheek: Was that the kind of happiness she wanted? She waited another moment and then turned.

Jim Shaw was waiting on the veranda. He had set his bag down on a chair and dropped his coat over it and was wiping his face with his handkerchief; he heard her at the door and turned quickly.

"Nonie!"

Seen from there, on a level, or rather looking up, for he was as tall as Roy, his face was angular and determined and, just then, white under the suntan. His gray eyes were as hard as agates and looked very unlike Jim.

She went to him quickly. "Jim, what's wrong?"

The hard bright look in his eyes was anger. "I'm leaving, Nonie."

"Leaving!"

"I've had it out with Hermione. I want to get to Cienfuegos and catch the night plane for New York."

"When are you coming back?"

"I'm not coming back." His mouth closed tight and hard too.

Not like Jim, she thought again. What had Hermione Shaw done? She said rather helplessly, "Sit down, Jim. Will you have a drink? I'll ring for Jebe."

"No, thanks. I only want to see Roy before I leave. And you, of course."

"Sit down, then. I'll send for Roy."

"All right. Thanks." He dropped into one of the deep wicker chairs, stretched out his long legs, and reached for a cigarette.

She went to the door and the bell inside it. But Roy was in the village, Jebe told her.

"When will he be back? Mr. Shaw is here."

Jebe wasn't sure.

"I'll wait," Jim said. "I want to tell him." He was smoking with an effect of calm, but his eyes were still hard and cold with anger.

She went to the enormous hassock beside him. "Jim, can you tell me? What happened?"

He looked at her. "Hermione is my aunt. And if I don't get out of here I'll kill her."

"Jim!"

His eyes softened a little. He leaned over, put his hand lightly on her arm. "Don't look so worried, Nonie. It was in the cards. I'll get away from here and forget the whole thing."

She didn't speak for an instant, and for an absurd reason, and that was a sudden strong awareness of his hand upon her arm.

French's

makes hamburgers

taste heavenly!

FREE RECIPE BOOK

New recipe book, "Dining Delights," illustrated in full color. Send name and address to The R. T. French Co., 1515 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y., for free copy.

SMOOTHER—CREAMIER!

Largest selling prepared mustard in U.S.A. today

Also made in Canada

He moved his hand suddenly away from her. And mysteriously she seemed to know that his swift move toward an ash tray, pulling it near him, as if the ash tray were all at once the most important thing in his consciousness, was assumed.

But she couldn't have known that, she thought in confusion. Her face felt hot and pink, and she felt like a schoolgirl. She, Nonie Hovenden—so soon to be Mrs. Royal Beadon, dignified and settled. Mrs. Royal Beadon. Next Wednesday. She linked her hands around her white-clad knee, and could still feel the touch of that brown hand.

Jim said suddenly, "I've got several things to forget. It's just as well I'm leaving."

A long wave rolled in along the rocks below and slowly, sighing, washed out again.

"What have you to forget, Jim?"

He glanced at her quickly, a question in his eyes. "I don't think you meant to ask that. I might tell you."

No; she hadn't meant to ask that. She looked down at her hands and Jim said:

"The wedding's on Wednesday, isn't it? Roy's lucky."

Another long wave washed in against the rocks and slowly out, so even if she had said anything perhaps Jim wouldn't have heard it. But he went on, speaking rather quickly:

"You're lucky too. Roy's a good guy. He's certainly been a good friend to me! I've been here almost a year, you know, waiting for Hermione to do something definite about the plantation and me."

She looked up at him then and he was looking out to sea, so she suddenly felt more at ease, as if she could talk; she said:

"Something definite? I thought that she was going to turn over the management of the plantation to you."

The hard, icy look came back. "I thought so too. I've always loved the place. And Hermione knows it!"

"But then—but why ——"

"That's where she's got me," Jim said tersely. "That's her hold."

"Her hold!"

He turned to look at her directly. "You don't know Hermione, do you?" He didn't wait for a reply, but went on quickly: "I do know her, so I knew the chance I was taking when I came to Middle Road."

"I thought she was going to give up the active management; I thought that's why she wanted you to come. Roy said she needs you. He says she's not getting the most out of the plantation."

"Roy's right. At least I think so. But I can't hang around any longer doing nothing, learning nothing. Hands tied by Hermione at every turn. I've been here for a year; in another year I'd be a sort of errand boy, a pensioner on her bounty, her nephew sitting around waiting for her to die. No. I'm going now, while I can."

"But you don't want to leave, Jim. It's your home; it will belong to you."

He smoked for a moment, his eyes narrowed; then he said more quietly, without the icy note of anger, "I hate to go, of course. I can see what could be made of Middle Road. Roy would help me; we thought we'd join forces, a real partnership, using the same equipment, using modern methods, getting more cane land under cultivation. Roy knows the whole setup and I want to be a planter. I—there's a satisfaction about making the soil yield; something deep and real and . . . I can't explain it, but that's w I wanted to do. And I love Middle R But I have to save my own soul too. I c come back as long as Hermione is there, by the time the property comes to me it be too late. So I've got to forget it." He loo at her quickly, and added, "I'm bee plenty. But that's that. I'll say no more. I'm sorry I'll not be at the wedding Wed day."

Suddenly the very air between them formal and strained. Her voice soun strained, too, and unfriendly, "I'm s too."

But she wasn't sorry. She was glad; was glad he wouldn't be sitting there wa ing her in her white dress and pink hat pearls, becoming Roy's wife. She was and thankful that he wouldn't be there.

The force of that thankfulness was as expected and as strong as one of the wa of the sea below them, and like a wav swept her up off the hassock, across to table, her back turned to Jim.

What was she thinking about! What tastic thing had happened! Her hands w out to the table edge and she looked at t with consternat for they were tr bling. Jim was ing away; he never going to c back so long as mione was alive managed Mi Road. And Nonie Hovende soon to be N Beadon, was tha ful. Therefore heart must pound like that her throat.

A car came r idly up the dri way, stopped, Jim said, "Th Roy."

That hadn't b what he was go to say; and hadn't intended. thought, to m merely to anot chair and lean th against it.

"Yes," she sa "Yes, that must Roy." Her vo was as flat and taut as a violin string, it wasn't tuned right; it was all out of tu in fact, all wrong, and Jim knew it.

She wouldn't look at him. And still, odd she could see every feature, every line hollow and shadow of his face. And then was running up the steps. As if she w hurrying from danger, she moved across veranda to meet him. Roy, who was going be her husband.

Royal Beadon of Beadon Island looked actly as if he had been born to be exac that; which of course was true. His fat had lived all his life on Beadon Island; island had taken its name from his gra father, the first Royal Beadon to come from England and settle there.

He was a tall man, with big bones an dignity and bearing which was both perfec sincere and imposing. At fifty-odd his h was iron-gray and he wore gold-framed e glasses, but there was still about him an of leashed strength, as if he might fight w or sail ships or shoot lions; in fact, of cour he had spent most of his life running the pl tation, living on the island which he lov

Nonie's father had been one of Roy's cl est friends; they had met long ago, when father, in one of a lavish succession of yach anchored off Beadon Island to take refu from a storm, had stayed to become R Beadon's guest and friend.

And now she, Nonie, was taking refu from a storm, in much the same way, exce her storm was one of grief and loneliness a her refuge was Roy's home for the rest of l life. Something like guilt touched her wi quick fingers; she went to Roy and link

NEXT MONTH

JESSE STUART'S troubles as a teacher in Lonesome Valley began when a 20-year-old first-grade pupil caught him alone. "I don't like you. I don't like teachers," he said. "I aim to whip you right where you stand. It's the same place where I whipped your sister!"

I was nearly out of breath. My hands ached. My heart pounded. If this was teaching school ——

Jesse Stuart tells his true story of finding love and satisfaction as a young man in

The Thread That Runs So True

Complete in the May Journal

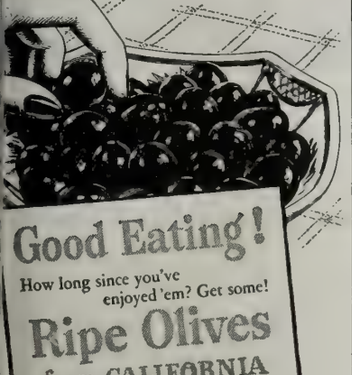
Condensed from the book soon to be published by Chas. Scribner's Sons.

...y Hatlo

...rs. Hatlo live in ... California, where ...latlo creates ...y cartoons ... over by ...



say Mr. & Mrs. Hatlo—

This California custom of the Olive Bowl is a wonderful idea!"

WE THINK YOU'LL like this ...ant California custom. There's ...asier way to say 'welcome' ... friends call...and it's an equally ...dea when just the family gathers. ...ou simply fill up a bowl or two ... your favorite brand of California ...olives—and set them out where ... can help themselves! Try it...and ... to the compliments."

...pe olives from California fill an ...ed place in the diet. Among other food ..., California ripe olives offer you ...shing protein...and they're a source ...tamin A and iron. But the reason ...rnia ripe olives are famed throughout ...orld is FLAVOR!

...e into one. Here's plump, meaty ...ness. Here's good eating. Have another ...joy all you want! (Yes, even if you're ...lorie-counter." For 8 to 10 California ...olives just about equal 100 calories.)

Good Eating!

How long since you've enjoyed 'em? Get some!

Ripe Olives from CALIFORNIA

her arm through his, as if reassuring herself by the gesture and its implied closeness: Roy's wife, next Wednesday.

But the island grapevine was swift; Roy must have heard already about Jim and Hermione. He was obviously both troubled and angry. He'd been for the mail—he put a stack of magazines and letters on the table, and said to Jim, "I hoped you'd be here."

"You've heard, then!"

"I met Dick Fenby. Hermione told him."

"It had to come sooner or later."

Roy sat down and looked at Jim.

But I won't, thought Nonie. I won't look at Jim. He's standing there, outlined against the blue sea, looking younger somehow as he always does when he's with Roy, and very tall and brown, and his gray eyes very steady, and I'll not look at him. She sat down again near Roy, linking her hands together around her knee. This time Wednesday there would be a ring on one of those hands. There was, indeed, already a ring, a sapphire set with diamonds, an old ring which had belonged to Roy's mother and then to Aurelia. She turned it and Roy said slowly:

"So you're leaving."

"I have to, Roy. I thought you might take me over to Elbow in the motorboat. I can get the mail boat there, and the night plane from Cienfuegos."

Roy thought for a moment. "Well, perhaps you're right to go. Hermy's not treated you as she promised to do. Why are you leaving tonight, though?"

"Oh, that! It's what precipitated the thing. A job."

"Job? For you? Where?"

"My old job. In New York. I can have it back again. The firm cabled me this morning. I've known, especially lately, that I'd have to have an understanding with Hermy. This gave me the chance."

Roy looked out across the sea and drummed his fingers on the arm of his chair. "Do you want to leave Beadon Island, Jim?"

There was a little silence; Nonie turned the ring on her finger, around and around.

"Yes, I think it's best," Jim said finally, his voice distant and guarded.

Jim was going; she'd be Mrs. Royal Beadon for years and years before she saw him again. So she'd forget the momentary fancy that had seemed to hover in the air between them that hot, tropical afternoon.

Roy said slowly, "Perhaps you're right."

"I've got to have a job, Roy. I can't sit around, supported by a woman." There was an edge in his words that made them sound like a quotation.

Roy said sharply, "Did Hermione say that? She promised to give you a job when she asked you to come."

Jim said in a kind of burst, "I didn't want Dick's job. He's a good factor when Hermione lets him alone. Or he used to be, and still could be. But I had to have a job!"

"I know," Roy said. "Hermione . . . well, she'd make another Dick Fenby of you. Yes, you'd better go. What about money? She'd never give you plane fare."

"I was going to ask you for a loan."

Roy laughed, getting out his billfold, extracting notes from it. "That ought to be enough."

"It's more than enough, two hundred. Thanks, Roy."

"Hermy keeps you right down to bedrock in the matter of cash, doesn't she?"

"I'll be all right as soon as I get to New York."

"It's lucky for you she can't touch the trust fund! Now then—we'll have to get you to Elbow." Roy looked at the watch strapped on his brown, strong wrist. "You'll have to get under way in a hurry, Jim. The mail boat leaves at four; there's barely time to run over to Elbow. And I . . . well, now let me see what I can do."

"Oh, look here, Roy, you're busy. You needn't take me. Somebody else can go along and bring the boat back. I don't want you to ——"

"Oh, it's all right. I only had to do some telephoning about a shipment of sugar. I can do it tomorrow."

(Continued on Page 131)

when you need it most

When you're busy elsewhere A new automatic Gas range turns on, cooks entire oven meal and turns off by itself!

When you're in a hurry Top burners, oven, broiler, light to any exact heat you want instantly—automatically!

When you cook "to order" Only smokeless flame broiling caters to every taste from rare-and-juicy to done-through!

When you bake in batches Air-circulated Gas ovens bake 4 cake-layers at once with the same uniform texture!

When you have company Guests are impressed with the cleanliness and coolness of a smart new insulated Gas range!

When you count pennies New Gas ranges cost less to buy, maintain, operate than any other automatic ranges!

Special occasion—or just plain wonderful food every day—a new Gas range is always the best that money can buy. This new ROPER "CP" Gas range tells you why . . . as do all the other famous "makes" built to "CP" standards now at your Gas company or appliance store. Choose the one that suits your family. And for the next must in your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen"* get a Servel Gas refrigerator!

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

©CERT. MARK, AMER. GAS ASSOC., INC.

This  is your Early Spring Garden!

No spading, no planting, no weeding. All you do is "pick" your favorite fruits and vegetables. And what fruits and vegetables! No runt-size, lack-flavor produce. Everything you select is succulent, crisp, ripe and just right for your table. That's what you get when you make the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Department of your A&P Super Market your Spring Garden.

A&P has trained on-the-spot buyers following the sun, selecting top crops where the best things grow. And all they choose for A&P is freshness controlled from harvest time to the time you purchase it. Speedy transportation, scientific refrigeration and handling, guarantee as near to fresh-picked goodness as possible. Yet, because A&P sells more products of America's gardens, orchards and vineyards than any other grocer, and is famously efficient, prices at your A&P always spell dependable value.

You see what you get, know what you pay. Fruits and vegetables, like everything else A&P displays for sale, are plainly price-tagged. And scales are placed to let you satisfy yourself with weights.

You pick what looks best to YOU when you buy fruits and tables at your A&P. But if you wish help with your selectio want information or advice, A&P people are ready to serv

A&P

1859 - 1949

90th YEAR OF SERVICE

A&P Super Markets

IS THERE SOMETHING WE ARE MISSING?

Have you an idea or two as to what more we can do to make shopping at your A&P more pleasant and convenient? If you have, please tell us. We want to make A&P's everywhere the finest food stores . . . and you can help. Address: CUSTOMER RELATIONS DEPARTMENT, A&P Food Stores, Graybar Bldg., N. Y. 17, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 129)

e said, twisting her ring, "I'll take Elbow."

as said and she could not retract it; by at once agreed. "Good. You know it and you know the course, all right. that, Jim?"

before Jim could answer, before Roy pped speaking really, a car came slithtpidly along the driveway. It stopped, door banged and Jim said, "It's !" His eyes were like gray ice.

said, "I think you're right, Jim. like her. Look here!" He sat up. tell her I gave you plane fare."

'll know I got it somewhere."

won't know I gave it to you. I have to this island!"

gave a short laugh that wasn't a "All right."

rose and started across the veranda. y! We thought it might be you."

nione Shaw was walking up the steps. pearance was composed and quiet, but lermione was always composed and nd very certain of herself.

certainty and composure, and the s of a rather feverish, fine-drawn had been Nonie's main impression mione Shaw; she looked at her now eeper attentiveness, seeing the fine lines in Hermione's camellia-white ne cruelly aq...ne nose, the thin yet mouth. There was a curious look of in her face, as if some inward fire consuming the of beauty and only its shell. aps that fire, too, ted for a kind hungry look in outh and eyes. aid, however, ly, with a smile, , Roy . . . . . I thought t find you here, said something a chair, a drink, it; and, smiling, one interrupted: ank you, Roy. You must know why I hope you've persuaded Jim not to do ng on an impulse."

looked hot and uncomfortable. Jim I've got to get back to New York, if what you mean, Hermione."

e was no change in Hermione's face; pulse along her temple seemed to harder. She said, still smiling, "Youth npatient. Please think a little, Jim. ill you do if the job doesn't work out?" will," Jim said shortly.

eyebrows lifted a little. "You were isfied with it before you came to Mid- ad. That's why you came here."

ame to Middle Road because ——" Jim angrily and then checked himself. know why I came!"

eyes were like gray jewels. "Were you o say because I asked you to come? I course. I thought you'd be happy 'm sorry—sorrier than I can possibly o discover that you are bored and dis- ted. I realize that it must seem dull to sugar plantation is only a sugar plan- Middle Road is like every other; I'm ou have tired of it, but ——" very white, burst out, "I'm not tired ldle Road. I love Middle Road," and topped as if he would not give her the ction of showing how her words cut.

saw it, though; her eyes seemed r and rather pleased. "Then why Jim? The plantation is there and you of help to me," said Hermione in the ng, indulgent voice she would have coax a child. "Just as soon as you get med to the plantation there'll be all f things you can help us with."

picked up his bag and looked at Roy. etter be getting along."

mione's smile seemed suddenly an nt and ruthless line, not a smile at all. what about money? Oh, I see. Roy t to you!" She did not so much as glance at Roy, but Roy got out his handkerchief and wiped his forehead. Hermione said, coaxing, "Now, Jim dear, I don't object to supporting you. You can help me with—oh, with errands, all sorts of things. You play a very good bridge game. But really, you mustn't behave like a child in a tantrum. What will Roy think of you? What will Nonie think?"

Roy said suddenly, "Lay off, Hermione."

And Jim said with those agate-hard eyes blazing from his white face, very distinctly, very deliberately, "If I don't leave, Hermione, I'll kill you."

Hermione laughed.

Roy said quickly, "You'd better go, Jim.... Nonie, my dear, are you sure you'll be all right? I can manage to take him, you know."

"I'll be all right, Roy. I know the boat." How quickly again she spoke; how certainly, as if she had planned it!

SHE, and Jim with his bag and coat, and Roy were hurrying across the veranda, down the steps. Jim did not look back at Hermione, and she stood still and unruffled with the red smile on her face as if it had been painted there.

They went quickly down the path, without speaking. Roy led the way; at the end of the path a narrow flight of steps went down to the pier where a small utility cruiser rocked gently in the wash of the waves.

"There's plenty of gas in the tank," Roy said. "In with you! I'll cast off."

Jim dropped his bag and coat into the boat and turned to Roy, putting out his hand. "Thank you, Roy. Thank you for everything you've done for me. I'm sorry things have turned out this way."

"Well, well! Hermy's the way she is; can't be helped. You'll have to hurry to make the mail boat. Good luck."

The two men shook hands briefly; Jim got down into the boat and put up his hands toward Nonie, but Roy, holding her strongly, helped her down, cast a quick and weatherwise glance over the placid water and sky, nodded reassuringly and smiled.

Jim started the engine with a loud roar of the exhaust which brought Hermione to the veranda railing to watch. Roy cast off and tossed the line into the boat behind them, and waved. The rhythm of the motor steadied, Jim turned the wheel slowly and they were headed away from Beadon Island. The sea was blue and gold, glittering with light; the sky clear blue above.

Nonie glanced back. Roy was going up toward the house. Hermione's slim figure was moving rather quickly but still arrogantly across the veranda to meet him.

Spray flashed in wide glittering arcs on either side as the boat turned in a long curve.

"Well," Jim said abruptly, "that's good-by to Beadon Island."

She looked at him quickly; the deadly white look of anger had left his face, but he was still shaken with it; his voice sounded tired and rough. "Sometime you'll come back."

He shook his head. "Not for a long time. Probably never."

"But you are Hermione's only relative. If anything happened to her ——" Eventually he'd have to come back to manage Middle Road; he'd live on the island, a neighbor and friend of Royal Beadon.

He was shaking his head again. "By that time it'll be too late for me to make the plantation my job and my life. No, this is the end of Middle Road for me."

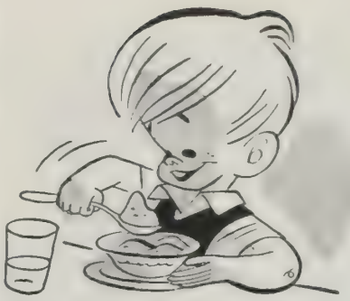
"But that was why she asked you to come! It isn't fair to treat you like this."

"Oh, well, that's in the past. I ought not to have let her get under my skin like that. Of course it's true, everything she said. I haven't any money. I haven't a cent. And everything is hers as long as she lives."

"But it's your right ——"

In a game of hypothetical questions, Lord Beaverbrook asked a visiting American actress, "Would you live with a stranger if he paid you a million pounds?"

"Yes," she answered.



"Or if he paid you five pounds?"

"Five pounds!" sputtered the indignant beauty. "What do you think I am?"

"We have established that," replied Beaverbrook. "Now we are determining the degree."

Drink a refreshing glass of Mott's Apple Juice . . .

Spoon up that fresh deliciousness of Mott's Apple Sauce . . .

Spread the bread thick with luscious Mott's Jellies . . .

Toss your salads with grand and mellow Mott's Vinegars.

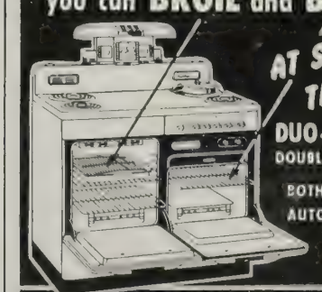
You'll love all of

MOTT'S APPLE PRODUCTS

Everything grand from Appleland!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

He'll Say Hamburgers taste better with



A·1

Sauce—the dash that makes the dish!

FREE—"Cooking for a Man." Write Dept. LHJ, G.F. Heublein & Bro., Inc., Hartford, Conn.

with Presteline you can BROIL and BAKE AT SAME TIME

DUO-MATIC DOUBLE OVENS BOTH FULLY AUTOMATIC

TAKE THE TIME See Presteline

PRESTELINE, 666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE, CHICAGO 11

Delicious Homemade Hot Rolls

Every Time

No Experience Needed with the New

Pillsbury HOT ROLL MIX (WITH YEAST)

Now, you can bake 'em to your heart's delight—homemade clover-leafs, cinnamon rolls, coffee cakes—all your favorites! Tender, light with Pillsbury Hot Roll Mix. Just add water to the yeast, then add mix. Easy! Ann Pillsbury's directions on the package.

You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Ann Pillsbury has developed a new hot roll mix in her kitchen to save you time in your kitchen, and give you perfect results every time.

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Save Pillsbury Extra Value Coupons

Get valuable articles at real savings on Pillsbury coupon plan. Write for free booklet to PILLSBURY, Box 150, Minneapolis, Minn.

"No. Actually and legally it isn't. And she did far more for me than she'd have to do; she sent me to school, paid for everything up to the time I went into the Navy. When I came out I got a job. I'm an engineer; it's what I'm going back to, and glad of the chance. Give me a cigarette, will you, Nonie? There are some in the pocket of my coat."

She got up on her knees on the slippery leather cushion, steadying herself with one hand on Jim's shoulder. The boat lurched a little as it headed into a wave and she swayed.

Jim caught her. "Steady."

"Thanks." She clutched quickly at the back of the seat, aware—too strongly aware—again of his nearness. Holding to the seat, she fumbled into the pocket of his topcoat; there was something heavy and sagging, too heavy to be a package of cigarettes; her fingers touched metal and she cried, "Why, Jim, there's a gun!"

"It's mine. Try the other pocket."

She pulled the coat around, swaying again with the boat. Everybody on the island probably had a gun. The touch of the metal had been startling merely because it was there, because it was unexpected. She found the cigarettes, and he took one.

"Thanks. It's funny what a woman like Hermione can do to people. She—well, that's beside the point. Dick can't help himself now, but I can; I'm no worse off than I was a year ago. I'll have my profession and a job."

And you'll never come back to Beadon Island, Nonie thought, with a feeling of desolation. You'll forget the island, you'll forget me . . . except that I'll be your friend's wife.

She must not let such thoughts enter her mind; she must not let them take shape in the silence between them! She must talk, say anything, but talk! She said rather desperately, "I'm new to the island; things that everybody knows I don't know. I know that Hermione is your father's sister and that she has the use of a trust fund and Middle Road. But that's all."

Jim replied promptly, almost eagerly. Did he, too, welcome words? "It's simple," Jim said. "My grandfather made two marriages, you see; Hermione was the child of the first marriage, my father was of the second. He died when I was a child. Hermione was the logical person to see to my mother and me; my mother was a delicate, feminine little thing. She died during the war; I was in the South Pacific. I didn't know it until three weeks afterward."

She was listening now, wanting to hear, wanting to know. What had his life been . . . what had he thought and felt? How little time there was! So much to ask, so much to know.

He said, suddenly terse, "Well, my g father's money was put into a trust; M Road is part of it. Hermione can use t come as she pleases. My grandfathe absolute faith in her. Why shouldn't he she did see to my mother and me."

"Have you always lived at Middle R Nonie asked.

"No," Jim said shortly. "Oh, it's ho me. But my mother and Hermione —— mouth closed tightly again.

But silence between them was dang silence seemed almost to speak its ow reckless language. She said with a ki breathlessness, snatching at something "Poor Dick Fenby!"

The cold, still anger in Jim's face deep "He can't get away now. In a queer wa half in love with her—or was, once. Her wouldn't have him; yet she keeps him working for her, under her thumb. Sh born bully; she'd never fall in love with body—she couldn't. Dick can't get But I can. . . . We ought to sight E I wonder what time it is."

She was wearing the tiny, extrav watch that her gaily extravagant fathe given her the first time she went aw school; she looked at the small circle. "(ter to four," she told him. And as the e surged ahead with a sudden rush she c her hair back away from her face and sea for Elbow Beach.

It loomed up ahead of them, a green shadow, lying flat upon the water, so looked farther away than it actually There was Elbow; and invisible now waiting, was the mail boat which would Jim to the plane, away from Beadon I and out of her life in, at most, fifteen mi

She wanted to go with him.

It was an impulse so strong and shar it was like a physical compulsion; it se impossible to deny, and she must deny once, finally, forever. She'd say goo hurriedly, briefly; she'd turn the motor and go back to Beadon Island, ste through the blue water. Back to Royal don and a wedding on Wednesday. An her body clamored, bidding her to go with

Jim said suddenly, "I wish you were ing with me."

"You . . . wish ——" she began inc ently and stopped. She would not loo him, yet she could see his face against blue water, his straight nose and chin his dark eyebrows drawn together, the c of his cheekbone, his narrowed eyes.

And then he said, "Look here, Nonie. going to be impertinent. But I have to k Are you happy about your marriage?"

(Continued on Page 134)

"I only wish my hair was as easy to fix with a hairpin!"

Mealtime Adventures

By Beatrice Cooke

April's back! There's a bright touch of spring! And now family meals ask a bright touch, too. So let me suggest a dinner that's joyously different. Something delicious, gay and altogether delightful! This:

La Choy Chow Mein Spring Dinner

(Yield: 4 large portions. Cooking time: 15 min.)

¼ cup Meadow Gold Butter
¾ lb. lean pork, veal or beef cut in thin strips
1 cup onions, cut fine
1 tsp. salt
1/16 tsp. pepper
2 cups celery, cut fine
1½ cups hot water
1 can LaChoy Bean Sprouts (drained)

For flavoring and thickening

2 tbsp. cold water
2 tsp. LaChoy Sauce
2 tbsp. cornstarch
1 tsp. sugar

Melt butter in hot skillet. Add meat, stir and sear quickly (without browning or burning), add onions and fry 5 min. Add celery, salt, pepper and hot water. Cover, cook 5 min. Add drained LaChoy Bean Sprouts. Mix thoroughly and heat to boiling point. Combine and add flavoring and thickening ingredients. Cook one min. Serve piping hot with crisp LaChoy Noodles. Garnish with parsley, sliced green onions and slender strips of fried beaten egg.

In choosing the Bean Sprouts, I do suggest that you ask for LaChoy. For this brand, I know, is derived from the true Chinese Mung Bean. The specially delicate, tender sprouts are prepared in spotless American kitchens, by the LaChoy people—who've been the best-known makers of Chinese foods and Sauces for more than 25 years.

To Crown Your Easter Feast

Try this simple dessert: Cool, creamy-smooth Meadow Gold Ice Cream, topped with Chox Instant Hot Chocolate Sauce! Fits perfectly with any dinner because Meadow Gold to my mind, is the finest quality ice cream I ever put a spoon to. And Chox—which your grocer has—is a rich preparation and a thrifty one. For sugar and whole milk are already in it. To make Chox Hot Chocolate or Fudge Sauce, just add hot water according to directions on the box.

Yes—I've seen it myself in New York. Made of enamel and encrusted with thousands of diamonds, it was once presented to a Czarina of Russia as an Easter gift. A precious "egg," it's true. But when it comes to wonderful natural eggs, the richest imperial treasury can't buy finer, fresher, more truly delicious beauties than you can buy—at your own neighborhood food store! If you're sure to ask for Meadow Gold Select Grade A Eggs. For size, cleanness, and farm-fresh flavor, they're the finest I've ever found. Enjoy them, do . . . for every day and for your Happy Easter!

It's good morning in a glass—that's how I feel about Vegamato vegetable juice cocktail! Sparkling, ruby-red Vegamato gives the right start to a bright breakfast or any other meal. I like Vegamato because it tastes so different! Blends the vitamin-rich juices of 7 garden-fresh vegetables with the juice of real lemon . . . And the result is a flavor to waken the sleepiest appetite! Vegamato is wonderful for adding zip to cookery, too. This, for example:

Vegamato Sauce

(For spaghetti, meat loaf, meat balls, etc.)

¼ cup Meadow Gold Butter
¼ cup flour
Dash of powdered clove
1 tsp. minced onion
¼ tsp. salt
2 cups Vegamato

Melt butter over low heat. Add onion and saute until tender (not brown). Add flour, salt and cloves and stir until blended. Add Vegamato and cook until thickened, stirring constantly.

Try Vegamato! I promise that once you've tasted it—and cooked with it—you'll never want to go back to ordinary vegetable juices again.

Here's my tip for the month:

If you want butter that's especially delicate in flavor and fragrance try

Meadow Gold Butter...

the wonderful butter that's served in America's most famous eating places!

When you're buying butter, it's sensible to buy the best. To me, the best is Meadow Gold—so excellent in quality that it's served by some of the finest hotels and restaurants in the entire world! Did you know that it takes all the rich butterfat of 10 full quarts of milk to make a pound of Meadow Gold? What's more, in many localities Meadow Gold now comes specially wrapped in aluminum foil. Keeps its fine delicate flavor twice as long!

© 1949, Beatrice Foods Co.

Cheery Cherry on your budget

CHEERFUL CONTEMPORARY good living is reflected in this beautiful furniture. It is really two rooms in one—sophisticated and yet informal—and made to order for today's living.

It has the warmth and charm redolent of the Great Houses of the Old Dominion. Like the finest Americana in museums and historic homes, it is worked in the cabinet maker's dream wood, SOLID WILD CHERRY—which never ages, but mellows and becomes more lovely as the years go by.

The classic simplicity of design blends with every style and decor, and "mixes" with every wood.

Yet for all its grand look and the honest hand workmanship that makes it truly heirloom quality, the price is more than surprisingly low. All the pieces shown above—18 of them—cost only about $1500*, and individual pieces are proportionately low priced. *Approximate

WILLETT Wildwood CHERRY

America's largest maker of solid maple and cherry furniture for living room, dining room and bedroom.

CONSIDER H. WILLETT, INC., LOUISVILLE 11, KENTUCKY

(Continued from Page 132)

She tried to say it: Yes, yes, I'm happy. Of course I'm happy. But he turned and looked at her and she met his look fully, and all at once unsaid words were spoken, unadmitted facts acknowledged, a secret, sudden truth proclaimed. Jim's eyes darkened. Nonie thought wildly, I must stop this. I must look away, I must not tell him all these things.

Jim said in a rush, swiftly, as if he didn't mean to say it and couldn't stop his own words, "I meant that, Nonie. I wish you were coming with me."

She couldn't answer; yet all at once she did. "Jim," she stammered, "Jim," and began to cry. She couldn't stop crying; tears rained down her face

He said, "I love you, Nonie. I didn't mean to tell you. I've got to leave Beadon Island."

Sunlight flashed on something distinctly white at the end of the low-lying mass of greens and grays which was Elbow Beach; it was the mail boat, waiting for its appointed moment of departure . . . waiting for Jim.

He turned the wheel a little and they drove through one long wave and into its trough and for a few seconds Elbow Beach disappeared.

Jim said, "I didn't mean to tell you. But I'm going to. It happened the first time I saw you. Aurelia invited Hermy and Dick and me to dinner to meet you, the girl Roy was going to marry. Somebody said, 'Nonie, this is Jim Shaw.' I turned around and you were there, looking at me, smiling a little, and . . . and I fell in love with you. Just like that," Jim said. He threw his cigarette over into the wash of foam beside them. "Funny, isn't it?"

The tears on Nonie's face were still wet and she brushed them away with her hand. "No. It isn't funny. It happened to me too. Only I didn't know it until ——"

"Until when?" Jim cried. "Until when?"

"Until this afternoon. Until I was writing about my wedding, telling Aunt Honoria how happy I was going to be, and all at once I knew that wasn't happiness. And then I knew what would be happiness for me."

Jim said suddenly, "Nonie, does that mean . . . do you feel like this too?"

She knew as well as she had ever known anything in her life that then, just then, that moment was the most important one in her life. "Yes."

The boat dipped down into the trough of another long, slow swell of blue; again Elbow Beach disappeared and there were only Jim and herself and a world of blue and sparkling sea and sky.

Jim said, "Do you realize what this means? You're to marry Roy. The wedding is Wednesday. It's so soon—so soon."

Beadon Island was there; she was going back to it. And Elbow Beach lay ahead; they would be there in only a few moments now, and Jim would leave and she'd go back to Beadon Island. And a dress, a bride's dress that hung waiting for her.

JIM said, "Why didn't you wait?"

She knew exactly what he meant and she knew that he would understand her. "I thought it was right. I thought I loved him. I do love him—but not like this."

"This is it," Jim said. They reached the top of the long and lovely swell and there was Elbow Beach and it was so near that she could see the green tops of the palm trees, the white jetty and the boat. Jim saw it too. He turned the wheel still farther and said, "You can't marry Roy."

She whirled toward him, crying, "Oh, Jim. I have to! The wedding is Wednesday."

"You can't." His face was hard and brown and strained. "Look here. I hate it too. But, thank God, you are not actually married."

"Jim, I can't do that to Roy. I've got to go on with the wedding."

"I won't let you," Jim said. He turned and put his hand upon her own and held it hard. His face was very sober, his eyes grave. "I don't want to do this to Roy either. I know exactly what you meant when you said yo love him; and you owe him loyalty and trut It wouldn't be fair to marry him knowin you were not"—he hesitated, groping an in stant for words, and said—"not in love wit him. That's the difference between affectio and friendship and—and this. Between us His hand was warm and firm and curiousl familiar, as if she had known its touch an loved it for a long time. She wanted never t relinquish its hold; and in ten minutes, fiv minutes, she would have to do so. Jim said "I won't let you marry him."

An old man, when he looks ahead, is very sorry for his children; but they do not seem very sorry for themselves.

—DEAN INGE:
Our Present Discontents,
(Putnam & Co., Ltd.).

AND he wouldn't. There was something i his eyes, something in his face that had to b accepted and she did so, completely and wit a strange, deep contentment.

He took his hand away. The engine ha slowed; he was looking over his shoulder Suddenly she realized he was going to tur the boat, heading away from Elbow. Sh cried, "Jim, what are you doing? You'l have to hurry ——"

"We'll go back to Beadon Island. I'll tel Roy."

"Jim, no. Wait a moment! Let's think let's . . . oh, I don't know what to do."

Roy was so proud. So was Aurelia. An they had been so kind to her. All the island knew of the wedding; all the island—Roy' home. Roy's friends.

"No, Jim—no. Not this way. It's Roy I'm thinking of. No . . . wait." She was thinkin desperately, quickly, trying to find a cleare path. "Jim, listen. This is not the way. It' too—too public. Too sudden. I'll tell Roy I've got to face him myself."

He waited a moment the boat barely under way rocking with the waves "Yes," he said finally "yes, I see that. But nev ertheless ——"

"You must go on. Just as you had planned. There's your job; you've got to have that." But she had enough money for both of them, all the money they could possibly want! His job need not matter to them. She almost said so, and then she saw, swiftly, that that very fact made his job matter the more. She caught back those nearly uttered words and cried, "I'll tell him. Then I'll come."

"To New York?"

"To wherever you are."

It was right. She'd go back and tell Roy; Jim would go on to New York, on to his job, and then, soon, she would come.

The boat crashed through the waves and Jim said suddenly, "You've got to think about this, Nonie. I want you to have time too. Look at me." She was already looking when he turned to meet her eyes, storing up in her mind and memory every line and angle of his face. "I do love you—for always. I want you to marry me. I want you to think about it; it's happened so fast. Think about it, Nonie. And then come. Will you?"

There was again a sort of mist in her eyes; but this time it was happy, so happy that she let it stay, she let him see it as she would have let him see her heart. "Yes, Jim. I'll come."

"My darling," he said. "My darling."

Jim cut off their motor, and in spite of the muffled thump of the mail boat's engines it seemed suddenly remarkably quiet. The motorboat slid alongside the jetty; Jim stood and the boat rocked gently, quietly. He was leaning down now, his hands on her arms, tight and hard. The mail boat gave two hoarse little grunts which were warning whistles.

Jim said, "I hate to go. Nonie, Nonie ——"

She found her voice and cried, "Jim, hurry," and he pulled her up into his arms and kissed her and held her against him as if he would never let her go. Then he released her, jumped onto the jetty, pulled out his bag and coat.

"Be careful, going back."

"Yes, yes, Jim. You'll miss the boat—hurry."

"Good-by . . . good-by, darling."

(Continued on Page 136)

to enrich any home...traditional or modern...

nothing beautifies like carpets and rugs by magee makes a house a home

THE MAGEE CARPET COMPANY • MILLS: BLOOMSBURG, PA. • ILLUSTRATED IS "OVERTURE" AVAILABLE IN TWO PATTERNS, EACH IN SIX COLORS, 27 IN. AND 9 FT. WIDTHS

ROYAL Cleans— Better, Easier, Faster

Select any ROYAL—either the powerful "upright" model with its triple-life revolving brush and exclusive, patented Adjustorite, or an efficient, smooth-running "cylinder" type, and you will enjoy the complete satisfaction which comes from knowing that you cannot buy finer cleaning equipment at any price.

ROYAL cleans everything in your home with greatest ease and thoroughness. Its highly specialized method of cleaning will give your floor coverings the care they must have in order to preserve their beauty and insure long life.

For MOTHER'S DAY, May 8th, a beautiful new labor-saving ROYAL is the ideal gift.

A ROYAL Cleaned Home is a More Healthful Home

ROYAL'S powerful cleaning action removes germ-laden dust and dirt. Safeguard health by keeping your home clean with a ROYAL.

ROYAL Cleaners are sold only by dependable retail stores. Visit your local ROYAL Dealer and choose the model which pleases you best. If your ROYAL Dealer is not listed in the yellow pages of your phone book, please write us.

THE P. A. GEIER COMPANY,
Cleveland 8, Ohio
Continental Electric Co., Ltd.,
Toronto, Ont., Canada.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY

ROYAL leads the world for value

(Continued from Page 134)

"Good-by." The mail boat was sturdily getting under way; it was deliberate, leisurely and inexorable. She watched him run along the few feet of jetty; then all at once he was on the boat, he was coming to the railing.

She turned on the engine and automatically set her hands to the wheel. And already, when she looked up, her boat had gone beyond the narrow finger of the jetty. Jim's face was sober now, no longer smiling; and then all at once it was gone and she had started back to Beadon Island.

It was only then, actually, that she was really aware of the pressure of Jim's mouth upon her own, of the warmth and strength and urgency of his arms. It was as if she still felt them; as if they were still there. And mingled with that lingering sense of his presence was a sense of astonishment: that was love! The warmth of her pulses, the lift of her heart, the wings that had swept her up into his embrace, that was part of love.

She guided the motorboat mechanically, setting an even rate of speed toward Beadon Island. Toward Beadon Gates, where on Wednesday there would be no gay wedding party. No marriage in the little white church.

How was she to tell Roy?

Before it seemed possible, the small pier below Beadon Gates was there, shining out of the water ahead, her inevitable destination.

Roy had seen her coming and was standing on the pier, waiting for her. He came forward, caught at the line she tossed upward and made it fast. And Dick Fenby came down the steps. She felt a sense of relief: until Dick went away she could not talk to Roy.

Roy put down his hands to lift her out of the boat; and his hands were the hands of a kind and gentle friend, no more. He smiled down at her.

"You made a good trip. I timed you. Jim get the mail boat all right?"

"Oh, yes. But barely; it was leaving when he got aboard."

"Hello, Nonie," Dick said, coming along toward them, and at once she saw that he'd been drinking.

Dick Fenby (Maj. Dick Fenby, retired after the First World War), who was Hermione's factor, was a slight, fair man with a fine-drawn, ineffectual but pleasant face—which now was puffy and flushed; his usually candid, if rather bleak, blue eyes were glassy.

How right Jim had been to leave! With a flash of shocking clarity Nonie saw the life which Hermione had attempted to enforce upon him: an idle life, with no aims and no purpose permitted him. Hermione by reason of her legal position would have had the upper hand. Hermione knew that; Jim knew it.

Dick said, "Jim got away?"

"He got the mail boat. He'll be in New York late tonight."

They turned back toward the path, their feet making blurred soft thumps on the wooden flooring of the pier, Dick's only a little uneven.

He said, "He got away. That's what's important. He got away before it was too late."

"I'm sorry," Roy said. "Jim had the makings of a good planter."

Dick gave a kind of sigh. "Yes, he had. I knew by the way he went at things. Or tried to go at things. She always stopped him; the way she —— I'd have been a good planter."

"You are a good planter."

"Sometimes—sometimes, when she lets me alone. When she doesn't —— I saw her doing it to Jim. Blocking him about everything, such little things, so—so subtly. It's queer he saw it himself; I didn't till it was too late."

"Now, Dick ——"

Dick said firmly, "She wanted to make sure that by the time Middle Road came to him he'd ——" He stopped and fumbled for words and said, "She wanted him to be like me! I tell you, Roy, Middle Road is like a little kingdom to her; she gets as much kick out of it as if it were a real kingdom. Power is what she feeds on. Power over people. You can't be on equal terms with Hermione, ever. It's always a battle; a battle till Hermione

DO'S and DON'TS when making DRAPERIES

THIS BOOK TELLS HOW to make draperies and slip covers that are more beautiful . . . more distinctive. Contains many other valuable decorating hints, too. Ask for "Interiors Beautiful" and enclose 25c in coin or stamps. Address 1324 McHenry St., Louisville, Ky.

Fincastle FABRICS
LOUISVILLE TEXTILES, INC.
LOUISVILLE, KY.

BERLOU

STOPS MOTH DAMAGE

FOR 5 WHOLE YEARS, OR PAYS FOR THE DAMAGE

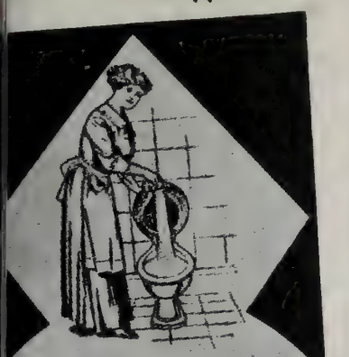
Protect your costly rugs, furniture and clothing from moth damage.

One spraying of Berlou is guaranteed in writing to give moth protection for 5 whole years, or Berlou will repair, replace or pay money value of article damaged.

Colorless, odorless, stainless, non-inflammable and economical (8c a year will Berlou mothproof your suit or dress), Berlou is attainable at your favorite drug, department, hardware or furniture store.

PROFESSIONAL BERLOU SERVICE

For busy folks, Berlou Mothproof Service is available at better Laundry, Rug and Dry Cleaners. Call on these people today.



NOW! BERLOU JR. MOTHSPRAY
The inexpensive, effective mothspray that's good for one year. A pint costs 79c and mothproofs 2 men's suits. Your money back if not satisfied.

WRITE FOR INTERESTING, FREE BOOKLET ON "HOW TO STOP MOTH DAMAGE"

BERLOU MANUFACTURING COMPANY
26 Blaine Avenue, Marion, Ohio
Also: The Berlou Co., Ltd., London, Canada

BERLOU GUARANTEED MOTHSPRAY

Sani-Flush has won and kept millions of friends since this early advertisement appeared

The quickest, easiest way to keep water-closet bowls clean as new is to use Sani-Flush. No unpleasant scrubbing or scouring.

Sani-Flush

Cleans Water-Closet Bowls

It absolutely cannot hurt the plumbing connections. Shake a little in your toilet bowl twice a week—keeps it sanitary.

ni-Flush today is still the leader er 37 years . . . still counted on by od homemakers to keep their toilet wls really clean. Have you tried it?
all grocers'. Two sizes. The gienic Products Co., Canton 2, O.

wins. Then when she has you right under her thumb, she despises you. She ——"

"Okay, Dick. Okay."

"I'm talking too much. It's all true, though. You know it. Everybody knows." They had reached the steps and Dick looked up and said, "Hello, Lydia!" in a tone of surprise which all at once sounded like hostility. "What are you doing here?"

Nonie looked up quickly, too; Lydia Bassett was sitting on the veranda waiting for them. Her red hair with its thick deep waves framed her lovely face with an almost flaunting arrogance of beauty; she was lying back in one of the long wicker chairs, her slim yet vibrant figure outlined in a green dinner dress. Her eyes, brilliant and intelligent, seemed to have taken color from the dress and even at that distance had a kind of green fire; she was smiling and obviously, from her dress, had come to dinner.

"Lydia," Roy said in a startled way.

"Hello," she said, ignoring Dick after one swift and measuring glance. "I hope you don't mind. I rang up Aurelia and invited myself to dinner. I thought I'd better come now if I wanted to see you at all for . . . how long does a honeymoon last? Really a month?"

Her words, her voice, her smile were all pleasant and engaging; surely, thought Nonie, she must imagine some mocking undertone. She said, "Hello, Lydia. I'm glad to see you."

Roy said, but still in a startled way, "Delighted, Lydia. You know that, delighted!"

He came up the steps, between Nonie and Dick; he rang for Jebe, the little old colored man, and ordered cold drinks for them all. No one could be a more gracious and delightful host than Roy, but Nonie knew, and did not know how she knew it, that Lydia's presence was, somehow, not quite welcome. It meant to her, of course, what Dick's presence had meant: Nonie's talk with Roy had still to be postponed.

Among really educated men there is no caste or race distinction.
—CHINESE PROVERB.

Lydia said, this time with an unmistakable note of mockery in her voice, "I do hope you don't really mind my coming; I'll leave early. I'm afraid, though, I'll have to ask you to take me home. I got a lift in Doctor Riordan's car; he was coming to see somebody at Middle Road and brought me here."

"I tell you I'm delighted," Roy said. "Who's sick at Middle Road?"

"I don't know," Lydia said negligently. "One of the houseboys, I think. Had some sort of accident. I didn't ask. Well, I hear that Jim Shaw's had a row with Hermy and left the island."

Purple shadows were laying themselves gently across the sea; the setting sun cast a pink, clear glow in the sky.

Nonie rose, aware of her smudged white slacks. "I'll change now, if you don't mind. I'll be down in a moment."

"Darling," Lydia said, "don't put on the emerald tiara, will you? Or the diamond necklace. We are simple souls here, you know, not used to splendors."

"Don't be absurd, Lydia," Roy said suddenly and sharply.

Nonie repressed an automatic schoolgirl retort; the kind of retort she had learned, actually, during school days and because of all the unconsciously ostentatious ways her father's money had spent itself. Roy crossed the veranda to open the door for her as she entered the house.

She went upstairs slowly and turned into her own room, where she was struck with a sharp sense of incredulity: how could so much have happened during the short space of time since she had left it! And had left the letter unfinished on her desk.

She would not look at it; she went into the great, old-fashioned bathroom, with its marble washbasin, its great tub with a teakwood surround, its shuttered, long window.

(Continued on Page 139)

AZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Depilatory. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

So Easy—YOU CAN AT ONCE

KNIT LIKE AN EXPERT!

Now — without previous experience — even a child can ice begin knitting much faster than with les — and with beautiful, professional ts. It's amazingly simple with the new this wonderful new device you can do all s of knitting, even Argyle or pattern knit- . . . easier — much faster — perfectly: Sweaters, Socks, Scarfs, Belts, Caps, Mittens, Gloves, Bootees, etc. in successful use. Orders filled at once. E-KNITTER complete, with instructions guarantee, only $2 (plus 15c postage). No D's. Send money order or check — today.

EZEE-KNITTER

CREATIVE CRAFTS CORPORATION
11th St., Dept. L4 New York 3, N.Y.

CORNS

Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub urs, 30¢, 50¢. At your ist. Money refunded satisfied. Moss Co., ester, N. Y.

removed by MOSCO

AUTHORIZED REPRESENTATIVES
Keystone Readers' Service, main office 220 South 16th Street, Philadelphia 2, Pa., is a national subscription agency, authorized to sell subscriptions to Curtis publications.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Easy...

as one·two·three

CLEAN and WAX FLOORS STANDING UP!

Wood and Linoleum Sparkle Without Scrubbing Thanks to Bruce Floor Cleaner and the Doozit

Pour...

Just pour a small amount of wax-rich Bruce Floor Cleaner on the wood or linoleum. Then slide the Doozit back and forth to loosen the dirt and marks.

Clean...

Drop any soft cloth under the Doozit Pad and use the Doozit as above to wipe up dirt and cleaner. Floor is quickly and thoroughly cleaned, ready for immediate polishing.

Polish...

Replace the Doozit Pad with a clean, dry one, then polish. The rich wax film left by Bruce Floor Cleaner polishes quickly to a natural sparkling lustre.

In just minutes, you're finished. Your floor is brighter, cleaner, more naturally lustrous. And all so easy you hardly realize it's the same job that used to take hard scrubbing and dirty drudgery.

The Bruce Doozit is only $1.89 at stores everywhere. Extra, long-wearing pads, 19c each. Bruce Floor Cleaner is 68c a quart, $2.10 in the economical gallon size. Get both these Bruce work-savers today—and clean and wax the modern way, standing up!

BRUCE floor products

Only

ZENITH TELEVISION

BRINGS YOU

The Giant Circle Scree

This sensational Zenith* development makes p ble the use of the entire screen surface to pro a picture amazingly larger than on ordinary rec ers. And your Zenith picture is sharper, clea brighter—a real delight to watch.

and Bulls Eye Automatic Tuning

One knob, one twist—there's your station! there's your picture! . . . there's your sound! It bulls eye every time! Your Zenith is PRE-TUN PRE-STABILIZED! Nc fussing . . . no fiddling . . repeated readjusting!

Features Found in No Other Television S

You must see and operate Zenith Television yourse know how sensationally different it really is. Nou your Zenith dealer's in limited quantities.

ZENITH

TELEVISION

and long distance RADIO

THE ROYALTY OF RADIO*

Above, the Zenith WARWICK. Peri sign console, finished in genuine duras mahogany veneers. "Big E GIANT CIRCLE SCREEN.

•

At left, the Zenith WALDORF. Moder sole of imported Afara veneers, rubbed to lustrous blonde finish. "I size GIANT CIRCLE SCREEN.

© 1949

ZENITH RADIO CORPORATION • CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

(Continued from Page 137)

n the tub, got out of her slacks and She set out red slippers and selected lothing from the stacks that lay neatly drawers of the pearwood chest.

ng so, she thought briefly of Lydia's words about emeralds and diamonds. ly, Nonie had no jewelry; her mother's y, put in the bank by her father long ad been sent for and ought now to be way. Actually at that moment she had twelve hundred dollars in cash. She draw more, pending the formalities of nent of her father's estate; she had only le. And then she thought suddenly and , with a feeling of imminence, she use that twelve hundred dollars, or it, when she left Beadon Island, when d had her understanding with Roy—she went to New York to Jim.

chose a white dress with bits of Irish the low, curved shoulders. She touched s with scarlet.

ore she went down to dinner, on an im- again, like touching wood, like making ture safe, she went to look at her little of money, her twelve hundred dollars, was gone.

ould not be gone and it was! She ex- with incredulous fingers the billfold e big alligator which she had d under her arm New York. The e purse was still vith silver and small bills d into it, but the ld (a narrow r fold with in- e gold filigree—her father had it for her many ago when she a child, and so so narrow that ad to fold the upward for an r so, but which, mentally, she to, in spite of npractical size) completely y.

was simply not ble! In Roy's e, in Aurelia's , with servants they must have known, tiny island where everybody was n—and it happened. She looked gh the bag, she looked through the er, but she knew that she had not re- d the bills and put them anywhere so it was a mere gesture of confirmation. ly she put down the bag and closed the er and stood for a moment looking at it; have to tell Roy and she'd have to tell lia. She went slowly downstairs.

ey were on the veranda and she joined . Roy had changed, too, and with his coat and black tie, his black trousers rimson cummerbund, looked, as always, some and imposing. They prolonged drinks, talking in a desultory way as cal twilight drew its shadowy curtains the sea. A dark bank of clouds finally t up from the south and blotted out the ring lights on the sea and Jebe an- ced dinner.

that time, Nonie thought, sitting oppo- Roy at one end of the long table, by that Jim was in Cienfuegos; by that time aps he was in another plane headed for York.

rising wind rattled the palms near the e, banged the shutters and flickered the les.

urelia did not come down to dinner; she a headache.

's going to storm," Roy said. "Aurelia neuralgia before a storm."

ydia sat on Roy's right, her copper- ed hair framing her face as she laughed talked, mainly to Roy. Dick might as not have been present; he sat eating ing, speaking not at all. Jebe slid in and of the shadows beyond the glare of the candles. Roy talked, by some impulse harking back to the old days on the island, to people he and Lydia had known.

Lydia kept him company, reminding him of this, reminding him of that; laughing, her eyes alight, sharing memories with him. Once she glanced at Nonie. "Do forgive us, Nonie," she said, and let her eyes linger on Nonie's face for a moment before she turned back to Roy.

So Nonie found herself in a little quiet pool of seclusion; for the moment none of the things around her seemed really to have anything to do with her. What would Roy say; what would he do? Her cheeks felt hot; she was both relieved and tense when at last Jebe came with the silver coffee tray and they left the table and followed him onto the broad comfortable veranda, where candles protected by hurricane glasses yet wavered and smoked.

Nonie, at Roy's smile and nod, poured the coffee; her hands trembled among the fragile, lovely cups. He'd meant by that smile and that unspoken request to emphasize her place in his house—his wife so soon, his hostess. He was still troubled though, she thought, about Jim, lapsing into a frowning, troubled silence when Lydia's fund of anecdotes seemed to have exhausted itself so she, too, was silent and thoughtful, staring out into the blackness beyond the railing where the sea, invisible in the darkness, seemed louder and more menacing.

Hermione Shaw came unexpectedly; they heard the spatter of the shells in the driveway and Roy pulled himself together with an exclamation and rose to meet her. This time she had come for Dick. The click of the heels of her lizardskin pumps sounded incisive as she came along the veranda with Roy. She refused coffee; the smoking, flickering candlelight softened her face, restoring something of its beauty. She was indeed composed, smiling and certain as if she had accepted her defeat of the afternoon with grace. Nonie could not have been more mistaken than in that first moment. Hermione's gray eyes reflected the candle flames like molten bits of steel.

She said to Roy, smiling with those dark red lips, "I thought I'd find Dick here. I'll take him home for you."

And Nonie thought with a kind of horror, She's pleased! She knew Dick was on the edge; she wanted it to happen, she wanted to be forced to come for him, to show her own indomitable strength and his lack of it!

Dick leaned forward, grasping the arm of his chair, looking at her.

Roy said, "Sit down, won't you, Hermy? I'm glad to see you."

Her composure was like a bright and dazzling shield of glass. She looked at Roy for a deliberate instant before she said, smiling, clearly, "Are you glad to see me, Roy? I shouldn't be if I were you; not under the circumstances."

Roy flushed and started to speak, but Dick forestalled him; without moving, sitting forward in his chair, his eyes bright, too, and shining, Dick said, "Roy didn't do this to me. It's not his fault!"

She permitted herself then to acknowledge his presence; her thin eyebrows lifted. "Do you mean that I am the cause of your being"—she made a little gesture of distaste—"not quite yourself? Really, Dick, you are an adult, you know! Your life is your own."

"No," Dick said, "it isn't. It hasn't been. Not since a long time ago when I had the bad luck to fall in love. The woman I loved had no heart to love with. She had only vanity,

(Continued on Page 141)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Promise of Spring

By Rhina P. Espaillat

Whiteness of the flake foretells
Whiteness of the flower,
April and heaven draw nearer to earth
With each cold hour.

Sun of a wintry morning, unseen,
Quickens the trembling pulse
Of early green—

Promise of spring in the tendril
That hopeful but hidden grows,
And June comes back, unfolding
Rose after rose.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

100,000 WORD INK-WELL BOTTLE

Holds All the Ink You Can Keep Fresh . . .

Actual size

10¢

Sized and styled to the home desk

So much Fresher it starts a fountain pen a split second Faster

At last comes an ink bottle which you can display with pride in your home . . . an ornamental Ink-Well Bottle in classic hobnail glass that does justice to the handsomest desk. This is Sanford's new 100,000 Word Ink-Well Bottle . . . the bottle that holds all the ink you can keep fresh—yet not a wasteful amount that you can't use up before it dries out.

This new Ink-Well Bottle holds Sanford's Penit Ink—the ink that starts instantly without scratching, even after prolonged exposure of the pen point. Penit was especially developed for controlled flow, to write continuously, without flooding. Guaranteed to improve the performance of any fountain pen.

Prevent bothersome, messy, air-thickened ink—keep ink fresh by using the new Ink-Well Bottle of Sanford's Penit Ink. Ask your retailer today.

For Students, Lawyers, and Others Who Can't Afford to Let Their Pens Run Out of Ink.

The Only Bottle that Fits the Briefcase

SANFORD INK COMPANY • HOME OFFICE: BELLWOOD, ILL.
NEW YORK OFFICE: 500 FIFTH AVENUE

Ask for Penit INK

FOUNTAIN PEN INK

In the Ink-Well Bottle

Sealy goes to Paris... for Schiaparelli style!

68 years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Sealy decided to raise the finest mattresses ever! That's why, when their youngest, newest, finest Sealy announced, "I'm going to Paris for GLAMOUR!" they beamed!

Nothing like this had ever happened to a mattress before! Sealy smiled, "Well, I'm a very unusual* innerspring." And everyone could see she was... well-built, tidy and trim and extremely good-looking!

Only the great Madame Schiaparelli would do for Sealy! The famous designer was inspired. "Look, no middle sag," she raved, "no tufts, lumps or wrinkles!" She swirled fabrics and created fabulous designs!

Sealy brought home three Schiaparelli originals. A scrumptious "Bouquet"...a lovely "Bowknot" design and a "Little Bow" that's beautiful. Now the famous comfortable, smooth-top Sealy is the chic-est mattress in history!

SEALY LOVELY REST WITH SCHIAPARELLI "BOWKNOT" DESIGN 59.50

Other Sealy tuftless mattresses or boxsprings, (twin or full sizes):

SEALY NATURAL REST with Schiaparelli "LITTLE BOW" design 49.50.

SEALY SUNSPUN with Schiaparelli "BOUQUET" design (shown) 69.50.

Other Sealy mattresses from 29.50.

Sleeping on a Sealy is like sleeping on a cloud!

Sealy

*ONLY SEALY HAS THE "FOUR-IN-ONE" COMFORT FEATURES!

DUROLIFE INNERSPRING UNIT: prevents sag; gives extra support to "vital third" of your b

NEW MIRACLE MESH: prevents bumps and lumps; prevents "feeling" the springs.

QUILTED FELT PADS: keeps body impression to an absolute minimum. Gives "smooth" firmly supported sleep.

FLANGE CONSTRUCTION: adds strength and life; keeps mattress tidy and trim; keeps borders springy and smooth.

(Continued from Page 139)

d arrogance and greed. I stopped loving u a long time ago, Hermione."
Hermione said, "You haven't stopped hat-
; me."
Roy gave an inarticulate exclamation;
dia moved sharply; Dick suddenly put his all, tired face in his hands.
And Hermione said with cold contempt,
'ou are a drunk, Dick, and a bum. Find urself a job somewhere else, if you can.
ou are through at Middle Road."
Lydia said suddenly, "You really are a vil, Hermione! Jim got away from you, so u've got your knife into ——"
The glass shield of composure wavered as ands had shaken it. Hermione interrupted ly, "My knife into everyone, were you go-
; to say? How odd of you—how odd of you be here tonight, as a matter of fact! Who ited you? Aurelia?" Hermione stopped d laughed and, still laughing, she turned to
oy. "You'll see to Dick, then, won't you?
ou are so reliable, Roy. Noblesse oblige; a ntleman of the old school; your word is as od as your bond, all that. Do promise me see to Dick so I'll feel quite easy."
The flush of anger deepened in Roy's face.
Of course I'll see to Dick if he needs it."
Dick didn't move; no one moved.
Hermione said pleasantly, "Good night.
ll Aurelia I didn't expect to see her, but n sorry I didn't." She went away across the randa again, her slim, elegant figure delibite in its motions, triumph in the very leireliness of her departure. She started her r with the same deliberation; they could ar the spatter of shells ng the driveway.
No one spoke until the und of the engine had ased. Then Roy said,
Whew," and sat down
avily. "I'll have some ore coffee, Nonie."
"You'll take me home."
dia put down her cup.
f you please, Roy, dear.
s going to storm." She se, tall and lovely in her een dress, put out her ong, slender hand to Nonie. "Thank you,
ar. I'll be at the wedding Wednesday. all I say now, 'Happy wishes'? Or is that d luck?"
"We'd better get along," Roy said.
"Of course. Good night, Nonie. Good ght, Dick."
Dick said behind his hands, "But she was ght. She's always right. I'm still tied to her.
s long as I hate her I'm tied."
Lydia said shortly, but in a friendly way, o, "Get yourself a drink, Dick. Then go
me."
Dick got to his feet. In order to give him a ance to get himself together, Nonie strolled side Roy and Lydia to the steps and atched them leave. Roy's figure tall and ite beside Lydia's swirling green skirt.
oy's car started and Nonie went slowly back the lighted area of chairs and tables. Dick d disappeared inside the house.
Poor Dick, she thought; the quarrel with ermione would die down—it always did, cording to island gossip; yet it would lie
ere, smoldering, unforgotten.

low right Jim had been to leave!
Where was Jim by now? Jim, who had id, "I'll always love you"?
She pressed her hands to her hot cheeks.
oy would return; what would she say—ow was she to say it?
The night was very black beyond the little avering circle of lights. Presently Jebe pat-red out and removed the coffee tray. Someme later a door banged and she knew that was closing the French windows against ie coming storm.
It was after that that Dick returned to the eranda; she looked up, startled, aware sudenly of his presence. He was looking down her. "Nonie, I'm going home."
"Oh, Dick, wait for Roy."
"Going home now. 'Night, Nonie." He miled feebly and ambled across the veranda nd turned toward the drive where his batered small car was waiting for him. At the steps he wavered, caught the railing and sagged down like a sack of meal.

In the end, Nonie took him home. The storm was not far off; the sound of the wheezing and skipping engine was almost lost in the clash of wind. It was a winding road and it seemed a very long two miles; she thought she must have missed the Middle Road entrance when suddenly the white stone pillars that marked it glimmered faintly at the edge of the path of lights and she carefully turned in. The driveway was bordered on either side with pepper trees, solid clusters of blackness on the fringe of the little car's lights; another turn and she should reach the square, lovely stone house, with its gracious proportions, its curving double flight of steps, its old, graceful grillwork. The veranda light was on, an area of brightness against the night. She guided the car up to the steps and turned off the engine. Dick did not move. She'd have to call Hermione, who would be pleased, vindicated, triumphant.

DOWN those steps only a few hours ago Jim had come, carrying bags and coat, escaping Hermione.

She got out of the car and started up the nearest flight of curving white steps. She went almost to the landing before she saw that something lay there, tossed in a heap, a green-and-white dress.

It was a kind of housecoat, long and silk and gaily printed. It was a woman. It was Hermione Shaw with her face turned to the lights and a black wet patch like paint all along where her face lay. It was Hermione and she was dead. Nobody could look like that and be alive.

Every smallest detail showed up with fantastic clarity: every fold of her dress, her outflung crumpled hand, the stark, uncanny way in which her green-sandaled feet pointed at rigid, awkward angles. The blood had come from her breast, high up near her throat.

She's had an accident, Nonie thought. She's killed herself . . . no, no, she's been killed! But that is murder!

Out of nowhere, out of everywhere, there came a sudden, blinding wave of thankfulness. Jim was gone. He had quarreled with Hermione, but he had gone. No matter what happened, Jim was safe. Nobody ever could say he had killed her.

Murder!

A wild gust of wind flung the palms whispering and chattering in the darkness beyond that too bright patch of light. Nothing moved there, yet the motion all around in the trees, in the shrubbery, in the violent agitated night, was so strong that Nonie caught at the railing as if she herself might be swept off into the swirling unseen turmoil.

It was exactly then that there was motion within the bright area of light. The door of the house, directly opposite the steps, was flung open and Jim walked out. He walked out and stopped, seeing her, and they stared at each other over the flung thing in the green-and-white silk dress which was no longer a woman, no longer anything.

"Jim! Jim!" Her lips moved and the wind caught up the whispered words and flung them off into the shadows.

Jim said something unintelligible and ran to her, past Hermione, down the steps. He put his arm around Nonie, holding her steady amid a swaying, crashing world, his white face bent close to her, his eyes black as the night. "Nonie, what are you doing here? They ought not to have let you come."

She leaned against his shoulder, pushing her face into its warm and solid shelter.

"Did Roy come with you?"

She shook her head.

"Is Roy in the car?"

"No—no."

"Who's there, then?"

"Oh, Jim, is she dead?"

His arm tightened. "Come into the house."

Of all God's creatures there is only one that cannot be made the slave of the lash. That one is the cat. If man could be crossed with the cat it would improve man, but it would deteriorate the cat.

—MARK TWAIN:
Mark Twain's Notebook.

NEW IMPERIAL WASHABLE WALLPAPERS

Forecast Lovelier Rooms—

The 1949 collection of Imperial Washable Wallpapers promises brighter and lovelier rooms for many tomorrows. Glorious colors . . . distinctive patterns . . . authentic styling . . . will give walls new charm. This charm will last, for every paper is "Color-Locked"—guaranteed for three years to withstand room exposure without fading, and to clean satisfactorily in accordance with instructions in every roll. Look for the silver label that says the finest in wallpaper.

Jean McLain's "Color Harmonizer" has an important place in your decorating plans. Send 25¢ for a copy of this inspiring booklet. Imperial Paper and Color Corporation, Department L-54, Glens Falls, N. Y.

Only Merry-Go-Round bra gives you all these exclusive features:

- Patented Circular Stitching creates alluring, feminine curves.
- Faggoted seams give you heavenly comfort and freedom.
- 4-section bias cup accentuates small bust — minimizes full bust.
- Pre-tested "Shrinkage Control"—FIT and LIFT won't wash out.

only PETER PAN makes Merry-Go-Round bra

Want lovelier curves? Write for FREE booklet, "Your New Guide to Bustline Beauty"
PETER PAN, 312 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 1, N. Y. Dept. J-1
MERRY-GO-ROUND OF CANADA, 3643 ST. LAWRENCE BLVD., MONTREAL

He led her up the steps, holding her so she would not see Hermione. They went through the lighted doorway and into the wide hall. Her hair had blown about her face; she pushed it back, staring at Jim, thinking again, He cannot be here!

He said, "Where is Roy? I phoned for him. Didn't he come with you?"

"Dick. It's Dick in the car. He's—I brought him home."

He understood. "Oh. Oh, I see. Then he's no help." For a moment he stared at her in deep perplexity.

Suddenly the fact of Hermione's death seemed to clarify, to become something that wasn't a nightmare. "Jim, are you sure she's dead?"

"Yes. There's nothing you can do for her. I looked ——"

"Jim"—she caught at his shoulders with both hands—"you've got to tell me; was she murdered?"

He put his hands up, hard and firm over her own. "Yes, she was murdered. She was shot."

She must not scream . . . like the night, like the wind. "Who killed her?"

Jim held her hands tighter. "Darling, listen. There's nothing we can do now but wait. She couldn't have suffered; she couldn't have known."

"Who did it?"

"I don't know. He got away. He ——"

"Jim, they'll all say you did it!"

"Hush, Nonie. Nonie, darling, don't ——"

"Oh, Jim, why did you come back?"

"I had to. Listen, Nonie. I'm going to get Dick. Stay here. I'll leave the door open. You'll be safe. The fellow got away. I heard him in the shrubbery; at least I think I heard him. He's gone, though. I'll get Dick."

Her hands dropped away reluctantly and he ran out again across the veranda and down the steps. His black head gleamed in the light for an instant and disappeared. She could see Hermione's hand flung out. The small white hand that had had in life so relentless a grip, and now had forever released that hold, lay slack and powerless.

She looked away quickly: at the long wide hall, running the length of the house; the cane chairs with their faded cushions; the curling bamboo screen across the door of Hermione's bedroom, there at the end of the hall; it was the first floor of the house, but like many tropical houses of the period when it was built, it was raised nine or ten feet from the ground.

She remembered coming to dinner with Roy and Aurelia, drinking coffee, talking to Jim—both of them realizing perhaps even then that there was a special kind of pleasantness about talking to each other. Hermione had sat at the round table with the green silk flounce, with the coffee tray before her. And now Hermione was dead.

Who killed her?

Jim came back, the screened door banging behind him. "I can't make Dick understand. I left him there." He pushed his hands over his hair and took a long breath and glanced around the room. "Roy ought to be here soon. And Seabury Jenkins; he's the magistrate. He'll know what to do."

"Roy's not at home. He's at Lydia's. He took her home after dinner."

"Jebe answered the telephone. He didn't know Roy had gone. He said he'd tell him." He led her to a long wicker chair and made her sit there; he sat on the foot of it and reached for a cigarette.

"Jim, why did you come back? What happened? When did you find her?"

He answered her last question first. "I heard the shot. I was in Dick's shack. I ran to the house. Came in the side door; the lights were on here. I ran to the porch; that light was on too. There was Hermione. I thought somebody was out there in the shrubbery. If it was anybody, he got away; maybe it was only the wind and the noise of the trees."

"Then what ——"

"I knew it was murder. I'd heard the shot and she wouldn't have killed herself. I looked for a gun; there wasn't any. I ran in here and phoned Roy and Seabury. Then I heard your car. It all happened, Nonie, just

(Continued on Page 144)

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

A MAN who has traveled several times around the world says he has never seen but two kinds of people: men and women.

The younger the child, the lower the ring on the bathtub.

Apartments without babies are old people's homes.

The bottleneck in many families is the high cost of milk.

For perfectionists only: Thackeray told of a place in Ireland where the sense of cleanliness was so keen that servants brought up the coals for the grate on a clean plate.

Unexpected logic from a young daughter: "I don't have to go to the library this week because I haven't any books overdue."

My grandmother always lighted her candle of hope with the words, "Perhaps after all it isn't so."

One way to help the weather make up its mind is to hang out a washing.

Impishness in children is natural impetus.

A young Californian repeating the story of Adam and Eve concluded with, "And then God drove them off the ranch."

Our son has finally found a reason for older sisters: they teach him to dance.

Utter devotion: mother takes the last bath, and cleans up the bathroom.

To enjoy love or hash one needs plenty of confidence.

Two reasons why people are not given credit: one because they are not known, the other because they are.

Boy's letter home on Mother's Day: "I surely would like to be with you today, mom, to eat some of your good cooking."

Use level measurements in cooking and raising children.

The new bride in our neighborhood appealed to her neighbor for help. It seemed the longer she cooked the eggs the harder they got.

When our boarding-school daughter was asked over the telephone what color she wanted in a new sweater she automatically turned to her roommate and shouted, "What color sweater do we need, Ann?"

The mother who thought red fingernail polish a passing fad now has a ten-year-old daughter who paints her toenails.

Girls who win prizes on their cooking seldom go long unmarried.

The difference between the miserable idealist and the contented realist is that one wears himself out on the unattainable, the other is satisfied with the attainable.

To every wife who sighs over bills

Your CANNON GIRL says: Cannon Percale Sheets, costing just a little more than heavy-duty muslin, have always been a nifty buy...

Here's DOUBLE NEWS: Not only do you pay less money today, you also get a wonderful extra!

Now Cannon Percale Sheets are COMBSPUN! Cloud-soft cotton is combed till just the longer, smoother fibers remain!

These Combspun Cannon Percale Sheets are marvelously STRONG (for long wear); beautifully LIGHT (for easy laundering and bedmaking).

All in all, they're the perfect dream-sheets for YOUNG-MARRIEDS ... and longer-marrieds, too! Top buys at the new low price!

Step to your sheet counter...ask for new COMBSPUN CANNON PERCALE SHEETS!

TRADE MARK CANNON

Cannon Percale Sheets—Now They're Combspun

CANNON TOWELS ... STOCKINGS ... BLANKETS ★ CANNON MILLS, INC., NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

COPR 1949 CANNON MILLS, INC.

"Honey, I Take It Back! You're All the Decorator We Need!"

"I was wrong, honey bee. I never thought you'd get that decorator touch on our windows...but you got it, all right, and then some!"

Honey bee may not let on...but it's as easy as pie to achieve that custom look with Queentex Rayon Curtains. They have all the finesse, the richness, the de luxe details of decorator-made curtains. They are extra-full... their luxurious, luminous texture hangs in generous folds...their whites are snowy, their colors are the real decorator pastels.

And after Queentex Curtains are laundered, they're as full, as lovely, as crisp as ever. No special care in washing or ironing required... they launder beautifully. Write for handsome, illustrated booklet, "The Decorator Touch in Window Beauty." Queen Valley Fabrics, Inc., Box 634, Pawtucket, R. I. Exclusive manufacturers of Queentex Rayon Curtains...for 25 years weavers of rayon marquisettes.

QUEENTEX

the perfected washable rayon curtain

(Continued from Page 142)

before you came. She ——" He leaned over suddenly and put his face in his hands. "I thought I hated Hermione today. I thought I could have killed her. But I wouldn't have wanted her to die like that!"

"Jim, who killed her?"

He shook his head without looking up. "I don't know. Somebody must have called her, got her to the door and just—just shot her. And ran." He lifted his face. "Well, I'm going to look ——"

She caught his arm as he rose. "Not alone. There are a thousand places to hide—in the bush, in the palmettos, in the swamp."

He stood for a moment, thinking, with the wind surging and swirling around the house like a vast dark whirlpool. "No use calling the houseboys," he said at last. "One of them had some sort of accident this afternoon. He's laid up; the other one is in their shack with him; I saw them on my way to Dick's cottage. Johnny, the cook, would have come if he'd heard the shot. But he'd be scared, no good anyway." He turned and stared out across the bright, white light of the veranda. "Whoever shot her had a chance to get away, all right. I wish Roy would come. We'll have to organize, I suppose. Search." His mouth tightened. "It'll be a man hunt over the island."

"Why did you come back? I thought you were gone. I saw her, I thought you were safe!"

He looked down at her directly. "I had to come back. I had to face Roy and tell him. I couldn't leave you to do it."

A mountain of treacherous slides, of dangerous paths, seemed to rise up ahead of them, threatening. "Suppose they never find whoever killed her? Suppose ——"

"I know what you are trying to say, Nonie. I hated her. I felt like killing her. I said so. I left and came back. But I didn't kill her!"

"Jim, what will you do? What ——"

"I'll just tell the truth. Nothing else to do."

"Oh, Jim, she was shot. And you had a gun!"

He shook his head, looking down at her soberly. "Darling, I didn't shoot her. I've still got my gun. It's over there on the table."

"Over there!" She jerked around to look. And on a table amid a litter of books, ash trays, vases, magazines, lay a gun. "That gun! You've got to get rid of it. Hurry, before they come."

"Nonie, Nonie," he cried and held her and smiled a little, shaking his head. "Darling, it wasn't that gun that shot her. They'll prove that. There's a way of matching slugs, of identifying bullets. The bullet that killed her didn't come from my gun. I'll show them my gun; it'll help clear me. If I need to be cleared."

She stared up at him for a moment and then sank back into the chair. "I'm so frightened. I don't know what I'm doing."

He leaned forward to look into her eyes. "Listen, Nonie. I quarreled with her and I meant it—everything. Besides that, now that she's dead I'll be . . . not rich like you, but I'll have a lot more money than I've ever had before. What's more important, I'll have Middle Road."

"You wouldn't have killed her for money! You didn't kill her!"

"But I'll have money and Middle Road. Nobody else would profit by her death. People have done murder for less than that. So you see I've got to clear myself."

A car was coming rapidly along the drive, careening, hurtling, sliding to a stop at the bottom of those curving flights of steps. Jim sprang to his feet.

"That's Roy," he cried and ran to the door, swinging it behind him, and then across the veranda and down the steps.

In a rush all the questions that there'd been no time to ask him came crowding into her mind. He had come back, he'd said, to face Roy, to be with her. Why had he changed his mind? How had he got back to Beador Island?

There'd been no time to speak of Roy either; no time to tell Jim that she'd failed so far to tell Roy that the marriage could not take place. Neither of them had thought of that; the fact of murder had come first.

They'd say that Jim did it! He'd threatened to kill her and said so. And by reason of her murder he'd inherit money that he hadn't had, and Middle Road that he loved.

If Nonie had not gone with him to Elbow, if she had not needed him and loved him, he'd have been safe by now. He'd have been in a plane; he'd have been miles away. He'd have had an alibi.

That was important; that was what people did when there was murder. They established alibis. But Jim had returned to Middle Road alone; he had been alone when he found Hermione. He'd had a gun. How nearly she'd made a blunder about that!

There were voices on the veranda; it wasn't Roy who had arrived, it was Seabury Jenkins. He stood, gaunt and yellow and bald, his scraggy neck rising from his oilskins, staring down. He was looking at Hermione; as she watched he bent—she could see only the humped thin curve of his back. Jim was bending, too; she could see his head jerk upward, his face full in the light as he spoke to Seabury. Their voices were swept away in the wind; and the rain came.

Like a pantomime, against the background of slashing rain, she could see Jim and Seabury talking, pointing to Hermione. Jim was shaking his head. Seabury rose, gesticulating, arguing. Then the picture dissolved and re-formed. Jim and Seabury together were lifting Hermione, bringing her for the last time into her house.

If two friends ask you to be judge in a dispute, don't accept, because you will lose one friend; on the other hand, if two strangers come with the same request, accept, because you will gain one friend.

—SAINT AUGUSTINE.

Nonie got out of the wicker chaise longue and ran to hold the door for them; they moved past her, awkwardly struggling to hold the terrible burden they carried, somehow, between them. Hermione's long crumpled silk skirt trailed the floor; one green sandal fell and then, as Seabury shifted a sliding grip, the other. The men went on; Nonie heard their footsteps and would not look, but stared instead at the two small bits of green fallen on the rug, one slipper on its side as if flung there wantonly, the other upright, endowed with a kind of tentative life.

She picked up the slippers, scarcely realizing her own actions, and put them side by side upon the table and then, because they looked so bare, so terribly untenanted, she moved them again and placed them below the table, actually under its long green silk flounce so she would not see them. And then she heard another car slide to a stop outside.

Roy was running up the steps, his face wet, his oilskins gleaming. A vivid white flash of lightning outlined his running figure, made a sharply outlined chiaroscuro of the driveway and the glittering rain, the thick foliage and the two cars standing below. She thought briefly of Dick Fenby; was he still in the car?

Roy stood for a second catching his breath, his oilskins dripping, his face streaming. He took off his rain-streaked eyeglasses and cried, "Nonie, what's happened? Jebe said she was murdered! She can't have been!" He heard the voices in Hermione's bedroom; he glanced that way. "That's Jim! Jebe said it was Jim who phoned; I thought he'd got it wrong. But that is Jim!"

She nodded. He looked at her for an incredulous, almost an angry moment.

"If she was really murdered . . . they'll say he did it! Why did he come back?" Roy cried.

He came back, Nonie thought irresistibly, to tell you that Jim, your friend, and I, the woman who is so nearly your wife, love each other; he came back to tell you that. She could not say it then; and it had nothing to do with Hermione's death . . . with her murder.

(Continued on Page 146)

DORIS DAY co-starring in "MY DREAM IS YOURS," A Michael Curtiz Production released by Warner Bros.

Photograph by Bert Six

Let This Dream be Yours

You'll wake up to find a dream come true...when your bedroom is furnished with THE MINUET by MENGEL. Graceful, 18th-Century design fashioned in fine mahogany Yours for years . . . beauty from the gracious past to dress up your bedroom.

With every passing day you'll grow fonder of the graceful lines . . . the quiet, tasteful elegance of this really fine design.

Every detail mirrors the charm and dignity of the 18th Century, that has been called the Golden Age of furniture. Lock at the delicate carvings...the soft luster of the classic, antique-finished drawer pulls . . . the spacious elegance of the poster bed. Executed in richly figured mahogany veneers from Mengel's own vast timberlands in Africa, and in fine hardwoods.

And every piece is *Permanized. That means it's built by Mengel's exclusive, scientific method that keeps your furniture sound and beautiful. No matter what the climate . . . hot or cold, damp or dry . . . the joints and veneers in your Mengel Permanized Furniture will never come apart.

Mary Adam's new booklet gives you a hatful of hints to help make your home the place you've dreamed of . . . valuable decorating suggestions, and help in color harmony by the famous Rahr Color Clinic. Mail the coupon and 10 cents for your copy, today!

For the name of the nearest Mengel dealer, phone your local Western Union number and ask for Operator 25. The Mengel Company, Louisville 1, Kentucky. Established 1877

IN MAHOGANY, MENGEL MEANS MORE

Permanized MENGEL Furniture

Mengel Furniture is available in both traditional and modern designs. The prices of the pieces shown above are about: Poster Bed, $74.95; Chest, $114.50; Vanity with mirror, $129.95; Bench, $18.95; Double Dresser, $144.50; Dresser Mirror, $39.50 (slightly more, west of the Rockies). Other Mengel furniture ranges from $199 to $369 for three principal pieces.

MARY ADAM—The Mengel Company, Dept. 199
Louisville 1, Kentucky

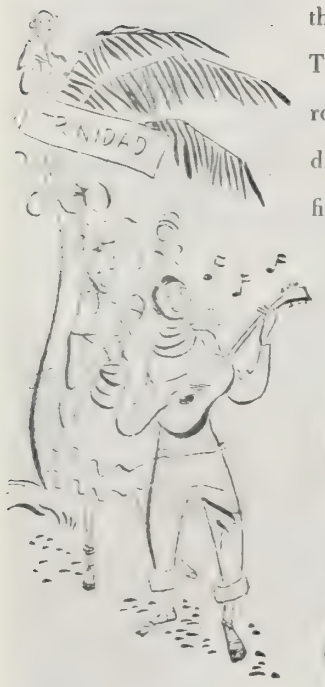
Enclosed is 10¢. Please send me your new booklet, "Make Your Own Design for Living." (If you live outside Continental U. S., send 25¢.)

Name_____

Street_____

City_____

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.



Copyright 1949, The Mengel Company

Calypso Music is in the Air

Seamprufe Slips are everywhere

IN CALYPSO COLORS THAT SING—

that brighten the underworld of feminine fashions. These captivating colors, inspired by the romance of West Indian islands, add a new dimension of beguilement to your lacy figure-proportioned Seamprufe Slip.

QUERIDA, "Loved One", designed for you to cherish, to cherish your figure. New fashion-favored plunging neckline, inlaid lace midriff and flared hemline work undercover flattery. In finest multifilament crepe with Alencon type lace. About $7.95

Other styles from $3.95-$7.95

CALYPSO COLORS

Caribbean blue yellow jasmine oleander pink waterlily mauve seaspray green
white coral Trinidad tan black olive

Seamprufe®
INCORPORATED
FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 18, N.Y.

SLIPS · PETTICOATS · PAJAMAS · GOWNS

(Continued from Page 144)

Roy had not expected a reply; the anger was because of Jim: instantly, as she had done, Roy had seen Jim's danger. He was shrugging out of his wet oilskins.

"Nonie, this is no place for you. Did you see Hermione? What happened?"

She tried to tell him all at once, quickly. "They don't know who did it. Jim found her. Then I came. She was on the step. I had started toward the house to call her—to tell her I'd brought Dick."

"And she was dead then?"

"Yes—oh, Roy, yes!"

He put his arm around her comfortingly. "I'm going to take you home, away from this. I'll go and speak to Jim." Again anxiety was like anger in his face. "Why did he come back? When did he come back?" He broke off as Jim and Seabury came around the screen and into the hall.

Jim cried, "Roy! Thank God you're here."

Seabury Jenkins, his thin face worried and drawn, said, "Roy, this is a terrible thing. She was undoubtedly murdered. Shot."

"Who did it? What happened?"

Seabury shook his head in a stunned way and turned back toward Hermione's bedroom. "You'd better look at her."

"Wait, Nonie. Only for a few minutes; then I'll see that you get back home."

The three men re-entered Hermione's room; she heard their low voices, the silences between, as if all of them were thinking, questioning, trying to see some way clear.

Rain lashed the island, beat upon the house. Hermione's house; now Jim's house, his plantation, Middle Road that he had loved. "They'll say he did it," Roy had cried. "Why did he come back?"

The men emerged gravely. Seabury was explaining to Roy, "Doctor Riordan will have to see her, of course, but we couldn't leave her in the storm. It wasn't decent. And we didn't destroy evidence; there wasn't any evidence to be destroyed, so far as we could see, but if there had been, the storm would have done that by now."

Doctor Riordan, then, Nonie thought, must be the official medical officer for the island, as Seabury Jenkins was magistrate.

Roy went to a chair, slowly, as if he had aged in those last few moments. "Poor Hermione! She had her enemies. She had her faults. But I wouldn't have wanted this to happen to her."

"What do we do now?" Jim asked.

Both Roy and Seabury looked at him for a moment without speaking.

Roy finally sighed and said rather tentatively, "Suicide . . . or accident."

Seabury obviously snatched the words and fastened on them with a look of intent inward speculation.

Jim was shaking his head. He said, almost gently, "It's murder, Roy."

Roy stared stubbornly at the rug. "Suicide's always possible. Accident with a gun is always possible."

Jim smiled a little and put his hand on Roy's shoulder. "I know what you're thinking. But I can't get out of it that way. It was murder."

Seabury, his face still troubled, sat down and leaned back, putting his fingers together judicially. "It could have been either suicide or accident. Both are more likely than murder. We've never had a murder on the island."

"You have one now," Jim said.

Roy looked up at him quickly. "Look here, Jim, a murder investigation is certain to do a lot of damage one way or another, and it's not at all certain to discover the murderer."

Jim's hand seemed to press harder on Roy's shoulder. "I know what you're trying to do. I see my position—you see it. But it can't be suicide and it can't be accident, because there was no gun."

"We haven't looked for a gun. There might be ——" began Roy, but Jim cut him off.

"I looked for a gun. There wasn't any. I looked at the wounds. She didn't kill herself. There'd be powder burns on her dress.

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

e'd be . . . it was murder, Roy, be-
me."
y said after a moment, "Have you hed?"
Whoever killed her had plenty of time away," Jim said. "Time and darkness."
abury Jenkins passed one hand over his head. "No use searching. If she was by somebody she'd had a quarrel with, body maybe who'd worked for her and a grudge, he's gone into hiding by now.
Did you see anybody?" Roy asked.
l us just exactly what happened, Jim.
did you come back? I thought you'd
New York by now."
r a second Jim stood very still. A kind of un came down over his face; he did not at Nonie, yet his thoughts went out to ike a thread for her to wind up into her
I can't tell Roy now, he was thinking;
e hasn't yet told him. This man whose
I want to take from him is my friend.
said slowly, "I got the mail boat at w all right, but then by the time I ned Cienfuegos I decided to come back."
oy interrupted: "Were you coming back ake peace with Hermione?"
abury's small, sharp eyes blinked.
ace? Had you quarreled with her?"
n nodded tersely. "I'd quarreled with
—I left because of that—this afternoon.
n I—as I say, I decided to come back."
abury's sharp eyes were very bright and rvant. "What was your reason, then?"
t has nothing to do with this," Jim said.
The police will want a better answer than
."
oy gave an exclamation. "Are you trying ap him, Seabury?"
No," Seabury said. "Don't jump down hroat like that, Roy. I don't want to see hang. But he'll have to answer all these gs sooner or later. Jim, did you see her
?"
oy started to rise and Jim said quickly, ay, Roy. He's right. I'll have to an-everything they ask. No, I didn't see alive. It's just as I told you."
What was the quarrel about? They'll that, too, Jim. Was it about money?"
m said explosively, "Listen, Seabury! I d her—and she hated me. I've got all s of motives for killing her. Any one of n would be sufficient motive to hang me.
the fact is I didn't kill her."
eabury said wearily, "I didn't say you
I'm only saying what the police will say."
Okay," Jim said. "Sorry, Seabury. Any-
g else?"

"Where were you exactly when you say you heard the shot?"

"That's another question you don't have to answer here and now!" Roy exclaimed. "Wait till you've seen a lawyer. I'll say this, Seabury; you can't stop me. Jim, you must understand. Whatever you say now at this moment, you'll have to stick to all through the investigation, maybe even through ——" Roy checked himself abruptly, but Jim finished:

"Through a trial? Well, that's all right."

Seabury said frankly, "He's right, Jim."

"But I didn't kill her! Nobody's going to prove I did."

Seabury was shaking his head again rather hopelessly. "Did you never hear of circumstantial evidence? She was murdered, you were here alone with her—except for the houseboys, too far away from the house even to hear the sound of the shot."

Roy said earnestly, "Knowledge of your own innocence is fine, Jim, except when it compels you to take dangerous risks. You've got to stop and think."

Jim's mouth was angry. "See here, Roy; and you, too, Seabury. Now that Hermione is dead the plantation will belong to me and my life will be here on the island. So that life's got to be free of suspicion. The only way I can start to clear it up is to tell the exact truth from the beginning."

Seabury listened for a moment to the storm, the wild rain, the roar of the wind; he glanced indecisively at Roy. "We can't do anything until the storm is over."

Roy said slowly, "We can phone Riordan and the Port Iles men."

"We will," said Seabury. "First, though, Jim, let me get this straight. How did you get back from Cienfuegos?"

"I got a fellow with a motorboat to bring me; we landed at the wharf at Beadon Rock."

"What time was that?"

"About an hour ago; I can't be sure. I walked up here from the village ——"

Seabury interrupted again. "See anybody?"

"Not that I remember. I struck across from the highway through the plantation, along the wagon road. I came up to Dick's cottage, intending to put myself up for the night there. I was just about to turn in when I heard the shot."

"Did you see anybody?" Seabury asked.

"I saw Hermione. I thought—as nearly as I can remember—'She's had an accident.' I ran to look, and just as I did it, I thought that I heard something in the shrubbery

JENNIFER

"So I told Margie if we keep pretending to pull our girdles down, everybody will think we're much older!"

Customs lost my bags and he found them. Mother warned me about strange men . . . but she didn't mention tall, terrific ones. So we met at lunch . . . dinner, too! Then one day at Chichicastenango . . . he kissed my hand! In fun? Maybe. But at Lake Atitlán, he kissed my hand again! Then he kissed me . . . while two huge volcanoes rumbled love songs.

GUATEMALA looked tall and terrific to Me!

NOW, don't think for one minute I believe Jergens Lotion gets-a-gal-herman . . . but it helps! After all, no other hand care keeps your hands so soft, so smooth, so ready to be kissed. Could be, that's why I packed Jergens Lotion with the rest of my Guatemala gear!

The skin on your hands is different . . . it needs the protection only a liquid can give. Being a liquid, Jergens Lotion furnishes the softening moisture thirsty skin needs. Two ingredients doctors use are in richer-than-ever Jergens Lotion. Never oily or sticky . . . Still 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax.

More women use Jergens Lotion than any other hand care in the world

Faster relief FROM PAINFUL DISCOMFORTS OF Arthritis, Rheumatism, Sinus, Hay Fever

THERAPLATE is the new scientific health ray discovery used by many leading hospitals to bring relief to patients suffering the pains of Arthritis, Rheumatism and Sinus conditions. Theraplate's longer, more penetrating infra-red health rays offer you faster, more satisfying relief from all chronic or temporary muscular discomforts. There is little surface heat, so you may take as long a treatment as you wish. Absolutely safe—No danger of over-exposure! Enjoy these soothing, gentle therapeutic treatments in the comfort of your own home. The convenient size of the new, portable model, enables you to use it any time, any place you desire. No bulbs to change—no parts to replace. Handsomely, durably constructed to last a lifetime. For complete detailed information about this amazing new therapeutic health ray, write for free booklet. See coupon below.

• No bulbs or parts to replace • Unbreakable glass heat panel • Operates on A.C. or D.C. outlet—110 or 120 volt circuit • No danger of over-exposure

THERAPLATE with deeper penetrating infra-red rays

INFRA-APPLIANCES CORP., 154 Nassau Street, New York 7, N. Y.

INFRA-APPLIANCES CORP.
154 Nassau Street
New York 7, N. Y.

Please send me your information booklet on the wonders of Theraplate

NAME (Please Print)
ADDRESS
CITY ZONE STATE

beyond the driveway. I couldn't be sure; it was very windy, gusts of wind, and everything happened at once."

"Did you see anybody running along the road or driveway?" Seabury asked, turning to Nonie.

"I didn't see anybody at all. I didn't even pass a car."

"A car could have been hidden almost anywhere in the thick shrubbery along the road. The rain has washed out tire marks by now—if there were any." Seabury sighed. "This is Dick Fenby's job. He's chief of police."

"Well, we'll have to do what we can ourselves," Jim said. "We'd better phone the commissioner at Port Iles."

Seabury said suddenly, "The doctor must see the body before we take her away."

Wind sifted through the hall; the curling bamboo screen across Hermione's bedroom door seemed to sway a little, as if Hermione herself were listening.

No one spoke for a moment; in the pause the door from the veranda was flung open. Dick Fenby, a sodden, wet figure, came in, caught the door, forced it to close and stood with his back against it. His gaze fixed itself on an object upon the table; he made a sudden lunge forward, picked up Jim's gun, turned it to his nose and sniffed at the barrel, and said loudly over the sound of the storm:

"What's happened? Whose gun is this anyway? It's certainly been fired within the last half hour; you can still smell the smoke."

Jim went to him and took the gun. "It's my gun. I fired it into the bushes when I thought I'd heard somebody there."

There was another sharp moment of silence; then Seabury rose. The look of intense, inward question had gone; he said, "Hermione Shaw was a woman of wealth. I was her lawyer; I know her will; I know all her circumstances. From now on, Jim, I'm afraid I'll have to act in my official capacity. Give me the gun."

Wind shook the house and wild rain drummed upon it; Seabury Jenkins took the gun, wrapping it in his handkerchief. Nonie watched, and again a wave of incredulity washed over her. She thought with a sense of horror, It's Jim! Jim they suspect, Jim they already think killed a woman.

But Dick had hated her too! He had said, defeated and helpless, "I'm still tied." Dick, however, had an alibi. She wished with all her heart that Jim had an alibi half as sound.

Roy rose abruptly and went to Jim. "That's all right. The slug that killed her can be proved not to have been fired from Jim's gun. This will clear you, Jim."

"Where's Hermione?" Dick asked. He seemed aware suddenly of the frozen stillness of their faces. "What's wrong? What are you looking at me like that for? That gun ——" He caught at Seabury. "Something's happened; I can tell. Is it Hermione? That's not my gun. I didn't do it."

Seabury snapped it up as a dog snaps up a bone. "Didn't do what, Dick?"

Jim's voice was angry and quick. "You can't question him now. He doesn't mean anything."

Dick said clearly, "Is it Hermione? What happened? Was she hurt?"

"She's dead," Roy said.

"Look out, Dick," cried Jim, and caught him as he stumbled forward, his face like chalk, half fainting, against a chair. He guided Dick into the chair and Dick put his face in his hands with a long, shivering sound like a moan. Seabury wiped his forehead with the back of his hand. Jim said, "We'll get some coffee into him; he'll be all right."

"That's a good idea." Roy came to Nonie and took her hand. "How about going out to the kitchen with Jim and fixing some coffee? It won't hurt any of us."

He wanted to get her out of the way; he wanted to protect her; it was like Roy. She rose and went with Jim.

However, she had only a moment alone with Jim, for they searched the house, rapidly, thoroughly, at Seabury's suggestion. "Robbery," Seabury said, "might have been the motive." But nothing was disturbed.

GOODBYE HEADACHE

If you have never tried Alka-Seltzer for headaches, find out how fast it works. There's nothing quite like Alka-Seltzer! It contains one of the world's most effective pain-relieving agents. It also contains alkaline buffers to speed relief. Alka-Seltzer's fizzing effervescence further speeds its pain-relieving action. The next time you have a headache, try Alka-Seltzer.

Alka-Seltzer

All drugstores U. S. and Canada

How to MAKE MONEY Pleasantly in your SPARE TIME

$1 PUTS YOU IN BUSINESS and brings you at least $3 worth of beautiful all occasion greeting card

Use them to sell or use them yourself. Y can make as much as $25 a day (100 profit on 50 boxes). Don't put it off! N experience necessary! Send $1 today an receive 2 fast-selling boxes, comple instructions, and catalog of big valu assortments. Money refund guarante

GREENBRIER STUDIOS, 15 A Medford St., Boston 14, Ma

AMAZING!! NEW!!

"DEW"

SPRAY DEODORANT

IN THE MAGICAL "SELF-ATOMIZING" BOTTLE

STOPS PERSPIRATION AND ODOR TROUBLES! Keeps you daintily pure, socially secure.

DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! "Dew" never touches hands. Not messy. Squeeze flexible bottle, spray on gentle mist.

ONLY DEODORANT CONTAINING "RETSELANE" to stop perspiration trouble, avoid perspiration stains on clothes. Removes odor.

WON'T ROT CLOTHES! Can't irritate normal skin.

SAVES MONEY! Full year's supply only 98¢ Plus tax Less than 2¢ a week

SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE! "DEW" ® SPRAYS ITSELF ON!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ABRIELEEN

he soft, wide permanent that Fashion favors

ur stylist create this hair style for you

BRIELEEN with Adepsol is the nd of permanent you've eamed about . . . completely rsatile and exquisite. It's autifully lasting too!

GABRIELEEN Cold Wave . . . achine.. or Machineless Waves your favorite beauty salon.

Distributed by

GIBBS & COMPANY

CHICAGO, ILL.

World's Largest Manufacturers and Distributors of Beauty Shop Supplies and Equipment

Stardust

Life-Insured Bra

GUARANTEED FOR 1 YEAR

Adorable You . . .

This new Stardust strapless bra assures perfect fit... NO slipping and NO discomfort! Rich acetate rayon satin, with cleverly placed steels.

NOW about $1.00

ND FORTUNE CAN BE YOURS . . .

d is lovely Cindy Lou Bayes, last st Beauty Contest winner. Enter 49 contest now. YOU may be the winner of $500 first prize plus a modeling and television career Harry Conover management, or 27 other awards! Just send non-returnable photo with height, weight, bust, waist and hip rements before May 1, 1949. Decisions of famous beauty judges al. Mail entry to P. O. Box 65, Murray Hill Station, New York.

STARDUST, INC. Empire State Bldg., N.Y. 1

LOOK FOR GENUINE Stardust SLIPS, UNDIES, GIROLES, GARTER BELTS, BRAS & BLOUSES

The bubbling coffee sent a warm and homely fragrance over the kitchen; Nonie went to the cupboard and got out cups and a tray. Roy was at the telephone; they could hear his voice. "Hello, doctor—can you hear me? I am at the Shaw place. Hermione's been shot."

Seabury went back into the hall. As Nonie reached for a pad with which to lift the coffeepot, Jim came to her. "Have you told Roy?"

She shook her head. "There wasn't time. Dick was there, and Lydia."

"You must tell him. It's only three days."

Roy said from the doorway, "Jebe's coming, Nonie. He'll take you home."

She lifted the tray with its clinking cups and Jim followed her back into the hall, carrying the steaming coffee. She was aware then of a lull in the wind and the rain.

Jim poured coffee. "Drink it, Nonie," Roy said. "Do you good. Jebe'll be here in a minute in the station wagon. I'll be home later." He turned worriedly to Seabury. "I think it's safe enough for her on the road in a car, don't you?"

Seabury nodded tersely. And certainly whoever had crept through the thick, tropical night to shoot Hermione Shaw on her own doorstep would not linger along the roads.

"There's Jebe, now," Roy said, listening. "Jebe or Riordan." He went to the door.

It was Jebe, his dark face frightened, full of question. And as he came up the steps another car came rapidly along the driveway.

"That's Riordan!" Seabury exclaimed.

"You'd better go along now, dear," Roy said.

"I'll take her to the car," Jim said quickly. "Come along, Jebe."

The secret of being tiresome is in telling everything. —VOLTAIRE.

She put down her cup and went with Jim, his hand warm and steady under her arm. The rain had gone, but everything glittered wetly. The violence of the storm had cleansed the veranda completely; certainly if there had been such things as clues, footprints, they had been washed away.

Jebe trudged along beside her toward the station wagon. So there was no chance to say even a word to Jim without Jebe hearing it. Jim opened the door of the station wagon. She slid under the wheel. Jebe was crawling into the seat beside her.

Jim's hand moved from her arm, against her fingers. "It'll be all right, Nonie. Believe me. Be careful driving; don't stop for anything. See you tomorrow."

Jim stood back; the car moved under her guiding hands, turned around the curve, its lights sending ghostly fingers ahead along the white shell driveway.

She turned into the public road again; it was a narrow road that wound along the coast, joining the village, the string of plantations like a small ribbon of civilization.

Thick shadows of banana trees on either side of the road almost met as the road turned and twisted; at last the outline of the coral-rock wall that marked the beginning of the Beadon place showed dimly white.

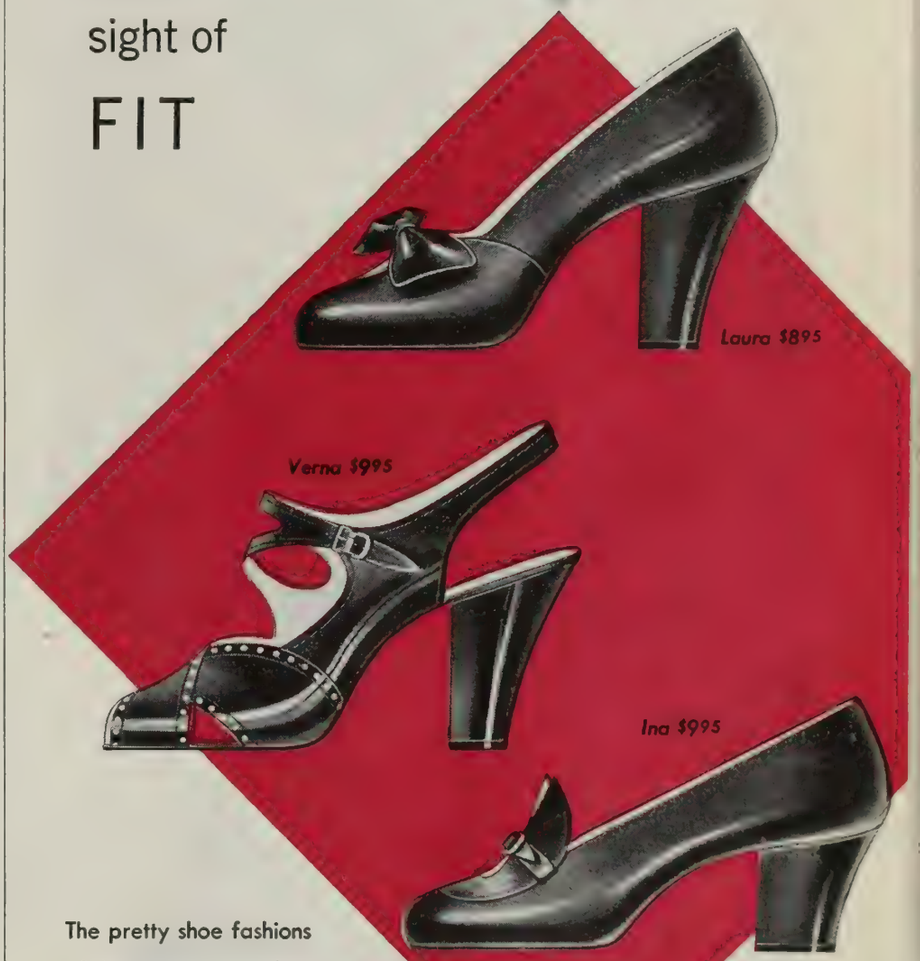
As she turned in at the big white gate, Jebe stirred; he said, "Miss Hermy was a hard woman. Some folks won't be sorry she's dead."

She edged the car around a clump of twisted palm trees. "Some folks?" she repeated.

"Oh . . . some folks."

Some folks. Nonie thought sharply, jolted into logic, Somebody on the island killed her. Somebody living on that small, extremely limited island

"Do you know of anybody who had a grudge against her, Jebe?"



In the dusk a slight motion on his part had the effect of an uneasy squirm. "Oh, no, Miss Nonie. Only she was a hard woman. Guess everybody knows that. Shall I take the car around to the garage?"

She brought the car to a stop. "Yes. I'll get out here."

Fashions...yes!

but we never lose sight of FIT

The pretty shoe fashions of the moment . . . always carefully worked out on the basic lines which make ENNA JETTICKS fit your feet so famously well. Prove it to your own satisfaction . . . see them now at your local dealer's.

ENNA JETTICK SHOES, INC.
Auburn, N. Y.

Some ENNA JETTICK Styles are made in an unusual range of sizes and widths

$7.95 to $9.95

Enna Jettick

America's Smartest Walking Shoes

® Fieldcrest TOWELS

CHARTREUSE • GULL GRAY • BING CHERRY

Three of many new

Decorator Colors

Quality Tested

Fieldcrest towels are quality tested at 29 points during manufacture to give you extra wear, extra luxury.

SHEETS • BLANKETS • BEDSPREADS • LACE TABLECLOTHS
THERMOSTATIC BLANKETS • CURTAINS • HOSIERY • RAYONS

FIELDCREST MILLS, Division of Marshall Field & Company, Inc., 88 Worth Street, New York 13, New York

Lights were on all over the house, but the shrubs made thick, deep shadows around her. And she didn't want to walk up that path to the house. She discovered it then. It was only a short distance; she could reach the steps by the time she counted to ten. But the thickness of those heavy shadows seemed to gather around her; not far away through the night murder had walked stealthily. She took a long breath, started toward the steps, and then suddenly ran, her slippers quick and light upon the path.

That was fear! Suddenly, running between those thick hedges, she remembered her uneasiness of that afternoon; she had been brushed then by fear and had denied it!

But there had been no reason for her fear; there was none now; murder had come to Middle Road, not to Beadon Gates.

Her heart was pounding when she reached the veranda. Aurelia Beadon heard the scurry of her footsteps and opened the door. Aurelia's thick gray hair was in a great braid over one shoulder, her massive figure was wrapped in a pongee robe, her full dark eyes anxious. "Nonie, my dear! I've been so worried! Is she dead?"

"Yes, Aurelia; yes!"

"Jebe said shot."

"Yes."

"Accident, of course! Surely it was an accident!"

"They say murder."

"Murder! Hermione—murder!"

She ought to have told Aurelia more carefully, Nonie thought, seeing Aurelia's ashy color. "Aurelia, I'm sorry. You must have known Hermione well."

For an instant Aurelia stared at her without seeing her; a long wave beat in upon the shore below and washed slowly out again. Then Aurelia seemed to come to herself. "Yes, I knew Hermione; I've known her for years. I—Nonie, do they know who killed her?"

"No."

Aurelia's eyes softened and seemed suddenly aware of her. "You poor child. It's been a terrible thing. You must go to bed."

But in the hall as Nonie started up the stairs Aurelia stopped her.

"Is there any evidence? Do they suspect anybody?"

Jim. But not because of evidence. "No," Nonie said with a kind of defiance. "No."

Her room was like a haven. The lights were on, the bed was turned down, the French windows were open to the languid, storm-weary night. Again a sort of wonder touched Nonie; nothing in the room was different.

What were they doing at Hermione's?

She slid out of her rain-soaked dress. Her sandals were wet, her hair damp; she was brushing it when Aurelia came, a tray with a vacuum bottle and a glass in her hands.

She poured out steaming, frothy milk. "Don't talk if you don't feel like it."

"I want to tell you. I want to tell you everything." But not quite everything; not why Jim came back.

Sipping the hot milk, she told Aurelia the brief story and Aurelia listened thoughtfully.

"HERMIONE was a very difficult woman," Aurelia said. "Probably some workman she quarreled with shot her. It is a terrible thing, but it can't be undone now. I'm sorry it happened just before the wedding. I expect we'd better change some of the plans."

Nonie caught so quick a breath that the hot milk choked her.

"We can't have a very gay party."

"Aurelia ——" Nonie began and stopped. Oh, Aurelia, everything has changed; more than you think; more than anyone dreams.

Aurelia said fondly, "The wedding must take place on Wednesday as we planned it. My dear, I wonder if I've told you how happy it has made me." She put her hand suddenly, lightly on Nonie's head and stroked back her hair. "Well, good night, my dear; try to forget as much as you can of this dreadful thi Think of Roy and of your wedding. Try sleep. You must be a beautiful bride, know." She smiled again and said, "An very happy wife, my dear," and went aw

Roy's happy wife; bringing to Bea Gates the kind of life that the rock-b gracious old house begged for as occupar It was going to be almost as difficult to Aurelia that it was not to be, as to tell R

What were they doing at Middle Ro Jim's home now, her home with him for the years of their life!

SUPPOSE Jim was charged with mur Suppose he had to undergo a trial! Her raced on and she thought, Suppose even the very worst, he was found guilty. She pu up the wild and galloping fear as if it checkreins. But Jim's safety came first.

Except she must tell Roy—and Aureli about the wedding. No wedding Wednesday. She had not thought of H mione's death as providing a possible exc for postponement. She wondered whether or not that might actually serv an excuse.

"I hated her," Jim had said. And D talking in a bitter, self-revealing moment fell in love a long time ago"; and then "I h you—but I'm still tied."

Jim and Dick. Were there other pe who hated Hermione?

The frankness and honesty of Jim's hat would not, in any way, mitigate for him ultimate regard of police. They could not saying, "Here is a r who hated her and sai and was heard to say He was also her neph he inherited property f her; he would never h been permitted by H mione to be anything b puppet, pulled by stri held in her own hands long as those hands life and strength—all t would add to the sum evidence against him. the main digit, the hea weight and balance, was hatred.

Flowers are often sensitive to noise. If you set a vase of carnations close to a noisy orchestra, you will find that in time they will turn away from the music, as if the sound was too much for them. Flowers are much like human beings: they catch cold from drafts, are stupefied by chloroform, and become intoxicated with alcohol.

—Progress Guide.

Violence, passion, hatred. In a queer w self-defense. So might Dick Fenby have m dered her, to save his own soul, too weak, sapped of strength by Hermione herself, save himself in any other way.

But Dick had no opportunity to kill H mione. Dick Fenby had an alibi, for D was in the car beside her within touch a reach of her hand at the time that shot w fired.

Well, then, who had killed her? A wo man, cherishing some kind of grudge? P haps somebody else who hated Hermio And who—like Dick, like Jim—might h struck in desperate defense. Somebody e But there were not many people who k her well enough to hate her. Murder imp a certain intimacy.

The events of the day went in an unceas whirl through Nonie's mind. She was wide-awake when at last a car came into driveway. She thought she heard voices; Aurelia was still downstairs, still waiting Roy. It was a long time, however, before heard steps on the stairs. Roy, of course; brisk, heavy steps were easily recogniza And Aurelia, and—she listened and thoug There's someone else. The police already?

Roy's heavy, quick footsteps stopped o side her door. "Nonie! May I come in?"

"Yes, of course." She found the light a snapped it on as Roy opened the door.

"Are you all right, my dear?"

"Oh, yes, Roy. What has happened? W have they done?" Have they arrested Jim Roy looked tired, his face sagged w weariness. He shook his head. "We know more than we did. We phoned Port H Talked to the commissioner; he'll be over the morning himself." Roy smiled at her assuringly. "Don't worry about that, thou They'll only ask you to tell what you s and it's little enough. As a matter of fa there's a real storm working up; this rain night was only a little preliminary scuf

The police commissioner is not likely to stay here at Beadon long."

"What did the police commissioner say?"

"Well, he didn't say anything much. He agreed that Jim and Seabury had had to move the body; he told us to get Doctor Riordan to look at it; he's the medical examiner for the island—but you know that. I said we'd already got him, and then Riordan talked to him. Riordan said she died instantly; that's a blessing. They wanted to know if she'd been robbed; wanted to know if anybody had threatened her."

"Threatened! What did you say?"

"Of course, the truth will come out. Her quarrel with Jim. And the fact that she came here and made a scene with Dick tonight."

"She fired Dick."

"Yes, but I don't think she meant it. And in any case, murdering her wouldn't get Dick's job back."

"He has an alibi," she said slowly. "He was with me in the car at the time when she must have been shot."

He nodded almost absently. He said, "I'm sorry, too, that it happened just now, Nonie. So shortly before our wedding."

But there is to be no wedding, Roy. She didn't say the words actually, but they were there, ready. She looked up and Jim was standing in the doorway looking at her with his heart in his eyes. Aurelia stood behind him.

Roy was rising. "I brought Jim back with me. He can't stay at Middle Road until the police get through with it." Roy leaned over and kissed her lightly. Jim, in the doorway, took a step forward, but whatever he meant to say was forestalled by Roy, for he turned toward Jim and said, "Jim, I'm going to give you some advice. Don't tell the police any more about your quarrel with Hermione than you have to."

"I said I'd kill her if I stayed."

"You didn't mean it—but it's the kind of thing the police will look for. Only Nonie and I heard you; neither of us will tell the police. But just don't"—he went to Jim and put his hand on Jim's shoulder —"just don't tell it yourself!"

AURELIA said, "No more talking now. It's very late. Come with me, Jim. I'll show you your room."

Jim shot a quick look at Nonie which could say nothing.

Roy said, "Aurelia's right. Good night, Nonie." He snapped out the table light and put his arm around Jim's shoulders. Aurelia led the way, firmly, into the hall.

Would Roy have welcomed Jim if he had known the truth?

She slept suddenly and deeply.

Morning set in very still, with the barometer falling, the police commissioner and two other men arriving from Port Iles, and the news of the murder already, by mysterious grapevine, having traveled the length and breadth of the island.

One of the little colored maids woke Nonie. She had in her hand a cup of hot and fragrant early coffee, and her pretty face was alert and curious as a terrier's. "Good morning, lady. Master said to wake you. The police are here."

Nonie took the extended cup, swallowed hot steaming coffee. "Police? Where are they now?"

"On the veranda."

"Did Mr. Beadon tell you to call me?"

"Yes, lady. Quickly, if you please. They wish to leave before the storm."

Nonie gulped the coffee, grateful for it and for the moment of respite it gave her. She got quickly into shirt, slacks and a sweater. She stopped for an instant at the mirror, and thought swiftly of the day before—when she had stopped like that on her way downstairs to meet Jim, and had seen in her face a look that ought not to have been there. She must talk to Roy. Her heart gave a sort of lurch; Wednesday was twenty-four hours nearer. She brushed back her hair quickly and ran downstairs.

As she reached the veranda door she paused; men were seated around a table with the remains of an early breakfast upon it. Roy was there, and Jim, and three strangers: one, a slight, wiry man with reddish hair,

(Continued on Page 153)

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

✓ Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

✓ Quickly, effectively removes dandruff from both hair and scalp!

✓ Gives fragrant, soft-water lather even in hardest water!

✓ Leaves hair lustrously soft, easy to manage—with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film ✓ Halo—not a soap, not a cream—contains no sticky oils, nothing to hide your hair's natural lustre with dulling film. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo brings out glossy, shimmering highlights the very first time you use it! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly, completely in any kind of water—needs no lemon or vinegar rinse. For hair that's naturally colorful, lustrously soft, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

DIAMOND JEWELRY BY CARTIER

Heavenly new spring shade

"Star Bright" NAIL BRILLIANCE BY CUTEX only 25¢ *

Pink just blushing into flame . . . that's "Star Bright," dream-come-true color for nails and lips. Very right with the new fashion colors. Very exciting in the most flattering, best-behaved nail polish and lipstick you ever wore.

Nail Brilliance is more than a luxurious glamour polish. Fantastically long-wearing! So immaculately pure and harmless—even women whose skins are allergic to other polishes tell us they can safely use lovely Nail Brilliance.

Cutex Lipstick is new make-up magic at its most alluring. Like clinging satin! Dare Cutex Lipstick today! In "Star Bright," and other shades to echo Nail Brilliance colors. Only 19¢.*

*PLUS TAX

(Continued from Page 151)

as talking; Roy was facing him, listening, nd Jim, his black head clear against the ray-black shadows beyond the railing, emed to be listening too.

She opened the door and Roy heard her nd rose, said, "I'm sorry to get you up so arly, my dear." He took her hand and led er toward the table.

She looked at Jim and he was looking at er, but she could discover nothing in his ook as to how the interview was going, what iew the commissioner took of the murder. im seemed white and tired and there was an ir of tension which her arrival did not break. hen Roy was introducing her to the men.

"Major Wells, the police commissioner or our district. Sergeant Morris, Sergeant onegan. This is my fiancée, Major Wells; ur wedding is to be this week."

Major Wells gave her a sharp, shrewd lance from small, very bright hazel eyes, nd bowed. "I congratulate you, Mr. Beaon. I am sorry that this unfortunate thing appened just now. I hope it will not change our plans for the wedding."

Roy replied, "Oh, no. It will be very uiet." He turned to Nonie. "My dear, hese gentlemen wish to hear about your rip to Middle Road last night. They haven't much time. Accordng to the weather arning, we are in for real storm and hey've got to get ack to Port Iles efore it breaks."

He pulled up a hair for her; Jebe put nother cup of coffee n the table before er. How had it gone o far with Jim?

Major Wells began uestioning her, poitely and quickly. "I nderstand that you rrived only a few minutes after Mr. haw claims he heard he shot and found hat his aunt had been nurdered. Will you ell me what you saw nd did?"

Claims. An invidious word, used in that way; a word that cast doubt, raised objections. She glanced at Jim again.

"Just tell them," Roy said encouragingly. 'It's only for the record. I've already told hem that Dick had had one over the eight nd that you took him to Middle Road."

She took a long breath and began. She had driven up to the steps; she had found Hermione's body on the steps. Jim had come to the door.

Major Wells said, "Did you hear the sound of the shot?"

"No." Was that a dangerous admission? Did it involve Jim? She saw that if she had heard the shot it would have substantiated Jim's statement, and consequently the time of the murder. "I was in the car," she added.

"You wouldn't have more than started from Beadon Gates then," Roy said. "Jim had had time to examine Hermione, and to make two telephone calls before you arrived."

"Did you see a gun anywhere?" Major Wells asked.

"No. That is"—Tell the truth, Jim had said—"there was only Jim's gun. On the table, in the hall."

Major Wells nodded. He knew about Jim's gun, then; that was all right. "Did you see anyone about the place? Besides Mr. Shaw, I mean. Or anyone along the road or driveway?"

"No one."

Major Wells' eyes were like bright little daggers, but showed no expression. "Is there anything at all that you can think of that might be evidence?" he said after a pause.

She shook her head. "Nothing."

Roy said, "I don't like to hurry you, major, but the sea is rolling up."

"I know, I know." The commissioner rose, picking up the sun helmet that lay on a near-by table. "We'd better get over to Middle Road and take a look there. Are you ready, Shaw?" His manner, his voice changed subtly when he spoke to Jim. Nonie was aware of it instantly.

"The car is this way," Roy said, and then turned to her. "My dear, I was sorry to have to send for you, but they are rather hurried."

She had to talk to him alone; obviously she could not just then.

Jim had gone on ahead. Roy turned briskly away, towering above the wiry little police commissioner. The sky was dark and seemed to hang so near that it almost touched the house; the sea was only beginning to glisten, away out toward the eastern horizon.

She sat down slowly at the lighted, littered table and Jim came back, running up the steps. "I said I'd forgotten a sun helmet," he said. "Look here, Nonie, it's all right. I'll have to get through all this, but it's all right."

She wanted to cling to him; she wanted to question. "Jim, tell me the truth. Are they going to arrest you?"

He looked back at her directly. "It's their job to hold me for inquiry. They may even have to make a formal charge. But it'll be all right. Now, then, about Roy and the wedding. I've got to stop that. We'll tell him together. Where's the helmet? Oh, here." He snatched it up from the chair. "Remember what I've told you."

Remember not to worry. Remember things will be all right. Remember Jim could not be charged and tried—or convicted—for murder because he didn't do it.

She watched him running across the veranda, his black head disappearing down the steps. The car started; the sound of the engine died rapidly away down the drive, muffled by the thick, encroaching hedges.

It was very quiet after they had gone; quiet and still dark, for dawn was slow in coming. She sat for a while, drinking the hot coffee. Aurelia obviously had slept late; servants were about, but there was no sound for a long time except the stirring of the birds and the wash of the waves.

Perhaps she sat longer than she meant to, entangled by her thoughts. Later it seemed to her that she had been gradually aware of sounds of the waking plantation. She rose and walked across the veranda and down the steps. The coffee had thoroughly roused her, the coming storm plucked at her nerves; she'd take a turn in the garden and then go back to sleep.

What were they doing now at Middle Road? Would they arrest Jim?

The hedges made a dark and leafy tunnel; her footsteps crunched softly upon the tiny white shells that paved the path. How frightened she had been the night before—running along that path, her flying skirts whispering of terror! Even now the soft crunch of the shells seemed to make a syncopated rhythm of her footsteps, like a soft pursuing echo, barely out of time.

The storm had strewn the path with torn leaves and broken branches. She stopped to pick up a broken loop of bougainvillaea.

She stopped, but the soft echo of her footsteps went on.

Only it was not an echo. Someone was walking with her, very lightly, very softly on the other side of the thick hedge.

Another woman took possession of Nonie's body; another woman cried out in her heart, telling her what to do; she whirled and ran, scrambling and slipping in the shells, ran and

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Green Song

By Elizabeth McFarland

Oh, the sword of the winter is keen
As an icicle's freezing blade;
But spring, with a lance of green,
Strides up the world unafraid!

And there shall be laughter and singing,
And a time for love and for mirth,
While the small, clenched fist of the crocus
Thrusts its green way through the earth.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Beauty is my business—

SAYS JUNE THOMPSON
Adorable Cover Girl

and My Delicate Skin Looks Softer... Smoother... Younger, Since I Changed to Gentle SWEETHEART Beauty Care

• "I never knew how fresh and clear my complexion could look when I was coasting along on casual skin care. Then I started to use only SweetHeart Soap for daily complexion care. The difference it made was wonderful to see. For in just one week my skin felt silken-soft and smooth. It looked rose-petal fresh and young!"

Like June, change to SweetHeart Beauty Care. Massage your face, every night and morning, with SweetHeart's soft, rich lather. Rinse with warm—then cold water. Do this for just one week. Then marvel at your complexion's new loveliness!

For SweetHeart's creamy lather has an amazing beauty action. Countless bubbles bathe the outer pore openings. Lift off—float away—dirt and rough skin flakes. In seven short days your skin looks softer . . . smoother . . . younger!

Beauty is our business, too!

• Kathleen and Maureen McGurk, 10 months old, are pretty twin models who enjoy their SweetHeart baths!

For baby's bath - for your family's tubs and showers—you can now also get pure, mild SweetHeart Soap in the new, large bath size.

SWEETHEART

The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

one of the most beloved perfumes

QUELQUES FLEURS (Pronounced "Kelka Flur")
Perfume $18.50, $12.50, $7.50, $3.50.
Eau de Toilette $3.75, $2.50.
Sachet Powder $1.75.
Bath Softener $3.50, $2.50.
Talcum Powder $1.00.
Dusting Powder $2.00.
(prices plus tax)

PAIN IN FEET, LEGS, HEELS?

Tired, aching feet, rheumatic-like foot and leg pains; callouses or sore heels are often signs of weak arches. Dr. Scholl's Arch Supports and exercise give relief by removing the cause, muscular and ligamentous strain. Help restore arches to normal. Expertly fitted and adjusted at Shoe Departments stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort shops in principal cities. See your Classified Telephone Directory.

Dr. Scholl's ARCH SUPPORTS

There is a Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Appliance or Remedy for Every Common Foot Trouble ran as in a dream, making no progress, always with sliding shells and hedges on either hand, so high she could not see above them, so thick she could catch no glimpse of movement through them. She reached the steps; she ran past the empty lighted table, the chairs pushed this way and that, the flung-down napkins as the men had left them; she did not stop until she was inside the house, gasping for breath.

Jebe, in the dining room, heard her and came; Jebe, when she had told him someone was in the garden, someone was furtively walking with her on the other side of the hedge, shook his head and mumbled and ran to call Aurelia.

Aurelia came at once, her face tired and lined, and sent Jebe to search the garden, taking Archie, the kitchen boy, with him.

Aurelia eyed her in a troubled way. "Could you have imagined it, Nonie?"

"There was someone. On the other side of the hedge."

"Who could it have been?"

"I couldn't see. The hedge is too thick."

Aurelia sat down with a sigh opposite Nonie and looked out across the veranda. Dawn had come, but there was no sun, only a pearly, subtly ominous light.

"Where is Roy? Where is Jim?"

"The police commissioner came from Port Iles. They've all gone to Middle Road."

Aurelia huddled her robe around her. "Nonie, are you sure you heard someone? You had a dreadful shock last night, of course; it would be natural for you to be nervous."

"Someone was there. It may have been only one of the boys. But there was something so"—she hunted for a word—"so stealthy about it. As if whoever it was didn't want to be seen. As if ——" As if he were stalking her, she thought. Nonie shoved her hands down tight into the pockets of her white slacks so Aurelia could not see them trembling.

Aurelia pushed back her heavy gray braid and sighed. "What did the police commissioner think of it all?"

"I don't know."

"Jim went with them to Middle Road, you said."

"Yes."

"I'm sorry Jim came back to the island last night. It puts him in a bad light." Aurelia broke off to listen. Sounds of lifted voices, exclamations, running feet came from the back of the house. "What's that?" Aurelia cried and hurried toward the kitchen, and Nonie followed.

A high babble of voices quieted at Aurelia's approach. Jebe stood in the center of the little ring of maids and cook and Archie, all of them looking at an object in Jebe's hands. They had found no one in the garden. No one was there. But someone had been there, for Jebe and Archie had found a machete.

The long sharp cane knife, with its wicked wide blade, looked like a cutlass in Jebe's trembling and frightened hands. He had found it near the hedge, flung down. It had not been there overnight; the handle was not wet, the blade was not rusted as it would have been.

Aurelia questioned Jebe and Archie and the cook, and the maids. In the end, if anyone knew anything of the machete, that knowledge was successfully concealed.

Aurelia sent for Smithson, the overseer. He came at once. He was a big, slow-spoken man, with blunt, honest features, and he did not relish the interruption. He had been supervising some loading, he told Aurelia. Her questions were rapid and to the point.

"You know about the murder last night, Smithson?"

"Yes, Miss Beadon."

"Miss Nonie thought someone was hiding in the garden a while ago. She was frightened and came to the house. Jebe found no one in the garden, but he found this."

The overseer looked at the machete and said nothing.

"Is a cane knife missing?"

He shrugged. "That is not possible to say, Miss Beadon."

Aurelia hesitated. "What about the men? Could one of them have come to the house this morning?"

"I don't think so, Miss Beadon. Everybody was present and accounted for. We're very busy just now."

"You're a good overseer, Smithson," Aurelia said. "You don't miss much. I'll not keep you any longer."

He gave the machete another long, deliberate look. "Anybody on the island could have got hold of a cane knife. If I were you, Miss Beadon, I'd let Mr. Beadon know about this."

"Yes, you're right, Smithson," Aurelia said. "He's busy at Middle Road, but—yes, I'd better let him know. Thank you."

The overseer made a short, grave bow and went away.

"We'll phone to Roy," Aurelia said.

She did the telephoning herself from the old-fashioned telephone fastened upon the pantry wall, the only telephone in the house. Nonie could hear Roy's exclamations, the short, sharp sound of his questions.

Aurelia turned. "He wants to talk to you."

She took the receiver from Aurelia's hand. "Yes, Roy?"

"Nonie, my dear, are you sure you are all right?"

"Yes, yes."

"Don't go out of the house. I'm coming right away. Darling, you aren't hurt?"

"No. I didn't really see anybody. I only heard ——"

"But somebody was there, and we'll smoke him out. I'm coming ——"

Suppose it was her imagination; suppose she had only thought she heard that furtive companion! "Roy, could the knife have been left there by accident?"

His voice, firm and brisk over the wire, denied her uncertainties. "We'll soon find out. Put Aurelia on again, will you?"

She did so. And thus watched Aurelia's face as Roy's voice came over the wire. She could not understand his words, but when Aurelia presently put up the receiver, she cried, "What is it, Aurelia, what has happened?"

Aurelia gave her a long, troubled look. "They are going to arrest Jim."

A giant hand squeezed down upon her heart. Not so soon. Not Jim! "He couldn't have killed her!"

Aurelia's fine full eyes, so like Roy's, gave her a long, observing look. "My dear, Roy will do everything he can to help Jim. And believe me, Roy has position and influence here. Now then, try to get some rest. I'll have Smithson send men to search the place."

Nonie cried, "Suppose Roy can't help him. Suppose ——"

"Now, now," Aurelia put a comforting arm around her and led her toward the hall. "No matter what happens, we won't let it interfere with the wedding. That is your day, and Roy's." (Continued on Page 156)

AS PERKY AS AN EASTER HAT!

Many readers tell us that each time the JOURNAL comes—with menus, fashions, short stories, serials and all the extra features—it perks them up like a new hat!

If the JOURNAL gives you a lift, chances are it will do the same for a friend or relative. And a subscription makes such a grand gift for Easter. Or birthdays! To order a full year, just mail us $3; or $5 if you wish to include your own renewal. An attractive card will be sent to announce your gift.

Send your remittance to Dorothy Baker, Box 845, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

All nylon from tiny stitches to delicate embroidered sheer trimming. About $6.00.

Fluid Loveliness IN TEXTRON'S NEW NYLON CREPE DRESS-SIZED SLIP

New nylon beauty for you. Pretty as an underwater garden . . . soft as sea moss. Textron's miracle crepe slip of 100% nylon! Washes like sheerest stockings—no ironing needed. Stays ever new—never shrinks, and it's sized to fit like your dresses, too. Choose it in Pale Coral Pink, Deep Black, or Whitecap White in dress sizes 12 to 20. At leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF

ENSWEAR • BLOUSES • HOSTESS COATS • TRICOT LINGERIE • WOVEN LINGERIE

"I dress for an evening date... at 8 o'clock in the morning!"

1. "For my everyday duties, a smart, sophisticated bronze and black taffeta and wool ensemble, studded with scatter pins. And, of course, I rely on gentler, even more effective Odorono Cream . . . because I know it protects me from perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!"

New Odorono Cream brings you an improved new formula in a bright new package. Stays creamy smooth, too . . . even if you leave the cap off for weeks!

2. "For my evening date, I remove the jacket and set off the gleaming dress with a tawny leopard print stole, black velvet belt and gloves. I'm confident of my charm all evening, too, thanks to new Odorono Cream . . . because the Halgene in Odorono gives more effective protection than any deodorant known."

It never harms fine fabrics, and is so gentle you can use it right after shaving! You'll find it the perfect deodorant.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!

(Continued from Page 154)

Nonie went up the stairway quickly—as if she could escape the picture Aurelia's words induced. Herself walking down the quiet aisle of the little church to marry Roy. While Jim, somewhere on another island, was under arrest, awaiting trial for murder. But even if they arrested Jim, even if there was a trial for murder, she loved him and could wait for him.

Suppose twelve good men and true decided he was guilty!

Thoughts are like beasts sometimes to be fought away from the citadel of the heart; she fought that one, but it was to lie, like a beast, waiting to pounce at any unwary moment.

The little maid had already put the room in order. Nonie went out onto the balcony and looked down toward the garden with its thick hedges between which she had walked. Who had walked with her—like a beast, too, skulking, stealthy? That beast had left a man-made weapon when it fled.

The knife could have been left by mistake, carelessly. There was no reason for anybody to attack her, no reason for anybody to creep stealthily along near her with a machete in his hand.

Voices were raised suddenly beyond the trees in the direction of the many sprawling outbuildings; and at almost the same time a car sped along the highway and turned in at the gates. It brought Roy and Major Wells and one of the police sergeants.

Roy came running up the stairs. "Nonie ——"

Smithson's men were coming to hunt through the garden; she could hear their shouts, see their running figures. She went quickly to meet Roy and he caught her in his arms.

"Nonie, what happened? If anybody touches you I'll string him up on the highest tree on the island."

Roy's arms were kind and reassuring and it was the warm and comforting embrace of a friend; how could she have thought that it was anything else?

Major Wells, standing in the doorway, said, "May I question her, Mr. Beadon?"

Roy turned. "Yes, yes, certainly, major. That is, if you don't mind, Nonie?" He looked down at her. "No matter what it was, you've had a bad fright. If you don't want to talk of it now, it's all right. He'll wait."

"I'm afraid I can't promise to do that, Mr. Beadon," Major Wells said, pleasantly but quickly. "You see, if there really is anything to this—I beg your pardon, Miss Hovenden, but we must make due allowances for nerves, you know."

"See here, sir," Roy said, "if Miss Hovenden says somebody was there, somebody was there!"

"Oh, yes, quite. Well, perhaps you'll tell me exactly what happened."

And of course there was nothing to tell—the echo of her footsteps, a machete. Major Wells listened, his bright, small eyes seeming to bore into her face. When she finished he sat for a moment without speaking. Roy waited, too, listening and watching.

Finally Major Wells sighed. "I don't like that machete business. On the other hand, honestly, Miss Hovenden, don't you think it possible that your imagination may have deceived you? After last night and the shock of finding Miss Shaw like that?"

She shook her head; he must have read the conviction in her eyes, for he sighed again and looked at Roy.

"Even if someone were there, it doesn't mean that he intended to attack Miss Hovenden. All we have to go on actually is an impression of danger which she herself admits was only an impression, the sound of someone walking, and a machete, which could easily have been left there by almost anyone."

"On the other hand, major, don't you realize there's murder loose on the island?"

Major Wells' lips thinned. "That's w I'm here. That's why I'm going to have arrest young Jim Shaw."

"But I tell you ——"

"Mr. Beadon, I have to tell you that p sonal feeling, friendship, all that cannot allowed to weigh as proof of innocen Young Shaw admits he quarreled with h he admits he left the island only to return night, when nobody was likely to see hi He can't give a sound reason for returnin He was her heir; he inherits a large tr fund. He ——"

"But look here, major," Roy cried. "Do you see? If Hermione's murderer is loose the island, if he tried to attack Nonie t morning with that machete, then it isn't J Shaw. Jim was with you when it happene You were questioning him alone."

Nonie's heart gave a leap upward; w hadn't she thought of that? An alibi, something so like one that it might help clear him! Then she realized that the shrew bright eyes of Major Wells were scrutini ing her face. "Perhaps that has already o curred to Miss Hovenden," he said.

Roy was red with anger. "Do you mean say, Major Wells, that you doubt Mi Hovenden's word? Do you dare suggest th she is lying to you?"

"Mr. Beadon, this is an inquiry in murder. I don't accuse Miss Hovenden lying. I only say that if this—this incide she has told us can be proved to have been attempt to injure her, it would go far to cle Jim Shaw. So any friend of young Shaw might have arrived at the same conclusi and invented such an incident."

"But she'd have no i terest in trying to cle Jim Shaw. She ——"

Major Wells interrupte again. "How well do yo know Jim Shaw?" he aske Nonie directly.

Well enough to love hi all my life. Well enough t lie for him if I knew ho The words almost spok themselves.

"I understand that you took Shaw in th motorboat to Elbow Beach, Miss Hovenden Did he say then that he intended to return?"

That question, at least, was safe. "No," she replied.

Major Wells turned, frowning, to Roy "That's a question he's got to answer. Wh did he come back? What about a girl? Shaw is young. There must be a girl somewhere Suppose that was the real reason for hi quarrel with his aunt! If he wanted to marry and support a wife and Hermione Shaw blocked him, it would strengthen his motive."

"It is not fair of you, major, to build a cas against Jim like this! And the only girl o the island is my fiancée."

It seemed to Nonie that Major Wells pause before replying was a little too long, little too deliberate. Had he plucked her ow thoughts out of the air? But he said the coolly, "She needn't be here on the island."

Roy said, "There's no girl. And don't for get, Jim was with you this morning whe somebody with a machete ——" He broke off and wiped his face with his handkerchief "Major, don't you realize what this means?"

Major Wells nodded thoughtfully. "Have your men continue their search; have them questioned; if somebody came along the road or slid through the palmettos—if some stranger has been hiding here or at the Shaw plantation, somebody will have seen him."

"How about fingerprints on the machete?"

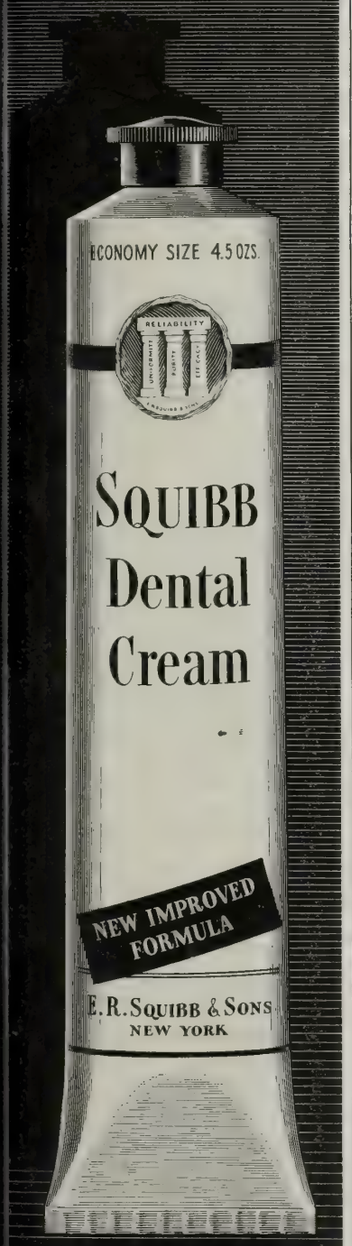
Major Wells shrugged. "Probably every body has handled it by now. Of course, the cold fact is that even if this was actually an attempt on Miss Hovenden's life, it would still not clear Jim Shaw."

Roy stared at him and laughed shortly. "Major Wells, I don't believe there are two murderers loose on the island. It's against the laws of probability and averages."

"But it's legally possible. However, that's beside the point right now. And I must say, man to man, I'm inclined to agree with you. Miss Hovenden, I want to tell you some-

(Continued on Page 158)

If people liked to work, we'd still be plowing the ground with sticks and transporting goods on our backs.



—WILLIAM FEATHER: Haystacks and Smokestacks (William Feather Co.).

3 reasons for the extra clean feeling...

action of magnesium hydroxide

real peppermint for taste and breath better penetration between teeth priceless ingredient of every product the honor and integrity of its maker

Doctor Riordan frowned. "Sometimes no reason is needed. The whole point is the unreason ——" He broke off to listen. A car was coming up the drive. "That sounds like Roy now," he said.

Aurelia went to the balcony and looked down. "Yes, it is." She turned back into the room. "The men from Port Iles are with him. I'd better go down; they've had no lunch."

The doctor sighed as Aurelia went away, and fastened the lock on his bag. "The slug's in my bag right now," he said with candid ruefulness. "To tell you the truth, I want to get rid of it. A man's life depends on it. It's jury evidence, factual evidence."

Someone was running up the stairs. Nonie knew it was Jim.

She started to the door to meet him and Doctor Riordan was beside her, his bag in his hand. In the same instant she was aware of a subtle change outside, a kind of stir and movement, a darkening, an eeriness, so the shape of things seemed distorted and wrong.

The doctor whirled around to give a quick look toward the balcony; the palm trees clattered and shook. He said, "The storm's here!"

Jim came quickly into the room. "Nonie, what happened? They told me ——"

Jim, solid and real, seemed to steady the whole world; nightmares, terror—furtive footsteps beyond a hedge—had no place in the sane and normal fortress his very presence seemed to build up around her. It was so strong and welcome a fortress that for an instant she questioned her instinctive fear of the morning.

She said abruptly, "It was silly of me to run like that; not to wait and see ——"

His gray eyes deepened. "It was the most sensible thing you ever did in your life," he said tersely.

Doctor Riordan said, "Well, there's a bright side to it. Whether it was just some field hand, caught where he ought not to be and afraid to admit it, or whether it was actually the fellow that shot Hermione, it may work out to your advantage, Jim. As long as there is any possibility that he meant mischief, it ought to clear you."

Jim glanced at the doctor; and some of the drawn and tense look went out of his face. "Thanks, Riordan. I'm beginning to find that the position of prime suspect is not a very pleasant one. Oh, I've got to wade through the inquiry. With luck we'll find out who killed her. I've got to live on this island."

Doctor Riordan's thin face tightened. "You've got to live! That comes first. Discovering who actually shot Hermione should rate second."

"The slug will do that," Jim said.

Doctor Riordan's face still had a grim and taciturn expression. "It'll help by proving it wasn't fired from your gun, if that's what you mean. It won't prove that you didn't hold the gun that fired it."

"It might," Jim said. "It might, if we can find the gun."

"They haven't succeeded in doing that yet?"

Jim shrugged wearily. "It's too easy to get rid of a gun. But they've started the search. It'll turn up somewhere."

Doctor Riordan said, "Don't count too much on that, Jim. If I wanted to get rid of a gun all I'd have to do would be to toss it into the sea, throw it in some swamp! Shove the thing under a mangrove thicket! Who's ever to find it? And even if you find the gun, you've still got to find the hand that held it."

Jim nodded and gave Nonie a sudden smile. "We'll get some clues. There must be something—somewhere; there's got to be."

She smiled, too, hoping her lips denied the fear in her heart.

The doctor said briefly, "I'm sure I hope so, for your sake, Jim. Do you want to see the slug? I've got to turn it over to Major Wells."

"Have you got it? He . . . look here, he's gone!"

"Gone! Already?"

"Back to Port Iles. Just now. Trying to beat the storm. At least he was about to leave when I came upstairs. We'd better get

So soft
so strong because it's double!

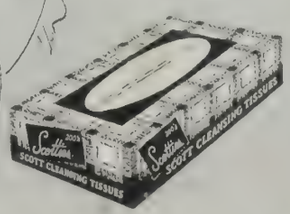
Yes, Scott's Soft-Weve is really soft—but strong and practical, too! The reason? It's actually two layers of tissue! Try it today and discover the difference for yourself . . .



Cleansing tissue soft
...toilet tissue firm

"Soft-Weve" "Scotties" "soft as old linen" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Scotties* are softies!

* another tissue by Scott that's "soft as old linen"

MARTEX TOWELS — A PRODUCT OF WEST POINT MANUFACTURING CO. ★ WELLINGTON SEARS CO. • SELLING AGENTS • 65 WORTH ST., NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

down there and try to stop him. He'll want that slug!"

But it was too late. Roy was standing on the pier, his figure clear and sharp in the yellow light. The police commission's motorboat was streaking through the inky, already turbulent sea toward Port Iles.

"He's running it fine," Doctor Riordan said, watching.

Roy began to climb the steps.

"Where's the slug?" Jim asked, watching Roy's tall figure, bent forward against the force of the wind.

The doctor motioned toward his bag. "Here."

"What was it? What caliber?"

"I don't know. There was only one, and it was fired at fairly close range." The doctor looked worried. "Major Wells ought to have it. That business of photographing a bullet requires a certain kind of instrument."

"Hang on to it," Jim said. "So far it's the only thing in the shape of a clue we've got."

The door from the hall banged, a sharp staccato sound amid the crash of the waves and the clatter of the palms; Aurelia came across the veranda toward them. "Where's Roy? Has Major Wells gone?" She looked distracted, smoothing back her hair as another hot blast seemed to sweep from nowhere, from everywhere. Roy came up the veranda steps toward them and Aurelia said quickly, "Roy, did he leave?"

"He went back to Port Iles. So we've got a respite, thank God." Roy sank down into one of the chairs.

Jebe, inside, was closing shutters, fastening them securely with great bolts, designed to hold against hurricane winds. Already they had to raise their voices to be heard above the wind and the waves.

Aurelia said anxiously, "What did he decide to do? When is he coming back?"

"As soon as the storm is over. He's set an inquest for next week; depending on circumstances, of course. He left orders with Dick ——"

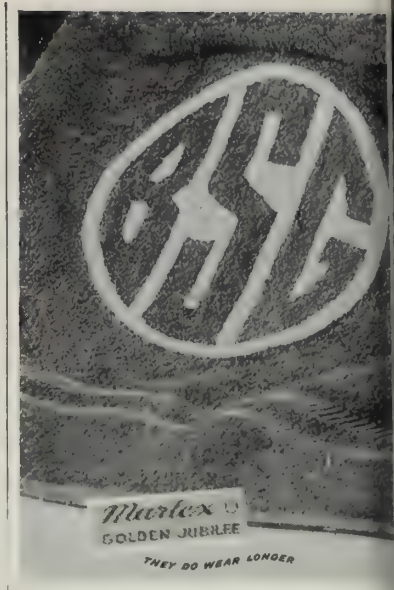
"Orders?" the doctor said sharply. "What kind of orders?"

"Oh, to check everybody's story of the night. Make inquiries. Try to find the gun. We'll all have to help." He gave a quick weather-wise look at the sea and sky, and got up. "I've got to see Smithson. It's going to be a real storm, no doubt about that."

"I'll get along too." Doctor Riordan started for the steps. "I've got some sick calls to make before it gets too bad."

"You've all got to have food first," Aurelia said with decision. "It's on the table. A cold buffet. We couldn't do much else at this hour of the day. But you've got to eat sometime."

It was not, properly speaking, lunch; it was not dinner; it was food eaten in a darkening world, with candles lighted and flickering, in a strange, untimely dusk. The storm usurped the premier place just then over the problems of Hermione's murder; nevertheless, the latter remained and would remain when the storm had passed.



Jim sat at Aurelia's left and said little. Roy sat at the head of the table, looking in that flickering light like one of his own ancestors stepped from the gilt frame on the wall and into a planter's khaki shirt. Doctor Riordan, Nonie realized suddenly, was talking in a philosophical mood about the weather.

"—— the queerest thing," he said. "Man makes rules, man makes plans and counterplans, and then some bit of wind away off somewhere kicks itself up and whirls and whirls, faster and faster, and all at once gets out of bounds and sweeps across everything, taking all before it, and we're still helpless. Still creatures of our environment. Still earth-bound in spite of all the hundreds of years we call civilization. . . . I've got to get along. Thank you, Aurelia; I did need some food."

Roy rose too. "If it's more convenient to stop here overnight when you come back, be sure to do it. That coast road can be dangerous."

"Thanks, Roy, I will."

Aurelia said, "The storm can't last long, not this time of the year. Surely it will blow

YOU can get

Martex "Golden Jubilee" tow

and have it monogrammed

shown at left—in most good st including those listed below

BALTIMORE
Hochschild, Kohn & Co.
O'Neill & Co.
Stewart & Co.

BIRMINGHAM
Loveman, Joseph & Loeb

BOSTON
T. D. Whitney Co.
R. H. White Corp.
Makanna, Inc.
Colten Abelson, Inc.
R. H. Stearns Co.

BUFFALO
Flint & Kent
Hens & Kelly, Inc.

CHICAGO
The Fair
Madigan Bros.
Shaxted and Company
Mandel Brothers, Inc.
Avenue Linen Shop

CINCINNATI
Alms & Doepke Co., The
Mrs. H. Gattle Linen Co
The John Shillito Co.

CLEVELAND
The Bailey Co.
The Fries & Schuele Co.
The Halle Bros. Co.
Higbee Co.

COLUMBUS
F. & R. Lazarus Co.

DETROIT
J. L. Hudson Co.

INDIANAPOLIS
L. S. Ayres & Co., Inc.

JAMAICA
B. Gertz, Inc.

LOS ANGELES
Barker Bros.
Grande Maison De Blanc, Inc.
The May Co.

MILWAUKEE
T. A. Chapman Co.

MINNEAPOLIS
The Baker Co.
Dayton Co.
Mrs. Ruth Herrick
New England Furniture Co.

NEW ORLEANS
D. H. Holmes Company, Ltd.

NEW YORK
Bloomingdale B
Fertig's Fifth Ave
Gimbel Brothe
Léron, Inc.
Mosse, Inc.
Saks Fifth Aven
John Wanamak

NEWARK
L. Bamberger &
Hahne & Co.

PHILADELPHIA
Gimbel Brothers
Lit Brothers
C. A. Rowell
N. Snellenburg &
Strawbridge & Clot
John Wanamake

PITTSBURGH
Boggs & Buhl, In
Gimbel Brothers
Joseph Horne Co
John Martin, Th
Linen Store

PROVIDENCE
Shepard Compan

READING
C. K. Whitner C

ROCHESTER
McCurdy & Co., I
Sibley, Lindsay
Curr Co.

SAN FRANCISC
City of Paris
The Emporium

ST. LOUIS
Famous-Barr Co
Scruggs-Vandervoo
Barney, Inc.
Stix, Baer & Fuller

SCRANTON
Cleland & Simpson

SEATTLE
Frederick & Nelson,

SYRACUSE
Dey Bros. & Co.

TACOMA
Rhodes Bros.

TRENTON
H. M. Voorhees & Br

WASHINGTON, D.
Julius Garfinckel & C
S. Kann Sons Co.
Woodward & Lothro

t soon; don't you think so, Roy? I do to be a clear and sunny day Wednesmoving to the door hospitably with Riordan, did not hear; Jim, rising, swift glance at Nonie which said, s the time to tell him."

ose, too, quickly, girding herself for a moment or two the saying of those and irrevocable words would be over.

lia, still preoccupied with the plans d nothing to do with the storm, with , said worriedly, "I telephoned the Nonie. The mail boat didn't come in rning; they were afraid of the storm. package didn't come."

age. She looked at her blankly and said, shaking her head and smiling: , dear, your jewels. Your mother's for you to wear. They ought to have re long ago."

nother's pearls, of course; to wear with te dress and the softly veiled hat that now in Aurelia's great wardrobe.

ion must have deepened her look of ess, for Aurelia's little smile changed of great kindness and affection.

ar, you mustn't think of the terrible hat happened last night. We'll go on nadn't happened." She patted Nonie's nfortingly and to give Jebe lirection about ıse.

ie followed Jim ıe hall. Lights n now every- yet they did spel the gloom imness of the with all the shutters closed olted, and the uralness of at that hour to the feeling angeness the island had on. The crash sea against the below was there; and it ill not the time l Roy. Dick stood in the truggling out of s, panting and breathless, standing as Doctor Riordan picked up his bag he long table and took a long breath lf before opening the great door and earing into the clamor and wild wind e.

l as the door banged behind him, Lydia tt, patting her hair into shape, came the library where she had apparently er raincoat; her red hair was wildly , her green dress looked extraordinarily ydia!" Roy cried. "How did you get " brought her," Dick said.

A pushed and patted the deep thick s of her red hair. "I do hope I'm wel- Roy. Do you mind if I stay here until torm is over? Would Aurelia mind?" elighted," Roy said. "You shouldn't one in your house just now. The storm be a bad one. And until we round up llow that shot Hermione, no one on the l is safe. Much better that you came " dia shot a smiling glance at Nonie. 're sure you don't mind? I mean— just before the wedding, you know. Un- ou've changed your plans?"

Why should the plans be changed?" asked shortly.

surge of wind fell upon the house so rily that the sturdy old walls seemed to e. Roy listened, all of them listened.

y said, "It's going to be a bad one. I've o see Smithson."

n said quickly, "I'll go with you."

relia. at the dining-room door, cried lia!" in a tone of surprise.

dia's green eyes were lambent. "Roy me to stay, Aurelia. Frankly, I felt uneasy alone—after what happened last night."

"Oh." Aurelia's voice was flat and toneless, yet Nonie felt disapproval and chill. "Of course, since you are here, you must stay."

The light in Lydia's eyes flashed brighter; she opened her red lips to speak and Roy said briskly, "Well, well, come along then, Jim."

They didn't pause for oilskins, but hurried out. Jim did not look at Nonie as he went.

"Have you a bag with you?" Aurelia asked Lydia.

"It's here." Dick went to the library door and picked up a brown calfskin bag.

Lydia said, smiling, her eyes very bright, "You see, I came prepared to stay."

"I'll show you your room," Aurelia said stiffly. "This way." She started up the stairs and Lydia waited an instant, her eyes lighted and, somehow, angry. Then she shrugged and followed.

Dick glanced toward the dining room. "I'm hungry," he said, and sighed. "Nonie, I want to say it now: I'm sorry about last night."

"That's all right, Dick. Forget it. You'd better eat something. Jebe!" The houseman's white coat was disappearing into the pantry and she called him back. "Get a plate for Major Fenby, please."

Dick ate slowly and wearily and said nothing. And he was finishing when Roy and Jim came back. Roy came to the dining-room door and Jim had not yet told him. Nonie knew it at a glance. Roy looked blown and buffeted by the wind, his vigorous gray hair disheveled, his glasses in his hand, but his look of kindness and affection was the same.

He said approvingly, "Glad you're getting some food into you, Dick. It's been a tough day. But if it had to storm, frankly, I'm glad it came just now and we got rid of Wells. I'd rather we'd settle our own affairs. It's our island."

Dick nodded. And Nonie took a long breath and rose and went to Roy. She said, "Can we go to your study, Roy?"

He glanced down at her quickly, as if he sensed something in her look or words. "Of course," he said at once, and led the way to the book-lined room across the hall. Jim was there, waiting. Roy's eyes were puzzled. He looked at Jim and looked at her. "What's wrong? You've got something to tell me. Something ——" His eyes sharpened. "So you did see something last night. Evidence—clues ——"

Nonie took a long breath. "Roy, I've got to tell you. I'm sorry —— When I promised to marry you, I didn't know—I didn't realize—I discovered only yesterday ——" She was doing it badly, fumbling for words.

Roy said, "What's wrong, Nonie? Have you had bad news from home? What ——"

"No, no! Roy, it's about our marriage."

"Our marriage! What are you trying to say?" He glanced suddenly at Jim and said, "What has Jim to do with that?"

Jim came forward, his face grave; he put his hand on Roy's desk. "Roy, I love her. I want her to marry me."

After a long moment Roy said slowly, "So that's why you came back. Major Wells said there must be a girl."

"Roy, listen—let us tell you ——"

"Wait," Roy said. He took off his eyeglasses and rubbed his forehead. "So that's why you came back," he said again.

The rush of wind and sea tore at the island, shook the house, but within the library there was a small area of silence. After a long

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Greening Year

By Daniel Whitehead Hicky

Now in the greening of the year
One thing to every man is clear:
April's a boy's supremest hour,
When every seed becomes a flower,
And in the trembling of each sand
His eyes behold a hidden Hand,
A Hand that steers cloud-galleons through Wide April's skies of boundless blue,
And carries him, for an hour or so,
To all the ports a dream may go.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Be glad there's something special about your hair —and give it the special care it deserves . . . every day!

Different hair problems need different care—the specialized kind of care you get with Ogilvie Sisters PREPARATION for DRY HAIR . . . or with Ogilvie Sisters special-purpose SHAMPOOS. If your hair is a problem—the right answer is Ogilvie Sisters specialized HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Ogilvie Sisters
HAIR PREPARATIONS
at drug and department stores

CASTILE SOAP SHAMPOO • CREME SHAMPOO WITH LANOLIN • PERMANENT WAVE SHAMPOO • CREME-SET • HAIRBRUSHES • POMADES • FRAGRANCES

Free! Write for "The Secret of Lovely Hair" to Ogilvie Sisters, 604 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 20, Dept. L-4

A photographer's model in spite of having had Varicose Veins!

"I have had four pregnancies," writes Mrs. Felicia Hutcheon, New York photographer's model and recent beauty contest winner. "And I have relied exclusively on Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings for comfort and improved appearance. I don't know what I would have done without them."

If you suffer from the pain and unsightliness of surface varicose veins or swollen legs, chronic or with pregnancy, this may mean new beauty and new relief for you.

Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings are genuine two-way stretch, lightweight, neutral in tint, with authentic fashioned leg and instep. They withstand repeated launderings.

Elastic STOCKINGS
A product of
BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

If your doctor recommends elastic stockings . . . then be sure you get Bauer & Black . . . almost invisible for beauty, firmly supporting for comfort.

At drug, department and surgical stores

WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET

BAUER & BLACK, Dept. U9-4
Division of The Kendall Company
2500 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago 16, Ill.
Please send me the free booklet "New Comfort and Relief for You."

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State_____

moment Roy went to the swivel chair and sat down. He didn't look at Jim; he didn't look at Nonie, but only sat there, staring at the desk, leaning forward a little.

Jim said, "We didn't mean it to happen. Believe me, Roy."

Wind pushed at the shutters behind him as if it resented man-made barriers and was determined to do away with them.

Roy said at last, heavily, "I'll not make Nonie marry me if she doesn't want to."

"I know exactly what my position is now," Jim said. "But I'll be cleared, I've got to be. And then ——"

"They hang people for murder," Roy said gravely. "Our legal machinery works slowly; it works on our island, though—first through Dick and Seabury because they are officials. In a way through me because I've got a certain influence here. But in the end there's got to be a trial and a verdict. I'm not trying to frighten you, Jim. I don't want you hanged for Hermione's murder."

"I didn't kill her," Jim said.

"All right; I believe you. But—Nonie—this has been a blow. We'll not talk of that now,—I do not believe that either of you meant it to happen. But . . . we've got to think."

Jim moistened his lips, and with a rather desperate glance at Nonie he said, "But the wedding ——"

Aurelia, behind them, said, "The wedding will take place as arranged, of course." None of them had known she was there, just inside the door. The rim of light from the lamp fell far short of that end of the room and Aurelia, with her beige shantung and her pale face, looked ghostly standing there. Her eyes were blazing. She said to Jim, "I believed you, Jim. I said you couldn't have killed Hermione. But if you can do this thing to Roy, your best friend, you could do anything. For Nonie's sake, for Roy's, I insist the marriage take place!"

A wise head knows that what appears to be a studied insult may be no more than some man's indigestion or woman's indisposition, to be treated as such, and explained by quiet talk.

—RUDYARD KIPLING.

Jim started toward her, but she repulsed him with a gesture of something like hatred.

"You've done an unforgivable thing, Jim, and I'll never forgive you. That is," she amended her own words swiftly, "you've tried to break off Roy and Nonie's wedding, you've tried to take your friend's wife from him. But I won't let you do it."

Jim said slowly, "You can't make Nonie marry anybody she is not willing to marry. We love each other ——"

"Love each other!" Aurelia cried scornfully. "You don't know the meaning of love if you can do a treacherous thing like this!" She turned to Nonie, her eyes blazing. "Tell him, Nonie. Tell him you're going to marry Roy. Tell him you're going to be a happy wife here in this house. Tell him you never want to see him again—him," Aurelia cried, "a man under suspicion for murder! A false friend! A liar, a cheat—a murderer!"

"No, Aurelia," began Jim, but Aurelia turned upon him, interrupting him in an angry burst.

"I HEARD everything you said the night you came here, to this house, after Hermione's murder. You had threatened to kill Hermione. Nonie and Roy heard you say you'd kill her. I'm going to tell the police."

The police! Major Wells, who had said there must be a girl; who had said if Jim wanted to marry, the fact would strengthen the case against him.

Nonie cried, "No, no, Aurelia! You can't do that! Oh, Aurelia, I'm sorry! I ——"

"Sorry!" Aurelia cried. "Being sorry doesn't mend matters." She shot a dark glance at Jim and cried, "If you really love Nonie, how dare you ask her to marry you when you're in the very shadow of the gallows!" She took an unsteady, rasping breath and cried, "You threatened Hermione! You said you'd kill her. You came back and ——"

Roy thrust back his chair and stood up. "Stop that, Aurelia! Stop it! I'm not going to let you tell the police anything."

"What are you going to do?" Aure manded. "Let your marriage be brok Let Nonie pine her heart out for a m is as good as on trial for murder? I island laugh at you—you, Roy B Only a few days before your wedding

Roy said, "I don't know what to d unexpected—but I've got to do what for Nonie, and if that means to try t Jim from the gallows, then I'll have that too. Right now we've got to inve a murder."

AURELIA flung out her hands angrily never give in. Everything is arr Nonie is the same as your wife right And Jim is the same as on trial for mu

"That," Roy said, "is what we've prevent. Now then ——" He pause listened; all of them listened, suddenly that the storm was raging so danger with such great and growing power, t was as if it chose to remind them tha were helpless in its hold.

Aurelia said more quietly, "Dick wa talk to you. That's what I came to te And Seabury Jenkins is here. He's be ing over Hermione's records and pape

It was late; the twilight already i house had deepened.

Roy said, "Jim, we'll not talk of thi while. First things first."

Jim came to Roy, and Roy unexpe put out his own hand first.

But Aurelia stood in the doorw strongly entrenched in resolve that moment she seemed indefeatable.

"You are putting a terrible position, said. "You know w will mean to Jim w tell the police the Why do you make this?"

"You didn't hea threaten Hermione,' said. "You only hea talk of it. They can cept hearsay evide you know.

"That is sophistry," Aurelia said sw brushing Roy's argument aside. "You him say he'd kill Hermione. Nonie him. If you are put on the stand you c deny it."

Jim went to her. He said, again in a almost gentle, voice, "That will not ha Aurelia. I can see that to clear myself, ever shot Hermione has got to be found got to be a clear case. I didn't kill her

"You can't marry Nonie. I'll see to t

Dick Fenby, from the hall, spoke Aurelia's shoulder: "Seabury is here, F

First things first. Murder took a dre precedence over everything else. N eyes met Jim's for a swift look—which yet say nothing, which could only que

Seabury Jenkins was waiting in th fashioned drawing room off one end hall, which had been furnished pro when the house was built and never cha There were rosewood armchairs with pink moire cushions; there were tin cabinets full of shells and miniatures. were stiff rosewood settees and round ma topped tables. Lydia sat in one of the chairs, her red hair and her eyes glea

Dick had a sheaf of papers in his h and a look of apology on his small, w face. "The commissioner told me t this," he said. "It seems silly. But t what he said to do."

"What's what he said to do?" Au snapped. And when he replied she gave a look of cold and outraged anger. Fo sheaf of papers in his hand were notes by the commissioner concerning the a ties of the previous night, so far as could be discovered, of the small gro people closest to Hermione, the people so far as it was known, had seen her last, might have some quarrel with her, or n have some information leading to the covery of her murderer.

Dick said, not without dignity, "I'm of police. I may not know much abo but I'll do the best I can."

(Continued on Page 164)

Ever worry about how much coffee you drink?

CHANCES ARE, if you're like most of us, you do worry occasionally about drinking too much coffee.

You worry because you know from your own experiences—or perhaps those of your friends—how the caffein in coffee can have a bad effect on some people.

How often it can make you tense and jittery—and even wakeful at night.

So it is natural—whenever you feel irritable or nervous, or if you've spent a sleepless night—that you mentally begin ticking off the number of cups of coffee you drank.

You wonder if you've been over-doing it lately. If you should begin to limit yourself to a certain number of cups. Or maybe cut out drinking coffee altogether.

Luckily for you, there is a much pleasanter answer to your problem.

DRINK SANKA COFFEE

It's Sanka Coffee. For when you drink Sanka, you can enjoy real coffee—grand-tasting coffee—yet stop worrying about how much you drink.

If you love a good cup of coffee—you'll love Sanka. For Sanka is rich and full-bodied. It has all the aroma, the bracing cheer, the flavor that only real coffee gives you.

REAL COFFEE-97% CAFFEIN-FREE

And, best of all, Sanka is caffein-free. And that means worry-free! With Sanka you can go ahead and have that second cup, or third cup . . . or sixth cup. Any time—morning, noon or night. And you can't possibly suffer from caffein effect.

For 97% of the caffein has been removed. Sanka can't make you feel nervous or "put out." Can't keep you awake.

So why not start drinking Sanka Coffee tomorrow. You have nothing to lose and possibly a great deal to gain.

Sanka Coffee

Real coffee with the worry taken out. Drink it and sleep!

NOW IN INSTANT FORM

Products of General Foods

(Continued from Page 162)

Roy sat down at one of the round marble-topped tables; the scene took on an odd little air of formality. "Go on," he said.

It seemed long-drawn-out; really it was short and there was little that all of them did not already know. Obviously they had pieced together a sort of resumé of the previous day, including Hermione's visit at Beadon Gates during the afternoon and its purpose, and her later visit that night to induce Dick himself to return to Middle Road.

"Who told Major Wells that?" Aurelia asked.

"I did," Dick said. "I told the exact truth about everything."

"Did you tell him that she fired you?"

"Certainly." He shook his head a little, eying Aurelia. "I didn't kill Hermione. And as Jim says, the only thing for all of us to do is to tell the truth—all the truth."

"Well," Aurelia said, still angry, "I don't have anything to add. I didn't come down to dinner. I was in my room all the time; I didn't even see her. I'm out of it."

"That's all here, too," Dick said. "Shall I go on?"

They listened again with the wind swirling and hurling around the shutters. The bare account of Hermione's murder seemed suddenly, to Nonie, ents in which she had had no part. Jim had left the island and returned; he had found Hermione, dea He had heard the shot; he had telephoned for help. Roy was at Lydia's ——

Lydia interrupt ther : "I kept him. I wante to ask abou changing some investments."

Lydia's slippered foot swung nervously, her green eyes glittered. Seabury rubbed his bald head thoughtfully. Roy had been told about the murder when he reached home and had come at once. The body had been moved ——

It was Jim who interrupted then. "We had to move her."

"I explained that to Major Wells," Roy said. "I told him you couldn't leave her like that—dinner dress, green sandals, nothing to cover her with, rain pouring down."

There was no difference in his voice or his look. First things first, Roy had said; everything else put aside, because murder came first.

Suddenly Seabury Jenkins was speaking and Nonie had been scarcely aware of the fact that Dick had finished. Seabury, she realized then, looked sick and shaken; so ashy below his leathery tan that Nonie thought for an instant that he was really ill. Probably, however, his stricken, half-frightened look was due to fatigue: he had been up most of the night, he had spent all that day probably at Middle Road rummaging through Hermione's papers. Even his voice was abrupt and jerky; he seemed indeed so like a man reeling under the impact of an unexpected blow that a question as to his friendship with Hermione nudged Nonie briefly: had he, like Dick, ever been in love with a young and beautiful Hermione? But if that were true, everybody would have known it, someone would have referred to it.

He sat, staring at the carpet, avoiding everyone's eyes, telling them in that jerky, preoccupied way of Hermione's will. The Shaw trust fund, Middle Road and all her personal property went to Jim.

"Personal property!" Jim said in a surprised way. "I didn't know Hermione had anything special in the way of personal property."

"Jewelry?" Lydia asked with interest.

Seabury, staring at the rug, shook his head. "Cash," he said. "And bank balance." He hesitated as if questioning his next statement, but then went on: "Her bank balance is by no means what I'd expect it to be; but Hermy put most of her income back into Middle Road. She was very secretive, and so far as I know never kept books; she prided herself on her memory. It is more difficult to check on things because she dealt in c she—well, to tell you the truth, she li cash. She paid bills in cash; used cash w ever she could. It was one of her pecul ties."

All of them stared at him and Seab stared at the carpet.

Roy said finally, "How short is the b balance?"

Seabury shrugged in a helpless way. may not be short. How can anyone t She could have done anything with mone or had none to do much with! The Hermione used cash we may never get at real facts. We'll try. But that's the sun the will."

And Nonie thought suddenly, Cash. C in her alligator bag, bills amounting to tw hundred dollars. Vanished. Cash.

She hadn't told Roy or Aurelia; the fac murder had seemed to block everything e But twelve hundred dollars in her bro alligator bag, in her own room upsta could have nothing to do with the murde Hermione Shaw.

Aurelia called the curiously formal li meeting to a close. "We'll have supper," said. "Put those papers away, Dick. The nothing we can do tonight." She listened the wind; they all liste and Aurelia said, "Yo have to stay here toni Seabury. You can't m it to the village in th

FAMOUS FIGHTING WORDS

You must think money grows on trees.

I'll give you the paper when I'm through with it.

You're getting fat where it shows.

Supper was a repeti of the afternoon's m except the storm wilder; so wild, so str so ominous that it t precedence, again, o murder. Doctor Rior came in, breathless, w haggard, in the middle o

"Trees down everywhere," he said. "I the worst storm I remember. I'll take your invitation, Roy, if you don't mind. T road to Beadon Rock is blocked."

Aurelia made a place for him at the tab The house shuddered and sighed and the pounded wildly—almost, it seemed, at t foundations of the house. Aurelia, with fine dark eyes still angry and determin took the helm again and sent everyone bed.

"We can't do anything tonight," she peated, and added rather grimly, "And fr the sound of the storm we may be blown to sea by morning."

Nonie had no chance to talk to Jim alon Roy said good night to her with his usu gentleness and did not refer to Jim or th talk. Aurelia, coming to Nonie's room to s that the balcony shutters were secur bolted, was exactly as usual. "Good nig my dear," she said calmly. "Don't be afr of the storm."

Yet the house was like a ship at sea, rock and battered upon all sides; the peo within it were hypnotized by the stor sound and power and by sheer physi weariness; probably nobody in the ho expected to sleep and probably nobody the house could have resisted that dark a welcome tide of weariness.

There was, however, one presence on t island which escaped that paralysis, whi did not sleep, which traveled through t night and storm, from Middle Road plant tion to Beadon Gates.

Sometime in the night the telephone in t pantry began to ring.

Nonie, in her room at the head of t stairs, heard and went to answer it. Pro ably, half asleep, she obeyed a dreamli quality of compulsion in that continued, i perious summons. Certainly she was ful aware only of its insistent demand—not the dimly lighted hall, the descending stai the empty, wide hall below. The sto surged around the house; the ringing of t telephone stabbed sharply through its wil monotony. Halfway across the dining roo Nonie stopped abruptly; the pantry w lighted too.

So someone else had heard the telephon Why hadn't he answered that repeated sum Festive and flavorsome, this etizing dish shows how delicious overs can be with Herb-Ox Bouillon Chicken Cubes. Use them to "flavor lower cost meats—as a soup stock gravy base . . . and save money! For elicious Chinese recipes, write for leaflet. The Pure Food Co., Inc., naroneck, N. Y. Dept. LHJ-4.

Veal Shortcake

mer ½ chopped green pepper in 3 fat for 10 min. Add 3 tbs. flour. Add hot water in which 3 Herb-Ox cken Cubes have been dissolved. till thick. Add 2 c. diced leftover l, 2 c. cooked peas. Serve on hot, t baking powder biscuits.

Herb-Ox
BOUILLON CUBES

M KIND TO BUSY HANDS!

I'm CHORE GIRL—the original knitted pot cleaner. I don't rust . . . splinter . . . your fingers. BUT, I do whisk messy, pots and pans sparkling clean in a jiffy! 0¢ at dealers everywhere. Look for my e on the tag."

CHORE GIRL
Metal Textile Corp., Roselle 11, N. J.
In Canada — Hamilton, Ont.

GOLDEN FLEECE is back. If your dealer says 'NO,' his name and 12¢ for one till I see him." C. G.

SHING + NO DRYING + NO BREAKAGE + PAPER PLATES
Save You Plenty
IP OR HUBBY NEEDED FOR DISHES

mons? She moved on, slowly, to the open pantry door. She stopped there, again—this time like a sleepwalker, terribly aroused on the edge of a precipice. Her light silk robe swirled around her feet; her slippers were brightly scarlet below it. The windows rattled and creaked and the sea raged out in the blackness like a devouring beast.

But the beast had got into the house; the beast had traveled from Middle Road to Beadon Gates. Seabury Jenkins was in the pantry and he had not answered the telephone, because he lay huddled below it. His face, mercifully, had fallen against his arm. He had been murdered and a machete lay on the floor, almost touching him.

The telephone rang and rang and finally stopped.

Nonie was like a sleepwalker, only now she was running. The storm battered at the door as if it had desperate, determined being; it sifted through the hall, followed her up the stairs. Her hands beat against a closed door, desperately. She looked over her shoulder but nothing, really, had followed her up the stairs.

Then, all at once, Roy was in the hall, Jim was there, everyone was there: Roy tugging at a red bathrobe; Jim in slacks, his shoulders bare and brown; Dick Fenby, Doctor Riordan, and Lydia, with her red hair tousled and a black silk robe pulled tightly around her lovely figure, her green eyes glittering. Nonie still felt as if she stood, clinging, to the perilous edge of a precipice and did not know how she had got there.

THERE was no comfort in the company; no safety anywhere, only questions, exclamations, half-words. Suddenly the men plunged downstairs and she and Lydia were left at the top of the stairs, with lights glittering everywhere now, with sounds and footsteps, and voices suddenly dying away below.

"I'm afraid to go down," Lydia whispered. "I'm afraid—are you sure he was dead, Nonie?"

She must have replied, for Lydia sucked in her breath so sharply that it was like a stifled scream. Aurelia came then, hurrying from the shadows, her face flushed, her great gray braid swinging over her shoulder.

"Aurelia, Seabury was killed," Lydia cried. "Nonie found him. She says the telephone was ringing ——"

"I'm going down."

Lydia caught at her arm. "Oh, no, Aurelia."

Aurelia shook off Lydia's clasp and started quickly down the stairs, her strong, brown hand holding the banister.

They watched her go. Lydia's head was bent forward, the light shining on her thick red hair; her face from that angle looked sharp and rather predatory; her green eyes were fastened on the visible section of the hall, watching and waiting with the poised yet tense patience of a cat at a mousehole.

Nonsense, thought Nonie sharply, deriding her own fancy; nonsense! She sat down beside Lydia.

Moments passed and there was still no discernible sound from the back of the house. At last Lydia shifted her knees slightly.

"This rather brings it home," she said, her voice husky. She shot a look at Nonie. "Who killed him?"

Nonie shook her head; she was watching that small visible part of the hall as fixedly as Lydia, listening, too; waiting too.

Lydia said, "Didn't you see anybody?"

"No."

"How long do you suppose he'd been dead?"

Nonie was cold; the house felt chill and dank. The house she'd thought, only yesterday, was listening and waiting much as she and Lydia were waiting now.

The memory touched her and went away; it, too, had been fancy. The house could not have known in advance the dark and terrible thing that was to happen within its walls.

Lydia was insistent. "How long do you think he'd been dead? Wasn't there anybody around? Any sound—anything? Have you no idea who did it?"

Even Nonie's lips seemed cold and numb. She tried to reply: "I heard the telephone

Set No. 3462/5. Table size 34x62" extended; 34x50" closed. Colors: Table—white or canary. Chairs—seats and backs richly upholstered in canary, red or black; seat and back panels in gleaming white Arvinite

Exclusive "Miracle" Leaf . . . Richly Upholstered Chairs

New "Miracle" Slide-Away Extension Leaf

Completely concealed, yet ready for instant use. Automatically stored just below the table top. Operates so easily that a child can raise or lower it with one hand from either side. The most convenient table-leaf ever developed. (Patent applied for)

Striking new features make "Arvin" the nation's leading dinette value!

The radiant beauty, wonderful convenience, of an Arvin De Luxe Dinette Set are the perfect combination of loveliness and practical comfort for your home this Spring. The "Miracle" Slide-Away Extension Leaf (no other like it!) will mean endless satisfaction. Just slip it in place and you'll have room for serving eight! The long-life Arvinite finish is a housekeeping joy—with its lustrous, easy-to-clean surface that resists chipping, cracking, acids, alcohol and boiling water. The chairs with seats and backs, richly upholstered and covered with scuff-proof Vinyl Fabric, easily removable for different color combinations, are a dream of comfort. You'll be delighted with the stunning colors, the graceful semi-oval table that allows extra knee and leg room, the sparkling lustre of chrome-plated legs and table trim. And Arvin quality means fine craftsmanship in every detail!

ARVIN
Metal Chrome-Plated DINETTE SETS
with the "Miracle" Leaf

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC.
Columbus, Indiana

Arvin Metal Chrome-Plated Dinette Sets • Metal Outdoor Furniture • All-Metal Ironing Table

and went to answer it. I wasn't really awake. The lights were on in the pantry. I saw him as soon as I reached the door. I didn't see anybody else anywhere."

Lydia was looking at her with bright, speculative eyes. What is Lydia trying to say? thought Nonie. What does she mean; what is the thing in her eyes?

Then Lydia touched her lips with her tongue. "I was awake. How could anybody have slept tonight? But I didn't hear the telephone. You say you heard it? And went down to answer it?"

"Yes."

"Don't you think that was—well, rather an odd thing for you to do? In the dark. After Hermione's murder. After the thing you said happened to you this morning. Weren't you afraid?"

Something was flickering in Lydia's eyes. Nonie, watching it, said slowly, "I was half asleep. I suppose I'd have been afraid as soon as I really waked.

"You weren't walking in your sleep, I suppose!" said Lydia and gave a small laugh.

As a matter of fact, it was exactly how Nonie had felt: she had been only half aware of her own actions; the telephone had demanded imperatively, so she obeyed. "I didn't think of being afraid. I didn't think of murder ——"

Lydia gave a short laugh which was like a nervous catching of breath. "It's odd you wouldn't be afraid. It's odd, too, when you come to think of it, that you found Hermione only a few moments after she was shot. And now Seabury." Then the thing in Lydia's eyes peered boldly out. She said, "Some people might think it more than odd," and looked with unmasked hatred into Nonie's eyes.

Hatred! There was no reason for that yet Nonie could not dismiss it as fancy either.

"What do you mean, Lydia? What are you trying to say?"

LYDIA blinked. "I didn't mean anything. Nonie. I don't think you murdered Hermione. Or Seabury—no matter what he may have discovered about Hermione's death."

"Then you must not speak like that, Lydia. You don't think I murdered Hermione. I don't think you did."

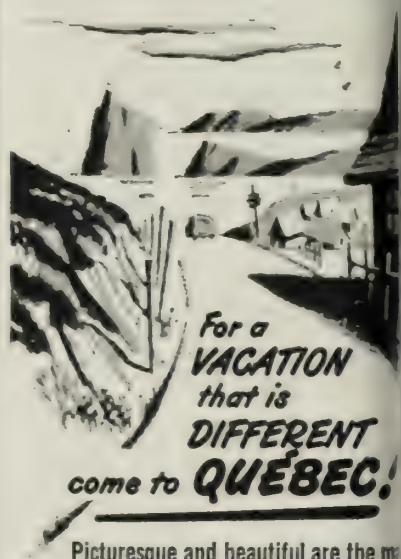
"Whoever murdered her will hang for it! Have you thought of that? And if it's the wrong person—why, that's murder too!" She caught her breath sharply and locked her hands together hard.

The storm seemed to rock the house. The men were returning: Nonie heard Jim's voice and Roy's in the hall below.

Nonie and Lydia went downstairs. The men were talking, Aurelia was talking, everyone was talking; and the things they said, the way they moved about, the pictures that formed and broke and formed again made a dreamlike background for the sharp, bright reality of small things, details such as the way Aurelia sat in one of the great armchairs, with her head sunk on her chin and her great dark eyes fastened on nothing, staring. Jim went upstairs and came down pulling on a sweater. Doctor Riordan, in Roy's pajamas, much too big for him, went upstairs, too, and came down in a few moments, fully dressed. Roy's red bathrobe had wet patches on it, and Dick Fenby was wrapped in an oilskin which glittered with rain, for they had taken Seabury's body away—to one of the plantation outbuildings, to remain until it could be sent to the village.

Seabury had died from a sudden, murderous blow of the machete, probably from behind as he stood waiting at the telephone; the sound of the storm had covered the approach of the murderer. He had died, almost certainly, at once. The murderer had escaped and, except for the machete, had left no sign or clue, and that, in all probability, would not prove to be a clue. A salient fact began to emerge; it was Roy finally who put it clearly into speech.

"It's a devil of a business," he said, sitting heavily in his desk chair. "A very devil of a business! One of the back doors is open; whoever killed him had plenty of chance to get in and out again. But nevertheless—here we are, all of us, in the house.



BEST! bar none

It's Gebhardt's CHILI CON CARNE

REAL Mexican flavor
TRUE American quality
MADE IN SAN ANTONIO, HOME OF CHILI CON CARNE AND TAM

Picturesque and beautiful are the m tours you can make in historic Québec around the romantic Gaspé Peninsula—do the rugged north shore of the St. Lawrence the Saguenay and Lake St. John—up throu Montréal to the Laurentians—south to t storied Eastern Townships. And everywh you will be welcomed with true French-Can dian hospitality in comfortable inns and hote

LA PROVINCE DE Québec

For help planning your vacation, or for informati concerning the unsurpassed industrial opportuniti in our province, write the Provincial Publicity Bu reau, Parliament Buildings, Québec City, Canad or 48 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City 2 rmione's closest friends. Seabury's." He ed and rubbed his chin. "It's going to be ward."

urelia's great dark eyes flashed full upon and lowered again.

ydia said shrilly, "Roy! They'll say one s did it. They'll say he knew something! y'll say he knew who murdered Hermi-!"

octor Riordan had come back by then; ooked at Lydia gravely. "Maybe he did w."

ydia turned white. "That's like saying t one of us did it!"

octor Riordan said somberly, looking at ody, "Seabury was Hermione's lawyer; knew more about her affairs than any-y. It's an obvious link to Hermione's th."

oy looked up with a gust of impatience. ell you he probably knew nothing! He'd e told us tonight if he knew anything. He ldn't have kept it to himself."

That was what he was trying to do," tor Riordan said. "Only it was the com-sioner he was trying to tell."

That telephone call might mean noth-!" Roy said stubbornly.

im's black hair was wet, too, and plas-d down; he lighted a cigarette and said reasonable tone, "The girl in the tele-ne office wouldn't have lied. Seabury trying to reach Major Wells at Port Iles. bury knew how difficult it is to get a tele-ne connection during a storm; he must e had something to say that was so ur-t, so important that he tried it anyway, ing he could get through. While he was ting for the girl to get the connection, ever had to stop him, at all costs, before ould talk to Wells . . . did it. Stopped ; killed him with the handiest weapon re was."

urelia looked at Jim. "You speak as if knew. You speak as if you saw it."

im said briefly, "That's only the most sonable way to account for his death. re could be a dozen other explanations; is the first one that strikes me as likely."

urelia's full, dark eyes wavered; she nced around the room and fastened them Dick Fenby. She said, "Well, Dick, you the chief of police. What are you going lo?"

There was a silence, except for the storm. bably everybody in the room was repeat-Aurelia's question and finding no better ly than Dick's.

Dick moved, scowled at the rug and said, don't know what to do. The girl's right, I nk. She's pretty accurate, knows more ut the island than anybody, probably."

"The girl at the switchboard? The tele-ne operator?" Lydia asked, lifting her head sharply.

Dick nodded, still not looking up. "She says Seabury put in the call for Port Iles himself; he told her who he was and where. He said he wanted to talk to the police commissioner; he said it was urgent and to try to get it through. She said she'd work on it and let him know. It was about half an hour later that she gave up and rang here to tell him. She said she rang for a few times and then stopped. That's what Nonie heard."

Lydia said rather rapidly, her lambent eyes on Roy, "It's very queer that nobody else heard the telephone ring."

Roy looked at her, lifting his chin slowly from his hand. Everyone looked at her. Hatred? thought Nonie. Was it possible that it was hatred that peered out from Lydia's face?

Jim said, "What do you mean, Lydia?"

She shrugged her lovely shoulders. "I don't mean anything. I'm not accusing Nonie of having shot Hermione or—or killing Seabury. I'm only saying she did find both of them."

There was a flare in Jim's eyes too. "Well, and what about it?"

"Oh, nothing, nothing!" Lydia cried. "I tell you I didn't say she killed either of them!"

"A woman couldn't have killed Seabury! He was struck from behind with a machete. His head ——".

"Don't!" Aurelia's voice was like a groan.

"All right," Jim said. "But I don't like the way Lydia's talking."

"I only said it was queer nobody else heard the telephone."

"Her room is at the head of the stairs," Roy said. "It's on the landward side, too, away from the sea. She'd have heard the telephone. She did hear it."

"Oh, obviously," Lydia said. "Obviously." She sank back into her chair.

Jim, eying her, said slowly and again with an effect of reasonableness, "It looks as if Seabury had some evidence to give the commissioner and I think it must have been important evidence. I think that he knew who killed Hermione and was about to tell it. Besides ——" Jim paused and thought and said suddenly, "Tonight, while he talked to us, he looked like it!"

"Looked like it?" Aurelia repeated questioningly. "That's absurd!"

But he had looked like it, Nonie thought swiftly; a terrible and shocking knowledge could have accounted for the sick expression in his face, the way he had avoided their eyes as he talked. What knowledge, then? How had he learned it?

Dick said abruptly, "Who killed him, then, since you know so much, Jim?"

"If I knew I'd do something about it," Jim said evenly.

(Continued on Page 169)

"You mean you want me to put my hand in there?"

Freshest juice you ever tasted!

"Try NO-SQUEEZE Snow Crop fresh-frozen orange juice"

Taste it! Fresh? This juice is grove-fresh . . . with that wonderful "tree-ripened" flavor. SNOW CROP is the frozen concentrate of luscious oranges at their peak perfection. Just add back the water for the finest juice you ever tasted! One sip and you're a life member of the SNOW CROP no-squeeze club.

ONE 6 OZ. CAN EQUALS JUICE OF 9 BIG ORANGES
Makes 1½ pints of juice

Grandest for Flavor!
SNOW CROP'S squeezed-this-minute goodness just can't be beat.

Grandest for Health!
Natural Vitamin "C" content of fresh fruit is retained.

Grandest for Convenience!
No squeezer — no waste — no mess. Fresh juice in 45 seconds.

Finer Frozen Foods— at a Saving!

SNOW CROP'S big variety of frozen foods gives you lots of garden-fresh fruits and vegetables to choose from . . . and top quality always at budget-saving prices. To get the finest frozen foods you ever tasted for less . . . ask for . . . insist on . . . SNOW CROP.

Insist on Snow Crop for controlled quality... ...lower prices

A SUBSIDIARY OF CLINTON INDUSTRIES, INC.

Snow Crop
FROZEN FOODS

Norge — and Only Norge Has It!

NORGE*

AUTOMATIC DEFROSTING

with the Sensational Self-D-Froster†

S-D-F . . . It happens at midnight! It's the newest, most exciting advancement in modern refrigeration history . . . it's Norge's exclusive S-D-F (Self-D-Froster)—the complete defrosting system that automatically defrosts your Norge refrigerator every night, at the stroke of twelve!

Yes, every night at midnight, S-D-F automatically turns off the refrigerator . . . then after the defrost period, turns it back on again. The thin film of frost on the outside of the sealed freezer is dissolved—frozen foods and ice cubes remain undisturbed. Defrost water drains into easy-to-remove, spill-proof Handefroster, which can be emptied at your convenience.

Norge alone has S-D-F . . . the miracle mechanism that saves worry, food, and time. You can always depend on your Norge Self-D-Froster . . . day and night it's on the job protecting your family budget.

Value in Home Appliances

REFRIGERATORS • HOME FREEZERS • ELECTRIC RANGES • GAS RANGES • ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS • OIL BURNING HOME HEATERS WASHERS • WATER COOLERS • HOME LAUNDRY EQUIPMENT

SEE NORGE BEFORE YOU BUY

© 1955 NORGE DIVISION, BORG-WARNER CORPORATION, DETROIT 32, MICHIGAN *REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. †TRADE MARK
IN CANADA: ADDISON INDUSTRIES, LTD., TORONTO, CANADA

Borg-Warner Quality Products

(Continued from Page 167)

elia said, "I was ready to defend you, t first. Even if you had killed her, I'd thought she drove you to it. Until . . . ght. And Seabury Jenkins never hurt dy."

il last night, Nonie thought; until Jim, urelia's eyes, proved himself a false to Roy, an enemy thus to Aurelia. ow dull flush came up into Jim's face; id to Aurelia, "I didn't kill him, a."

ou can't prove it," she said, eying him hose great somber eyes.

ve got to," Jim said, and another wild of wind surged and pulled at the forcing them all to recognize the it had over them and over the island. heaved himself up out of his chair. s right. He's got to prove he didn't kill ry. Therefore we've got to find out who As I see it, somebody could have got he house, and could have brought that te in from outside—somebody afraid bury. Everybody on the island knows ficial position; nobody on the island have failed to realize that a telephone ke that from Seabury to the commis- was important. We can't say who did that machete looks like it's somebody ampage, somebody Hermione offended, body holding a grudge ——" tor Riordan was shaking his head; hing about his gesture commanded t hearing. "I'm sorry, Roy, but it wash. The slug that killed Hermione olen from my bag. No field hand gone k, no homicidal ma- no rum-crazed boy rampage stole that other unwelcome ce boldly entered use, and made itself fully at home. It was e storm battering at indows; it was not, me, death treading ark and invisible from Middle Road don Gates. This presence had a name, was mutual suspicion.

hie's hands were trembling on her lap. ouldn't look at Doctor Riordan; she n't look at Dick or Roy or Aurelia or or even Jim; she wouldn't look at any- and she couldn't help looking and that everyone else seemed to feel the conflict. Eyes met other eyes in glanc- hamed, yet poignant question. So few m had been in the house, had known the bullet and had the chance to take ck and Roy and Aurelia; Lydia; Jim. erself. The room seemed to waver, to way; she put her hands on the arms of air and felt no solid substance there. ngers dug into the chair, and Jim was g at her and smiled a little, and half his head.

room steadied itself; assurance and ame back.

APS everyone had had time to fight e cold and stealthy fingers of fear. A f stir and shift went over the room. a took a long breath and sat back in air. Dick unlocked his ankles, took his out of his pockets and put them in leaned back in his swivel chair so it d, and said, "Are you sure about this, an?"

tor Riordan had not moved. "Per- sure."

ou did extract the slug, then?"

doctor gave a brief and convincing Early this afternoon."

frowned. "You told Major Wells you n't have time to do it so soon."

got through sooner than I expected." r Riordan shrugged. "Does that mat-hy didn't you give it to Wells?"

intended to. I didn't realize that he aving so quickly."

said, "Riordan couldn't help it. The is, it's gone. And I need that slug. It ot be important; it may prove nothing. But it'll certainly prove that it didn't come from the only gun that's turned up anywhere, and that's mine. And if I should have a little luck it would prove what gun it was fired from—if we can find the gun."

"It could also have come from your gun," Aurelia said.

Roy said soberly, "Don't accuse Jim, Aurelia. If he had shot Hermione, believe me, he'd have got rid of his gun."

"How?" Aurelia snapped. "You can't burn a gun!"

"He could have thrown it into the brush—tossed it into the sea. The missing slug is important. The slug would show it did not come from your gun, Jim—although you could have shot her with another gun, of course; they'll say that. But we might be able to identify the gun it came from and, at the best, whoever had the gun, and whoever shot her. I agree; we've got to have that slug." He looked at the doctor. "Yet, I honestly don't think the slug could have been taken by any of us, as you seem to imply, Doctor Riordan. I certainly didn't want the slug; I didn't even know you had it. And I can't believe"—anger flashed in his eyes—"I cannot honestly believe that, say, my sister wanted it; that Dick, chief of police, wanted it or would take it. Nonie probably doesn't know what a slug looks like, and besides she ——" He checked himself abruptly. She is in love with Jim, he'd been about to say. She'd do anything she could to help him, not to endanger him. Nonie could almost feel the block he put upon his tongue; this was not the time, not the place; nothing really was settled. He went on quickly, "She'd have every reason to want to help Jim, as I do, as Aurelia does, as—well, none of us wants him to hang for Hermione's murder."

But Aurelia, Nonie thought swiftly, didn't want to help Jim; not now.

There is nothing more important for the public weal than to form and train up youth in wisdom and virtue. Wise and good men are, in my opinion, the strength of a state, far more than riches and arms. —BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Doctor Riordan folded his arms and stared down at them and said, "How about Hermione's murderer? Do you think whoever killed her cares who hangs for it so long as it saves his own neck?"

Nobody spoke for a moment; finally Doctor Riordan said, still staring at his arms:

"And there's another question. Aurelia brought it up. I don't like it; up to now I've been on Jim's side. But now—suppose Jim has already got that slug? Suppose it came from his gun?"

Roy thrust back his chair and got up; he was angry and flushed. "For that matter, suppose you never had a slug! Suppose you got rid of it for purposes of your own! I'm not saying you shot Hermione. But I am saying that you're in this thing the same as the rest of us who knew her, and that you were in the house tonight when Seabury was killed."

"I had the slug," the doctor said imperturbably. "It's gone. If it had no significance, it wouldn't have been stolen from my bag."

Dick moved restively and said in an uneasy voice, as if not quite certain of his authority, "Look here, Riordan, let's try to sift the thing down a little. You're sure you did have the slug with you? You didn't leave it in your office?"

The doctor gave him a look of scorn. "Of course I'm sure; I extracted the thing, put it in an envelope and put it in my bag. I intended to give it to Major Wells. Wells left sooner than I expected; we had some food after he left; you all know this. I left my bag in the hall while I ate. I took the bag when I left; I still had it when I came back and it wasn't out of my sight during that time. I left it in the hall for a while again; I took it upstairs when I went to bed. The truth is that any of you here could easily have removed it."

"Who knew you had it?" Dick asked.

"Probably everybody. Miss Hovenden knew I had it; she saw the envelope. Miss simplest speed control makes it easiest to use!

(Continued on Page 171)

the New
HAMILTON BEACH Food Mixer
...with Mixguide

Mixguide helps make the new Hamilton Beach the easiest-to-use mixer today. Speed control is right under your thumb. Right under your eye, magnified for flash reading, are these ten scientifically tested speeds:

1 SLOW MIXING	6 WHIP CREAM
2 SLOW BEATING	7 WHIP POTATOES
3 HEAVY BATTERS	8 CANDY, BEAT EGGS
4 JUICING FRUITS	9 COOKED ICINGS
5 ICINGS, CREAMING	10 ATTACHMENTS

NONE BUT Hamilton Beach gives you one-hand portability. Its beater unit glides off the stand for use anywhere. No tricky catch to release, nothing to detach. Easy off, easy on!

AND ONLY Hamilton Beach gives you one-hand operation. You hold the beater unit in one hand, set the speed with your thumb.

YOU GET still another Hamilton Beach exclusive in finger-tip bowl control. You blend all ingredients evenly by simply shifting the bowl while beaters and bowl are revolving.

THESE AND more extras make Hamilton Beach the easiest of all mixers to use. Full power even in heaviest batters. Balanced handle that really fits your hand. Grooved mixing bowls that are easy to lift, guard against slipping.

YOU CAN be sure it costs more to bring you all these work-saving features. Still, you pay nothing extra. So ask your dealer to let you try the new Hamilton-Beach—America's easiest-to-use mixer. Hamilton Beach Co., Div. of Scovill Mfg. Co., Racine, Wisconsin.

Made by the makers of top-value Hamilton Beach Vacuum Cleaners.

$38.50

($39.25 West of Rockies.) Includes free-flowing juice extractor and two mixing bowls.

- with any style of sunny Del Monte PINEAPPL

Four super-duper desserts from one simple recipe — and you'll love every one! Just goes to show how nice it is to have so many different styles of DEL MONTE Pineapple — all with the same glorious tropical flavor to enjoy.

Try luscious Crushed in the Tropicrisp Shortcake, for one. Such juicy, extra-tempting pineapple! You can tell DEL MONTE always treats a pineapple right — lets it get perfectly ripe — packs it fast.

You'll have requests for repeats! So next time, make Tropicrisp Ring, filled with tender, spoon-sized Chunks. Or the Cake, topped with great sunny circlets of Sliced. And how children go for Tropicrisp Balls, with frosty glasses of sparkling DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice alongside!

One and all four styles of DEL MONTE Pineapple have that same refreshing, tart-sweet flavor. So ask for DEL MONTE Brand Pineapple — always.

TROPICRISP

- ½ cup syrup from DEL MONTE Pineapple or DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice
- 3 tbsps. cold water
- ¾ cup sugar
- 1½ tsps. unflavored gelatin
- Dash of salt
- 1 tbsp. butter or margarine
- 3½ cups Rice Krispies

Pour ½ cup of the syrup from the pineapple, or the pineapple juice, into small saucepan; add sugar, cook over low heat, stirring constantly, till sugar is dissolved. Continue cooking to 240° F. (soft ball in cold water). Soften gelatin in the 3 tbsps. cold water, add with salt to hot syrup; stir till dissolved. Add butter; beat with rotary beater till white and fluffy. Place Rice Krispies in buttered bowl, add syrup mixture, stir till well mixed. For Shortcake: Press into 2 well-buttered 8" cake tins; chill; turn out, serve with DEL MONTE Crushed Pineapple. Ring: Press into well-buttered 5-cup ring mold; chill; turn out; fill with DEL MONTE Pineapple Chunks. Balls: Form into balls; serve with DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice. Cake: Press into well-buttered 9" cake tin, chill; turn out; top with DEL MONTE Sliced Pineapple. (Whipped cream garnish if desired.)

* with chunks

* with juice

* with sliced

(Continued from Page 169)

don knew it"—he glanced at Aurelia, nodded heavily—"you, Dick, were in hall when I came out after lunch. Lydia e from the library. Either of you had a nce then to take the slug."

ydia gave a stifled cry. "I didn't take You can search my room, you can ch ——" urelia gave a sudden jarring laugh. arch?" she cried. "In this house! For so ll a thing as a bullet?"

The important thing," Doctor Riordan dryly, "is that it's gone."

m turned abruptly toward the doctor. ou had two questions; what about all the r questions? What was it Seabury v? When did he discover it? Did he anyone what he knew? And if so, who it?"

oy interrupted. "In other words, who d him?"

m nodded. "Right. I've been trying to ember exactly what Seabury did and said ght. He must have known whatever he w when we were talking together tonight. at was it? Who talked to him last? Who w what Seabury knew?"

oy pushed back his swivel chair and rose. anybody knows that, Jim, he's not very ly to admit it." He sighed and turned to k. "I don't know what to do. I cannot eve that anybody here murdered Sea- y."

What about the slug?" Doctor Riordan ed.

Dick stirred uneasily. "Personally, I don't nk the disappearance of that bullet mat- much one way or an- er," he said. "It's no lence at all, really, un- we know what gun it e from. But in the ntime, I think we ht to be sure the house afe."

It's rather late for t," Aurelia snapped. Whoever killed Seabury 't waiting around to be caught. He's en to the palmettos long ago. He'll never found." She believed what she said; it implicit in her statement. And subtly, shadowy figure of that conveniently nymous murderer was re-established.

There was an undeniable logic about it. k, his small, wrinkled face a mask of tight iety, put it into words. "At some time or er Hermione has quarreled with practi- y everybody on the island. We could run n any number of quarrels, possibly even eats, and still not find the fellow who ed her."

im said slowly, "But maybe we're wrong. ybe it wasn't a quarrel. Maybe it was enge. Or maybe there was something t ——" He stopped, frowning, puzzled, ping into his own thoughts, and then said uptly, "Something she was doing that to be stopped. Somebody she threat- d."

CK'S cheeks flushed. "All right. I may well say what you are all thinking. You an me. Saving my reason! Saving my ly! Saving my soul!" Roy went to him put a hand on his arm, and Dick cried that high, nerve-racked voice, "I've nted to kill her. She knew I was helpless. e liked her power. She was a devil and I nted to kill her. But I didn't." He shook Roy's hand and gave a frantic, despairing nce around the room. "You do believe , don't you? You do believe me?"

im said quickly, "Take it easy, Dick; we ow you didn't kill her."

Dick's bright, tragic eyes went to Jim. he'd have done it to you too. It was a ne with her; a contest that she had to win. e had the whip hand and she'd have driven the way she drove everybody."

im said, "You've got an alibi, Dick. erybody knows that you didn't kill her."

Dick cried shrilly, "How do you know I n't? Roy took Lydia home; Nonie stayed on the veranda; I came into the house. t nobody saw me here, in the house. Oh, I s here, all right. I had a drink or two from the decanter. But it's not very far from here to Middle Road if you go across through the banana plantation—if you don't follow the road. I could have slipped out a side door and got there and shot her and come back and pretended to be tight and nobody would have known the difference. There was plenty of time for me to have done all that, before I came out again to the veranda and Nonie was still there." He darted that bright, tragic look around the room again. "Don't pretend you haven't thought of it, all of you."

Jim turned to Roy. "We can't do anything tonight."

Roy started toward the door. "We'll make sure at any rate that the house is safe for the rest of the night."

But Dick had not finished. He went to the door and stood with his hand on the latch, facing them; his head was lifted and a certain dogged authority came into his voice. "The catch is that I know I didn't kill her. And I'm the police. Seabury ——" He swallowed hard and said, "It's up to me now. I've got to do what I think is right."

Aurelia rose and came to the door as if she could sweep him aside. "What exactly do you mean by that?" she demanded.

Dick gave one look at Jim and then stared at the carpet. "I've got to arrest Jim." There was a new air about the way Dick stood, his shoulders squared, his feet planted firmly in the doorway. He was suddenly a different man.

Because Hermione's strangling influence was gone? Was this present Dick the man he once had been, before Hermione's unrelenting thirst for power had sucked away his strength of will? Dick, this resolute and determined Dick, was now a menace.

There is only one thing for a man to do who is married to a woman who enjoys spending money, and that is to enjoy earning it.
—ED HOWE.

Nonie looked at Jim. He, too, was aware of the change in Dick; he said, with a tone of respect, "Give me a break, Dick. Give me some time."

Roy put his hand on Dick's shoulder. "Look here, Dick, don't do anything you'll regret. You don't really believe that Jim did this terrible thing."

Dick lifted troubled eyes to Roy's. "Roy, this is murder. Right here in this house—murder. Seabury didn't deserve anything like that! I've got to do what I swore to do."

Roy hesitated. Suddenly his face cleared. "I've got it! The gun! Dick, give us a chance to find the gun that killed her."

Dick shook his head again. Jim was watching him with an expression that struck Nonie suddenly as rather strange; there was a kind of tentativeness in it, a listening look. What had Roy said; what had Dick said, with his protestations which had been so damning in fact, yet which had actually, paradoxically, convinced them of his innocence? Had that been Dick's intention?

If Dick murdered Hermione, how terribly easy it would be for him, as chief of police, to save himself by accusing another man! Suppose he charged Jim with murder; there was already so strong a case against Jim that the very slightest additional evidence might sway a jury. How easy it would be to arrange that additional evidence—falsely, treacherously, yet convincingly!

Aurelia said angrily, "Dick is right. It's his duty."

Roy's voice rose above Aurelia's: "I'll make a deal with you, Dick. Give us twenty-four hours, give us twelve hours, to find the gun."

"That's impossible! You can't do it."

"Then you'll not lose."

Aurelia cried in a heavy, shaken voice, "You can arrest Jim whenever you want to. Arrest him now. But search the house! Whoever killed Seabury may still be here—waiting—hiding—wanting to kill again. Are you going to give him a chance to murder us in our beds?" The welcome nebulous figure, the stealthily terrible figure, was again invoked.

Roy said, "Suppose she's right, Dick."

Dick all at once yielded. "Okay, Roy. If Jim doesn't try to get away, I'll wait till I can talk to Wells. That's a parole, Jim ——"

Everyone's Happy about this easier, tastier fudge.
It's the greatest recipe scoop since Toll House Cookies!

RECIPE
for Quick Fudge
on back of package

QUICK FUDGE

Made with NESTLE'S Semi-Sweet Chocolate

QUICK FUDGE is home-made—not a mix. To make it you need only two packages of Nestle's Semi-Sweet Chocolate Morsels and ¾ cup of sweetened condensed milk. You get 1¼ lbs. of delicious fudge . . . rich, real, home-made fudge that's bound to delight every member of your family. Try this popular new QUICK FUDGE—so easy, so quick, so unusually tasty!

Get Nestle's Semi-Sweet Chocolate at your grocer's

HAVE YOU TRIED
TOLL HOUSE® COOKIES
LATELY?

® Lamont, Corliss & Co.

Recipe on back of package

First cake mix to win raves from experts!

"It would be!"
Frances Barton says. "It's the only one made with Swans Down Cake Flour!"

Who's cheering loudest for the new Swans Down Instant Cake Mix?

Experienced cakemakers who have made cake the old way for years!

"Of course, I ought to have guessed it would be different!" You'll hear these women say. "It's made with Swans Down Cake Flour. You can see that Swans Down fineness just as soon as you cut a piece. And the flavor! So absolutely delicate and fresh!"

That's because every ingredient is in a class with Swans Down itself—the very best.

And all you have to do to get two layers of beautiful white cake is add milk, beat and bake.

Recipes with the box for yellow cake . . . chocolate cake, spice cake, orange cake, nut loaf, cookies, brownies . . . all marvelous!

● At your grocer's now—or coming soon!

Egg whites taste fresh as farm-fresh eggs. They're prepared for this Mix by an exclusive process.

Sweet, fresh shortening is used in this Mix. It's all-vegetable and especially stable—stays fresh longer.

Flavoring is subtle. Nothing loud or synthetic-tasting. A pure, delicate, homey fragrance.

A product of General Foods

Swans Down Instant Cake Mix

Aurelia interrupted with the shaken, deep vehemence which the night had unleashed in her, as it had unleashed the storm outside. "You'll never find the gun! You're making a mistake, Dick. You'll regret it." It was an inconsistency which did not seem to occur to her, but which emphasized her new hatred for Jim; she turned to Roy. "You said a door was open. I thought you locked the doors."

Roy shrugged. "Half the keys were missing. We've never locked the house. It doesn't matter. A big house like this! If anybody wants to get in, he can get in."

Her eyes flashed. "Well, he's got to be kept out; you've got to make the house safe. Bolt all the shutters, bolt the doors." She swept across to the nearest French window and shook it and worked the bolt angrily.

The men searched the house. Making it safe, Aurelia said. Safe from the outside. Was it safe from the inside?

Nonie listened through the roar of the wind to the intermittent sound of feet tramping through the house, doors opening and closing, voices. It was still very dark; lights were on now everywhere; yet she had a sense of morning beginning.

Aurelia helped the men in their search; Lydia stood in the doorway, and seemed lost in thought. They found no one. Roy came back into the hall, and Doctor Riordan, Jim and Dick.

Roy said firmly, "We've done everything we can do. The point now is to get some rest."

Everyone tacitly and helplessly agreed. Nonie followed Aurelia and Lydia up the stairs, leaving the men in the hall below. Two of them would sit up for the rest of the night, guarding the house and its occupants. A strange chore; certainly an unnecessary one, since the house had been searched and so heavily bolted and barred. Jim and Roy dragged lounge chairs into the hall.

"We may as well sit up," Lydia said at the top of the stairs. "It's nearly morning anyway. There's not going to be much sleep in this house."

Doctor Riordan heard her. "You'd better try to sleep," he said, his lips thin and disapproving. "We've got to keep our heads. Steady nerves. Keep control."

"My nerves are all right," Lydia said, and went down the hall.

But Lydia was right. Hours later, Nonie was still huddled on the long wicker chair, wrapped in an eider down which she pulled from the great old armoire, and which smelled of camphor.

The storm grew steadily worse. The winds increased in violence, the sea rose and roared in great tumbling breakers all around the island, a branch of some tree crashed down upon the balcony so near that Nonie thought it must have struck its way into the house.

She did, however, drift into a half sleep, for when she roused, the room was dark, and Jim was calling her name. He had a tray and a small silver candlestick.

"The lights have gone off. Lines are down." He put the tray on a table and lighted the candle, looking quickly into her face above the waving little flame. "I've brought you coffee."

She rose, stumbling on the eider down. "Oh, Jim, what are we going to do?"

He caught her hands; his own were warm and steady. He held her quietly for a moment and then put her back in the chair, wrapped the eider down around her and poured coffee. "Drink this," he said. "Then we'll talk."

"Jim, who killed him?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't. I didn't. That leaves so fe people in the house, and not one of them- not one of them could be a homicidal —— She could feel her voice rising incoherentl

He heard it too. "Steady, Nonie. Ever body in the house is perfectly sane and a countable. That's my belief and that's Rio dan's; I asked him. I think he'd know. S dismiss that from your mind. Drink you coffee."

She lifted the hot cup to her lips.

He said, "Roy and I talked while we wer waiting. He thinks the only thing we can d is wait until the storm is over; the telephon is out too. The road along the coast will b impassable. The storm seems to be passin directly over the island, so he says there'll b a kind of lull when the center reaches us; the more winds of probably stronger hurrican force."

"The slug, Jim! What about the slug Somebody in the house must have taken it.

A curious expression came into his eyes "Well, honestly, I think Dick took it."

She sat upright, staring at him. "Dick Why?"

"Because—well, he didn't take any step about finding it. He said it wasn't important he seemed too eag to dismiss it, som how."

"But why ——"

"Because it cam from his gun," Ji told her.

Neither spoke fo a moment, conside ing it.

Then Jim sai slowly, "They looke for guns all aroun Middle Road. No minutely; any num ber of guns coul have been concealed of course. There wa no gun at all in Dick' shack, but it doesn' seem to me likely tha an ex-army man, liv ing on a plantation acting as a factor wouldn't have a gun."

"But if she was shot with his gun ——"

Jim interrupted. "Somebody could hav got hold of it without Dick's knowledge," he said.

"Then, even if the gun is found, it can't help us."

Jim's face was suddenly rather guarded "It might," he said. "It might. Nonie, I want you to think back over the past day o two, or even before that. Try to remember i there was anything at all that seemed—oh wrong, different. And I've been trying t think, too, what it was that Seabury knew. So far as I can discover, Seabury came up stairs with the rest of us, said nothing in par ticular to anybody, and went to bed. If he talked to anybody later, then nobody admits knowing it. I've gone over and over every- thing he said or did; there was something about him that, looking back now, makes me feel that he knew who killed Hermione, per- haps had only then discovered it, and I don't know what it is." He stopped, lost in thought, trying, as Nonie was trying, to recall every de- tail, every small fact that Seabury had told him. He shook his head finally. "There was nothing about her will that was unexpected. He seemed to think that the cash in her pos- session didn't quite square up with what she ought to have had, but on the other hand there was no evidence of theft ——"

Theft! "Oh, Jim, some money was taken from my billfold."

His eyes were like sudden points of steel. "What do you mean?"

She rose and went to the chest of drawers and got out the alligator bag, showed him the billfold, told him the little she knew. He took the billfold in his hands and went to the candle, examining the narrow leather case

(Continued on Page 174)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Beaches at Dunkirk

By John Ackerson

"And did you strike for light on children's faces?"
"Yea, to the very end."
"Would shapes arise to fill the dead men's places?"
"Legion, my friend!"

"Did she run in, the Lion Heart's brave galley?"
"St. George's cross whipped red!"
"And did you see Sir Philip there, and Raleigh?"
"Yea, and a thorn-crowned Head!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

PLANTING FAMILY FUN!

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

Maybe little Jimmie doesn't really add much to the success of the home garden, but his folks make him think he does. Like every "fresh up" family they share both work and play . . . and their liking for crystal-clear 7-Up—the all-family drink. That's because 7-Up . . . always clean-tasting and tempting . . . is a cheerful friend to happy family life—it's so pure, so good, so wholesome for everyone.

Be "7-Up Steadies" in your family. You can all "fresh up" with 7-Up as often as you want. Look for those bright 7-Up signs and order a case for your family today.

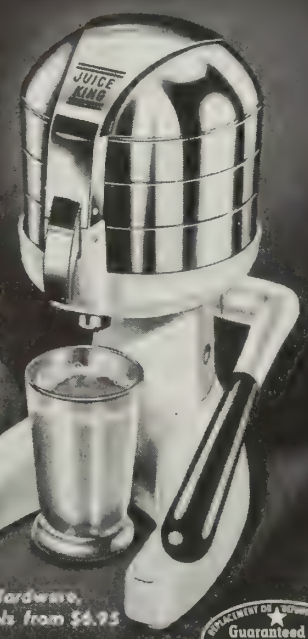
You like it... it likes you!

Copyright 1949 by
The Seven-Up Company



LOOK! CUTS—SQUEEZES

Whole Oranges in One stroke!

AMAZING NEW

Juice King

Now . . . cut, squeeze, strain WHOLE ORANGES in one stroke . . . 300% faster! Grand to use . . . easy to clean. Beautifully finished to blend with smart, modern kitchens. For yourself, or an unusual gift . . . see the new JUICE KING today.

Remember...only fresh orange juice gives you all the flavor...all the health.

FINEST HOME JUICER

$14.95 At leading Department, Hardware, and Appliance Stores. Other models from $6.95

NATIONAL DIE CASTING COMPANY - Chicago 45, Illinois

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CUT DISH-WIPING TIME!

EXCELLO Laundry Fresh KITCHEN TOWELS

LOOK FOR THIS LABEL

LOOK! 10 DAY "NO-RISK" FREE EXAMINATION OFFER

STARTS YOU IN AN EASY, PROFITABLE GREETING CARD BUSINESS

PROFITS TO 100%

Take quick orders—make big extra cash. 47 different money makers. Bonus. Special offers. Request All-Occasion boxes on approval for 10 day free examination and FREE exclusive Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery samples.

FREE SAMPLES EXCLUSIVE Name Imprinted and Floral Stationery

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, North Abington 44, Mass.

SPRAY AWAY Unpleasant ODORS

Banishes Odor of Stale Smoke

THIS NEW, EASY WAY

"With a touch of the finger no odor will linger"

Destroys Strong Kitchen Odors

Leaves Fragrant, Fresh Arôme

INSTANT ACTION
CHOICE OF FRAGRANCE
ATTRACTIVE PACKAGE

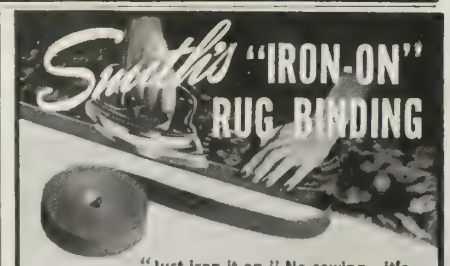
12 oz. size $1.59 each 3 FOR $4.50

AT DRUG AND DEPARTMENT STORES

REX DEODORIZER

REX RESEARCH CORP., TOLEDO 7, OHIO

ORIGINAL BEAUTY RESTORED TO Blankets...



Washed and refinished by mill methods. No shrinking or fading Price: $1.50 Per single blanket

Write for full details:

AMERICAN BLANKET Refinishing COMPANY

Dept. J • 4222 E. Lake St., Minneapolis, Minn.

Smith's "IRON-ON" RUG BINDING

"Just iron it on." No sewing—it's easy to bind rugs and carpets (with moderate iron) in a few minutes. Also repairs awnings, luggage, upholstery; articles of canvas, leather, cloth, rubber or other materials. Insist on SMITH'S, the heavy tape with the brown gum adhesive back that sticks to any surface.

AT DIME & DEPT. STORES (NOTION COUNTERS)
1½", 15¢ a yard. 2¼", 20¢ a yard

MADE IN 12 COLORS

Insist on Instruction Sheet with Purchase

Or mail remittance with rug ravelling for color (no C. O. D. please) to GILMAN B. SMITH CO. 907 Broadway, New York 10, N. Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

(Continued from Page 172)

closely, his brown face intent, highlighted in the mellow, wavering light.

The French windows from the balcony shivered as if giant hands pushed and fumbled blindly, seeking entry. Jim's black hair was ruffled; he looked different, too, she thought: the lines of his jaw seemed harder, and more mature. Dick had changed, but in another way.

Perhaps it was not so much change as it was revealment of the real man or woman that lay below the surface. Perhaps, indeed, murder snatched off the easy polite masks of everyday life. Certainly Nonie had not known until that morning that Lydia hated her; certainly until that morning she had not perceived Aurelia's latent capacity for violence.

Jim said, "Is there anything else, Nonie? Anything?"

"No, except ——" She hesitated and he looked up at her quickly.

"Except what? Tell me."

"It wasn't anything. I was . . . homesick, perhaps, unused to the house—I was ——"

"What, Nonie?"

"I was half afraid. It was as if the house—well, watched me. And listened. It was absurd." She hurried on, forestalling his questions. "There was no reason for it. No cause, nothing."

But he didn't question. He put the billfold back in her hand and as she returned it to the drawer he said, unexpectedly, "I'd like to see that boy at Middle Road. The one with the concussion."

The boy Doctor Riordan had gone to see, bringing Lydia from the village to Beadon Gates! Nonie said, puzzled, "Why, Jim?"

Jim's face had suddenly a shut-in, remote look. "He just might know something. He had some sort of accident that afternoon. I asked Riordan about it; he said Hermione phoned for him and told him the boy had apparently fallen down the steps and knocked himself out. She found him. It happened while you were taking me to Elbow or returning—about that time, anyway. Since the boy was unconscious at the time Hermione was shot, there didn't seem to be much point in questioning him. But I ——" He stopped, his face deeply thoughtful.

A PICTURE of those curving white steps flashed across Nonie's memory. Had Hermione found the boy, unconscious, at the foot of those steps only a few hours before Hermione herself was shot and fell at the top of that short stairway? She cried, "What possible connection, what ——"

"I want to see him," Jim said, and as he spoke, without any warning at all, the door to the hall swung open, and Aurelia Beadon came into the room. Her face was putty-colored with fatigue, and the harsh vehemence which had been let go within her was still in control; she looked angrily at Jim.

"I want to talk to you. I want to talk to Nonie." Her full dark eyes went rapidly from Nonie to Jim and back again. "Nonie," she said, "I welcomed you into my home as my brother's promised wife. Listen to me. How long have you known Jim? Only since you came here. You're a very rich girl. Do you think Jim doesn't know that?"

Nonie laughed—unexpectedly and without intending it; she looked at Jim and he was looking at her, half smiling. She started to reply and there was nothing to say.

Aurelia's hands worked in her lap. "You are wearing my brother's ring. Nonie, I insist on this marriage. Even if it were not for Roy, I could not let you become involved with—with a man who is almost certain to be charged with murder."

Her honesty, her distress were disarming. Nonie replied as gravely and as honestly: "Aurelia, even if he is arrested for murder, then I must be where I can help him. But he'll be freed, because he isn't guilty."

Aurelia made an impatient gesture. "You must be guided by me! I tell you—I say it before Jim, you must think of your money. Jim needed money; he has admitted it. He had no job; he'd have nothing if Hermione hadn't been killed."

want a "french" French Dressing

Miracle French is the kind for you Subtly seasoned, with the merest hint of garlic, it has the Parisian accent you've been looking for.

NOTE: If you don't want even a "hint" of garlic, get Kraft French. It's immensely popular.

RIGHT ANSWER

The teacher was trying to instruct her pupils in arithmetic by examples from their school life.

"Jimmy," she said, "suppose we sent Willy down to the school kitchen now for three bowls of hot Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal. Suppose each bowl contained four ounces of the cereal. How many ounces would Willy bring back?"

"About eight," said Jimmy.

"Why only eight?"

"Because it tastes so good," said Jimmy, "that he'd probably swipe at least a bowlful on the way back!"

(Advertisement)

Rich Brown GRAVY Every Time

when you use B-V

America's Favorite Gravy Maker

SIMPLE FOOLPROOF RECIPE ON THE B-V CARTON

You just can't beat a Wilson Canned Meat

WILSON & CO.

The Wilson Label protects your table

m said quietly, "I don't care whether hie's rich or poor. I love her."
You love her!" Aurelia cried. "You—ending to be Roy's friend! If it hadn't n for Roy, you'd have been arrested by
!"
oy said from the doorway, "May I come
" Aurelia turned swiftly and he came to and put his hand on her shoulder. "Au-a, I heard what you said. Jim is not a fore hunter."
Nonie is very rich. Any young man would glad to have all that money. Jim had ning," Aurelia said sullenly, but Roy's d pressed harder and stopped her.
le said, looking at Nonie, "My dear, this t the time to tell you. I meant for you not know until after our marriage."
omeone moved in the hall, at the door.
hie was only vaguely aware of it, for she looking at Roy. Nonie said slowly, oy, what do you mean?"
I didn't want to tell you. But you must w sometime. You see, Nonie dear, you're rich. There wasn't anything left. Not thing at all."
urelia caught her breath with a kind of Roy said, "I'm sorry, Nonie. But it makes difference to the people who really love

."
im's arm went around her protectively.
urelia lifted her head triumphantly. "You , Nonie? The money makes no difference.
y knew this; I didn't, but ——" She put hand on Nonie's arm. "We don't care ut the money. Roy has proved his love for . Your marriage with n will be solid and en-ing and happy."
The slight fluttering mon in the doorway came ward; it was Lydia, who
s laughing. She cried,
h, Aurelia, and you
n't want Roy to marry
. You've hated me and ght me for years. But nie—oh, yes, Nonie was perfect bride. Except wants to marry somebody else. How do u feel now, Aurelia?" said Lydia, and ghed until she put her hand over her uth as if aware of the hysterical strange nd in that house of storm and shadow.
Aurelia made a quick step toward Lydia d stopped, for Lydia herself sensed the eat. The broken sound in her throat died
ay. She drew herself up with a quiet and onishing dignity turned to Nonie and said
ectly:
"Is this true? Do you want to marry Jim?"
"Yes," Nonie said.
Lydia said, excluding the others by her
y look, setting herself and Nonie apart,
've loved Roy for a long time. But Aurelia ted me. I've no money—a small annuity.
—she hated me. She fought our marriage til —— Time works against a woman, nie. You're too young to know that. But e always loved Roy. I couldn't bear to ink of your marriage. I came here for the st time the night Hermione was murdered.
was desperate and there was nothing I could . Hermione knew it and taunted me. You dn't understand. But I did—I ——" oy tried to enter their suddenly isolated cle. "Lydia, my dear. You must not say ese things."

Her brilliant green eyes did not waver.
Nonie, suppose they arrest Jim! Suppose ey hang him!"
"They can't, they won't!"
"They can, they can! If he's innocent, at's murder too. An innocent man hanged!"
Aurelia cried, "Don't believe her, Nonie! oy was never in love with her. He never anted her ——"
Lydia said, "Aurelia's jealous; she's always en jealous. She never wanted me here at eadon Gates as Roy's wife. She knew I'd le, not Aurelia. You are young; you're a ild. She'd have ruled you."
"That's not true!" Aurelia cried. "How an you lie to her like that, Lydia?"
Lydia's green eyes still did not waver, yet he heard Aurelia and replied, "I'm not lying.
Conscience—it's a queer thing, conscience!
What it lets you do and what it can't let you do! Queer things—against your will." The brightness had gone from her eyes; there was a blank, hazy look in them.
Roy said gravely, "Lydia, you must not talk like this. If she wants to marry Jim, I'm not going to stand in their way."
Nonie cried suddenly, knowing it for the truth, "Lydia, he loves you. He was sorry for me, he wanted to help me—he didn't love me.
It's been you all along ——"
Aurelia interrupted with a sweeping, heavy defiance which carried all before it. "Lydia's lying. This is only another attempt to get him back. He ——"

Roy broke in: "Stop that, Aurelia! All this is beside the point just now." He put out his hand gently. "Come, Lydia. We'll talk if you like, but it's better not to now."
She refused his hand. And with that astonishing dignity she turned and walked out of the room.
No one spoke. The candlelight wavered, sending changing shadows into the corners of
the room.
Aurelia looked at Nonie and said, also with a certain recovered dignity, "Forget Lydia.
The things she said have nothing to do with your life here as Roy's wife. Believe me, my dear, and trust me." She, too, went away, as quietly calm, as poised as Lydia.
Roy said again bluntly, "Lydia and Aurelia never get on together. Lydia—I'll have to tell you the truth, Nonie. What she said is partly true, or rather it was partly true. But that's past. Lydia ——" He hesitated, a look of distress in his face, and Jim broke in with that new,
grave maturity:
"Nonie is to be my wife,
Roy. She has no right to question you about anything."
"Well," Roy said bluntly again, "she can't marry
you unless we get you out of this thing. I don't know what's come over Dick. He hated Hermione, yet he's set on getting somebody hanged for murder."
"Me," Jim said shortly.
"Well, there's one advantage of this storm:
it gives us a respite, a chance to do something." Roy began to search in his pockets absently, frowning. "I put the letter from the lawyers somewhere. The letter about Nonie's money, I mean. You took it like a soldier, Nonie. I'm not rich; but your money or lack of money means nothing one way or the other to me, and I want you to know that. I thought—and I still think—I could make you happy."
"Roy, I know. I thank you." She couldn't find words which would say what was in her heart.
But Roy understood and gave her a little smile and went on: "The fact seems to be simply that your father used his capital practically to the last cent; he was extravagant;
but I don't think anybody who knew him could find it in his heart to blame him." He unfolded the letter he drew from his pocket.
"You'd both better read it."
It was a communication from another world; it seemed to carry no validity in the world into which they had been plunged.
Nonie heard only phrases as Jim read the letter aloud. Wind wrenched at the windows, shook the house, and Jim's voice lifted over the tumult:
"—— estate left by your father. . . . We were aware for many years of the dwindling state of Mr. Hovenden's capital investments and advised him on numerous occasions to curtail expenses. We very much regret . . .
rigid and accurate accounting . . . no losses or bad investments, only what we regret to call extravagance . . . debts . . . notes at the bank . . . your mother's jewelry . . .
no stone unturned . . . sincere efforts to salvage anything possible. Yours faithfully ——"
Jim folded up the letter.
Roy said, "It's a changing world; he didn't realize it."

The life of every man is a diary in which he means to write one story, and writes another; and his humblest hour is when he compares the volume as it is with what he hoped to make it.
—JAMES M. BARRIE.

A gem of a dessert for you!

Libby's Jewel Case Torte

JEWEL CASE TORTE

Here's a genuine "sparkler" for your very next party menu! The flakiest, most delicious torte shell you ever tasted. And Libby's Fruit Cocktail—glazed. An extra luscious filling because Libby's cocktail fruits are real little "jewels" cut from whole, hand-picked fruits!

JUST PAT OUT THE TORTE! Sift together: 1 c. sifted all-purpose flour, 3 tbsps. sugar, ¼ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. baking powder. Cut in ½ c. butter or margarine until mixture resembles cornmeal. Add 1 slightly beaten egg yolk and blend. Pat out in a slightly floured 9-inch layer cake pan pressing up side of the pan 1 inch. Bake in 375°F. oven 12 to 15 min.

THE "FRENCH CHEF GLAZE" IS EASY. Drain syrup from a No. 2½ can of Libby's Fruit Cocktail and heat in pan. Dissolve 1 tbsp. cornstarch in 1 tbsp. water. Blend into boiling syrup, stirring constantly. When sauce has thickened reduce heat and cook 15 min. Remove from heat. Add 1 tsp. grated lemon rind and chill. Add Libby's cocktail fruits, fill cooled torte shell and crown with whipped cream.

Serve Libby's Fruit Cocktail often "as is"—as a menu starter or dessert. Libby's is the de luxe Fruit Cocktail! Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

It's AMERICA'S FAVORITE brand! From the world's newest and finest fruit cocktail kitchens in Sunnyvale, California

IN ALL FRUITS LOOK TO Libby's FOR PERFECTION

"Gee! How can Mommy love me now?"

TUMS for the tummy

Don't you worry, precious. "Morning heartburn" and nausea did give Mommy a bad time of it for a while. But Mommy found Tums were the answer to that! She tells us Tums made her life so much easier!

Many mothers do tell us that—when baby was on the way—Tums brought them prompt relief from heartburn, nausea and distressing feeling caused by an acid condition of the stomach or temporary calcium deficiency. Try Tums! They should help you. Tasty, handy and just 10c a roll.

ALWAYS QUICK RELIEF FOR HEARTBURN, GAS, ACID INDIGESTION

But when he was about to die, he'd thought of it, he'd sent for Roy. Nonie said, "He wanted you to marry me, Roy. I see that."

"He said nothing to me, if he did," Roy said. "There's only one reason why I asked you to marry me, Nonie."

She said slowly, "I can see now where it went—he had a genius for spending." Pictures of that gay—and fantastically extravagant—life flashed across her memory: the chartered planes, the yachts, the summers in Bar Harbor or Scotland, the winters in Florida or Cannes.

"Perhaps there'll be something left," Roy said comfortingly.

She shook her head. "I know the firm. Nothing could slip past them; they'll have accounted for every penny."

Roy said, "It came yesterday and I thought I'd wait to tell you till after we were married. I was afraid you'd mind; I wanted that to be a happy day. Well—well, we'll talk of all that later. The wind is going down a bit. We may have a lull. Riordan wants to see some of his sick patients; he's a fool to go out in this, but ——"

Roy went into the hall and closed the door and Jim's arms drew her close against him so her head rested on his shoulder. "I'll make you a decent living; I'll have enough for us—not yachts and sables, but enough."

"All I want is you." She said it so earnestly that her voice sounded childish and broken and Jim chuckled suddenly and lifted h face and kissed her.

"I'll love you all my life—all my li Nonie."

But then the house began to watch a listen outside the magic circle around ther intangibly, with a kind of deadly patience reminded them of the barriers it knew, t shocking secret it had witnessed—and t threat that secret held for them.

Jim felt it too. He moved, putting h cheek down against her head for a momen warmly, like a comforting promise. Then said:

"I've got to see Riordan. I'll be back He disappeared into the hall, his black hea shining under the light; a vine beat again the shutters like impatient fingers demandi entrance; she had stood for a time thinkin not thinking—mainly feeling his arms aroun her again, his mouth against her own—befo it occurred to her that there had been som thing rather different about his voice when h said he had to see Riordan. Different—wel then, how?

What was he going to do?

But she knew that; he meant to find th evidence that Seabury had found. What ha Riordan to do with that?

The candle flickered. Her letter to Aun Honoria—written in another age, it seem to her—glimmered faintly out of the du

(Continued on Page 178)

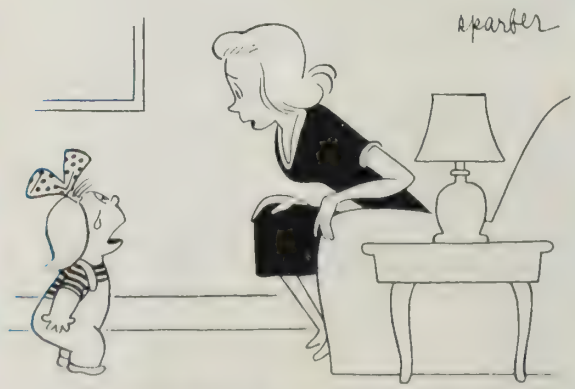
A BIG WARDROBE PROBLEM SOLVED for "little ones"...

Buy them Red Ryder Polo Shirts!

Here's one article of clothing that boys and girls really go for! Famous FLAGG Polo Shirts with a picture of their hero RED RYDER on the front! Perfect for school . . . for play . . . for any occasion any time of day!

Flagg Polo Shirts are made from fine quality cotton yarns, spring-needle knit for extra quality. Mothers really appreciate their long-lasting, good-looking, honest-to-goodness value! Other members of the Flagg family of polo shirts include Gene Autry, Little Beaver, Captain Marvel and King of the Royal Mounted.

See them in all popular sizes and colors at your favorite chain or department store, or write for further information to: Flagg-Raman Company, 93 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.



PRICE ABOUT 69¢

FLAGG POLO SHIRTS nothing finer!

Bringing up Parents

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

A GROWNUP can be alone in a crowd—and a child can be alone in a group of other children. Sometimes it's obvious why children are social "failures." They are strangers in the neighborhood. They dress differently. They go to private schools and the other children on the block go to public schools. Parents can avoid such situations by keeping their eyes open and adjusting themselves and their children (within reason) to the group. For example, you may think overalls the most sensible togs for your small daughter—but if her playmates wear dresses, it would be wrong to expect her to take on the job of reforming the world. Many times, though, the reasons why a child can't make contact with other children lie quite deep. He has not been able to get along with his own brothers and sisters. He gets too much carping criticism at home. He is shoved out of the family's social life. Such a child does not feel at home with himself, and therefore has grave doubts about how other people feel toward him. He may become overaggressive or unusually shy. But those are symptoms which will tend to disappear if, rather than trying to force the child into our own pattern of social behavior, we tackle the problem correctly at its roots.

"What good did it do me to learn how to talk? I don't have anybody to talk to."

He's happy we're minding our business!

You see, our business—our only business is making foods that baby enjoys.

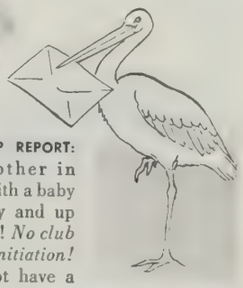
No tricks, mind you! Only thing we do is make True-Flavor Foods that go over big with small folks coast-to-coast.

What makes Gerber's taste so good? Years and years of practice in turning out baby foods just right for tiny tots. Is your small He or She enjoying the natural goodness of Gerber's? And that perfected texture?

Why do doctors approve Gerber's? Did you guess vitamins and minerals? Right! We've learned how to retain them to a high degree—in everything from Starting Cereals to Junior Meats.

Aren't you and baby glad we're busy minding our business!

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
Fremont, Mich.



Babies are our business . . . our only business!

Mothers Club News

Reported by Mrs Dan Gerber
(Mother of 5)

MEMBERSHIP REPORT: Every mother in America with a baby aged 1 day and up can belong! No club dues—no initiation! So why not have a lot of free fun swapping baby stories! You can collect a lot of helpful hints, too—via Mothers Club News!

LIGHT TOUCH. A small light attached to baby's crib won't keep him awake, will keep you from stumbling.

RAVE NOTICES on new meats! I can report that mothers from Maine to California are cheering the true-meat flavor of Gerber's Beef, Veal and Liver.

And what enthusiasm for the appetizing color and texture! Prepared from Armour quality cuts, Gerber's Meats for baby are ready to eat! No scraping!

ECONOMY NOTE: When baby graduates from Gerber's Strained Meats to Gerber's Junior (chopped) Meats, you pay the same modest price. What a saving compared to the cost of home-prepared meats.

FREE FOOD

Send for samples of Gerber's 3 good-tasting Baby Cereals all with added iron, calcium and important vitamins. Write to Dept. 84-9, Fremont, Mich.

Accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Assoc.

DRINK
Heart's Delight
California
APRICOT NECTAR
(A FOOD DRINK!)

Heart's Delight
WHOLE FRUIT NECTARS
APRICOT · PEACH · PEAR

No other fruit drinks like these luscious "Juicidrinks!" They're made from fresh, ripe California fruit especially selected for nectar use!

The Brand You Can Depend Upon For Quality!

Nectars are extra-delicious and healthful as a food drink and in punches, salads, dressings, sauces, sherbets, desserts!

Try the tested recipes on the back of every Heart's Delight Fruit Nectar label!

HEART'S DELIGHT NECTAR FLUFF

Heat 1 cup apricot whole fruit nectar with ¼ cup sugar and few grains salt. Soften 2 teaspoons plain gelatin in 1 tablespoon lemon juice and dissolve in hot nectar. Cool until slightly thickened. Fold in ½ cup pastry cream whipped until stiff. Chill until firm in 1-pint mold. Unmold and garnish as desired. Serves 4.

NECTAR FRUIT SALAD DRESSING

Blend 1½ tablespoons granulated sugar, 1½ tablespoons cornstarch and ¼ teaspoon salt. Stir in 1½ cups Apricot Nectar and 1 unbeaten egg. Cook and beat with rotary egg beater until thickened. Remove from heat and stir in 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Chill. Fold in ½ cup cream, whipped, or 2 tablespoons mayonnaise.

RICHMOND CHASE COMPANY, San Jose, California

(Continued from Page 176)

and fell into obscurity again. She would not send that letter.

Where was Jim, she wondered; what was he doing? She roused and took the candle to the dressing table; she showered and dressed and brushed up her hair and looked at the gold-backed brush. The little brilliant-set monogram twinkled and glittered in the candlelight. How like her father that was; and how glad she was now because he'd been like that.

She had no need for a fortune, no need —— Her thought broke off abruptly. Jim might need lawyers; she hadn't thought of that. The twelve hundred dollars taken from her brown alligator bag might have helped. Could she, by any chance, recover it? She could at least try.

She took the candle and went into the hall. A pool of light came upward from the lower hall, and Roy was there, sitting in an armchair, a great old candelabra on the table beside him.

"Nonie!" he said. "I hoped that you were asleep."

She sat down, putting the small candle she carried on the table. "The house seems empty," she said. "Where is everybody?"

"Riordan said he had to see some patients and left during the lull. Aurelia is asleep, I suppose; Lydia too. Jim ——" He rubbed his forehead wearily and said, "Jim started off for Middle Road. Dick discovered it, flew into a rage and started to bring him back. I don't know what's happened to Dick. He hated Hermione; yet anybody would think he'd appointed himself her avenger."

The flames wavered so the shadows everywhere moved. Arrest, lawyers, money!

Nonie leaned forward abruptly. "Roy, I've lost some money."

"Money! What do you mean?"

He listened as she told him quickly of the missing money—listened with a growing seriousness.

"Would you know the bills, Nonie, if you saw them again?"

"Yes, I think so. I have to fold them like this"—she sketched the gesture with her hands—"for my billfold. Could it have any sort of connection with—with murder?"

"I don't know." He waited for a moment, thinking, and suddenly rose. "I'm going to question Jebe. Don't worry, I'll not accuse him." He touched her cheek lightly and went away toward the kitchen.

A wild wind shook the house, the candle flames lowered and flared up again. Jim and Dick must return soon. Perhaps they could not reach the house through the gale.

But Doctor Riordan had returned. His bag stood on the bench near the door, and as the candles flared wildly the light caught in its lock and gleamed for a second.

WHERE was he then? It struck her as curious that Roy had not seen his return; on an impulse she rose and went to the library. No one was there. The sea was so loud that it seemed to threaten the very foundations of the house; as she turned into the hall she had a quick and formless impression that someone preceded her. The smell of the sea and the rain seeped through the hall as if a door had opened somewhere.

The house seemed cavernous, and singularly empty. Doctor Riordan must be somewhere.

She went to the door into the old-fashioned, formal drawing room; it was a dark and empty space. As she reached it the sense of movement, of someone near, was so strong that she turned to look. But in the very act of turning, all light softly vanished. There was only the smell of smoking candles, the wild rattle of the windows. Someone stood between her and the rest of the house, blocking her return. Nonie pressed herself backward against the door.

A woman changes when she loves and is loved. When there is nobody who cares for her she loses her spirits and the charm is gone. Love draws out what is in her and on it her development decidedly depends. Nature must have its free course, must go its normal way; what a woman wants is to be with one man and with him forever. That is not always possible, but when it is otherwise it is against nature.

—VINCENT VAN GOGH.

A moment, perhaps, passed, and a she could not move, the slightest rustle guide a nebulous and undetermined sh of the other gray shapes, toward her passed and nothing happened.

So long a time passed indeed that she to reason with herself. Nothing was The candles had gone out because o strong draft. She had only to scream fo Even if one of those dim shapes had substance, still she had only to scream

She sidled cautiously along the wa ther from the door. She groped her wa a table, a sofa and chairs. She waited ment, listening; there was still no soun fireplace should be at her right, and a sofa stood at an angle near it. She s cautiously in that direction and som that sounded like a footstool slid softly the floor somewhere and stopped. Foo don't slide of their own will across the

THERE was something she had meant she had thought of something to do. thing—oh, yes. She had intended to s

If she screamed she would only betra self. Her scream could not be heard th the tumult of the storm; panic caught h she made a quick, uncautious step and against a table and something on it ji Jingled sharply and clearly, a bell-like sound of doom.

There was a split-second's pause; t soft rush of footsteps charged from the ness toward her. She flung out both and they encou the hard, stuffed of the sofa. She down on her kne hind it. The ru footsteps stoppe very air seemed ten; then the foo blundered softly

She waited, her pressed against th wark of the sofa. was a long silence w the room; the ro the sea was more tant there. Her released from its argy of terror, began to race; who there in the room, waiting, listening for traying breath or motion? Had some sider, an invisible, convenient out whom Aurelia—all of them—had clung resolutely as an answer to their ugly lem—had that outsider somehow, som got into the house? Or was it someone al in the house?

But there were so few, so terribly few ple in the house—Roy, Aurelia, Lydia. tor Riordan. Jebe.

Listening, holding her breath, trying t the heavy thud of her heart, questions on. Was that Aurelia, padding heavily relentlessly—through the gloom, seeking like a massive, angered animal? A with her latent violence, her sudden leased anger? But why?

Lydia had said that Aurelia woul jealous of Lydia as Roy's wife. Coul have meant that Aurelia would be jealo anyone as Roy's wife?

Nonie denied that quickly. Aurelia w have had no motive to murder Hermi Aurelia had not even seen Hermione night she was murdered.

Or had she? Did anyone know w Aurelia had been or what she had done, o than her own statement?

Aurelia, Roy, Lydia. Roy, who had kn Hermione all those years, who might e have hated her, who certainly could killed Seabury with one murderous sweep machete. Could Aurelia have done that? thought of Aurelia's powerful body; thought of Lydia's look of wiry strength low the graceful lines of her figure. But was a man; it was easier to accept the that a murder by violence had been done man. Suppose Roy, loving Lydia in heart, had heard Hermione's scarcely ve taunt, suppose it had angered him, suppos an instinctive defense of the woman he re loved, he had quarreled with Hermione; s pose he had shot her! Roy, who had d

BOTTICELLI

Be sure to see this magnificent new creation in solid silver by America's finest silversmiths . . .

Frank M. Whiting AND COMPANY

MERIDEN • CONNECTICUT

Write for beautiful Botticelli brochure!

RICAN VIOLETS

rcial Grower specializing in African Violets with of experience, 80,000 now in propagation, offers of growing, propagating, common ailments, and soil formula. Booklet 50¢. No stamps. Description rieties included. Print address.

AXTER, BOX 1444, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO

GRAVY MASTER thrifty

MASTERS GRAVY MAKING

Look for this Gravy Boat

ASH MONEY!

EN and WOMEN wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for the Ladies' Home Journal, he Saturday Evening Post, Holiay, Country Gentleman, Jack and ll and other popular magazines. ig cash commissions. Devote spare me or full time. For full details rite to

RTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY

850 Independence Square

adelphia 5, Pennsylvania

r all your Knitting!

Wonderized*

TI-SHRINK ANTI-MATTING YARNS

lusive in

AR BRAND YARNS

Fleisher's Yarn

EE! Instruction leaflets for knitting men's, women's and children's sweaters, men's socks. Send 3¢ stamp to cover tage to Wonderized: 30-20 Thomson Ave., ng Island City 1, N. Y. Dept. J-49 everything possible to keep Jim from being charged with murder. If Roy had murdered Hermione, wouldn't he have let Jim—or anyone—take his place for that dread penalty? Would Roy—would anyone—have scruples when it came to saving his own neck? But perhaps Roy had; perhaps that was why he had so earnestly tried to protect Jim. Conscience!

* PROC. PAT. NO. 2,429,592

Thinking of Seabury, though, she rejected that; the person capable of that murder had no conscience.

She listened, and crouched lower, and listened . . . and fear was like lightning, throwing the darkest questions into swift, sharp focus.

Aurelia, Roy, Lydia! Was she thinking of one of them as a murderer? There was Doctor Riordan in the house; returned secretly, his bag in the hall betraying his presence. And there was Dick Fenby, who might have returned secretly too. Who had suggested, himself, the way he might have murdered Hermione. Who, a man, might have killed Seabury. Who was quite suddenly ruthless in his determination to fasten the guilt for Hermione's murder upon Jim.

But if Dick had acted, he had acted too well. If his resolution to bring her murderer to trial was actually due to an inner desire to avenge the woman he had once loved, then he could not have killed her.

And Lydia's terror had been real; her green eyes had flashed fury at Hermione's smoothly directed thrust, but they had been lighted with a real terror after Seabury's murder. And Lydia still loved Roy, had come to the house that night to dinner in an admitted last hope of swerving him from his marriage to Nonie. She could have had no other thought that night; even an angry feud with Hermione would have lost its urgency then.

Nonie pressed her cheek against the smooth fabric of the sofa. There was still no sound from beyond that solid bulwark. Yet fear itself like an electric impulse drove her thoughts onward with a swift and remorseless clarity.

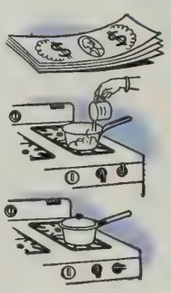
But again the litany of names was too short. Doctor Riordan and Jebe remained. Doctor Riordan had seen Hermione on that last afternoon of her life, and admitted it. There was possibly some small mystery about the boy who had fallen down the steps, the boy Doctor Riordan had come to attend. It was possible, too, that in some way Hermione threatened him. But it was only a possibility. And the only evidence that could be summoned up against Doctor Riordan was his presence, his statement that the slug had disappeared (perhaps it had not; perhaps he had himself disposed of it), and of course his bag, proclaiming his secret return to the house. Was it Doctor Riordan waiting there in the deep shadows, listening for her slightest breath?

Or Jebe? Jebe had said that there were some people who wouldn't be sorry that Hermione was dead; Jebe had then turned evasive and silent when she had questioned him. But wasn't the first statement a mere statement of fact that everyone knew; wasn't his evasion the polite evasion of an old and loyal servant?

Suddenly she realized that the room was very still and had been still for a long time. She was chilled and cramped, huddling there. How long had that utter, complete silence in the room lasted? Was it as empty of other human presence as all at once it seemed?

She waited and listened and cautiously lifted her head. She could see only shadows, with darker, heavier shadows marking tables and chairs. None of them moved; no whisper or motion hovered now in the deep dusk. She waited longer, and presently something stronger and more authoritative than sheer human reasoning began to seep out of that silence, and that was an atavistic sense of loneliness. She knew and could not say how she knew that no one now was in the room except herself.

But she could not trust that knowledge; she had to test it with an argument that reason would accept. She bent and slid one slipper from her foot, stood poised with it in her hand for a second and then flung it lightly



MAKE SURE YOUR NEW GAS RANGE HAS GENUINE CENTER SIMMER TOP BURNERS

Most of your cooking is done on top of your range where true simmer heats make cooking so much easier . . . cooler . . . better!

WHAT IS THE CENTER SIMMER?

The Center Simmer is really 2 burners in 1. When you turn off the big burner, the little center burner keeps on burning. All Center Simmer top burners do not look alike, but you can easily identify them. Just ask the salesman if the little center burner remains lighted when you turn off the outer flames.

WHY THE CENTER SIMMER IS BETTER

1. Saves gas, because the Center Simmer alone, as shown below, keeps a covered vessel BOILING.

2. Saves time, saves food, saves boiling dry, saves delicious flavor and color of foods. You can cook with less than a cupful of water, as so little boils away.

3. Keeps foods warm without over-cooking . . . only the Center Simmer turned low gives a true "keep warm" heat . . . no other burner turns so low!

DO THIS! Insist that your new range has Center Simmer top burners. Leading makes featuring this great advance in burner construction include A-B, Atlantic, Caloric, Copper-Clad, Cribben & Sexton Universal, Crown, Delher, Detroit-Jewel, Flamex, Garland, Gurney, Majestic, Moffat, Moore, O'Keefe & Merritt, Quality, Roper, SGE Acorn, SGE Oriole, Wedgewood.

ONLY A GENUINE CENTER SIMMER DOES THIS

. . . center flames remain burning when outer flames are turned off.

This type of Center Simmer burner is made by the Harper-Wyman Company, who developed the patented Center Simmer principle.

HARPER-WYMAN COMPANY

8564 Vincennes Ave., Chicago 20, Illinois

HARPER CENTER SIMMER

Just put 'em in a pan... and Bake 'Em!

That's all! The work's all done . . . all the measuring, mixing, rolling, cutting! Ballard rushes OvenReady Biscuits fresh to your grocer's refrigerator.

You just slip 'em in the oven. No mess or work, and best of all, no fear of failure. Ballard OvenReady Biscuits bake golden-perfect every time!

Hot Biscuits
ready to eat in 9 minutes!

Ummmm-mmmm! Fresh home-baked biscuits and then some! For these are the real, old-fashioned Southern kind, made of super-select ingredients by a famous Dixie-land recipe. Mighty thrifty, too. You get 10 biscuits in every package—every one a tender delight, with never a failure, never any waste!

Best You Ever Tasted or Your Money Back!

Distributed Exclusively by Kraft

BALLARD OvenReady BISCUITS

across the room. There was a small thump and clatter as it struck some piece of furniture. And then nothing. No sound, no rush of footsteps, nothing.

Cautiously she started toward the door. One step and another and, listening, waiting, another. She reached down and took off the other slipper before she started across the hall. She took a step or two and listened; still nothing moved or spoke; nothing came furtively from the darkness. She reached the stairway sooner than she expected and stumbled a little against the lowest step. The slight sound seemed loud; her heart pounded suffocatingly while she waited, and then, clinging to the banister, she started up the stairway.

When she was halfway along, Aurelia said, "Who is that?"

Nonie stopped. Her hand gripped the banister as if it had frozen upon it. She could not speak; where was Aurelia? Where had she been?

And from the darkness below, Aurelia said again, with that heavy vehemence in her voice, "Who is that?"

And Nonie freed herself from the inertia of terror and ran, lightly, swiftly in her slipperless feet, on up the stairs, around the corner, groping surely in the darkness for the door to her own room.

She slid inside, closed the door and locked it. And leaned, panting, half crying, against it.

Aurelia?

The French windows rattled and shook. Something had come loose about one of the shutters so it tapped steadily—too steadily.

The wind sounded like a voice calling her name. It was a voice; and it was Jim. She ran, stumbling in the gloom, fumbling her way toward the balcony.

Jim cried again, "Nonie—Nonie——" and all at once the bolt slid and the door flung itself open. Rain and wind surged into the room, and Jim was pushing his shoulder against the shuttered windows to close them, shutting out the turmoil. "Quite a storm," he said, panting. "I got up by the trellis."

"Jim——"

"What is it? Nonie, what's wrong?" His wet oilskin slid to the floor and his hands went out toward her.

She cried incoherently, "Someone is here—in the house—downstairs——"

His hands caught her shoulders hard. "What do you mean? Hurry, tell me."

Jim was there—solid and real—to fight off threat. She clung to him and told him what there was to tell and it was suddenly absurdly little.

But he, too, said in that tense harsh voice, "Aurelia? Aurelia was there?"

"But there are other people in the house, Jim. Roy and Lydia and Doctor Riordan. At least his bag was there."

"Did you see Riordan?"

"No."

"Is Dick here?"

"Roy said he had gone after you. To dle Road."

A grim note came into his voice. "I th he would. I did what I had to do the came back through the banana plantati meant to get back before the storm got v Nonie"—his voice stopped; the dim o of his face looked deeply thoughtful—"N the time somebody walked along the and frightened you—was it like this? I n did you feel the same way?"

The question, coming sharply out o dusk like that, perplexed her; her own an in a strange way, perplexed her, too, fo said immediately, "No."

"What was different about it?"

"I don't know. I—yes, I do know. other time—it was as if that was mea frighten me. It did frighten me. But this, now, was real, Jim——" The truth s up suddenly to such an appalling climax her own words stopped themselves on lips.

Jim said, "This was intended to be der."

The windows rattled savagely behind as if the thing he talked of were out t trying to force its terrible way into the h again.

He said, "Listen, Nonie, You can't here in the dark." He got out matches matches, however, were wet and would strike; he fumbled around the great bed disappeared on the other side of it; there a sharp sputter and a small glancing lig his hand, touching his brown face and ing shadows move in the corners of the r He had money, a packet of bills, in his o hand.

She said something and came to meet The bills were folded—folded an inch from the bottom, sharply creased so stayed together.

He said, watching her in the tiny, light, "Your money?"

"Oh, Jim. Where——"

The flame crawled to his fingers as stared at the bills; he dropped it and ligh another match. "Are you sure? Could swear to that fold?"

"It looks like it. It—wait, I'll get my fold."

"Don't get it now. There's not much qu tion of that. It's your money."

"Where did you find it?"

"The boy had it. The one with the cussion. He'd stolen it from Hermione."

"Hermione! How could she have got How could she——"

"She had it and discovered the boy t it and they had a row and in the course

"If table manners were so important, wouldn't we be born with them?"

no other curtain has it!

Fashion Edge Curtains

THE PATENTED DOUBLE-FOLD RUFFLE

Premium quality at a popular price

Guaranteed by Housekeeping

Write for your free copy of "Curtain Time" . . . a booklet on curtain care and Window tricks. Dept. J

SHION CURTAIN COMPANY

Memphis, Tennessee

he backed away from her across the veranda and fell down the steps. He's conscious now, able to talk. That's what happened. Hermione called Doctor Riordan."

The flame had crawled along the match; he dropped it and the darkness in the room was heavier; the whole house seemed to move closer somehow, listening—threatening.

"That's not all he told me. I was right about the gun, Nonie. It belonged to Dick. Some months ago Dick loaned Hermione his gun. This boy—his name is Happy—had seen the gun around in Hermione's possession. He knew it belonged to Dick, and he'd heard them speak of it. He only knew that she had borrowed it. Not why she borrowed it."

"Why she borrowed it!" Nonie cried. "She was afraid. Who was she afraid of?"

He said, "It's easy to see now what happened that night. She came to the door to meet somebody, whoever it was that came to Middle Road prepared to kill. She had the gun in her hand. Whoever killed her snatched it away from her. Almost certainly whoever killed her knew she had the gun."

"Dick knew!"

"Anybody might have known. It would have been like Hermione to boast of it to anybody she had quarreled with, to say 'I've got a gun—I can protect myself.' Perhaps she didn't; perhaps we'll never know. The only thing we do know is that the gun was snatched away from her and she was shot with it."

"The boy knew she had it," Nonie said. "Happy knew."

"He was unconscious at the time she was murdered."

"He might have told someone!"

"He might. Dick might have told someone. The point is the gun disappeared. And eventually somehow the slug might have been traced to it. I'm sure now that Dick took the slug."

"Did Dick kill her?"

He said obliquely, "Nonie, there are some things I've got to do—quickly. I want you to stay here and I want you to remember—well, that thing by the hedge, that machete. All of that seemed to me then staged—phony. If it had been a real attempt to injure you, it wouldn't have been delayed like that until you ran to the house. But this thing just now is . . . different. You were not a danger before; but now I think—well, I'm going to get a light for you." He went, fumbling in the shadow, toward the little writing table; he struck a match and peered around it and opened a drawer. "There ought to be candles around somewhere."

She moved to rummage in the drawer. The letter to Aunt Honoria still lay there and caught his eye. She said, struck with the unpredictability of events, "I was writing that when you came that afternoon. I was writing that and I suddenly knew that it was you ——"

His eyes had fastened absently on the written words which leaped out in clear black ink from the white page; his absent gaze fixed itself until the tiny flame reached his fingers and he dropped it with an exclamation.

"Jim, what were you reading? Why did you look like that?"

"Nothing, nothing. I—Nonie, you'll do as I say." Perhaps it was the plunge into darkness that made his voice sound frightened. He said, "I'll do what I have to do now. Nonie, you will stay here. Promise me."

"What are you going to do?"

"Is there a bolt on your door?"

"Yes."

"Lock it."

A swift conviction came out of the dusk between them; she cried, "Jim, do you know who killed her?" He did not reply and she put her hands out toward him, catching at his arms, feeling the rough wet texture of his coat. "You do know!"

"I think I know why she was killed," he said. "I think I know—but I can't prove it unless ——" He stopped and said almost in a whisper, as if to himself, "Unless Dick has got back from Middle Road. Unless ——" He took her hands in his own. "Do as I say, lock the door. I'll be back."

nee

to lp you plan your vacation

Union Pacific serves:

CALIFORNIA • COLORADO
PACIFIC NORTHWEST
N VALLEY, IDAHO • YELLOWSTONE
SO. UTAH-ARIZONA NAT'L PARKS
DUDE RANCHES
LAS VEGAS-HOOVER DAM

NION PACIFIC RAILROAD
om 243, Omaha 2, Nebr.
ase send free copy of Western Wonderlands folder
ME
REET ADDRESS
Y STATE
o information on Escorted, All-Expense Tours ☐
NION PACIFIC RAILROAD

Because it's Real Mayonnaise

DELICIOUS "AS IS"

As served in this delicious combination of prunes, apple, orange and onion slices, Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise has that delicate richness of flavor that no other mayonnaise, homemade or otherwise, has ever been able to top. It's so right!

it's Good so many ways

VARY IT

Mix it with French Dressing to serve with tomatoes, carrots and cauliflower, as illustrated. No matter how you vary Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise, it's always rich . . . as only real mayonnaise can be. America's favorite mayonnaise contains no starchy filler.

BEST FOODS
Real Mayonnaise
HELLMANN'S

Sanitone Dry Cleaning Does the Trick!

Isn't it wonderful to know you can look your best on Easter, without buying a complete new outfit for every member of your family? Your Sanitone Dry Cleaner not only brings your clothes back looking like new, he even tightens loose buttons and makes minor repairs FREE of charge. And remember, Sanitone Dry Cleaning Service gives you all these extras at no extra cost.

MORE DIRT REMOVED!

DULL COLORS LOOK BRIGHT AND CLEAR AGAIN!

SPOTS AND INGRAINED SOILS DISAPPEAR!

COSTS NO MORE THAN ORDINARY DRY CLEANING!

Phone your Sanitone Dry Cleaner today. He is listed in the classified phone book. Look for the Sanitone Seal; it's your assurance of fine dry cleaning.

SANITONE DRY CLEANING

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

A division of Emery Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohio

A blinding flash of light and the opening of the door came at once; it was a flashlight directed full into their eyes, dazzling them, pointing up the objects in the room so sharply, they were bewildering and strange. Her eyes blinked in the light.

Jim said, "Is that you, Dick?"

It was Dick and he came into the room, holding the flashlight. He said roughly, his voice strained and panting, "Jim, I've come to put you under arrest."

Jim said, "I know about the gun, Dick."

The flashlight wavered slightly.

Jim said, "The houseboy knew that she'd borrowed it. There wasn't any gun anywhere in the house at Middle Road. You took the slug. She was shot with your gun, Dick."

There was another long silence; this time the flashlight remained steady and blinding in their eyes.

Jim said, "It was incriminating evidence, Dick. I can't say I blame you for getting away with the slug. But you can't arrest me ——"

"Can't I?" Dick said. "Maybe my gun killed her, maybe not. But I've got another gun here—Wells gave it to me. He ordered me to arrest you if anything happened—anything at all; Seabury was murdered and then this afternoon you went to Middle Road and God knows what you did there in the way of concealing evidence. He gave me orders," Dick repeated in that rough, uneven voice, "and he gave me a gun. Come on, Jim."

Jim said, "Who else knew she had your gun? Why did she borrow it? Who was she afraid of?"

Dick replied, "If she was afraid of anybody she didn't tell me. If she told anybody she had the gun, I don't know that either. But you could have known it, Jim. You lived in the house. You could have seen it many times."

Jim said, "Where is Riordan?"

"I don't know. Come on, Jim."

All at once Jim yielded. At the door with the full glare of the light in his face he said to Nonie, "Remember what I told you. I'll be back."

She reached out, caught the door and, as Jim had told her to do, bolted it. She stood for a long time, not moving.

What would Jim do? How could he do anything if Dick with his new—and self-saving—determination actually kept Jim under guard, locked him in some room? While Dick himself, knowing now what Jim knew of the gun that had killed Hermione, made his escape?

Dick knew the island; if anyone could escape in that wild and devastating hurricane, Dick could. But that would admit his guilt. No; Dick wouldn't escape. He would stay; he would fasten the guilt upon Jim.

THE shutters rattled: some tree had fallen half across the balcony and seemed to creak and shudder. The room was darker. The broken branches of the tree creaked again. She found a pack of matches and lighted one and saw, with a queer, cold dismay that there was only one match left.

She suddenly remembered that she had not bolted the French window after Jim had come in from the balcony. She started across the room hurriedly, caught by a sudden kind of panic. Halfway across she stopped and listened and did not know why she listened. She lighted the last match with a sharp, quick gesture and on an impulse lifted it high, looking around the room.

There was nothing different; nothing changed. She turned again to the French window and put her hand on the bolt.

She never knew whether it was already bolted or not, for the tree creaked again. But it was not on the balcony; it was nearer, close, within the room.

That could not be.

She turned as the match flared, and it the door of the great, tall armoire t creaked. It creaked and it was barely op a dark inch or two showed—which, as watched, slowly, almost imperceptibly, w ened. The match in her hand flared and w out.

"Don't move."

The shutters rattled, the tree—no, door—that was what had creaked: the d of the old armoire! There in the room, acr dark space! It creaked again and there wa light, lithe sound of motion. How curiou should be light and stealthy like that!

She did move and did not know she h done so until she was backed up against wall and could go no farther.

"Don't move, I tell you."

She heard her own voice rasping a tearing from her throat. "Why—why —

THERE was no answer and suddenly, u expectedly, not knowing she was going to it, she tried to scream. A hand came out the blackness and caught her hard across mouth, hurling her like a doll against a cha she reached wildly and a table went over w a crash. She could hear nothing; everythi was whirling blackness—and then she hear.

"I've got Dick's gun. They'll say he did It would have been so different, if you'd the money you ought to have had! So ferent; a will, a slip on the rocks, an ac dent with the boat. Easier than this w How was I to kn you'd bring no money Beadon Gates? But still be all right. I'll save my home, my p tion—if I can keep from hanging, I'll s everything. I've got save Jim—and if it had been for you he'd be sa He'd have been in N York—safe. But I'll s get him out of it, and n You are my only dang you and your little cac of money. You ——"

She screamed agai "Roy—Roy—don't!"

And that dark strain of violence, of u chained savagery, surged out in a black ti of terror, overwhelming her. She move blindly, trying to escape. The shutt were rattling and pounding. No, that u the door—the door to the hall; someone u shaking it!

But the tide of terror was still there, floo ing the darkness, suffocating, numbing h pulses.

"I'll shoot to kill. Not you—but Jim. Ev Jim if I have to. The first move you mak the first word you say to warn them, shoot."

The door to the armoire moved and w still. There were voices outside in the h calling her.

"Nonie, open the door!"

Jim's voice was so imperative a dema that her fingers found the bolt and slid and the door burst open and Jim and Doct Riordan and dazzling lights came in a ru into the room. A huge candelabra, light and wavering, was in Doctor Riordan's han He held it up high so that shadows fled fr the room. She didn't dare look to see if th was a strip of blackness along the door of t great armoire. She mustn't let Jim go the she must keep him out of range. She'd m neuver them out of the room.

But there was no way to get them out the room, for Jim had gone to the Fren windows. He was directly opposite the a moire. She could not think; she must inve some excuse. She must get Jim away fro the armoire first; then think—think think ——

Doctor Riordan was looking at her cu ously. His thin face was haggard and draw He said, "This will be a shock; you'd bett be prepared."

She moved her lips to say, "I know— know," and then was horrified at what she been about to say with Jim standing ther so solid, so dear, so firm and unyielding

Leisure, itself the creation of wealth, is incessantly engaged in transmuting wealth into beauty by secreting the surplus energy which flowers in great architecture, great painting and great literature. Only in the atmosphere thus engendered floats that impalpable dust of ideas which is the real culture. A colony of ants and bees will never create a Parthenon. —EDITH WHARTON.

eedlework is Easier

ith the right scissors

Says

Elizabeth L. Mathieson, famous needlework authority, author of The Baby Book of Knitting and Crochet.

e sure your work kit holds really top ality sharp shears and scissors designed do each job right...a good dressmaker's ears, medium size utility scissors and ick-snipping embroidery scissors."

Clauss. SEWING SCISSORS

LAUSS EMBROIDERY SCISSORS. eedle-sharp for yarns, threads, loose ends nd a neat fine finish to needlecraft.

LAUSS DRESSMAKING SHEARS. Bent andle means less lifting of fabrics from tting surface and greater accuracy.

LAUSS SEWING SCISSORS with keen, ng lasting edges. Perfect balance and pre- sion action make them a pleasure to handle.

HE HENKEL-CLAUSS CO.
FREMONT, OHIO

Clauss
SHEAR QUALITY
Since '77

target. But she hadn't actually spoken. Jim was watching her—curiously, too, his eyes very narrow, his face rigid. He looked angry!

Doctor Riordan said in a thin metallic voice that cut through the terror, cut through the sound of the storm, "I'll be the main witness; I saw the gun removed from where it was hidden—it was under a shrub in the garden. Before he went to Middle Road this afternoon Jim told me to watch; he told me Hermione's murderer had to have the gun that killed her. I watched, but then he hurried into the house. I couldn't find him."

He's here, she thought; he's in this room!

"It's absolute proof, so you must believe me. Only the person that murdered Hermione would have known where the gun that killed her was hidden. Only ——"

Jim said suddenly, queerly—still with a strange and terrible look of anger—"Tell her, Riordan. Tell her what happened." But Jim wouldn't move. He stood perfectly still. She put out cold hands pleadingly toward him and he didn't seem to see them.

Riordan said, "All right. I'll tell it as it happened."

She scarcely heard Doctor Riordan; he was talking about money, money that the boy had taken from Hermione; but she knew that.

Jim said sharply, "Sit down, Nonie. You look so . . . white; sit down on that chair by the doctor."

Doctor Riordan took her hand; then she was sitting in a deep chair. She could see the door of the armoire; had that dark small space widened?

Doctor Riordan said, "You may as well know—I'm sorry—Roy killed her."

But she knew that; she knew: Roy Beadon of Beadon Gates, with that dark strain of violence, that deep, strong savagery, who had intended to marry a rich wife. Who had planned a will. And a slip off the rocks, an accident in a boat. Money. Her money—that no longer existed.

HER lips moved again and no sound came out; Jim was talking in a very quick but detached way. Why was he talking like that, almost idly getting out facts as if they had nothing to do with her or with him? She must get him away from the door. If she moved, if she went into the hall, if she pretended to faint perhaps—no, no! "I'll shoot," he'd said. And he had already murdered twice.

Jim's rapid words went on: "—and he must have promised Hermione he'd get money from you. To keep her quiet, I expect, he took your money, your twelve hundred dollars. She guessed he'd loaned me money for plane fare; he'd probably told her he wouldn't have any money till he'd married you. Almost certainly there was a bitter quarrel after we'd gone to Elbow Beach. As a promise, I expect, of more to come as soon as he'd actually married his rich wife, he must have given the rest of the bills he'd already taken from your billfold to Hermione. And the only reason he'd have taken them is because he had no cash and Hermione had her claws into him. Everything happened at once: he discovered you had no money, he discovered I was leaving, and Hermione came in a rage and demanded her money. He had to put her off, satisfy her. That afternoon—the afternoon we went to Elbow Beach—Roy discovered that you had no money; that was the day the letter from the lawyers came. That was how later . . . when he told you about the letter, Nonie, that was when I knew that Roy—that something was wrong. He'd opened it, you see; it was addressed to you. So I knew he was waiting and watching for definite news about what he'd expected would be a very large inheritance from your father."

Doctor Riordan's voice cut through with a question. "How do you know it was Roy that took the bills?"

"Roy gave me money to pay my plane fare. I've still got one of the bills; I used part of the other one to pay the boatman to bring me back to Beadon Island. But they were two hundred-dollar bills. The one I've got still has the crease in it and it matches the folds in the bills Happy stole; Happy had exactly ten hundred-dollar bills."

LOOK FOR "BOTANY" BRAND on Men's and Women's Wear Fabrics • Men's Ties • Robes • Sportswear • Mufflers • Socks • Beachwear • "Botany" Brand 500 Men's Clothing • Certified Fabrics for Home Sewing (Certified by Botany Laboratories) • No-Dye-Lot Yarns • Lanolin Cosmetics • "Dunk" for Washing Woolens

*"BOTANY" TRADEMARK, BOTANY MILLS, INC., REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPR. 1949, BOTANY MILLS, INC., PASSAIC, N. J.

"Let me get this straight," Doctor Riordan said. "Roy took them from Nonie, gave them to Hermione to keep her quiet until he could think of a way out. He wouldn't have told her that Nonie wasn't to be the rich wife he'd expected. After you and Nonie had gone to Elbow, Hermione went home and the boy stole them. Yes—she'd wait, of course, until she could get the bills back quietly, so it wouldn't look as though she'd been having a row with the boy . . . just in case he didn't get well. Yes, I see that," Doctor Riordan said. "The thing I don't see is why Roy would take anybody's money, and why he'd give money to Hermione and ——"

There was this time a creak; quite definite, quite clear. She wouldn't look; she wouldn't let her glance so much as flicker toward the armoire. "Jim," she whispered and Jim said, replying to Doctor Riordan:

"There's only one reason. He owed her the money."

"Roy!" Doctor Riordan cried incredulously. "But . . . wouldn't there have been a note—a written record of such a loan?"

"If there was one, Roy destroyed it. Maybe we'll never know; the important evidence is the gun."

"Well, I saw him get the gun; no doubt of that. He must have taken it away with him after he shot Hermione. Perhaps he didn't mean to kill her; I think she came to the door with the gun and they quarreled and he got away from her and ——"

Dick Fenby was in the doorway; he had been listening. Dick said, "If anybody ever borrowed a cent from Hermione he'd be in her clutches for the rest of his life, and when she put the screws on ——" He stopped and cried, "But that's what she did! That night when she came for me. She taunted Roy, she called him a gentleman of the old school, she said he was reliable, she said his word was as good as his bond. Every word she said was a dagger and a threat. So he went to see her and they quarreled. And then Seabury guessed ——"

"Seabury knew," Jim said. "I think I know how he knew. There were two things. One was the sandals ——"

"Sandals!"

"Hermione's green slippers. She'd had them on, you know, when Seabury and I moved her from the porch. They fell and Nonie put them somewhere out of sight. I remember thinking of them and looking and they weren't anywhere they could be seen. But Roy—who arrived afterward—talking to Seabury last night said something about her green sandals. How did he know? He had to have seen her. Then Lydia's securities. Lydia was Roy's alibi: she'd said he was with her, and she'd been asking him about changing investments. Roy must have asked her to say that, made up some excuse to satisfy her. She'd do anything for Roy. But Seabury would have known that Lydia's money is in an annuity; she couldn't possibly change her investments. Seabury would have known that. I think it gave Seabury a—a lead," Jim said. "And of course Seabury knew that Nonie was soon to make a will. Too soon. Probably before her marriage."

"In Roy's favor?"

Dick turned to question Nonie, and she was aware of it, yet could not look at him, for if she lifted her head, her gaze would go where it must not go.

JIM was speaking: "I didn't know that until a few minutes ago. Nonie had forgotten it; it was in a letter she had written."

"Did you suspect Roy before I told you I had seen him get the gun?" Doctor Riordan asked.

Jim's voice was very clear and loud. "I began to suspect Roy when I saw how he tried to save me. Every time I was in danger of being accused of murder, somebody somewhere was trying to protect me. As if," Jim said grimly, "somebody had to protect me. . . that somebody was always Roy." There nothing casual now about Jim's words might have been addressing an audie "That phony business of the machete terday morning when Nonie was wall along the hedge! If anybody had wante kill her he had a chance to do it. Roy wen Middle Road with the rest of us, but t they questioned me alone for half an hou so. He had time to hurry back here and to make it look as though the murderer still here, hanging around the place. result was that it kept the commissioner fr arresting me then and there. I was with commissioner and the police when it h pened."

"Do you mean Roy did that?"

"YES, I think so. He cut through banana plantation and back again be Aurelia phoned. It didn't take long; t were questioning me, so he wasn't missed. didn't intend to hurt Nonie, not then. only wanted to make it look as if the m derer had been here at a time when I right beside the commissioner. And then day he promised to find the gun, in orde keep you from arresting me, Dick. You w going to charge me with murder—and I knew how serious that charge would v likely have proved to be. As soon as you that, Dick, he said he'd find another gun when I heard that, I thought, 'He's got t gun somewhere. He kept it hidden in cas needed it to help clear himself, or me.'"

"I know—I n you told me. Rior did what you told to do; I've got tha clear. You told Rior to pretend to leave then come back watch Roy. And I retrieved my gun. I I still can't believe i

"That," Jim s "was to save me ag from arrest. He tended to say h found it in your ro Dick, or some place it would incrimin you, rather than I think he intended you to find Hermio Dick. I think he intended you, in the end, be the scapegoat. He had to have kno somehow that she had your gun."

"Maybe I told him—I don't know—may she told him!" Dick rubbed his eyes and s suddenly, "Roy's not in the house. I looked everywhere. He's not here."

Oh, no! That's wrong. He's here and he h got the gun now! So near—so near!

Nonie moved and did not know what intended to do and Lydia, behind Dick, s "Where's Roy? I want to talk to him. I— What's wrong?" Her brilliant eyes w swiftly from one face to another and knew. One hand went out to flatten it against the door casing; her whole bo swayed.

Jim said gently, "We know the truth no Lydia. You've only suspected it. Roy kil her."

Lydia said in a strangled way, "I would have let you hang, Jim. I love Roy; bu wouldn't have let you hang. I'd have t the truth."

"He wasn't with you when Hermione w killed?" Doctor Riordan said.

"He said to say that he was. And he w with me for a while. We—we quarreled abo his marriage. He was going to marry Nor because he had to have her money. The tate was going to pieces. He didn't kn where to turn. He's so proud—so proud. A then Nonie's father—her rich father, R thought— was dying; so he went and broug Nonie back, and then he said he had to mar her for the money."

"What about that night, Lydia?" Ji asked. "What happened?"

"He took me home; we quarreled and went away in the car and then in a lit while he came back. He said"—her vo shook pitiably—"he said he'd come back

(Continued on Page 187)

"And oh, my brethren," quavered the preacher at the end of his sermon, "for the wicked there will be wailing in the next world, weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth."

"But, reverend," said a member of the congregation, "how about those who have no teeth?"

"Brother," said the preacher sternly, "teeth will be provided."

—Reprinted from A TREASURY OF LAUGHTER, edited by Louis Untermeyer. Copyright, 1946, by Simon and Schuster, Inc.

Does your girdle have a crush on you?

You'll lose inches without pinches in Warner's comfy 3-Way-Sizes

Twins may be the same height and weight—yet need different girdle lengths or hip sizes to be comfortably fitted.

- So if you want to be arresting without being pinched, slip into the Warner's 3-Way-Sized girdle that is yours alone. They're priced as low as $3.50.
- Warner's 3-Way-Sized girdles come in four lengths and three hip sizes.
- And from over 300 styles and sizes, you can choose the control you want, be it a little or a lot.
- You'll feel as lovely as you look!

..... your correct hip size

Here's a hip-tip: a too-wide girdle washboard-wrinkles at the sides while a too-small girdle binds your thighs into unlovely bulges. There's a Warner's that's just right for you because Warner's are hip-sized for straight, average and full hips.

..... your choice of control

You'll have a line of least resistance if it's one with the comfiest insistence—Warner's. You'll always be comfortably lovely whether you choose the free 'n' easy control of light, mesh elastics or the firmer control of tightly woven elastics. Warner's bras are 3-Way-Sized, too, in cup, band and uplift. At finer stores.

Among Warner's 300 styles and sizes is the Sta-Up-Top Le Gant Pantie Girdle #655, in pink, white, black, $15.00. Alphabet Bra #22-99. ABC cups, in pink, white. $3.50.

..... In your size... your correct length

It's only fitting that your girdle should be your length. A too-long girdle keeps you pulling and yanking. One that's too short does its own pulling . . . at precious stockings. In a Warner's you pick your exact length whether it's short, medium, long or extra long. The Sta-Up-Top Le Gant shown here features a waist nip-'n'-tucker that won't roll over.

Girdles · Corselettes
Pantie Girdles · Bras

WARNER'S*

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • WARNERETTE* • STA-UP-TOP* • ABC* ALPHABET* • A'LURE* "FREE LIFT" • REDFERN*

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off., The Warner Brothers Co., New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8.

WITH CLOTHES COSTING SO MUCH

There's no time like now to get a beautiful new SINGER !

Dress made from Advance Pattern #4981. Buttons and buttonholes by SINGER SEWING CENTER.

THERE'S never been a time when sewing could save so much.

And there've never been machines that made it so blissfully easy as the beautiful brand-new SINGERS. Truly, the finest models ever. Made by the company that's been making the world's favorite machines for 98 years.

See them, try them, choose yours now! And whenever you need notions, lessons, services, count on your SINGER SEWING CENTER to help.

● Let your home decide which model you buy. SINGER has many period and modern styles. Prices start at $89.50. Easy terms. Liberal trade-in allowances.

● Imagine! An 11-pound machine that does the work of full-size model—the SINGER* Featherweight Portable. Has handy case. Outsells any other model in the world.

● You can trust a SINGER to last a lifetime. Supplies and service always as near as your nearest SINGER SEWING CENTER. Colonial cabinet, above, holds portable model.

● SINGER* Machines do more than just sew. They sew beautifully, surely. Come with basic set of attachments. Have non-glare light, wide range of speeds, easy threading.

● Complete home sewing course at your SINGER SEWING CENTER given with the purchase of a new machine. You make a dress as you learn, get advice from experts.

● Right-color thread, right-size zipper, scissors, skirt marker—your SINGER SEWING CENTER has every notion you'll need. They'll cover buttons, make buttonholes, too.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION SINGER sells its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never at department stores or other dealers.

At right is SINGER SEWING CENTER at 258 Main St., Biddeford, Me. Hundreds from coast to coast. For address of your SINGER SEWING CENTER see classified phone directory. SINGER SEWING MACHINE CO.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U.S.A., 1949, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

(Continued from Page 184)

ke peace with me. Later when I knew rmione had been murdered, he told me it if we said we'd quarreled it—it showed— would show Nonie that we were"—a slow sh came up into her face—"on quarreling ms. He didn't want Nonie to know, he said, it he loved me. So we'd not tell anyone it we'd quarreled and he'd gone away for lf an hour. He said that we'd say he'd been :h me all the time and that I'd asked him out some investments. I believed it until abury was killed like that; until I knew it Nonie had no money and he had known ind wouldn't tell me. I love him; I still love n. But there's a thing called conscience. ouldn't have let you hang."

That was what she'd meant: a thing called nscience. Nonie let her eyes flicker once to rd the armoire; there was no sound, no tion. How could any of them know that rder waited there!

Jim said, "He wanted Nonie's money?"

"He had to have it. He'd borrowed money; sh, he said; he said he had to return it or e his plantation."

"Who loaned him money?"

"I thought it might be Hermione. I ought that because of the way she talked, at night—before e was murred ——" Lydia ddenly, without y warning, slid into chair and flung r hands over her e and began to cry. What are you going do?" she asked kenly.

Nonie glanced ain toward the arire and she started her feet; her throat as numb, her lips re frozen and Jim, atching her, flung nself at the widen- door of the arire.

Lydia screamed d shots roared ainst the walls of e room. Roy was beeen Jim and Dick, ruggling, knocking ick across a chair, king away from n's hold on his arm; ere were shots gain, this time rough the ceiling. Lydia screamed and reamed and Roy gave a mighty tug and lled away and reached the French windows d they were open. He plunged through to the balcony; there was a wild rush of in and wind and sound, and then only the ght and the wind and the rain and the door inging wildly. And Lydia's screaming.

Jim had the gun in his hand. Dick was rambling to his feet, rubbing his jaw. Doc- r Riordan said, "Let him go."

Nonie's throat was suddenly unlocked. You knew—Jim, you knew he was there."

Jim came to her. "Of course," he said. "I w your eyes—I saw the red mark on your ce. I was waiting. I . . . wanted him to know l the proof we had." He put his hand gently gainst her face.

"He didn't deserve mercy," Doctor Riordan said sternly.

DICK said slowly, "Jim, why did he try to ve you? He could have let you take the p. It was getting my gun in order to proct you, by implicating me, that actually roved he did it. It was his own act. If he adn't done that ——"

Jim said slowly, "I was his only chance to coup, to save his plantation. Riordan said e didn't mean to kill Hermione; but perps he did mean it. You see, if Hermione as out of the way, I'd inherit. And we'd lanned, Roy and I, to run the two plantaions together, as a partnership. It would ave saved his plantation, his pride, everyhing he lived for. When he learned that fternoon that Nonie had no money, then I think he made a decision to act. But I came back. He didn't expect that. He thought I'd have a perfect alibi. That was the essential part of his plan. I would inherit from Hermione; I would be all too grateful for his offer to enter partnership; and nobody could suspect me of murder because I'd be on a plane at the time she was murdered. He had to save me or his whole scheme fell apart. If they hung me for Hermione's murder, he was lost. He had to have me."

I'll kill even Jim. Even Jim. That was what Roy had meant. Nonie remembered that and then she saw Aurelia in the doorway.

AURELIA had heard; she knew. She said, 'I was afraid of this! He was not a planter, Jim. Everything went wrong, always. But he was so proud." She looked at Nonie. "I wanted you to marry him. He'd have your money, yes, and that would help—you must have seen that the plantation needed money. But mainly I wanted you to be his wife. Well—this is the last of the Beadons of Beadon Gates. Where will he go, Jim? What will he do?"

No one looked directly at anyone else. Dick, however, went quietly to Aurelia. "It's better this way," he said. He led her from the room. Lydia rose, the tears shining on her face, and went away, too, her head still high.

Doctor Riordan said, "He'll take the motorboat. That's my guess, in spite of the storm." He looked at Nonie and then at Jim. "I don't see why he tried to kill Nonie—if that's what he meant to do this afternoon."

Jim was going to the French windows, and he spoke over his shoulder. "Because she could identify the money, of course. He had to kill her before somebody found the money and Nonie said it had been stolen from her. It was too direct, too damning a chain. He wouldn't have hurt her otherwise."

Oh, but he would have murdered sometime; the dark seed of violence was already in his heart. A slip on the rocks. Money she hadn't had; a marriage, a will. But Hermione could not resist the cat-and-mouse game which had so evil and strong a fascination for her—and this prey was too strong.

They were talking, tracing the inevitable, terrible pattern of murder, speculating on things they could never know now: how had Roy known that Seabury believed him guilty; had he told him in words, had Roy guessed when Seabury tried to telephone to the police commissioner? She sat huddled, listening, not listening.

Suddenly Jim said, "You see, Nonie was afraid. I think when I realized that, when she said the house seemed to watch and listen, then I began to be sure. You can't be afraid of a thing; you have to be afraid of a person. There was a latent savagery in Roy; she sensed its presence. She was afraid and didn't know why she was afraid."

"Jim." Nonie went across to him. "Jim," she said, and stopped. She'd tell him sometime all the things Roy had said.

Jim put his arms around her close so her head pressed against his shoulder. She knew that the doctor had gone.

"The weather's changing," Jim said after a while. "Listen—the wind's going down. Morning will be sunny. And one day—one day soon, my darling, we'll fly home, right up into the blue sky." He broke off abruptly and thought and said, "That's about as near heaven as we can get. And then we'll come back to Middle Road. We'll come back home."

THE END

Modern Woman

By Ellen Borden

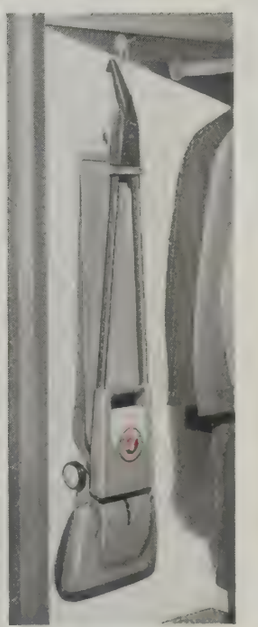
They say I'm distracted and lost.
I think I'm impacted and bossed.
When I was a kid,
They ruined my id;
So now I raise Cain when I'm crossed.

I emote with a speed supersonic.
I'm sadly in need of a tonic.
I envy the peace
Of the Ancients of Greece;
O Plato, please make me platonic!

All I can do is doubt;
I'm getting much too thin;
My ego's too far out;
My id is too far in!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

SINGER PRESENTS



The all-new cleaner with Magic Handle

The SINGER exclusive "magic handle" puts all controls within finger-tip reach. And that includes AUTOMATIC CORD CONTROL—the wonderful, new SINGER feature that ends tiresome winding and unwinding of cord on old-fashioned hooks.

SINGER Automatic Cord Control lets you pull out extra cord as you need it. Then push the magic button, and zip!—your cord disappears—out of your way as you clean!

PLUS ALL THESE WONDERFUL SINGER EXTRAS!

Gets more dirt, gets it faster. Because the SINGER has Dual Suction—2 fans instead of 1. Another SINGER exclusive.

New "floating" brush adjusts automatically to most rug thicknesses. Ends the trouble and guesswork of adjusting brush by hand or foot pedals.

More cleaning power when you need it. 2-speed switch for light and heavy cleaning.

No more foot-pedal acrobatics. SINGER magic handle adjusts to any position you like.

So easy to store! Hangs flat in closet!
So easy to carry with midway hand-grip!
Unit is only 5 inches high! Gets under most furniture!
New "all-around" bumper protects furniture—never smudges!

SEE IT TODAY!

For your protection. SINGER sells its sewing machines, vacuum cleaners and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores, dealers or other outlets.

SINGER* VACUUM CLEANERS ARE SOLD ONLY AT YOUR...

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U.S.A., 1949, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.
*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Match and Multiply with Avondale

Companion Colors

Because Avondale fabrics are dyed-in-the yarn, you get the exact same colors in solid shades and stripes

One smart dress can lead to endless smart outfits, when you start with smooth Avondale cotton chambrays in Companion Colors. The same stay-fast, dyed-in-the-yarn colors are woven into solid shades and stripes, and the patterns are woven through. Soft, Avondale chambrays are easy to handle, drape and sew . . . sturdy, they're made for washing and wear. Sanforized*, all-cotton . . . in a range of qualities and prices . . . in ready-to-wear and piece-goods.

Look for the blue label that identifies these Avondale VALERIE chambrays in Companion Colors.

AVONDALE

Dyed-in-the-yarn fabrics . . . the stay-fast colors are woven-in

58 Worth Street, New York 13

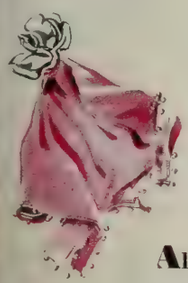
*Residual shrinkage less than 1%

Start with this bare-top basic dress in an iridescent Valerie chambray by Avondale . . . and use a lighter iridescent Valerie chambray, in matching color, for the lining of its town-right jacket.

Simplicity Pattern 2817

Use light-toned iridescent Valerie chambray for the hat and bag that make it a complete outfit.

Simplicity Pattern 2173



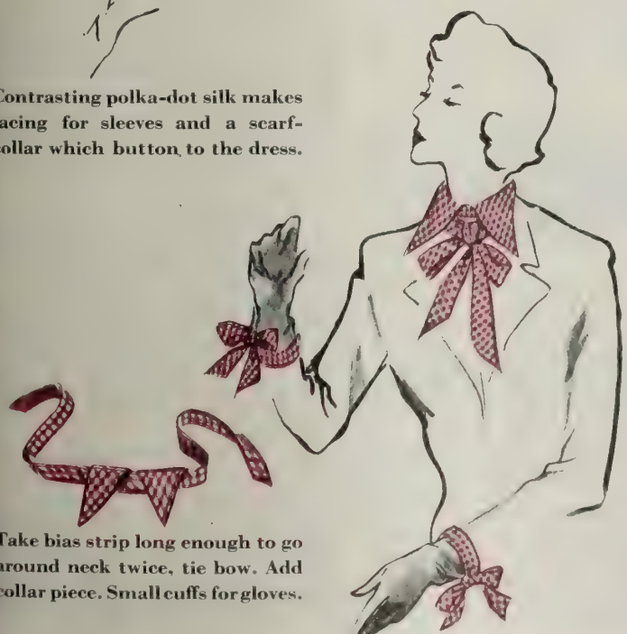
For a change, add a stole, easy without a pattern, in a matching dark-toned iridescent stripe.

A TOUCH OF SPRING

By Marion Plummer

Add a bias fold of plaid taffeta to a scooped-out neckline. Fill with shirred organdy edging.

Small scarf with pearls sewn to edge . . . tuck in belt or tie.



Along with spring come thoughts of last year's dresses and suits which are still too good to discard. It's the new plunging neckline you cut, the exciting new fabrics you use, which make your clothes come to life. Try a bold-plaid taffeta, the new ribbon-knit material, or a contrasting polka-dot silk. All these ideas take a minimum of time to make, cost little money.

Contrasting polka-dot silk makes facing for sleeves and a scarf-collar which button to the dress.

Simple ribbon-knit fabric dickey, organdy back. Use 1-inch picot-edge ribbon for neckband and bow.

Take bias strip long enough to go around neck twice, tie bow. Add collar piece. Small cuffs for gloves.

Send 15¢ to Journal Reference Library, Philadelphia 5, Pa., for No. 2541, Neckline Changes, for patterns to make these spring touches.

GLAMOUR STEP BY STEP...

a mist of smooth sleek nylon to flatter every graceful leg line...

in the new 1949 Fashion Harmony Colors.

STOCKINGS by MOJUD®

Of course, smart women prefer Mojud Lingerie, too!

MOJUD STOCKINGS ARE MADE OF DUPONT NYLON

for High, Proud Rounded lines...

these two ultra-popular

BRASSIERES by Maiden Form

® REG U S PAT OFF

*"ALLEGRO" combines highly accentuated uplift with lovely rounded lines and a marked line-of-separation. For bosoms which range from a little below to a little above average: bandeaux, Tearose or White Broadcloth, $1.50; with 2-inch band, Tearose or White Broadcloth, $2.00; Black, Tearose or White Satin, $2.50.

*"INTER-LUDE" moulds average and some less-than-average bosoms into classically rounded lines and offers the added advantage of a deep V-front. Tearose or White Broadcloth, $1.50; White or Black Satin with low-back, $2.00.

"There is a Maiden Form for Every Type of Figure!"

Send for free Style Folder: Maiden Form Brassiere Company, Inc., New York 16

Fashioned for all Time-tellers

Jewelers' Best

WATCH BANDS

A new interpretation of fashion watch band styling—fashioned to bring fashion to any timepiece.

Consistently recommended by America's jewelers . . . from $5 to $13.25—white, pink or yellow gold filled. Fed. tax included.

Lansky-Bender, Inc. • New York 17

no one else knows ..but you!

Imagine carrying a smart purse with a cleverly concealed pocket.* It's an ingenious hideaway for your valuables — a secret that you need not share with anyone. It's another triumph by Marcraft.

Bag illustrated — $15
Many others from $5.95

A Quality Bag Sold Only At Quality Stores

*Pat. U.S. Pat. Off.

by Marcraft

H. MARGOLIN & CO. INC.
330 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 1; N. Y.

FINDERS KEEPERS

(Continued from Page 67)

garage and filling station down by the mill bridge. A good chance there, Willie so shiftless and all. He meant to own that place outright someday.

He might talk to pa again tonight, let him have two-three crisp hot tinkers in him first. He dug into his hated books, forgot that crazy outlander.

After school he went down to the river shore, got some week-old lobster bait off Ray Auld, minced his chum in Nancy Auld's meat grinder and boiled out the grinder for her. Then he crossed the state road above the mill bridge and hit through Dunham's meadow to the bay shore.

Mis' Brier was in her kitchen, and he asked her, "Wes going to use the skiff tonight, ma'am?"

She smiled at him, a big hearty woman, make two of Wesley. "Why now, I don't hardly think. You go ahead, Andy love." Gave him the oars and a cooky to boot.

That old bay was some calm and white this evening. He recalled how his mum used to like a boat ride here, the sunsets and all. Tide still coming strong, and he could spy a school of fish curving round the spar offshore. He took the skiff off the outhaul and set his gear under her thwart. Just about to shove off when something caught his eye up by the edge of the meadow.

It was her. On top the bank, looking at him big-eyed, half smiling that same way she had this forenoon. Never said a word or made a move. Just merely stood there in case he'd happened to change his mind.

Crossed up for fair. He sighed through his nose. "Okay, come ahead if you've got to."

She lit off that bank and came flying into the boat before he got the words out. Rowing off, he saw that fat old Mis' Brier not minding her business, gawking and twiddling her fingers at him. Women.

Though come to find out, this outlander proved no great bother afloat. Weighed nothing, sat still, didn't even chatter. Used her eyes considerable, however. Took in the jig and line and can of chum under his seat, watched his oar tips feather, his wrists turning the butts.

He gave her a peek now and then, no harm in that. She sat up proper, her legs together, hands in her lap. She breathed long, her eyes sparkled, as if hardly holding herself in. Only thing she said all the way out, she wrinkled her nose and said to him, "Somethin' died in that can?"

"That's to draw fish." She'd be sorry yet.

He tended his knitting and was out over the ledge in good time. Overran the spar buoy, turned and drifted back on it, casting chum. He made fast to the buoy and let the skiff tail out the length of her painter. Hove his new jig and went to it.

ALL this time she had an eye on everything. As his first fish came splattering aboard, all of a sudden she laughed out loud like a song and her toes drummed the skiff bottom. Soon he got another, then another. She fair screamed with glee. That jig was all right.

"Want to try?" he said, some pleased himself.

She fetched in a breath at the very idea. Took his jig without speaking and gave it a sling. Line fouled, of course, jig whistled close past his ear and cherplunked alongside.

You couldn't help laughing, she was that unhandy. She got red and flustered, looked fit to cry. No help for it—after he'd unsnarled his line he took and showed her.

She learned quick, at that. And finally she got one, and so tickled she couldn't hardly stay inside the boat. She sang, she talked to her fish, she shivered all over. He waited while she hooked another. Dusk coming on now, and the tide going slack. He flipped in a few more and put for home.

But now this trip she was wound up and jabbered all the way. Something in her had seemed to let go. It started with "Whatta place, whatta place," under her breath, talking to herself, moving for'rd and back to his rowing. "Oh, it's love-ly."

"It's okay." Something made him talk it down. What could she know?

"Okay?" she hollered, like to spit.

She fell quiet, scared or thinking. Then she began telling him how it was where she had lived, the Home, she called it, up in Boston somewheres called North End. No yard to it, and nobody let play on the street. Time she was thirteen they let her go to market with the housekeeper and haul victuals back in a gocart. Papers and dust blowing, people jampacked in the street, kids snitching stuff off her wagon if she didn't watch out. The housekeeper jawing her on how to buy, how to save, how to keep from getting gypped. Come seventeen, last year, that woman took sick and she went alone. They gave her just so much to feed the place on. Prices went up and up, she could get less and less, and she told them but they wouldn't believe her. Always searched her when she got back for what they made out she'd stole. That's how it was when she got to come here to the camp. It was like heaven, she said.

"STILL is," she said, and her thin arm waved at the afterglow and the bay and the spruce-peaked, rocky dark shore. "So clean an' quiet. Smells good. An' everythin' like finders keepers. Pick berries, dig clams, catch lobsters, fish, even pick up firewood most anywheres. Free for nothin'." She looked hard at him, and she gave a snort. "You an' your 'Hmph! It's awkay.'"

Life is like a ladder: every step we take is either up or down. —ROGER BABSON.

He never said a word more. Wanted to but would not. She fired up like his mum used to, sometimes. Dead right about the city, but about anything being free she was miles off. He wondered what she'd say if he told her his four-greats gramp had settled this place away back. And the cellar of the homestead up in the woods, rocks in it weighed a ton or more lined up true to this day, and all by hand. Free nothing. And the stumps burned and the stones hauled off and fitted into walls to mark boundaries and pasture and cornfield before ever the farming began. Free his eye. Anybody had to buy something to start, to do with. The rest, and most the whole thing, was guts to stick at it. Not a bit of it free. But he wasn't going to blow about that. He laughed to himself at this outlander that shot her mouth off, didn't know beans.

As they got ashore he asked short off, "Stopping in town?"

"Bolters'," she said.

Bolters'. He thought of that big gingerbread house, once the town show place, now but a relic of dead Bolter shipbuilding. He thought of the two old maids lived there. All's he said was, "H'm, three in family." He and pa being two, he strung more than half the fish on a bit of line and held them out to her. "Here."

"But ——"

"Take 'em and get."

She was crying; he'd put his foot in it somehow. She let out a sort of gasp, and she slung her arms round his neck and rose on her toes and kissed him. Next he knew, she and her fish had beat it out of sight.

Mooring the skiff, his hands shook a little. Girls. Never been kissed before. Not that way anyhow.

At supper, what he said to pa was not what he'd planned. "I see we got this outlander in town."

"H'm? Fish are some sweet, boy. Oh, her."

"What I thought, the board ——"

"Couldn't be helped, couldn't be helped. Cynthy Bolter thinks she owns that charity camp. She queens it, over there, once-twice per summer. Seems this charity girl, Julie Something-'r-other, she talked Cynthy and

(Continued on Page 192)

Just Medium, please"

The UPTOWN $10.95

The COQUETTE $10.95

Gold (Red) Cross offers more lovely fashions on the smart MEDIUM heel than any other fine shoemaker in the world!

The CHATEAU $10.95

The MYRA $10.95

GOLD

RED CROSS SHOES

Today, more than ever, America's unchallenged shoe value

$8.95 • $10.95 Slightly higher in Canada

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. Gold Cross Shoes are manufactured and distributed in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd., in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd., in South Africa by Eddels (S. A.), Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd. Gold Cross Shoes are now being featured in Canada by leading retailers.

Helene Curtis
creme shampoo
rich in emulsified lanolin

Who knows what shampoo is best? Your beautician! Use this 2-to-1 favorite of professional beauticians. Leaves hair misty-soft, dazzling clean, manageable, glowing. Billows of foam instantly even in hard water. No soap film! Rich emulsified Lanolin prevents drying. America's greatest value.

full half pound $1 more shampoo
more quality for the money

(LARGE REG. SIZE, 60c)

AT LEADING BEAUTY SALONS, DRUG AND DEPARTMENT STORES

(Continued from Page 190)

May into letting her stay on and work for them. So Cynthy had some friend of hers up to Boston fix it legal." Pa was stirring his tea. He gave out a small chuckle.

"Yeah?" Andy said.

"Why, those two ain't got a dollar between 'em. No taxes paid three years now, we dassent touch the house, never sell it. What I hear, they eat on credit too. Now they got somebody to cook and wait on them. Oh, they won't be easy on her. She'll earn her keep and then some."

Andy remembered what that girl had said about everything being so lovely and so forth. Seemed different now. What he meant, nobody had any call to bear down on her. He took a look at pa, sitting there laughing.

"Well, she gets time off. She went along with me this evening," he mentioned. "She jigged some of these tinkers. Smart too. She might be all right, you can't tell."

Pa choked on his tea. After a while coughing, he sat still. He cleared his throat a couple times. "Now you keep out of it," he said. Proud as the rest of the town. Andy never noticed it before.

He didn't forget that night in a hurry. Pa was a man of few words, but he had got running that night and couldn't shut off. Threw the family lawyers at him, his uncle and grampa, and Andy chucked them right back. He put his foot down about studying law. Balked there, pa held out for his knowing more about gas engines before he had his way. What about a year or so at Polytech or down to Orono?

He recalled it well as he hopped the bus at the Center, bound home a year and more after. Specially the you-keep-out-of-it part. Hadn't been one thing to keep out of. Girls. He'd stuck up for that outlander kid, was all. If pa got his way by packing him out, he had his by ending that lawyer talk for good, getting better fixed for what he wanted. He knew a sight more about cars already.

"Back again," the driver greeted him, no hurrahs and not even looking.

"What's new, Ev?"

Everett Goudy still driving her this winter. Wouldn't even crack a smile at the idea of anything being new around town. Same old bus, no paint to mention, smelled to heaven, seat cushions played out, and you could hear her valves and gears before you heard her horn. Couple hundred dollars' worth of ideas right there, maybe. Mighty few passengers, and a Saturday too. Nothing new about that either. Still poor, proud and shiftless.

What shoppers sat there he grinned and spoke to, passing along toward the wide rear seat. Mis' Dodge, Hildy Vannah, old man Farlow with his weekly banana. And sure enough, Miss Cynthy and Miss May Bolter, got up in bonnets and great long ulsters might have seen the light before McKinley. One fat, one lean, and the fat one, Miss May with her cough. Andy grinned at them, toc tipped his hat, continued on. They migh have outrun their credit in town and starte fresh at the Center, was his guess.

Somebody already on the rear seat, wit loaded paper bags and parcels. When he sa who, for just a blink he paused, recalling ho she'd pestered him that day. So long back seemed. She looked good. But she looke different, you couldn't say just how. Thinne if anything. Quieter. She saw him, her hea tipped, she gave him that coaxing smile.

He laughed, sat down. "How's fishing Julie?"

She stated, "I got ten lobster traps set, not bragging.

"Holy cow, in December?" He looked a her hands. No gloves on, they looked sma but hard, capable. "Whose boat is it now?

"Corning haddick and hake came firs Mr. Auld's boat. I go out with him twice week."

He asked, teasing, "You pay him like yo paid me for those tinkers?"

Her face redded. "N-nope." She looke down. "That was kid stuff, didn't mean any thing. He buys my haul, he pays me."

She looked so pretty, fending him of something drove him to keep at her. "Picke up plenty wood to warm you, I guess. It finders keepers, everything free roun here."

"Not quite." Big-eyed, she studied ou door. "But I cut some, last fall. Over t Bolters' wood lot. First snow, I hauled it i Two cords was all. We make out. Last sum mer I picked forty-seven quarts of blu berries, sold them to the summer people.

He gave out a low whistle. Couldn't be sh was kidding. Bet she weighed not more tha ninety pound, and sat there and told all th so calm, nothing to it. Except she had spun and gumption, you couldn't tell her fro somebody raised in town.

Miss Cynthy must have heard them talk ing; she turned round, scowling like a thun derhead at this outland—— at Julie. Sh edged away from him a little. Old bus gave lurch, and one of her packages slid to th floor.

Andy picked it up, moved over too. H went on kidding her, but keeping his voic low: "Reglar handy man, my-my!" Sh didn't say anything. "They let you kee what you make?"

She nodded. "But I pay it in where the owe. We buy for cash now, mostly. It' cheaper."

"Wait one minute. They let you keep it but you ——"

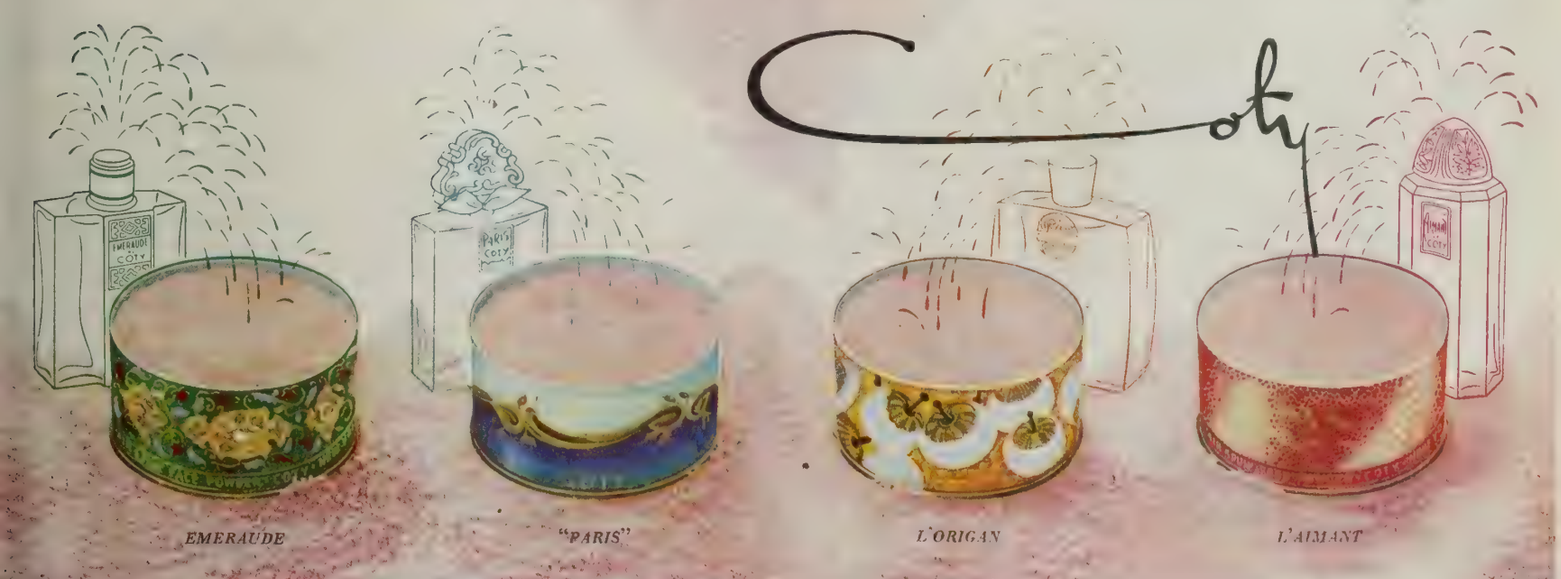
"This here's my home." She cut him of like a yard of goods, her eyes narrowing "They house me. I just help, is all. Won't d me much good if they lose the place or ge nothing to eat, will it? I can plan ahead, the can't. When I get through the day with th

(Continued on Page 194)

"I just hate writing Louella; she always answers so promptly!"

Coty gives you this "Double-Choice" in face-powder

CHOICE OF PERFUME



CHOICE OF SHADE

No other face powder has the wide range of Coty shades.

No other is so richly fragrant with great perfumes. $1 (plus tax)

There's a shade of Coty "Air-Spun" Powder that goes perfectly with each color of the new Coty Creamy lipstick.

POWDER SHADES	NATURELLE	VIBRANT	SOLEIL D'OR	COTYTAN	RACHEL #1	RACHEL #2
	with	with	with	with	with	with
CREAMY LIPSTICK SHADES	ROSE	FUCHSIA	GERANIUM	CONTINENTALE	RED RIBBON	SOPHISTICATE

EMERAUDE "PARIS" L'ORIGAN L'AIMANT

Luxury Unlimited

by

MUNSINGWEAR*

Such truly romantic Foundations! Frosted with nylon elastic lace...cool, lovely. Munsingwear weds a new power-controlling nylon lace and slimming elastic satin to sleek your figure into young curves...and in sheer comfort, too!

Graceful motif on front center panel...where your tummy used to be. Girdle (illustrated) and pantie girdle, $8.50 each...in Wedding white, Bridal blue.

Munsingwear's new strapless brassiere keeps that look of Luxury Unlimited. $5.

All at fine stores everywhere.

*REG U. S. PAT. OFF

Also ask for Munsingwear Hosiery · Underwear · Sleeping-and-Lounging Wear

(Continued from Page 192)

three of us fed, dishes washed and put away, house clean, a little paid in on debts and some left for tomorrow ——" She quit to breathe. "Feel I'm getting somewheres. It's a satisfaction."

He just stared at her. You could not believe she kept house for them too. Where was the time? Good goshamighty ——

"They're too old to work," she went on fast. "Ailing too. You don't know the half of it, you're as blind ——" She gazed outside, over the snow-covered meadows to the bay, ice-capped rocks and dark shore. "They never knew how to work. They're . . . pitiful. To me it comes natural. I'm lucky, that's all. I still love it here," she said very low.

She was crazy as ever, he thought. Half right, half wrong, and killing herself at the wrong part. He stared at the floor, shifting his feet restlessly.

The bus passed pa's house. It rolled, all squeaks and rattles, into town; passed the post office, Meagher's General Store, Sadie's Notions, Soames' Garage. It rumbled over the mill bridge and climbed the grade beyond, shifting gears with a clamor to wake them in the graveyard by the church. It slowed down for Bolters'.

Andy glanced up at that junk pile of a house, three floors, dormers, a cupola, porches, plate glass, paint weathered dirty gray. If you could find a thing in the setup worth working for —— Not in that dump. Not in those two old poor-proud stuck-ups, who took her money, let her work herself to the bone, and wouldn't even sit with her on a bus. She must be daft to let them treat her like that.

THE bus had stopped. Miss Cynthy rose, turned, tilted her head loftily and made with her long arm as if to some slave she owned. This little tyke alongside him got up with her parcels, she gave him a last quick, fierce look, and carried the load outside. Set it all down in the snow, then swung back aboard to help first one Bolter, then the other. She led them, careful and gentle, as if they were blind, crippled, made of glass. Never looked his way again.

Walking back through town, Andy couldn't quite get it off his mind. A fresh easterly off the river cut at him, and he turned up his collar. Skim sunshine, smelled like more snow. He passed the schoolyard, the church, seeing nobody. It wasn't the money wasted on them, it was the way they treated her got under his hide. But what did he care? Girls. Past the bridge, he spied Willie through a window, snug by his stove in the little office, doing nothing. Andy hailed him, "Be seeing you, come spring." Willie nodded, grinning. No cars in the garage, nobody stopping for gas. Boy, what a chance there.

Pa met him in the back entry. He looked sick, eyes bright and a cough wheezing out of him. "D' I see you riding the bus with that outlander?" he accused him first thing, glaring over his specs.

Andy dropped his valise, stubbed off his arctics, hung his coat and hat. "Yup. First and last time, though, prob'ly. Merry Christmas."

But it had proved one no-account Christmas, he'd thought weeks after, back at his books and machines and blueprints. Half the town down with flu and the rest worn out. No colored lights, no presents, no trees, no carols, no church social. Himself too busy anyhow, he'd scarcely left the house. Still and all, he had left pa on the mend. More and more, as he tended him that week, Andy had set his heart on getting through this extra schooling fast. They'd told him at school he'd be clear by mid-April.

All this time looking forward to getting home for good, because then he could really go to work. That was it, he'd kept telling himself. So when his marks were okay and the day came, he could hardly wait. Stopped in at the Mariners' Savings and got his money for Willie Soames. Then he hired Judge Bullivant to draw up papers so all-fired legal you couldn't make head nor tail of them, one for Willie, one for himself. He

Long Stemmed Look

in a carnation prin

Martha Manning Dresses

No. 7192...Flower-inspiration for th tall lines so becoming to the shorter, slightly fuller figure. Fashion news slimly handled, with a tunic treatment of the flattering front drape Yours in proportioned sizes in Enka Rayon Sheer. Black with Pink, Navy with Turquoise, Brown with Powder Blue. $16\frac{1}{2}$-$22\frac{1}{2}$. About $15

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Martha Manni Dresses Are Miss and "Illusion" Half-Siz

For the name of the store nearest you, wr

MARTHA MANNING GARMENT COMPA

DEPT. LH-5 SAINT LOU

caught the bus and sat on the wide rear and looked out the window, whistling low ough his teeth. Felt prime. Spring on the , the soggy meadows showing a sight of n on a south slope. And the old bay that your eyes smarted. Poor-proud, poky all, it was home. He recalled how he'd sat with Julie. How they'd talked. How dsome she looked when she smiled or got l. And how she'd read his thought and mad at him. Then he quit remembering. a was okay again but persnickety, dead of his own cooking. That was okay, ly told him, pitching in. He was home for good, at last. He and Willie closed deal, and the very first thing Andy painted w sign, SOAMES & MARR. She looked fine. t he fetched in an overhaul job on Luke ley's truck, and he began to talk to old Farlow about the bus and another idea he , bigger yet. As folks saw signs of life nd the garage, cars jacked up through winter began to stop in for gas and kups. Everything going good. Had what wanted all this time, he told himself.

ll the same, came into mind this curious ion. Caught him in the morning before he up, or any time if he was alone and not a le lot to do. As if he'd forgotten some- g the day before, couldn't recall what it . He'd go around trying to think, get here.

t was over a week he'd been home with- happening to run into Julie. Nobody hap- ed to speak of her or of the Bolters either. Auld had his s up and boat ore, painting and rhauling. Andy ht ask him or ebody, he might his pa. He couldn't himself asking body.

ne day, returning s Brier's battery the pickup, he ed the mansion it looked as if no- y lived there. That e him a turn. What hose two had ed away? She ld have left town. Where would she go? othered him some.

nother time, must have been two-three ks he was home now, he was walking up road to bring in Colebrooks' car. After , near suppertime, and as he passed the ch, he saw the basement door open, Ella er and Susie Rouse fixing for a social. as a bean supper, he remembered. Then n he got to the top of the rise, in the he could see this car parked outside ers'. Doc Clegg's car, he would know her where. So they were still there, at least. hen he reached the end of the back walk, doc came out. Andy thought a whole lot octor Clegg. He remembered how good been to them when mum was sickening. ll chance he got paid regular, you'd he'd have moved out long since. But uck it out, always cheerful.

Well, if it ain't Andy Marr." The dumpy guy shifted his bag to shake hands. through school and raising Cain in busi- How'd you find your pa, boy?"

Good," Andy told him. "You must have ed him into it, doc."

IDN'T do nothing. Made up his mind to was all. Now here"—he reared back his at the house—"we got a very different ude. As the old lady says when they d her how she happened to live so long, plain case of no telling." He laughed a , but shook his head.

ust be somebody sick bad, then. Andy 't know what to say, but he had to . "Which?"

Oh, both," the doc said, "both. And you "—Clegg was peering up and down the , making sure nobody was in hearing— you know something? I'd go before the board of medicine and testify those two dn't be alive today, nor they wouldn't been a year ago, if it hadn't been for the g one in there."

"Ayuh?" He let out his breath.

"A main wonder," the doc said. "I never saw the beat. Working out wherever she can make a dollar, skimping and saving, paying their way, feeding them, keeping 'em clean—why, she does the work of three. And chipper! Y'know what I call her? Julie Q. Pioneer." The doc frogged up, dug for his handkerchief and blew two short and one long. "Never gets a kind word or a smile from either of those two." He was still hoarse. "And you know what she says to me when I'm leaving the other day? Them laying there snapping her head off, mind you, and her never losing her smile. She says to me as I go out the door, 'Why, I'm lucky, doc, to have all this here. It's been finders keepers with me.'"

"What are they, bedridden?" But he could hear her say that.

"THREE and a half months now, is all. Won't lift a finger. Give up like that, they can't last out much longer. But you think of it. And another thing, what I hear, she's had a raw deal round town too. Plenty here just like those two or worse. I could tell you ——" Suddenly the doc hauled out his watch and groaned. "What am I doing here? Ought to be upriver this minute. Luck, boy." And his old car roared away.

Andy stood there in the near-dark. He could hear chinking crockery, Susie's and Ella's voices down across the road. Supper at six, most likely. . . . He had known all about her, but now he had to be told. Those two, bedridden. Raw deal around town. Oh, girls ——

Girls nothing, he wanted only one. He faced it. Wasn't a chance she'd even look at him, not after the way he'd teased her, called her foolish, knowing all this time what a row she had to hoe and never doing one thing about it. Too late, never mind.

He set off on the dead run, got Colebrooks' car, drove her down street like crazy, and slammed the garage doors on her. He beat it home.

"Going to . . . the supper, pa?" He was panting a little.

"H'm? Oh, that. Might look in later. Not hungry yet."

So he dug upstairs, shaved, got into a clean shirt, and slipped out the back way. It was ten of six. Hoofing it uphill past the church, he saw a few already arriving in hopes of best helpings. He kept on, up Bolters' back walk, stopped by the door. Light in the kitchen. He got his breath a second, knocked.

And right then all the gimp dreened out of him. Thunder sakes, what was he doing here? Scared to death. Never done such a crazy thing before. He braced his legs, though, bound to stay.

She opened the door. "Is it Andy?" With the light behind her he couldn't see her face, but by the sound of her voice she wasn't smiling. Still mad.

He swallowed, took in a breath. "Want to go to the church supper?" he got out huskily.

"Why"—he still couldn't see her—"I don't —— You come in, I'll have to see." She didn't sound overjoyed.

He stepped inside, and her eyes looked a little as if she might just possibly want to go. "Won't be an hour. Do you good to ——"

"If they're asleep yet."

They both listened. All he could hear was his heart going it, she looked so good. She gave him a glance and stole out of the big kitchen. Gone only a minute or two, and he never heard a sound upstairs, but when she came back her short hair was combed smooth and she had on a fresh starched dress, big checks white and light blue, with an old coat over her shoulders. She looked taller. Still pale and grave, as if he didn't rate a thing.

"Jul-eee?" the faint, harsh voice called down from above.

(Continued on Page 197)

Spring Came

By Virginia Frances Joy

Silently across the dark
And through the whispering rain,
With a yellow crocus for her lamp,
Spring came.

What's your idea of the perfect carpet?

Find it at beautiful-carpet headquarters—your Bigelow dealer's, today!

BIGELOW Rugs—Carpets SINCE 1825

HONESTLY, haven't you an old "has-been" carpet in your house? One you'd love to replace with a really wonderful-looking new Bigelow Carpet?

Do something about it—now! This very afternoon, rush to the man with the best carpet buys—your Bigelow dealer. You'll love the answers he has for all your carpet problems. For instance...

Are you fussy about design? Good! Then you, especially, will appreciate the wide, inspiring choice Bigelow offers! Contemporary and traditional patterns for every kind of good taste! Colors that will stir the decorator in your soul! Textures you'll want to run your fingers through!

Above: Contrasting textures weave a graceful pattern in Bigelow's Serenade 6910-47. About $14.95 a sq. yd.*

Timid about price? Fine! You may have seen some Bigelow aristocrats price-tagged as high as $18.95 a sq. yd. But, did you know that prices begin at a gentle $5.95? Other Bigelow beauties at $7.50...$9.95. And in every single price range, there are ever-so-many ever-so-desirable styles to choose from.

Right: Bigelow's Glentwist 94333—its texture "set" with Bigelow's Permaset process. Happy-medium priced at about $10.95 a sq. yd.*

For name of your local Bigelow dealer, call Western Union by number. Ask for operator 25.

Insist on the best quality? Excellent! Because superb quality is one of the main reasons why so many smart women insist on Bigelow Rugs and Carpets. No matter what you pay, you're sure of the finest imported wools, blended for maximum beauty and strength...treated to hold the wool's natural springiness-underfoot through a long, lovely lifetime even under hardest wear.

Left: Bigelow's Beauvais 1824. Only one of many delightful patterns in this popular carpet. Around $9.95 a sq. yd.*

*Slightly higher in the West

LIVELY WOOL SPRINGS BACK UNDERFOOT

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see...quality you can trust...since 1825

(Continued from Page 195)

hey froze. She had her lip in her teeth, wide eyes slid sideways. "Might be in her p, they do that," she whispered. "She s again, I'll have to stay."

he clock whirred loud as a concrete mixer, ck six slow and deep, went on ticking. settled in the range grate. That was all.

ay," she whispered finally, and they ed outside without making a sound.

ou could hear the hum of voices out the ted church basement doorway. She ght hold of his arm crossing the road, and ould feel her shake. She was laughing, of.

Scared to death, never been to one of e things," she was saying.

No need be scared," he said, feeling better. nside, at first the bright light half blinded . They found the end of the line and got r dishes, had them filled with baked beans, soda biscuit, pickles, coffee, and passed g to where the sawhorse deal tables were ng up fast. Andy heard people hail him, he grinned and hollered back. There was ig turnout, plenty noise. He noticed that ody spoke to her, even the women that ed them. Just happened, he figured.

here were two places left at the long table he middle of the room. They headed for nd set down their dishes. As they settled first the women there stopped talking and back, then the men. They all stared.

ust as the doc had said. Andy couldn't eve it. He began talking to her fast, not wing what all he said, to keep her from ing bad. He was sweating all over, trying think up jokes. Pleased and smiling, she n't seem to notice a thing wrong. Once even put her head back l laughed. It was hot in re, and he grabbed her t and went to hang it eplace. When he got k, she was alone at the g table. Took him a le while in the crowd. erybody had been there ie, and those coming in took a look and it elsewhere.

But she looked up at him, still smiling. t down, Andy," she told him, low and tle, "before your beans get cold."

t had been like this all along. In the store, the post office, on the road, wherever she t anybody. She had known it would be this tonight. She was trying to tell him lidn't matter.

His throat hurt him. The little tyke. . . . He ldn't have her, then nothing was any good more. Never been real mad in his life, but could use a handful of tenpennies to chew now. "You stay there," he said, and left n the heat and the clamor he scanned the low room, spotting this one and that of old high-school crowd. Saw Pete Sproule t, and walked up behind him and leaned vn close.

Pete, take your girl and go over to that ldle table." He kept his voice even. "Or o outside till I knock your block off."

Then he waited a little to see if anything ther was needed, saw not, moved along till was beside Stitch Bell. Same business. en Hen Pruett, same. And so forth till he l mentioned the matter to six or eight. It rked. Sometimes they looked up quick and d, "Okay, okay," sometimes not, just red, then slowly nodded. They did as he d, though. Never picked a fight in his life, t he'd never spoken up like that either. aybe they thought he was kidding and yed along for the heck of it.

HEN he got back to the table, things were king up a mite. Old Mr. Farlow had come and sat down the other side of Julie, and verend Felton and his wife were just across; y were talking to her as if she was any- dy. Andy began to eat, no idea what, except wasn't nails. The table filled up again, all nds as if nothing had happened. And soon noticed the guys here and there looking at lie, then their wives or girls nudging them behave. It was different, that sort of look, d he was like to bust with pride just to be ing her out.

After they'd eaten, just like old times all the guys were down one end talking politics, all the women up the other gossiping. And the whole shebang was having another cup of coffee when Mr. Farlow cocked an eyebrow at Andy, tapped a tumbler for attention, and stood up to mention a little matter they had talked about.

"FRIENDS and fellow citizens," and so forth, but he was soon down to brass tacks. Anybody lived as long as he had, the old man said, could see the town was suffering from dry rot. Glad to see one or two new faces, he said, but mentioning no names; for the most part it had been a case of our townspeople lighting out for other places. Little or no new business, some of the old doing poorly, and a whole lot dead. Now to his mind what was needed, he said, was a committee or something—call it a chamber of commerce—to get things going again. The Center had one, and see what it had done for them. "New blood, a common aim, new energy," he wound up, "or, if the ladies and Reverend will pardon me, guts will put us on our feet again. And by the way," he added, and this was new to Andy, "to start things off right I have purchased a new public conveyance, latest model, which starts running Monday. The old vehicle to be overhauled and renovated by our up 'n' coming firm of Soames and Marr, after which both will operate on doubled schedule, same fare."

He sat down to great applause. Old skinflint must have gone crazy.

Reverend spoke, then Orrin Wilder for the selectmen, and a couple others. They were all for it, and Andy's idea had caught on. They set date and time for a first meeting, and the crowd began to break up.

So Andy went to fetch Julie's coat. Coming back, he saw some old party with her, and then he saw it was pa. Been there all the time. "Since you two first come in," he said meaningly, and his eyes looked rheumy. "Says she can cook," the old fool said, and in plain sight of her he winked at Andy.

He was low as a bloodworm again over that. A thing like that just made a bad situation worse. As if she would look at him after he had made her suffer all this tonight, after she had seen all the smart wolves in town giving her the eye. Going back across the road he was scared to death again. No experience, and a mouth felt like a dose of alum, and shakes in the knees real bad.

"Just like anybody else, once you get to know them," she was saying.

"I's as bad as all the rest," he said. "Never gave you credit."

"Credit for what? I'm lucky, that's all." She took hold of his arm. They were almost back, it was now or never. Go down trying.

"Julie, look. How about it?" he said, desperate.

She didn't say anything. They were going up the back path. He felt her tremble. Finally, "I got to take care of them, Andy," she said in a small, shaky voice. "I set out to and I will, whilst they live."

"But what I mean, after."

She let out her breath, hugging his arm to her. "You bet, darling. The day after."

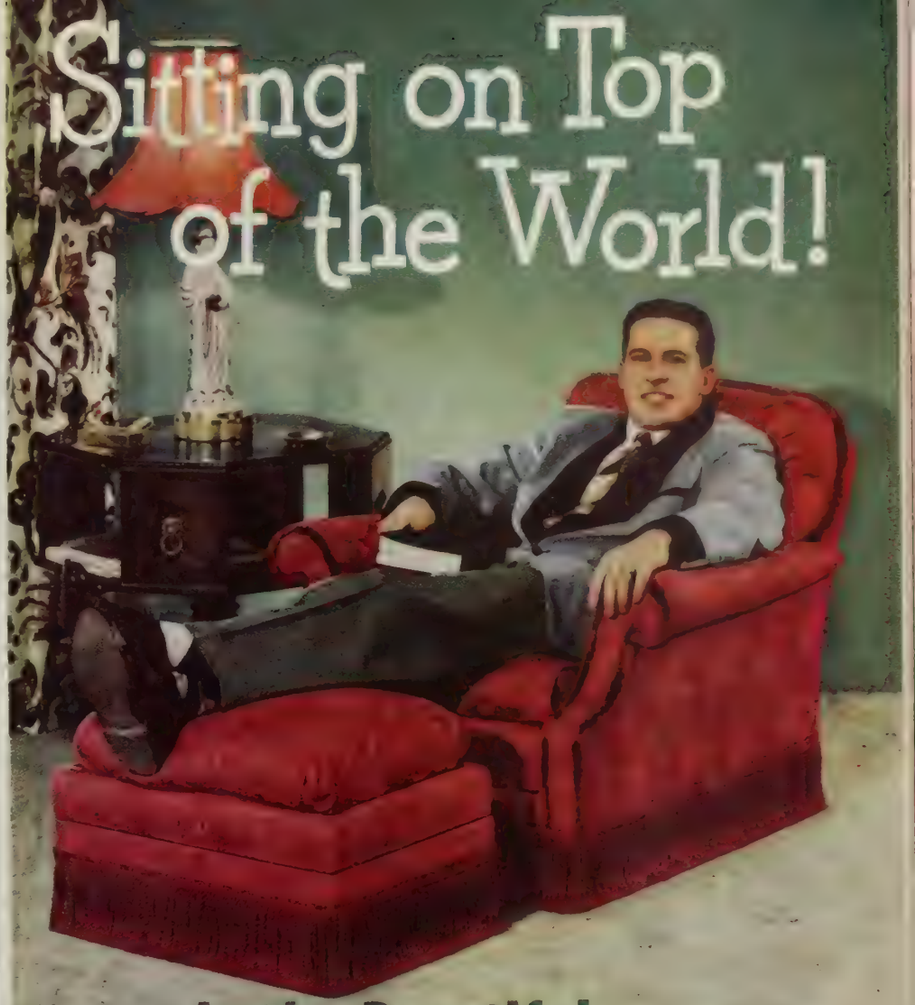
They were back. She looked in a minute to see if those two were still sleeping, then came out again softly. They sat down close on the steps. A sky full of stars going round and round for Andy.

"I dunno how you'll make out with me, Julie. No great hand at the girls, never was."

"Never tried, have you?" she asked.

Thought he'd best do something about that, and he bent down and pulled off the job somehow. It was better than that time after fishing. They were quiet a spell, hanging onto each other.

"You were right at that, what you said when we were kids in school," he told her.



"What was that, Andy?" she said dreamily. "I don't remember."

"Finders keepers," he said, and to show her he kissed her good again, no effort whatever.

THE END

> No one is exempt from talking nonsense. The misfortune is to do it solemnly.
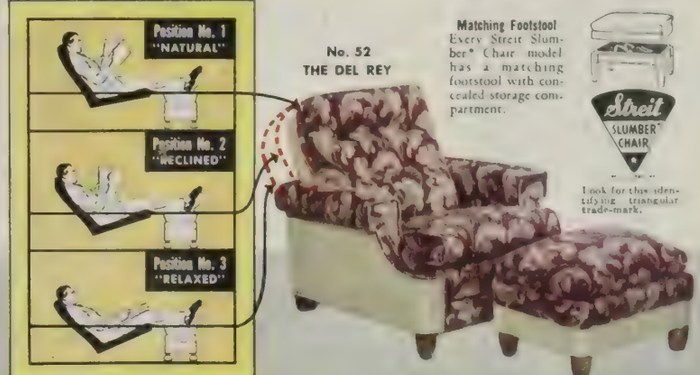
> —MONTAIGNE.

Sitting on Top of the World!

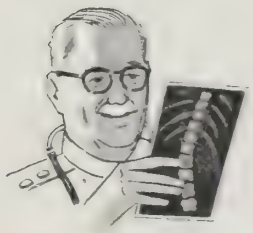
in the Beautiful Streit Slumber* Chair

Illustrated: No. 70-F THE WELLESLEY



Man alive . . . what a comfortable chair! Just the thing to put that man of yours right on top of the world. It's beautiful too . . . and the only chair on the market that offers these 4 Exclusive Streit Slumber Chair features:*

1. Thick, upholstered, spring-filled Seat-and-Back that ADJUSTS TO 3 PERMANENT POSITIONS OF COMFORT.
2. Matching, seat-high footstool with a concealed compartment for storing books, slippers, sewing, etc.
3. Factory-made, washable cretonne slip covers sold direct to you at factory cost.
4. A choice of authentic period designs and fabrics, in both open and closed arm styles, to harmonize with every decorative scheme.

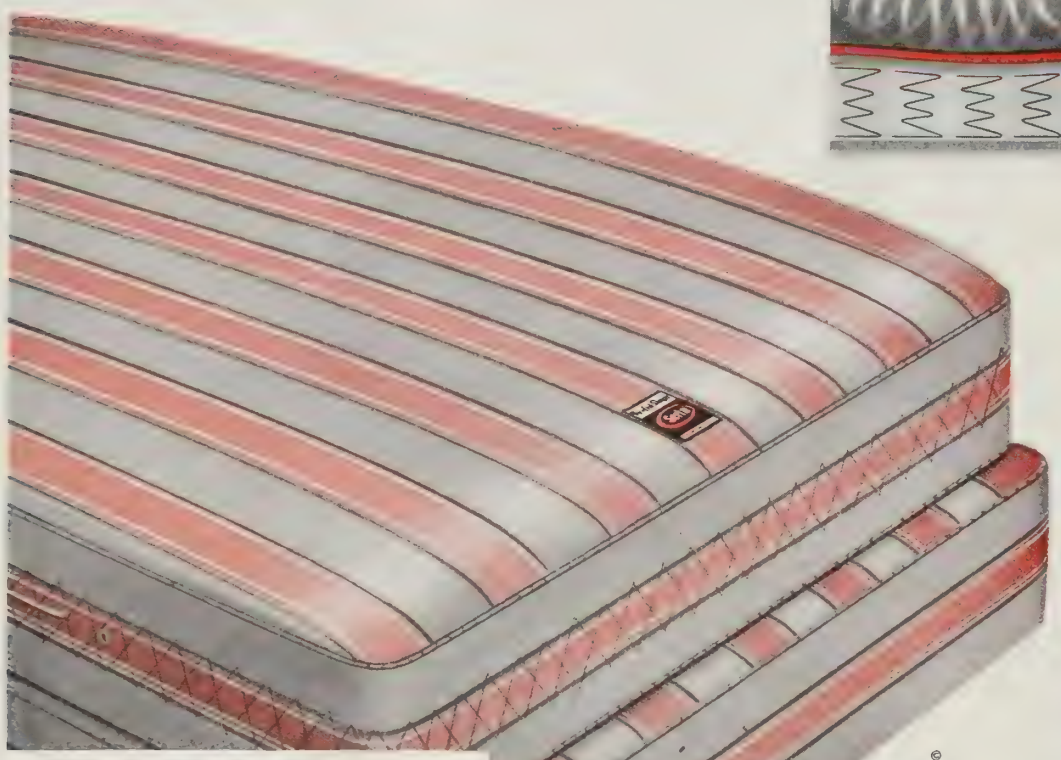


Stop in at your Streit dealer's today and try the Slumber* Chair. Convince yourself it's the tops in comfort.

STREIT SLUMBER* CHAIRS ADJUST TO 3 POSITIONS OF COMFORT

★ STREIT SLUMBER CHAIRS ARE SOLD BY FURNITURE AND

Revolutionary New Sleeping Comfort



Serta questioned hundreds of orthopedic doctors, took x-ray photos and stroboscopic action pictures. Here are the facts:

You Sleep ON It — Not IN It!

Fig. 1—X-ray photo shows a normal person lying on the "Perfect Sleeper" Mattress—built to specifications approved by orthopedic specialists. Notice the spine is given level, even support. This makes complete relaxation possible . . . permits more restful sleep.

Fig. 2—Same sleeper on common type of soft mattress with many individually covered coils. Notice body sinking into mattress. Doctors say this often causes muscle strain and backache. "Form fitting" springs also confine body heat, causing restless sleep.

© 1949

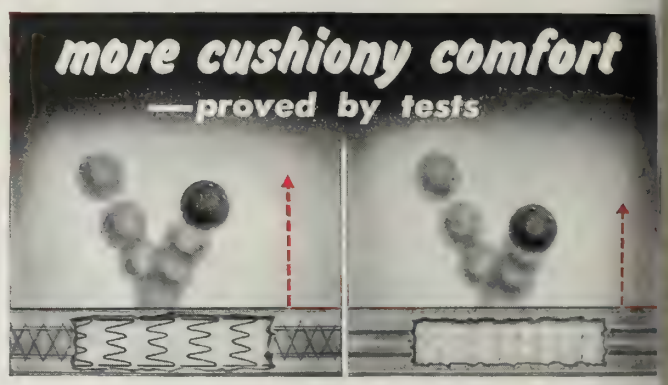

Fig. 1—Laboratory photos show that bowling ball dropped on a "Perfect Sleeper" bounces high! This proves the extra springy resiliency of this mattress which combines with healthful support to give complete sleeping comfort.

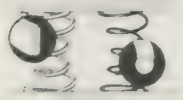
Fig. 2—Same test made on common type of soft mattress with many individually covered coils. Note the low bounce of the bowling ball on this mattress—as compared with the high bounce produced by the "Perfect Sleeper."



Exclusive Serta Features

. . . the secret of this wonderful comfort

"Uni-Matic" Spring Top—Steelbands lengthwise across top and bottom of innerspring unit weave coils into one big, resilient cushion ...provide healthful, more restful "all-over" support.

FLAT...NOT ROUND

Reinforced Center Panel—Patented "Ribbon Steel" coils in center section of mattress give far greater "live" resiliency where you need it most—more relaxing, more satisfying!

For Every Size or Weight—The "Perfect Sleeper" adjusts automatically to your individual comfort needs.

"Perfect Sleeper" Box Spring—with scientifically improved tufted edge construction gives ideal support and protection to the mattress, completes your healthful sleeping comfort. Dustless ruffle adds dresses your bed more beautifully.

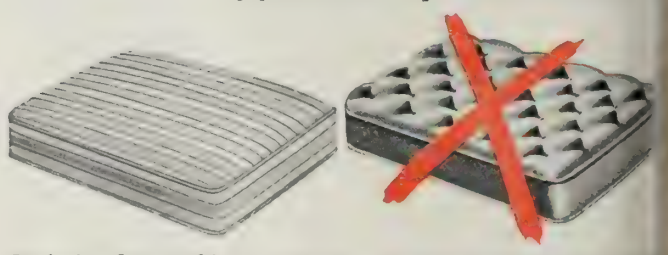
Serta

Look for this label—Your guarantee of dependable quality and value.

Serta "Perfect Sleeper" mattress

America's Greatest Mattress Value!

Only $49.50 Matching Box Spring, Same Price



"Perfect Sleeper" Supreme Mattress cushioned with Foam Latex		$79.50
"Perfect Sleeper" DeLuxe Mattress and Box Spring	each	59.50
Serta-Rest Mattress and Box Spring	each	39.50
Tiny "Perfect Sleeper" Crib Mattress		16.50

(Canadian Prices Slightly Higher. All Prices Subject to Change Without Notice)

Serta Bedding Available in Twin, ¾ and Full Size — Also Extra Widths and Lengths.

more restful smooth-top

—approved by thousands

Exclusive Serta tuftless construction features make it more comfortable, more restful. Non-stretch, non-shift, non-sag—no buttons, bumps or hollows to disturb your rest. Built by recognized leader in tuftless mattresses—endorsed by hundreds of thousands of satisfied users from coast to coast.

"Sertaseptic" coverings resist certain disease germs and molds—retain freshness longer.

UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED

Every "Perfect Sleeper" Mattress and Box Spring is Unconditionally Guaranteed against any defects caused by faulty materials, workmanship or construction.

SERTA ASSOCIATES, INC. 666 LAKE SHORE DRIVE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Spring makes its way even to this quiet corner; and all its sounds, smells and sights are those of peace.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

MY watch has been broken for a couple of months, and I have made a startling discovery with regard to time. I get along very well without being able peer down at my wrist every few minutes. In fact, life moves along so easily that ave stopped going into the jeweler's and ing wistfully, "I don't suppose you ld hurry a little?"

have never known a jeweler who be- ed in hurry, certainly not my gentle old n. After all, he lives with clocks and ches going on like mad all around him; can flick his tools and make a timepiece ister any hour at all! So possibly he nes to feel that one day is as good as ther.

At first, I fretted considerably. And fi- ly a sneaking kind of freedom crept into mind. I find it delightful to go to a tea ty and just relax, visit comfortably, and er wonder whether I ought to be going ne because look how late it is! I don't w whether it is late or not. And when an storm took down our wires so the elec- clocks stabilized themselves at a quar- of nine for a day or two, I went happily ad. We had lunch when we got hungry, l supper after dusk.

found out that the washing does not e to be on the line at ten in the morning. d that it is rather nice to iron sometime in the evening.

Of course I know if a man has to get to office and the children must catch the ool bus, it would not work to be so un- dful of time. But it occurred to me that ny women might present themselves h an untimed day now and then and l just how restful it is to the hurried ves.

dare say eventually I shall have my tch back and begin dashing around on a it-minute schedule. But I do think it st have been pleasant in those days be- e clocks were invented and nobody ever ew exactly what time it was! For after sundials mark only the hours that ne!

The heart has its own time. How incredibly fleet are the happy hours, and how leaden slow the sad ones. The clock cannot hurry the sorrowful minutes a jot, nor clip the wings of the joyous ones!

Most of the April hours are happy ones—for even the dreariest rain means the quickening of the frosty old earth into a new splendor. It isn't just a rainy day, but it is a day to make the hyacinths grow, and lengthen the green lances of the tulips. We often have to put the furnace on, and snow sometimes sifts down over the greening lawn, but we know it is just a temporary note from winter and tomorrow will be warm enough to eat in the Quiet Garden again.

The twelfth of this month being my birthday, I begin to think April comes around pretty fast. Where in the world have all the birthdays gone? Every time I have another birthday, I make a firm resolve to make every single day before the next birthday have one good thing in it. Not anything big or impressive, but something like an hour reading a book that I have put off for ages and really do want to enjoy. Or writing a special letter to a friend. Or listening to the old Caruso records. Or fixing a bouquet for a neighbor.

In other words, I think life is too much putting off things, and it is high time to stop putting them off.

I admire women who can plan their menus a week ahead, and prepare accordingly. I love to read a week's menus in the magazines. But my goodness, for our family it just would never work! We just wouldn't have the leftover meat from Sunday's roast to make Monday-night dinner. For somebody would get hungry late Sunday night, and poke around in the refrigerator, helped largely by Maeve and the cockers and Esmé the Siamese. A plate of roast-beef sandwiches with herb mustard and lettuce and a sliver of dill pickle makes a nice bedtime snack. And the cockers and the setter girl like all those bits that might make the stock for soup for Tuesday. Many

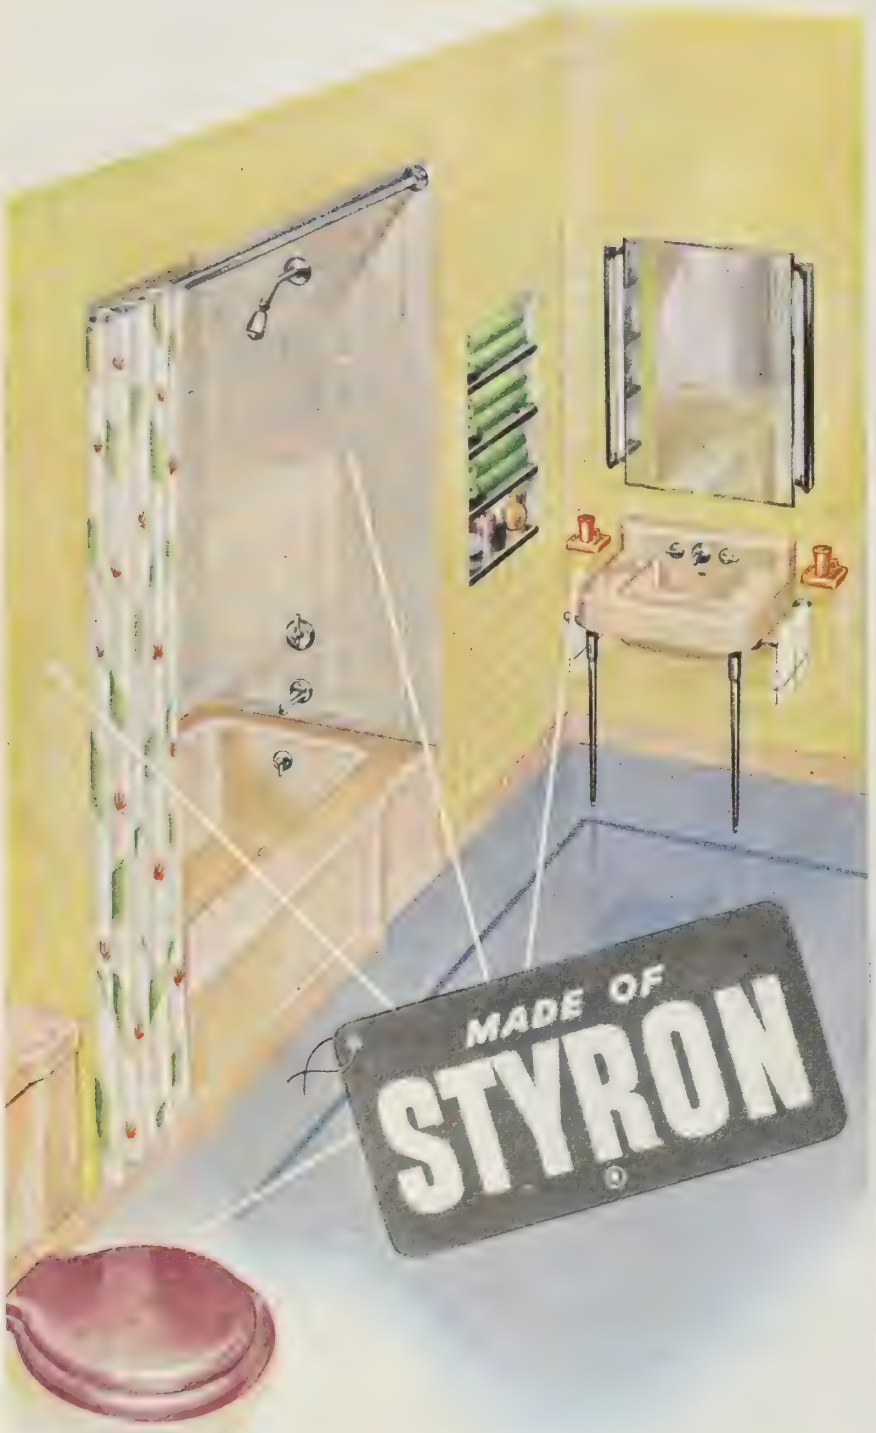
ARE YOUR GUESTS UPSET BY THE "Ghost of the Past"?

Don't let this persistent and odoriferous old fellow embarrass your guests—or yourself. Social security demands that you keep VANiSH in every bathroom.

This new double-action toilet bowl cleaner (1) quickly dispels unpleasant odors (2) as it cleans. VANiSH dissolves rapidly—its bubbling, cleaning action starting the moment it contacts water, spreads a pleasant fragrance that puts the stubbornest "ghost" to rout fast!

Once you've used VANiSH you'll wonder how you ever got along without it! Be modern. Buy a big blue can of VANiSH today.

New VANISH KILLS TOILET ODORS AS IT CLEANS



Double Your Money Back Guarantee

If you find that new, double-action VANiSH doesn't do all we say it will, return the partially filled can to us, and we will refund double the money you paid for it.

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORPORATION, Dover, N. H.
Mfrs. of EXPELLO, the famous moth preventive and ELF, sensational new drain opener and deodorant.

the room
for improvement needs WALL TILE
like this!

Here is smart new beauty that puts a decorator glint in any woman's eye! In a captivating array of lush new colors, wall tile and toilet seats made of Styron (Dow Polystyrene) provide a new measure of luxurious beauty and convenience. For Styron bathroom beauty is so easy to install, resists moisture, won't warp or shrink . . . and those glistening colors can't chip or peel because they're molded right into the famous plastic. ☆ Planning a new home . . . or remodeling your old one? Then be sure to ask your dealer for wall tile and toilet seats made of Styron.

DOW plastics

Plastics Division WT-1 • THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY • MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

and many a time I have gone briskly to the kitchen with a shepherd's pie or a baked hash and sour-cream dish in my mind, only to find one leftover bone (earmarked for Melody) and one piece of suet (the birds).

But I like to cook by emotions anyway. I like to make up a meal from staples and a can of something. In winter we make a game of eating for a week or so without shopping at all. Then if we are out of rice, we use noodles. If the bread is gone, we make corn muffins or spoon bread. We pick out a package of meat at random from the freezer and choose the vegetables that we have a surplus of, and in the end we sit down to a very good meal.

If we find a package of ladyfingers on the shelf, I may make icebox pudding for the next day and bake some date torte because I found a box of dates behind the ladyfingers.

The icebox cake is a wonderful dessert, for it is easy and quick. It makes a company dessert too. I split the ladyfingers in half lengthwise (there are 12) and line a glass bread-baking dish with them. Meanwhile I melt 8 ounces semisweet chocolate in a double boiler, add 4 tablespoons boiling water, let cool. I beat 4 egg yolks, add 4 tablespoons sugar, the chocolate, and fold in 4 stiffly beaten egg whites. I spoon this mixture over the ladyfingers (saving 4 or 5 halves to go on top). This goes in the refrigerator overnight and is served with whipped cream. This will serve four or five—but three will clean it up if they are hungry.

Veal Paprika makes a good one-dish dinner with a mixed green salad. And the icebox cake. It calls for 2 pounds veal, about an inch thick, cut into squares. Season and brown with a clove of garlic in 2 tablespoons fat. Add 1½ cups hot water, cover and simmer for an hour. Then add ¾ cup sour cream and 2 teaspoons paprika. If the sauce is too thin, thicken it a little.

The new canned cream-of-chicken soup is a wonderful thing for a cook to have at hand. I have always used the regular kind with the rice and chicken bits in it for many dishes, but there are times when you do not want that thickening which the rice gives. The new soup makes a cream-chicken gravy, adds flavor to almost any soup, is fine for the liquid in a chicken pie, and is wonderful to add to vegetable casseroles. Try scalloping potatoes with it instead of milk—you can thin it if you want to—or try it poured over tender fresh noodles! Then of course you can add cheese and have a chicken cheese sauce in which to poach eggs for Sunday supper.

One reason cooking is so exciting is that there is always something new you can make; actually, it can be a new adventure every single day. We are currently experimenting with various things to serve with tea. Hot light teacakes, coffee rings, little afternoon tea muffins—there are dozens of them.

My mother and I used to have tea every afternoon when I was growing up. At first I had cambric tea, but later I grew up to a real cup. She used her mother's old silver teapot, and I use it now, and when we sit down by the apple-wood fire and pour the tea from that little fat teapot, my mother seems very close to me.

MAMMA liked strong black tea. Last year we got one of those tea taster's packages and tried to decide which was really the best. And I confess I loved every one of them. Earl Grey is very special, but so is Darjeeling. I like smoky teas and jasmine-scented teas and every other kind.

The teapot must be boiling hot when the tea goes in. And the tea should steep four or five minutes. Thin slices of lemon pricked with cloves are all right; so is colored sugar. But for a family tea, we pour it out and drink it without anything in it. Just tea.

The hour to have your tea is that time in the afternoon when you feel blank. Around four, with us. Then you can attack the end-of-day chores feeling encouraged.

Date torte is nice for tea or dessert. Beat 3 eggs, add 1 cup sugar. Sift 1 cup flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon baking powder, stir in 1 cup chopped dates and 1 cup chopped nuts. Combine flour and egg-sugar mixtu add ½ teaspoon vanilla, beat until smoot bake about 40 minutes at 325°F. in a shall pan (greased). Turn out at once and cut in squares. Serve dusted with powdered sug if you use it for tea, but with whipped crea if you make it dessert.

This is another recipe of my mother's always mean to try it with mixed dried fru or big sun-cured prunes, but when I get the kitchen I make it just as mamma di

This winter I finished reading most of t good war books, and I wish everyone cou be persuaded to read No Place to Hide. F every American should face the tru squarely, and we should have no more of th loose talk about another war. We don't ha to be a nation of ostriches.

RECENTLY in New York I went to a dinn in honor of several of the war authors. I w interested to see that the younger write thought that war was the normal state affairs, not abnormal, whereas the older a thors felt war was abnormal and peace t normal way of living. Some of the younge had never lived in days of peace at all!

Tales of the South Pacific is, to me, one the best of the books with the war bac ground. For it is more than reporting; it is searching study of the meaning of life. M Michener is not so much concerned with th falling of the bombs as with the effect th have on men's mind and spirit. To me, th story of the cutting of the great stand of tim ber for an airplane base has pretty near all life in it, and belongs on any shelf of gre literature. Jim Michener himself is a mode quiet man with a nice sense of humor, a he is much more concerned with the futu of the world than with h own success.

Make the most of yourself, for that is all there is of you.
—EMERSON.

My experience is th people who tell you ho clever or superior or su cessful they are resemb those colored circus ba loons. The surface may h wonderfully colored, but inside there is jus enclosed air, and they are easily deflate

When I came back from the dinner, looked at my valley with new eyes. It hasn changed much since the Revolution. A fe more fields are tilled, a few woodlands hav been lumbered, a few gas stations mushroo around the post offices in the little village There are road signs, too, and electric pole But if you look down on the valley from th top of Sherman Hill, it is green and gentl and unchanged. The same white houses stan serene under the ancient maples, the sam church spires rise to the same spring sky.

O beautiful land, I thought, surely you ar worth saving! We have lived through the de struction of a large part of the world, and no let us have done with the blasting and killin and laying waste. Let us plant the gardens the world again, reroof the little houses, purif the defiled altars.

The hills are tenderly green now, the ur shuttered brooks mirror the hyacinth-blu skies, and the little singers in the swamp, th peepers, are making sweet music. The cocke race wildly after spring smells, their paws ar deep with soft mud. The cats sit on the gar den fence, their fur bright with sun.

Maeve is jumping back and forth over th picket fence, just because she can do it an the cockers can't. Her Irish-setter coat is th color of a copper teakettle, her plumed tail i a gay banner. Honey makes her way neatly along the terrace stones, so her paws, at least, will not be muddy. She reminds me o the Victorians with their parasols and lac mitts. The rest of them may make mud pies of themselves, says Honey, but she expect to come to tea and have her vanilla wafers in ladylike manner.

Wonderful is the spring! Full of wonder And the sky so pure and soft, and all th sounds in the valley are the good sounds o peace. The sound of the plow turning over the rich earth with its shining blades. The sound of the ax cutting the firewood for the cool spring nights. The sound of the bucket creaking down into the fresh clear well.

April in New England is the heart made young!

THE END

KEPPLER

Wamsutta

... A WAY OF LIVING

e 1846, Wamsutta has meant "the finest ottons" to millions of women.

nsutta Supercale — sheets and pillow- bring new beauty to your beds . . . new fort to your slumber hours . . .

nsutta Towels — beauty-woven by Som- to deep thirsty softness . . . add the final rious touch to your daily bath . . .

nsutta Fabrics — in smart apparel fash- ioned of Wamsutta's luxurious cottons by leading manufacturers.

Wamsutta Fabrics-by-the-yard — to make your clothes and your children's, too . . . to help decorate your home . . . to add in many ways to your more gracious living.

Write for our new helpful booklet: "17 Quick Tricks to Refresh Your Home." WAMSUTTA MILLS, Dept. 10, New Bedford, Mass.

---

e Linen Closet — smooth Wamsutta Supercale Sheets and Pillowcases, soft Wamsutta-Somerset Towels.* Mother — flowing negligee of Wamsutta Batiste over a slip of rich Wamsutta Lustercale.* On Daughter — y frock of Wamsutta Lustersheer collared in Wamsutta Organdy.* On Grandmother — graceful dress of utta Chambray. At the Window — bouffant ruffled curtains of Wamsutta Organdy. On the Bed — crisp canopy and spread of Wamsutta Organdy, luxurious Wamsutta Supercale Sheets and Pillowcases.

Wamsutta

WAMSUTTA Textiles

of New Bedford

Supercale is best!*

Supercale sheets and pillowcases combine the choicest of long-staple cottons, extra combing for extra-smooth beauty, Equi-Tension weaving for greater strength and wear, a thread count that bows to none. No doubt about it — there's nothing "just as good" as Supercale . . . to have or to give.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. BY WAMSUTTA MILLS

DENTISTS SAY:

Colgate Tooth Powder
with the 2-minute routine
Gets Teeth Sparkling And Super-Clean

OVER 4,000 DENTISTS, IN A NATIONWIDE SURVEY, SAY "YES" TO THIS EASY WAY

1. Simply brush teeth for two minutes, morning and night, with Colgate Tooth Powder.
2. Brush all three surfaces—front, back, and biting edges of teeth.
3. Always brush away from the gums.

REMOVES DULL FILM— THAT IMPROPER BRUSHING MISSES

Yes, this routine removes film, even between and behind teeth . . . leaves teeth shining clean, naturally bright. And, Colgate Tooth Powder tastes pleasant. Leaves breath fresh and sweet.

BOTH teeth and breath get romance-rich with Colgate Tooth Powder!

No dentifrice can get Teeth and Breath cleaner!

VOCATIONAL COUNSELOR

(Continued from Page 23)

that I should prepare for a definite job?" Mrs. Wilson talked to other young college graduates. Four out of five had no definite scheme. Those who did had chosen overcrowded professions.

Dell Wilson started her campaign by offering her services to her own community. An English major from Agnes Scott College, she had taught at a mountain school for a year before her marriage to Henry Wilson, a young furniture manufacturer in Morganton, North Carolina. She had been a Sunday-school teacher too. Even before her boys arrived, she read everything on educational guidance she could lay her hands on. As soon as the oldest, Henry, entered school, she joined the local P.T.A. Now, after twelve years' close association with the parents and with the schools, she felt she at least understood what was needed. What did they think, she asked the high-school principal and the superintendent of schools, of starting a vocational counseling service?

"Not interested. We have neither funds nor personnel," she was told.

"I decided that if they couldn't pay anyone, perhaps they wouldn't refuse to accept the services of someone who would provide counseling free," she says. So Mrs. Wilson began to train herself for the job. She began by commuting the twenty miles to near-by Lenoir-Rhyne College to bring her teacher's certificate up to date. By the spring of 1945, she was ready to begin formal training in guidance.

To get a better idea of the courses she should take and the university she should choose, Mrs. Wilson attended a meeting held by state experts on guidance at Asheville. "I went to the meeting, but I didn't get a chance to ask any questions. By luck I returned home on the train with Dr. Roy Anderson, who came to our state university from a guidance post at Columbia University. I told him I had considered going to work for my master's degree. 'If you do,' he said, 'you'll be merely getting required courses. Say nothing about wanting another degree. Go to Columbia, and take what's useful.'"

That was sound advice. But it took a good deal of persuasion on Dell Wilson's part to convince her husband and sons that it was really necessary for her to go all the way to New York City to learn to be a counselor. Mother was smart enough already, they thought.

The Wilsons decided to make mother's graduate studies a family project. Douglas went for the summer to Camp Carolina, where his older brother was a junior counselor; John found a job on a watermelon farm, and a reliable housekeeper was found to look after Mr. Wilson.

"Columbia gave me a new concept of vocational guidance," Mrs. Wilson tells you. "I came away convinced that high-school and college students needed most information about our world of work, the people in it, and how the individual can fit in. They need a new attitude about work—its dignity, its importance."

When she returned to Morganton, it was pretty discouraging to discover the high-school authorities were no more interested in her services than they had been when she went away. It looked as if she might have a little employment problem of her own!

"There are nine high schools in my county," she explains, "and I decided to apply to every one of them. They have auditoriums, gymnasiums, home-economics kitchens—but no vocational guidance."

She finally got her first encouragement from Richard Spainhour, superintendent of the high school in Valdese, North Carolina. Hemmed in by the Blue Ridge Mountains, this little town of 3800 was settled in 1893 by the Waldensian colonists from the Cottian Alps, between Italy and France. Today their dark-eyed descendants still speak French and care for their fine vineyards and industries.

Spainhour listened with interest to what Mrs. Wilson had to say. "Heaven knows how we'll manage," he told her. "We have no money, no room and no books." But with the hearty approval of R. L. Patton, the county superintendent, manage they did. They gave her a coatroom for an office, supplied her with materials for a year (1945–46) and paid her $25 a month. In addition to her guidance work, Mrs. Wilson was also brought in to teach tenth-grade English twice daily.

This unexpected opportunity to teach in the regular curriculum gave Mrs. Wilson a closer understanding of students' problems and a more intimate relationship with the other teachers, whose co-operation is imperative in such a program.

"As a vocational counselor," Mrs. Wilson explains, "my work must supplement the teacher's in assisting each pupil to make the wisest choice for his future, as well as the best solution to his immediate problems. Sometimes these problems are personal and social as well as academic or vocational."

One of the most pressing problems, Mrs. Wilson points out, is the lack of help and encouragement for the boy or girl who doesn't want to go on to college. Boys like Harry Butler need guidance to take their places in industry. Harry usually came along with other boys to her office and listened while questions were answered. There's nothing formal about Burke County guidance; if a fellow feels better with the support of friends, they can come along. The counselor can always get him back alone. One day Harry came in and asked for the name of a college where he could study business. Knowing that he had fine mechanical aptitude but a poor record in English and clerical subjects, Dell Wilson was surprised.

"Do you want to go to college?" she asked him.

"No'm, but my dad wants me to. He wants me to work in an office," was the reply.

Investigation showed that Harry's father, a mechanic, made a good income, was an excellent worker, but was convinced that office work would be a safer and brighter future for his son. With Mrs. Wilson's help, a family conference was arranged and everyone agreed that being a good factory worker was better than being a poor clerk. Arrangements were made with a local factory so that Harry could do apprentice work each afternoon, and when graduation came, he stepped into full-time employment.

Dell Wilson has a deftness about putting her finger on the problems of young people. There's the case of Theodosia Hogan, for instance. She's a bright little mountain girl. Her record showed a superior I.Q., but she had poor grades. Mrs. Wilson tried to seek out the underlying cause.

"You've been working after school?"

"Yes'm. In the mill." (Two of Valdese's most thriving industries are the hosiery and woolen mills.)

"You like to help out at home?"

Theodosia shrugged resignedly. "I guess so. I almost hafta. We've got seven kids, you know. Seems like one of them always needs something."

More conversation brought out Theodosia's keen desire to go to college. She thought it hopeless, however, and so did her parents.

"My folks say there ain't no use in working folks goin' to college," she told Mrs. Wilson.

Convinced Theodosia was college material, Mrs. Wilson encouraged her to do her best on her courses. She talked to the parents and asked them to encourage Theodosia to study—even though she was hard pressed to keep up both mill work and school. Later, she arranged a trip for Theodosia to Berea College, in Kentucky, founded to help mountain boys and girls like Theo. When the child's record had improved sufficiently, she went to the local P.T.A. and explained Theodosia's case. A small fund was raised. With Mrs. Wilson's encouragement, Theo passed the entrance exams with flying colors.

SORE Corn? DON'T MOURN!

BLUE-JAY CORN PLASTER
with Pain-Curbing Nupercaine
GIVE YOU GREATER RELIE

Apply a* BLUE-JAY

Corn Plaster and enjoy carefree fee
Instantly, BLUE-JAY's soft Dura felt pad relieves shoe-pressure pain
Anesthetic Nupercaine, exclusive wit
BLUE-JAY . . .

Soothes Surface Pain
in the tender ski around the corn. The BLUE-JAY's gentle medication . .

Loosens* HARD "core"
—you just lift it out in a few day
And BLUE-JAY stays on—because wraps on. Waterproofed, flesh-colore too. Free Booklet! "YOUR FEET AN YOUR HEALTH" Write Dept. LH-4

GET* BLUE-JAY *Today!

Chase your corns away as millions do . . . with BLUE-JAY (on sale at drug counters everywhere)!

"AMER'S LARG SELL COR PLAST'

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Cibo . . . of Del.

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company, Chicago 16

Time out for an idle moment—there are few in the lives of clubwoman Louise and busy Donald, president of the Hastings Seed Co.

WELCOME TO FLOWERACRES

Meet the Donald Hastings, of Lovejoy, Georgia:
Home life and a business flourish together on a 1500-acre plantation.

by THELMA STRABEL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LISA LARSEN—SCOPE

Louise and Donald met in the Decatur High School when both were 12. "Right there, I knew she was the girl I'd marry."

LOUISE HASTINGS is mistress of a 1513-acre plantation in the Gone With the Wind country near Atlanta. There's scarcely a week without a guest in the chintz-hung guest room, and she thinks nothing of having forty-two of the "kinfolk" for dinner. But along with that, she's a clubwoman and lecturer. She makes all her own clothes and she's a superb cook—she'll dash home from giving a long lecture, whisk on an apron and turn out a batch of her Sally Lunn muffins which are practically legendary.

All five of the Hastings live an equally crowded, usually intense, occasionally frantic life, and they love every minute of it.

Take a day, a balmy day in April. There's a great drift of dewy, freshly cut azaleas on the table in the wide center hall. Willie, the colored houseman, is making "hot bread." Louise is the first of the family to be up. She has cut tea olive with shining green

1.3% of American families have incomes of $10,000 or more.

It's welcome home from Mary Louise, 22, to brother Donald, 19, a hard-working junior at Cornell's agricultural college.

"My hobbies are vegetables and roses." Donald is in the $10,000-to-$20,000-a-year bracket, pays approximately 30% of net income in taxes.

DONALD: "Both of us believe that we should take a large share in our community's life and problems. It's a duty all people owe."

Donald kibitzes while Louise makes jelly: last year Hastings put leaves for a dining-room centerpiece. "I never like to have last night's flowers greet guests at breakfast," she says. "I always try to have something gay and green for early morning." She's dressed for town, because she's giving a talk on flower arrangement before her garden club this morning. Forty-seven, she's slightly overweight, in spite of recently dieting away fifteen pounds. Her weight, however, isn't noticeable in that black suit she herself tailored. She has abundant gray hair, smartly dressed.

As she places the twigs expertly in a Lowestoft bowl, you can see behind her the long, winding drive, bordered by crape myrtles, that leads to the classic Southern Colonial brick house with its white-pillared entrance portico—not an old house, but serenely blending into its setting. To the right, the garden descends in four terraces. Here in season bloom camellias, star jasmine, Christmastime's golden-belled wintersweet, such rarities as the "lost" Gordonia and Stewartias.

The rest of the family comes down: "Sugar," as Louise calls Donald, her husband, president of the Hastings Seed Company; then his father, Mr. H. G. Hastings, an erect, quiet, dry-humored man of 80; and Mary Louise, 22, with curling titian hair and golden freckles. You'd cast her as a wide-eyed "Southern belle" if you didn't know about her going through Vassar in three years, and making Phi Beta Kappa too. Donnie, 19, a slender, brown-haired boy with a gay, infectious grin, is at Cornell, a junior.

They're all breakfasting together this morning, as there is a visitor, but if there were no guest Louise would indulge herself with breakfast in bed, while Mary Louise had a tray in the room and they had a good mother-and-daughter visit.

After breakfast, Donald goes to the farm office to discuss the work on this seed-and-nursery-stock plantation with his superintendent and to bring back the milk

His stories and his flowers are both in demand when Donald visits the kids at the Atlanta Child's Home. The Hastings belong to many charitable and civic groups, are anxious for Donnie and Mary Louise to carry on this responsibility.

Donald and his father inspect the testing fields: 12 white and 30 negro workers are regularly employed on the plantation at above-average hourly wages. Housing and garden plots are also provided free for 35 families.

Donald and his employees exchange ideas on new vegetable stock. Products are tested and then introduced through mail-order catalogue and in one of company's four retail stores. (Right) A customer discusses the merits of special "Dixiana 6" grass seed.

...) jars of conserves, fruit and vegetables, churned all their own butter.

Louise is family organizer—"Goodness, I have to be"—budgets time for judging flower shows, lecturing and clubwork as well as homemaking.

LOUISE: "Southern women have been romanticized too much. I'd like to uproot the theory of the clinging vine as I would a weed in my garden."

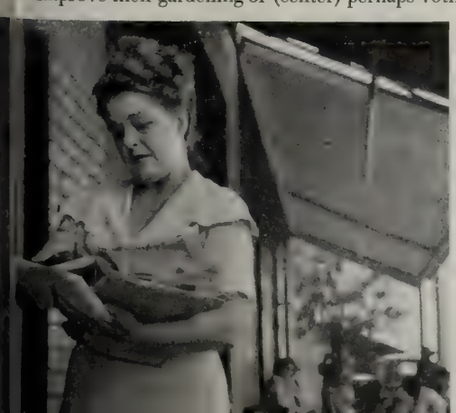
from their own cow. Mary Louise runs to the garden to gather flowers, because she's going along to help illustrate her mother's talk.

They're a two-car family, but before the men leave for town there has to be planning about meeting and picking up, because the schedules of the Hastings often become very involved. Today, after the club meeting, Louise is returning to spend the afternoon working in the garden. Willie will help, but "I just have to get my fingers into the dirt myself," Louise says, for she shares with Scarlett O'Hara a passionate devotion to her land. Mary Louise, whose great interest is the drama, will be at the Atlanta Journal this afternoon writing a review. At night, they're all attending a concert sponsored by the Atlanta Music Club, of which they're active members. Mary Louise is going with three—yes, three—boys. She enjoys parties, but her friends are mostly young people interested in music and in the new Atlanta stock company, for which she acts as secretary of the board of directors.

Well, that's today. Tomorrow, Louise is getting up at five to drive to Camilla, Georgia, to talk on church flower arrangements. The following day she'll meet Donald in Macon, where they'll do a husband-and-wife act, speaking before the garden clubs of middle Georgia. They're in great demand for giving lectures and judging flower shows, especially since the publication of their Southern Garden Book, now in its third printing.



But for all their activities, their beloved Floweracres is the real core of the Hastings' lives. Here the deep-rooted Southern tradition of "making it in the home" flourishes. They churn all their own butter. And how they can! Last year they put up 400 quarts of soup stock, tomato juice and vegetables, 600 jars of jelly and conserves, 400 quarts of peaches. Though there are servants, for a Louise autographs copies of The Southern Garden Book—written with Donald and now in its 3rd printing—for customers at Davison-Paxons. Store employs her to supervise its decorations in Atlanta and three other Southern cities.

Her many activities bring Louise letters and invitations to speak from all over the South. She takes pride in backing "Southern" causes—whether it's helping small towns improve their gardening or (center) perhaps voting "Dixiecrat" in presidential election.

"We make all our own clothes." Mary Louise shares mother's flair for sewing and her love for Georgia. A Vassar graduate, she turned down acting career to be at home: "The South needs its young people with specialized training."

"We can't tell what the future may hold for them, but we want to create lovely memories for our children."

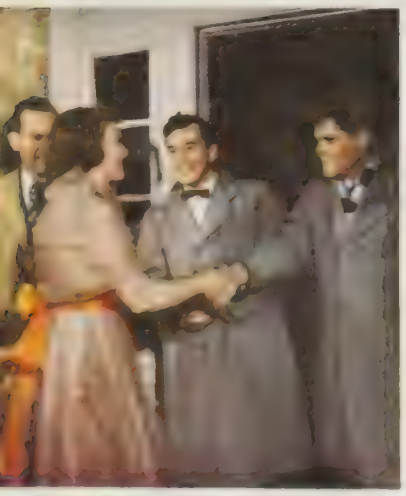
There's a party in the offing—Mary Louise finishes a new evening dress.

Louise perks up the holly before the Hastings' Christmas open house.



Busy needles try to keep pace with the gaiety when holiday time comes around.

Grandmother Brown mixes the cream, milk, flavoring for traditional sillabub.

A last-minute briefing for Willie, the butler, before 250 eager guests arrive.

Mary Louise greets friends; mother says she's "idealistic" about beaus.

Donnie deserts the girls to talk sports, his "next favorite" hobby to chemistry.

typical guest meal Louise goes into the kitchen and broils the steak, makes the muffins, mixes the salad. And of course the brandied peaches and the pound-cake are her own creations. Most surprising, though, is the fact that Louise and Mary Louise make all their own clothes.

The whole family prefers entertaining at home. They feel that their friends love the country atmosphere and the brand of hospitality which they dispense. They don't really need lots of company, though, for they so thoroughly enjoy one another, in spite of temperamental differences.

Donald, 47, boyish-looking, with amused blue eyes, has an easygoing disposition and a natural gift for mimicry and storytelling. Mary Louise is just like him. Louise and Donnie are impulsive, inclined to "fly off the handle." The two children used to squabble, because Donnie hated being bested at anything—still does. When his sister beat him at croquet, he'd take after her with the mallet. She stopped this by hitting him back once—hard. Then she went to her room and cried.

She's a soft-spoken girl, with an almost shy manner and a tendency to underrate herself, but she has a mind and will of her own. Her mother thinks that she's rather idealistic about what she expects of boys. Mary Louise has gone with several boys of whom her mother highly approved—and then suddenly it would be all over. Louise admits that she gets firmly put in her place when she tries any matchmaking. Mary Louise will know, decidedly, when she finds what she wants.

Donnie is the most social one of the family. He has a charm which must be devastating among the debutantes, but he still plays the field. He's the sportsman, too; loves riding and shooting on the place. But he also has a scientific turn of mind. He has a laboratory in the three-room guest apartment above the garage, which he occupies as "bachelor quarters" when he's at home, and last year one of his experiments almost wrecked the place. He and his mother are great pals and have a fine understanding. Louise doesn't drink, and one day Donnie said to her, "Mother, if you never drink, the way I see some mothers do, I'm not going to, either." It's a pact they've kept.

The house, with its plant-filled sunroom, living room with painted Victorian pieces, and four flowery bedrooms, is always lively, and they're casual with a guest. Donnie, when he's home, may come in, with his father, from work in the testing fields in old clothes, Mary Louise runs downstairs with a dress she's making, and Louise will bring a mixing bowl and stir a cake right in the library. The servants—Willie, his wife Ludie, who "helps out," and Annie May, the cook—are off on Saturday afternoons and Sundays, but Louise always welcomes any Festivity means family, too, to Louise, who thinks nothing of having 40 or 50 "kin" to a party. "It's good for the children. The more people there are whose concern they have now, the better future decisions they'll make. They can't let so many down."

Carols on the stairs at Christmastime: holidays are especially gay, but at Floweracres hospitality's a year-round proposition.

number of drop-in dinner guests. She's never caught without a cake on hand, a ham, and a chicken ready for frying, in the refrigerator. She may open a jar of homemade consommé, slice the ham, toss together vegetable salad, and dish up the ice cream that has been made in a hand-turned freezer. "Guests are a lot happier when the hostess isn't doing elaborate fussing in the kitchen."

The Hastings' big extravagance is this "Southern hospitality" of theirs. It's often on a big scale. During Opera Week last year, Louise had 65 for Sunday lunch, including all the stars (Donald is an "opera guarantor"). On Tuesday there was a dinner for the officers and directors, and their wives, of the Men's Garden Clubs of America, then meeting in Atlanta, of which Donald is a director. Around 40 had been expected, but 70 came, and Louise managed without turning a hair. The following Monday she served a luncheon for 65 fellow members of the board of the Garden Clubs of Georgia.

For each meal, Louise sensibly used the same menu: their own baked hams, sliced, then covered with icing and decorated with crystallized fruits; fried chicken; their own asparagus with hollandaise sauce; Sally Lunn bread

Reward for a corsage early in the evening may be claimed under the moonlight later.

Drop-in callers are Louise's delight, impromptu dinners her specialty: she learned to decorate cakes at 6, likes to bake her own every week end.

"Make it in the home" is an old Southern tradition—and that goes for entertainment too.

and homemade grape conserve; a tossed salad; home-grown strawberries on ice cream and her special angel-food cake. The opera people, especially, loved it, sitting on the beautiful terrace (they were a little shattered; that was the week their costumes hadn't arrived for the opening performance). The ever-charming Madame Bori came up to Louise and announced, "I am now taking another plate and starting all over again!"

Louise feels that they balance such expenses somewhat with all their home dressmaking. The women of her family, the Browns of Grovania, Georgia, have always been proud of their sewing, as they are of their cooking (Louise's grandmother taught her to decorate cakes in French-chef manner when she was only six). She watches thriftily for sales, especially those season's-end ones of couturier fabrics, buys dress and suit lengths and puts them away. She bought all the bedroom chintzes at a great bargain in a decorator's close-out, and made the curtains and chair covers herself. She took a summer course in designing and dressmaking at Columbia before she was married, and Mary Louise studied under designer Aline Bernstein at Vassar, so their sewing is highly professional. They swear by Vogue patterns.

Before Mary Louise went abroad last summer they made eight suits and dresses. They report triumphantly that they saw an almost exact replica of one of the evening dresses, a lace one, in an Atlanta shop, priced at about the cost of the entire wardrobe. Mary Louise had used the Holiday list of clothes to take and says it proved "just perfect."

They pick up and carry around sewing as some women do knitting. Last year, on a trip to Texas with Donald, Louise turned out a hand-sewn print dress on the train.

They've other pet economies, such as home permanents and doing their own dry cleaning. They're pretty lavish about spending on hats, shoes and bags, but insist that good ones are a real investment.

Louise runs the house on a weekly budget, and says that except for peak-entertaining periods she sticks to it. She's a great organizer too. "Goodness! I have to be!" She makes out (Continued on Page 242)

SAFE...IN SNOW!

Yes, Ivory Snow keeps lovely lingerie lovely longer!

Your hands will tell you why!

Fabulously lovely—that angelic nightgown and filmy matching cape by Thea Tewi! Such fragile beauty, yet it's so safe with Ivory Snow care.

And you can prove how gentle it is! Just wash your dishes with Ivory Snow, as millions do. When you see how it pampers your hands you'll KNOW it's kind to fine washables.

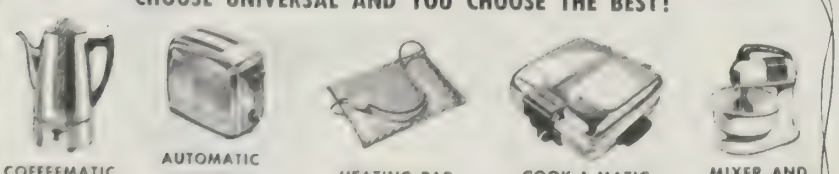
Made especially for lovely things—there's just no other soap like it! 99⁴⁴⁄₁₀₀% pure, it's granulated to give you instant suds, even in cool water! There's just no finer soap made! Always ask for Snow. Wonderful Ivory Snow!

Follow directions on the box. They're tested!

IVORY SNOW

...the only soap both Ivory-mild and granulated for efficiency

...with the



Universal Beam-O-Lite

the brilliant new Headlight Iron!

See for yourself how much fresher you feel as you glide through a big day's ironing with the new Universal Beam-O-Lite. Its built-in Headlight takes the eye-strain out of ironing . . . shows wrinkles clearly . . . brightens your way around buttons, pleats and ruffles.

Smartly streamlined, the new Beam-O-Lite Electric Iron features a Hand-I-Set Fabric Dial set back into the handle . . . away from tender knuckles. The Ventilated Deck and Plastic Handle keep hands cool and comfortable. And this sturdy beauty with its extra-large Sole Plate weighs only 3 pounds including the cord! See this new wrinkle-less Iron with the Headlight now at your Universal dealer's.

CHOOSE UNIVERSAL AND YOU CHOOSE THE BEST!

COFFEEMATIC · AUTOMATIC TOASTER · HEATING PAD · COOK-A-MATIC WAFFLE GRILL · MIXER AND JUICER

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Roses in full bloom, heirloom silver in full gleam are the perfect complements of each other—and of the smiling hostess, Mrs. Donald Hastings.

A Thing of Beauty is a Job a Joy Forever

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

DONALD HASTINGS runs a seed farm and nursery whose mail-order business covers most of this country's southeast quarter. His wife's housekeeping is to scale. Her entertaining is in the grand manner, and in addition lecturing on flower arrangement and her decoration jobs take her hither and yon. We felt sure that such a busy, able woman was good for useful tips on looking after silver, and she didn't let us down.

THE MORE WEAR, THE LESS CARE

Mrs. Hastings believes in using her heirloom silver, not just keeping it on display. This policy keeps her from taking time out for polishing bouts that would otherwise be necessary before parties, and from getting flustered when unexpected guests turn up. And then it is good for the silver. All of it that has been used is cleaned once a week. Used or not, it is counted and any tarnished pieces are polished. But constant use is her main recommendation.

Regular use and regular washing will guard against tarnish and develop a lovely, unmistakable patina, so that rotation of your flatware helps keep it in fairly good condition. It will also keep its appearance uniform so it all belongs together, if changes of table settings are made every week or so. But don't forget to rub off the worst discolorations right away with a treated cloth or treated paper kept near the sink. (These are wonderful, too, for between-times swiping out of metal and trays.) Or if a fork is badly stained, you can push the tines up and down in a handful jar of polish. And don't forget the thorough rinsing and polishing afterward.

WORK OF ART IS WORK

Labor of love though it may be, a work of art is always work. If you would have gleaming silver, there is no substitute for periodic cleanings, especially if you own hollow ware. We know that a tarnished ice bucket can look as big as a water tank and that shining up the ancestral tea set can go as slowly as a rainy Sunday. But take your seat near the hot-water faucet, have everything you need before you, and see if size and time don't dwindle. Among your tools (besides polish and cloth) you will want a medium-hard toothbrush for gadroon borders and repoussé flowers, and an orange stick you can cover with a piece of cloth for those deep crevices and the pesky spot between the bottom of a handle and the pot or cup or bowl to which it is attached. Spare your manicure and use your head.

Rub lengthwise on flat silver and around and around on hollow ware to achieve a professional finish, but don't expect hand methods to produce the even glitter of silver in a jeweler's window. Here you have two feuding viewpoints that out-rtins and the Coys. One side likes shine, the other prefers a soft even ince silver polishes do their clean- lightly crosshatching the surface, ese tiny lines that give the dull some so emphatically admire. u belong to the other side and like w-window glitter, then electrolysis ou. This is the boiling-in-a-dishpan , with baking soda and salt added vater, a tablespoonful of each for uart. The latest wrinkle is to put a f aluminum foil in the bottom of and make certain all the silver it or another piece of silver. Two minutes are sufficient to do the ou can throw away the foil, but ns must be cleaned off the alumi- e plate we formerly put in. This is not for candlesticks, hollow th spouts or handles attached, or with lightweight hollow handles. ay loosen at the joints. A dull finish is totally destroyed. When in a really bad way, send it to your and let him buff it bright.

DO YOU LIKE YOUR COPPER SHOWING?

there is the sort of woman who Sheffield with the copper showing , and the sort who likes her copper no better than she does her slip. stings was telling us that she is fond old tole flower containers in her ause they are trimmed with brass with pewter, and the pewter is off so that the brass shines through ies. But if you subscribe to the it-once way of thinking, it's just to know that ten different shops te you ten different prices for the —or what appears to be the same the prices generally vary in pro- to the amount of silver used, and est price can mean the most silver. pensive job might indicate that a sh of silver had been applied, ould have to be done over again e while.

REVENTIVE MEDICINE

ver care, as in many things, fore- better than hindsight. Among of prevention, in Mrs. Hastings' and in ours, proper storage ranks hen she found that stacking her ays bent them out of shape, she out a method of hanging those idles from a rack in the pantry. another scheme for those without She plans to put up a horizontal with a slot between it and the o which the lower edges of the n be inserted—a decorative idea nvenient too. The trays with are hung up in their flannel pa- nd though those in the molding are, she uses them so often that n't become too tarnished between nyone who doesn't entertain as Mrs. Hastings, we are all for the ajamas, particularly those chemi- ated to ward off tarnish. We're imilarly treated linings in silver and silver chests as well. We our- nce put our flat silver in storage en months, and because it was in with a chemically treated lining, it bright enough to use when we ut. You can buy tarnish-deterrent the yard, and make your own sil- and linings for your silver drawers es. Or you can buy treated paper ame purpose.

ative silver, such as candlesticks, is ly lacquered to prevent tarnish. Experts take a dim view of its application and removal by rank amateurs, although silver can be taken to a silvershop to have this transparent protective coating applied. If inadvertently you happen to try to polish a piece of silver that has been lacquered, the lacquer will peel off in spots. The best treatment is to keep it clean by dusting and polishing with a dry cloth—to keep the lacquer intact. For home use there is a clear liquid which is rubbed on, then polished to give a tarnish-resistant finish. This is removed by water, and must be reapplied after washing.

VIM AND VIGOR FOR METALS

Though silver is the grande dame of household metals, its more modest sisters are equally attractive and fit into some interiors better. For these, if you like copper in the pink of condition and the greenish tinge that comes out in good brass polished within an inch of its life, a reliable metal polish, clean cloths, a brush for the humps and hollows, and time and muscle for a polishing session are all you need.

How much silver, copper and brass you use is to some extent a regional problem. Our friend, Mrs. H., for instance, lives in the South, where help with the housework is easily arranged, and she finds it a simple matter to keep metals shining. For those who may have much silver and little help, we suggest storing some of it, at least, and keep what you use sparkling. Save the rest for your children and your grandchildren. This advice sounds heartless, but to put it painlessly out of the way is better than neglect.

Meanwhile, consider pewter. It's so easy to care for that an occasional washing in hot soapy water and a thorough drying are all it needs as a regular thing. Polishing (with some good silver polish) is called for only two or three times a year, though you'd better keep in mind that it shows fingerprints more than other metals. As you give it the final shine, handle it with gloves—literally—or cover your hands with a cloth.

If you have more copper than you can cope with, you may find that you like that Indian-penny brown as much as the rosy cast of the polished metal. But there isn't any out for brass. Though some people prefer dull brass, most like their brass to give an interesting glimmer of luster. It takes rottenstone and linseed oil bought at the hardware store and mixed to the thickness of heavy cream, plus energetic rubbing, to bring out that luster.

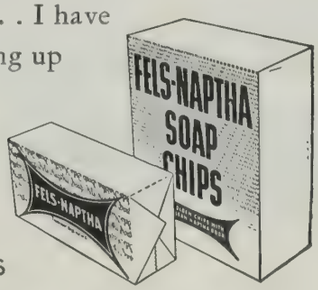
EASY DOES IT WITH CHINA AND GLASS

As for china and glassware, elbow grease is unnecessary to their preservation. Under vigorous treatment, in fact, they come apart in your hand. Be gentle, be tender with them. When you wash fine china and fine glassware, put a folded dish towel in the bottom of the pan, and avoid washing them and silver at the same time. Old china and glass, owing to their uneven tempering, are especially likely to break under sudden changes of heat and cold.

Since old glass and china are heat-sensitive, they should be washed by hand, for water temperatures in dishwashers are higher than is desirable for such items. Those of you who live in hard-water localities may prefer to wipe your best dishes and glasses dry instead of letting them dry in the dishwasher, for the towel will wipe off the mineral film. But if you use the exact amount of the detergent recommended in the directions, the murky film that lime deposits cause may be pretty well

(Continued on Page 257)

No, Mother . . .



"I didn't forget to 'phone . . . but I never knew just how much work went with a wedding ring.
Seems to me there's always something . . .
Oh, my goodness! that's what you used to say, isn't it . . .?

Yes, Mother . . .

"I'm doing my own cleaning and washing.
Our place is so tiny . . . and everything's so new and bright, I can't bear to let anyone else touch it or my beautiful linens and towels either . . .

Of course, Mother! . .

"Fels-Naptha Soap? . . . I never use anything else.
That's one thing I did remember . . . By the way, Mother, how does a man get so much dirt in his collars and cuffs? . . . All you've learned is how to get it out? I see what you mean, darling. Fels-Naptha Chips? . . . I have plenty—I think. Soon as I hang up I'll make sure . . . 'bye!"

GOLDEN BAR OR GOLDEN CHIPS

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

Fels-Naptha Soap

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Prize Winning Flower Arrangements

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

A well-known judge at Garden Club flower shows, Louise Hastings, highlights for us the points that make these arrangements prize winners. Each was judged for composition, balance, originality and general artistry in the class in which it won a prize. You can make bouquets out of almost anything that grows, provided you do it with similar artistry. (More about flower arrangements on page 234.)

JACKSON AND PERKINS

Winning composition of roses with their own buds and branches, to show color balance and leaf pattern.

JACKSON AND PERKINS

Best arrangement of garden roses gracefully composed with unrelated foliage in simple pottery vase.

GARDEN CLUB OF AMERICA

A prize winner because spring flowers are richly color-styled to harmonize with a pine-paneled room.

GARDEN CLUB OF AMERICA

Showing how formal flowers with mixed foliage can be used informally to accent a modern setting.

Best example of arranging common garden flowers to give the effect of an elaborately composed painting.

The happiest brides have Community

Bless the bride's table—for keeps—with her heart's desire—Community Silverplate... distinguished, gracious, enduringly right. Solid silver "Overlay"
—budget-thoughtful price...
and your jeweler's assurance...

If it's Community*...it's correct!

(No Federal Tax)

jan Whitcomb

THE FINEST SILVERPLATE ... ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, NEW YORK

"Here's your RECIPE

...FOR A MARVELOUS CREAM SAUCE...WITH ADDED GOODNESS OF MUSHROOMS!"

SAVE YOURSELF ten solid minutes of stirring! Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup, just as it comes from the can, gives you a heavenly, smooth cream sauce plus the luxury of mushrooms! Try it these 3 delicious ways:

Try Mushroom Cream Sauce

Place contents of one can of Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup in a saucepan; stir until smooth. Add a half cup of milk, a bit at a time, stirring constantly. Heat....This sauce is wonderful with fried chicken (as shown above), meat cakes, chicken or meat croquettes, seafood, eggs, new potatoes, broccoli, green peas, etc.

or Mushroom Almond Sauce

To mushroom cream sauce add 3 tablespoons of sliced, blanched almonds Mix well. Heat. Almonds plus mushrooms lend top luxury at moderate cost.

or Mushroom à la King Sauce

Brown ¼ cup of chopped green pepper in 2 teaspoons butter or margarine. Add to mushroom cream sauce. Then garnish with pimiento. This is an easy, delicious way to use leftover stewed or roast chicken.

...AND FOR THE FINEST TOMATO SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED, USE CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP

IT'S GRAND AS A COOKING SAUCE . . .

Whenever the recipe calls for tomato sauce, you'll find that Campbell's Tomato Soup, just as it comes from the can, is the best and quickest way. Made from selected tomatoes, grown from special seed. Money can't buy a finer tomato sauce! Try this delicious dish:

Sausage and Rice Casserole

1 pound sausage meat
3 cups cooked rice
1 can Campbell's Tomato Soup

Cook sausage meat until light brown, stirring to keep meat separated. Drain off fat. Add cooked rice and soup. Mix well. Turn into a greased 1½-quart casserole. Cover and bake at 350° F. (moderate) for 40 minutes. Garnish top with green pepper rings. Makes 6 servings.

WONDERFUL AS A POUR-ON SAUCE . . . Lends extra flavor and color when poured over egg dishes, cheese dishes, fish, hamburgers, and many other favorites.

I JUST COULDN'T KEEP HOUSE WITHOUT THESE TWO CAMPBELL'S SOUPS...AS SOUPS ...AS SAUCES...AND IN COOKING!

Campbell's SOUPS

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

PHOTO BY STUART

Baked ham is a regal sight and beautiful eating. It is first carved, then frosted with white icing, decorated with candied fruits and garnished with brandied peaches.

Specialties of the House

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

HASTINGS parties are long anticipated, long remembered. The food serv with charm and grace at their table upholds—in fact, exemplifies—t romantic idea of traditional Southern cooking.

There's a reason for such excellence. The reason is Louise Hastings. gifted cook herself, she plans and personally supervises the preparation every meal and party. She gives as much attention to the ritual of maki grape conserve or the garnishment of a platter of fried chicken as she does her artistic flower arrangements which add so much to the beauty of her tabl No wonder the hospitality of this house is famous in Atlanta.

Though Christmas is past, there will always be another; and when it com around again, the menu below, or a similar one, will be served at the Hastin open house. Cakes and sillabub are served in the dining room, sandwiches a coffee in the library. Preparations for this party begin weeks in advance. T fruitcake is made at least two months ahead—not just a few pounds, but son times as much as 150 pounds. It is put in great cans, each cake sprinkl generously with rum. The cans are then sealed so the cake will season or a

FLOWERACRES OPEN HOUSE

Served in Dining Room	Served in Library
*Rum Cake	*Hot Mushroom Canapés
Lemon-Cheese Cakes	Turkey Sandwiches
Spongecakes	Cream-Cheese-and-Ginger Sandwich
Fruitcake	Salted Nuts
Brandied Cherries	Coffee
Sillabub (served from a silver bowl in tall crystal goblets)

RUM CAKE

Use Ann Batchelder's delicate white layer cake, or any other favorite white layer cake that calls for 6–8 egg whites and that makes 3 layers. When baked and cool, fill the layers with rum filling. Ice the outside of cake with boiled icing.

Rum Filling: This uses the yolks from the 8 egg whites called for in Mrs. Hastings' 3-layer white cake. Beat 8 egg yolks. Add 1 cup sugar, a pinch of salt, ½ cup butter or margarine, 1 cup white raisins, 1 cup shelled pecans, chopped fine. Heat in top of doul boiler over hot water, stirring constant When hot, add ½ cup water and 2½ t spoons rum extract. Mrs. Hastings adds cup rum instead of the water and rum tract. Cook over boiling water, stirring c stantly until thick. Remove from heat a cool. Fill layers.

Mrs. Hastings usually makes this ca herself and it is traditionally served at t family Christmas dinner, as well as for p ties. She makes and fills the cake seve before, so the flavor of the rum has

:o go all through the cake. The cake is ed until the day it is to be served. For parties, such as the open house, she the layers in long rectangular pans.
shape cuts better for serving large
s.
netimes, too, she bakes tiny cupcakes 1½ inches in diameter, using the white-cake recipe. The cakes are d with confectioners' sugar. Instead of ım-pecan filling, which would not be ble for these miniature cakes, she s a butter-cream icing, flavors it with ınd frills it onto the tops of the tiny with a pastry tube.

HOT MUSHROOM CANAPÉS

pound fresh mushrooms, stems and through the food chopper, saving all that forms. Drain mushrooms. To the add enough milk to make 1 cup.
2½ tablespoons butter or margarine.
in 2½ tablespoons flour. Add the cup
:e and milk. Cook, stirring constantly, smooth and thickened. Sauté the d mushrooms in 2 tablespoons butter rgarine until tender. Add 1 tablespoon l onion. Combine with cream sauce.
son with ¼ to ½ teaspoon curry pow-teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, and r and salt to taste. It must be well
ıed. Mrs. Hastings adds a little sherry.
Spread on small toast squares. Grease g pans with butter or margarine. Lay oom-toast squares in pan and bake t oven, 400° F., until well heated gh, or you could run them under the r a few minutes. This filling makes h for 3 to 4 dozen canapés. For a large bake only a trayful at a time.

sn't unusual for the Hastings to have s of three buffet dinner parties in the when the gardens are at their beau-est, with as many as 80 guests at one Depending on the guest list, Mrs.
ngs may often serve the same menu—slight variations—for several parties ries.
e is one of her menus for a spring
dinner:

ked Ham — Iced and Garnished with Crystallized Fruit
ied Chicken — Candied Apples paragus with Hollandaise Sauce
ed Salad — Tomato-Aspic Salad
Hot Buttered Sally Lunn
Spiced Grape Conserve
Watermelon Pickle
Brandied Strawberries gel-Food Cake — Frosted with Whipped Cream
Coffee

ICED HAM

Bake a ham as you usually do, following the directions for baking according to the type of ham it is. Cool. Carve, but do not remove slices, leaving shape intact. Frost with boiled icing. Floweracres hams are home cured and smoked. Sometimes they are boiled and soaked in wine, sometimes they are parboiled and then baked with a bread-dough crust around them. Mrs. Hastings says she makes a dough of water and flour which is very stiff. She wraps this dough around the ham, bakes it in a hot oven, 500° F., 20 minutes, then reduces the heat to 300° F. and bakes until done. During the last 30 minutes of baking, she breaks a hole in the dough and pours in a cup of sherry or other wine.

When the ham is cool, the crust is cracked off. The ham is then cooled and sliced so that it will be easy to lift slices out. This is done by cutting a small wedge from the shank end, then cutting thin slices down to the leg bone. Release slices by cutting along bone at right angle to slices, but leave intact so the ham will look whole. Then she frosts the surface of the ham with a boiled icing and decorates it with candied fruits.

Arrange this splendor on a silver platter and garnish with fresh water cress and brandied or pickled peaches. When it is set out on the silver platter for serving, Mrs. Hastings lifts out one piece as a starter so that guests will know it is already sliced.

Mrs. Hastings takes just as much care and pride in planning luncheons and dinners for the family and a few guests as she does for big parties. Everyone who has ever been a guest at Floweracres has raved about the cheese soufflé and the Sally Lunn. Mrs. Hastings' cheese soufflé is delicate in flavor, smooth and velvety. The Sally Lunn, a raised bread, is served hot with their own fresh-churned country butter.

The original recipe was Mrs. Hastings' mother's. This recipe is from her mother's own handwritten cookbook. Mrs. Hastings told us that one of her guests once commented, "When I go to heaven I hope the Lord will serve grape conserve and Sally Lunn." She said she "hoped not, because then she'd have to make it."

LUNCHEON FOR FAMILY AND GUESTS

Consommé
Cheese Soufflé
Tomatoes with Homemade Cottage Cheese
Hot Sally Lunn
Fresh Fruit — *Orange Cookies or *Lemon Cup Pudding
Tea

(Continued on Page 245)

PHOTO BY LISA LARSEN

Christmas open house at Floweracres. Two maids are arranging a tray of assorted cakes and brandied cherries to accompany the sillabub.

FLUFFY EGGS EVERY TIME if you follow this method: Break eggs into bowl; for each egg used, add ⅛ tsp. salt, 1 tbs. cream, milk or water, dash of pepper. • Beat lightly with a fork. • (You may want to add finely chopped chives or onion, a dash of steak sauce.) • Melt in skillet enough butter or margarine to coat bottom. • Turn heat low, add eggs. • Don't touch until they "set" slightly. • Then keep turning edges gently toward center of pan; avoid stirring. • Remove from burner before quite firm—pan heat will finish the cooking. • SPAM slices have been browning in another pan. • Serve both on a hot plate. • What a meal—what a meal!

ON TOASTED BUN HALVES, lay SPAM slices and a slice of cheese. Slip under broiler till SPAM browns, cheese bubbles. Any time is SPAMwich time.

NO FRILLS, JUST GOOD EATING. Bake two SPAMs 20 min. at 350°, basting with half a cup of canned fruit syrup — cling peach, pineapple, apricot. Serves six — and how!

AROUND THE CLOCK IN COTTONS

Mary Louise Hastings is a typical Southern belle, possessing all the charm and accomplishments that go with the title. One of her many talents is sewing. She not only makes most of her own clothes, but she designs them. Often she combines parts of different patterns . . . sometimes she cuts directly in the fabric. She loves lots of detail and fine hand sewing. She has a passion for beautiful fabrics, loves interesting combinations of color. Her cotton wardrobe runs the gamut of texture and pattern—from a sheer wallpaper print to a heavy cloqué-textured cotton, so wonderful for suits. ★ By Nora O'Leary

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order*, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto. *Connecticut residents please add sales tax.

Plaid gingham strapless dress with its own button-backed, scallop-trimmed top. Junior Vogue Design No. 3269, 9 to 15.

Two-piece summer suit in new clo cotton. Patch pockets, long or sh sleeves. Vogue Design No. 6711, 12 t

PHOTOS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO.

Mary Louise in her white eyelet bouffant evening dress. Double collar of plain organdy, with a blue taffeta ribbon sash. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 6700, 12 to 20.

Turn to Page 245 for Other Views of These Patterns

© VOGUE

Afternoon dress in a sheer wallpaper print. Contrasting binding, cord belt. Vogue Design No. 6712, 12 to 18.

He sets the style for the younger set . . . While these crocus-crisp dresses were being tucked and ruffled, the man who designed them ordered Talon slide fasteners for the dainty neckline closures. This thoughtful man in the background sees no reason why mothers shouldn't have the quick-dressing aid (and little girls the grown-up thrill) of this finest, fastest, most durable of closings. Look for children's clothing with this important improvement. It tells you that a thoughtful man in the background is giving you extra value, extra quality!

Buy the same Talon neckline fastener for home sewing! When you see it on the counter, you know that here, again, there's a thoughtful man in the background who sees to it that you get the best! ORANGE package, complete with directions, at notion counters everywhere.

Talon

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

THE QUALITY SLIDE FASTENER

TALON, INC., MEADVILLE, PA.

more needles pass through La Mode buttons than any other buttons in the world

La Mode BUTTONS

Such charming buttons! Simple buttons, decorative buttons, finest quality buttons . . . buttons for every conceivable fashion, in every price range. Ask for La Mode at your favorite Button Department and you'll get the best in buttons.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

B. BLUMENTHAL & CO., INC., 1372-82 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18, NEW YORK
THE WORLD'S GREATEST SELECTION OF FASHION BUTTONS

step out with
VALENCIA
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
Aristocrat of Cottons

Sew and save with VALENCIA . . . every yard is smartly styled, wash-fast and priced to keep tabs on the family budget. Vibrant prints and solid tones for dressing up the family and the home. Ask for Valencia Prints and Plain Colors by the yard . . . look for the Valencia label in ready-to-wear.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

DAVIS & CATTERALL
40 Worth Street, New York 13

ROUND TRIP

(Continued from Page 50)

cup, rose and went over to the basement door. He switched on the light and started down the stairs. Halfway down he stopped. The basement was six inches deep in water.

For a moment Thomas stood motionless, then slowly he went back upstairs and into the kitchen. Lynn had just come down with the children and was getting their breakfast.

"The basement is flooded again," he said.

"Oh, no." Lynn spooned some cereal into James' mouth. "Well, I guess you'd better get the plumber."

"Look," Thomas said, "the plumber isn't going to do any good. It's the stuff that gets into the outside drains that clogs the pipes. We've got to find a way of keeping those drains clear. I thought you were going to call the man about it last week."

"I did, but he never showed up. At any rate, you'll need the plumber to clear the drain now, or you'll never get the water out."

"I guess you're right. I hope he's open at this hour." Thomas started toward the door.

"If he's not there, go next door to the cleaner's. Mr. Prince takes messages for him when he's out."

He left, and returned in a couple of minutes. He poured himself another cup of coffee, and sat down and scribbled a couple of ideas on the back of a grocery slip.

"He'll be here any minute," he said finally, putting the pencil down. "I left a message with the cleaner."

"I wouldn't bank on that," said Lynn. "He often doesn't get in until eleven or so. I think we'd better start cleaning it up now." She went to the closet and got two sweaters, wrestled the protesting children into them, and shooed them out into the garden.

THOMAS sighed, took off his shoes and socks, rolled up his trouser cuffs, and followed her downstairs. For a half hour they splashed around, lifting soggy rugs and mats out of the water and draping them in the furnace room, and collecting bits of floating debris.

Upstairs there were a clank and a thud. Lynn straightened up and with the back of her hand pushed a strand of blond hair away from her eyes.

"What was that?" she said.

"I'll go see."

Wiping his hands on his trousers, Thomas padded up the stairs, his feet making wet slapping noises on the rubber matting. In the kitchen was a man in overalls, crouched under the sink.

"Hey," said Thomas. "What goes on?"

"The cleaner said your sink needed fixing."

"Sink nothing. Our basement is flooded."

The plumber stopped his work and looked absently around. "Well," he said, "I guess I'd better get this back together first." He picked up a section of the drainpipe.

Lynn came into the kitchen and knew immediately what had happened. "Did you tell Mr. Prince what we wanted the plumber for?" she asked.

"No," said Thomas petulantly. "I just told him to have the plumber drop around when he came in. I didn't think I had to go through the whole routine with him."

"I should have told you. Mr. Prince always assumes that when you want the plumber it means that your kitchen sink is out of order. You should leave a note."

"Well, thanks for the tip," said Thomas sourly. To the plumber he said, "How about leaving that and taking a look downstairs? I've got to use the room down there."

"Okay, Jack," said the plumber, rising. "Anything you say." He went to the basement stairs and peered down. "That looks bad. I'll have to go back and get some other gear. It shouldn't take too long."

The front doorbell rang. "I'll get it," said Thomas. He opened the door and was confronted by a small, dumpy woman in her middle fifties. She was quite agitated.

"I thought you ought to know," she said "that your children are spreading garbage all over your back yard. They'll poison themselves, or worse, if you don't look out."

so soft!

SITROUX TISSUES
strong... absorbent
NOW FINER THAN EVER
. . . say SIT-TRUE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

If She Sews She Knows

TRIMTEX®
dependable quality
For the perfect "finishing" touch
RICK RACK • BIAS TAPE • SEAM TAPE
SKIRT FACING • BLANKET BINDING
DRESS BELTING
At sewing notion counters everywhere

Knitting Yarns BY MAIL

Cliveden offers you quality yarns of all types, in a large variety of colors — bright and gay, or soft and delicate — yarns to glorify your finished work.

WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE CARD

and see for yourself before you order, the lovely texture of the yarns spun in our own mill. You'll find just what you want for infants' wear, sweaters, afghans, etc. Experienced knitters have chosen Cliveden yarns for over 40 years.

WRITE DEPT. E-1 CLIVEDEN YARNS 211 ARCH ST PHILA 6 PA

eps hair tidy through the day!

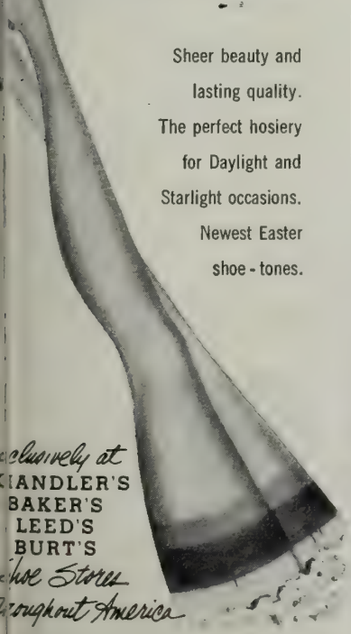
Costs less because it lasts longer!

20¢ White, grey, purple 25¢

Single or double mesh

VENIDA
The Guaranteed
HAIR NET
rules the waves



S VENIDA HAIR BEAUTY AIDS BY RIESER CO., N.Y.

KE $25 or more quickly, in spare time, with fast-selling Writewell Greeting Cards, ry. Name Labels, Gift Wrappings, etc. Friends, family, s, everybody a buyer. Costs nothing to try. Credit to Clubs. Make Money" Booklet FREE with samples on approval. EWELL CO. 304 Transit Bldg. Boston 15, Mass.

MAR-V-LUS
REG U S PAT OFF
Glamour leg
NYLONS

THEY WON THEIR NAME BY THEIR FAME

Sheer beauty and lasting quality. The perfect hosiery for Daylight and Starlight occasions. Newest Easter shoe-tones.

elusively at ANDLER'S
BAKER'S
LEED'S
BURT'S
hoe Stores
roughout America

"Thank you," he said testily. "I'll see about it."

The woman started to say something more, but Thomas closed the door. He went through the house and into the garden, where he found that Roger had managed to upset one of the garbage cans and the two children were happily taking inventory of its contents. James had a coffee-speckled orange peel in his mouth and an eggshell in each hand, while Roger was inspecting a banana skin that appeared to have been covered with mustard. They had both tramped in soggy toast, and Roger's front was smeared with uncooked chicken giblets. Thomas snatched the orange peel and eggshells away from James, and slapped the banana peel out of Roger's hands.

"How many times," he thundered, "do you have to be told to let that can alone?"

James watched in stunned silence as Thomas pulled Roger to his feet and shook him. Roger began to wail.

"Now, pick it up," Thomas said. "Pick up every bit of it. And stop that noise."

Roger's wail rose to a shriek. A window in one of the adjacent apartments flew open, and a woman put her head out. She wore a dirty pink bathrobe, and her hair was in curlers.

"You leave that child alone!" she shouted. "You stop beating that child!"

Thomas looked up at her and made an impolite answer under his breath, then turned back to Roger. "Go on," he said, "start picking it up." Roger squatted down, sobbing, and picked up an eggshell. "Now put it in the garbage can," Thomas directed

I would rather fight with my hands than my tongue.
—DOLLY MADISON.

"If you don't leave that child alone I'll call the police!" shouted the woman.

Thomas whirled back to her. "I'd love to see the police," he said, "so I could report you for indecent exposure."

The window slammed shut.

Thomas went inside and sat down, and the bell rang. He got up resignedly and started for the door.

"Don't move," said Lynn, coming downstairs. "I've got it."

Thomas teetered to a stop as she opened the door and admitted the delivery boy from the market, who breezed in with a packing case full of groceries and slammed it down on the kitchen table.

"Good morning, Mrs. Thomas," he said, and then, seeing Thomas, added, "and Mr. Thomas." He started piling the groceries from the box onto the table. "That was quite a party you had the other night," he said. "From what they tell me, it was a regular whing-ding."

"From what who tells you?" Thomas asked.

"Oh, the word gets around," said the boy. "Mrs. Gresham—she lives in one of the apartments behind your garden—she said she couldn't get to sleep until four. Just lay in her bed, she said, listening to the noise."

"We weren't making any noise," said Thomas defensively. "It was an unusually quiet party."

"Mrs. Gresham said you were drinking champagne."

"It occurs to me," Thomas said, with mounting irritation, "that Mrs. Gresham must sleep in a hammock slung outside her window, if she was trying to get to sleep and still saw all that she saw. She must also own a very fine set of binoculars."

"I wouldn't know about that," said the boy, picking up the empty case. "I just know what she tells us. Well, so long, Mrs. Thomas; so long, Mr. Thomas." He put the case on his shoulder and went out the door, whistling.

Lynn went to the garden door and opened it. "Come on in, men," she called. "Time to clean up."

There was a shuffling of feet and Roger entered, followed more uncertainly by James,

"My living room is my sewing room, thanks to White magic"

Dress from Simplicity Pattern No. 2745

"When the sewing mood strikes me, I want to get ready without a lot of fuss and bother. The White Cabinet is so beautiful it adds a smart touch to my loveliest room. I just lift the top and it automatically becomes a full-size, completely modern sewing machine."

Smart, Decorator-Styled Cabinets.. New Sewing Thrills..That's White Magic!

You'll change all your ideas about sewing machines when you see the White Rotary! Here are cabinets that dress up a room like a decorator's dream, and so many sew-easy features you'll find a new thrill in making your own clothes. The White Automatic Lift instantly converts this exquisite table model to a full-sized sewing machine. White's exclusive feed keeps stitching straight and smooth, holds material securely on four sides of the needle. You select stitch length and thread tension on easy-to-read dials . . . no guesswork. You switch instantly from a loose basting stitch to a regular sewing stitch—save hours of tedious hand basting! Your White sews backward without stopping, to back-tack seam ends, to darn and mend. See the new White Rotary at your department store or White Dealer.

White ROTARY SEWING MACHINES Since 1876

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

WHITE MAGIC KEY BUTTONHOLE WORKER

Makes beautiful buttonholes . . . easily—even keyhole buttonholes, never before possible on a home machine. Fits many machines.

fashion accents Crisp!

AGREES DESIGNER TINA LESER

Crisp cottons lead the fashion parade for 1949 . . . and foremost dress designers accent starching with LINIT to keep cottons crisp, sparkling, charming . . . LINIT, the superior laundry starch, thoroughly and evenly penetrates the fabric, restores crisp, original finish, keeps cottons fresh looking, lovely longer. Yes . . . your cottons will look their stylish best . . . starched the easy, perfect LINIT way.*

THE NEW Crisp LOOK in an AFTERNOON SUNBACK
by Tina Leser. The gay swagged skirt is a brilliant new Leser touch. Add the jacket and you're set for shopping, tea, informal dining. The Capezio shoes were also designed by Miss Leser.

. . . adds the "finishing touch"

to dresses, blouses, children's clothes, housecoats, men's shirts, curtains, bed and table linens. Directions on every LINIT package. All grocers sell LINIT.

*LINIT is a registered trade-mark of Corn Products Refining Company, New York, N. Y.

whose head was wrapped in yards of dirty bandage, part of it bloodstained, that kept slipping down over his eyes.

"Jamie's wounded," Roger explained solemnly. "Wounded in the war."

Lynn dropped to her knees and tore the limp snarls of bandage from James' head. There was a generous smearing of garden dirt on him, but no blood.

"Where did you get the bandage?" Lynn asked.

"Out there." Roger pointed to the garden.

"Where did it come from?"

"Out there."

Thomas sprang from his chair and ran into the garden. In the far corner, cluttered all through a rhododendron bush, were the complete contents of a bathroom wastebasket that had been emptied from one of the apartment windows above. Quivering with rage, Thomas looked up at the surrounding buildings. The windows stared back at him, mute and expressionless. For several minutes he stood there, and then slowly he began to pick up the soft, stringy trash. He threw it in the garbage can, slammed the cover on tight, and stamped into the house.

"So help me God," he said, "I'm going to find out who's doing that." He went over to the sink and washed his hands.

"I wish you could," said Lynn, scrubbing James' face, "but I don't know how you're going to do it." She put James down and turned to sorting the groceries. She opened a pink wax-paper bundle and stared at it. "Oh, for heaven's sake," she said.

"What's the matter?" Thomas asked.

"I ordered hamburg for the kids, and that clown sent me kidneys."

"I'll take it back."

"No, I'd better. I know him. I want to give him a piece of my mind anyway. He charged us double for that steak yesterday." Lynn rewrapped the kidneys and started for the door. "Keep an eye on the kids," she said. "I'll be right back."

She left, and Thomas went into the dining room and settled himself by the window. His anger was still smoldering, and he stared at the apartment buildings in the futile hope of catching someone throwing things out. Roger pulled his tricycle out of a corner and began to ride around the room, dragging behind him a wheeled toy consisting of a monkey and a xylophone on a stand. The monkey hit the xylophone fast or slowly, depending on the rate at which the contraption was pulled. Roger finally built up enough speed so that the xylophone sounded like a telephone bell.

"All right," said Thomas, "that's enough."

Roger brought his machine to a halt, and then slowly, hesitantly started off again, so slowly that the xylophone tinked about once every five seconds. As he tentatively creased his speed, Thomas looked up, an stopped. Thomas was about to look ba the window, when a flash of light throug mail slot in the kitchen door caught his He rose and slowly walked toward the and when he was about fifteen feet away it he saw two brown eyes staring through mail slot at him. He opened the door confronted Gerald Green, a thin, nine-y old boy who lived in one of the near-by a ments.

"Good morning, sir," said Gerald. "I my cousin and I come in for a minute?"

"The kids are about to eat," Thomas looking around for the cousin.

"I just want to return a toy I borro from Roger," said Gerald.

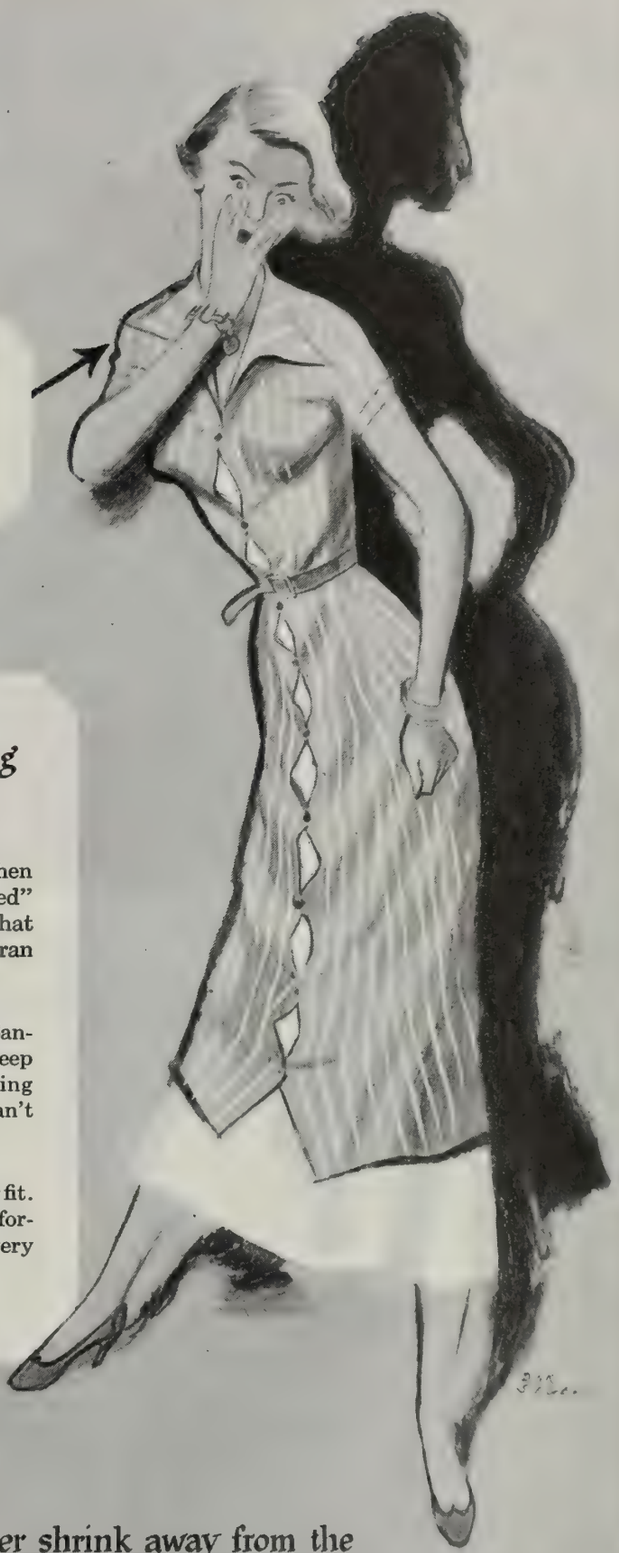
"All right, then." Thomas opened door wider and Gerald zipped in, followe three children who had apparently been ing against the outside wall of the ho They were all thin and dark, and the way of telling them apart was by t clothes. The first one after Gerald wo blue knitted stocking cap which came to bridge of his nose, and from his chin on d he was encased in overalls. The second sported an aviator's helmet and a tatt Eighth Air Force flight jacket which hit about the knees, and the third one wa rayed in a pirate costume made of ch cloth and cardboard. He was waving a sword and shouting, "Death to all subjec the Queen!" Thomas stepped back, star "Just take it easy," he said. "Remem this isn't a gymnasium."

When she returned from the market, I was greeted by a curious sight. Thomas picking up the groceries, which had some been strewn all over the kitchen floor, an was being assisted by James, who sam each item as he picked it up. In the di room, Gerald Green had appropri Roger's tricycle and was riding it at a d clip around the table, with the monkey-a xylophone attachment clattering away what approached a high scream, while child in the pirate costume chased after taking wildly inaccurate swipes at the m key with his sword. Roger lay under an o turned chair, while above him the boy the stocking cap fought the boy in aviator's helmet for possession of a toy j Above the din Thomas' voice could just heard, shouting, "Cut it out, cut it out!

Lynn rushed into the dining room, yan Gerald Green off the tricycle, took the from the two who were fighting over it, tripped the boy in the pirate costume, went sprawling.

"Now, get out of here," she said. "Ev one of you! Out!" She picked the chair fr

(Continued on Page 224)



"They looked so dashing in the store window!"

Nan looked twice...

Fran looks awful!

Do your shopping like Nan!

Look for pretty cottons, then look for the word "Sanforized" on the label. (That's what Nan did. That's what Fran forgot.)

For the dress with the "Sanforized" trade-mark will keep its looks through washing after washing. Shrinkage can't steal its charm away.

Get cottons that keep their fit. Demand to see the "Sanforized" trade-mark on every cotton you buy.

The style will never shrink away from the dress with "Sanforized" on the label.

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE ® MARK

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

Quite a dish TO SET BEFORE A HUSBAND

IT'S CORN ON THE COB —WITHOUT THE COB

Want to give him that happy look of a small boy with butter on his chin? Then set him down to a piping dish of Niblets Brand whole kernel corn, always farm-fresh and tender. It's grown from special seed (D-138) by a scientific system of Flavor Farming . . . it's "packed at the fleeting moment of perfect flavor." Kernels from four golden ears in every can.

Listen to the Fred Waring Show on NBC every Friday morning for the Green Giant

NIBLETS BRAND whole kernel CORN

Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ont. Also packers of Green Giant Brand peas.

© M.V.C.Co. "Niblets" and "Green Giant" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 222)

over Roger and helped him to his feet. The other boys tiptoed through the kitchen and out the door. Lynn went into the kitchen and helped Thomas retrieve the groceries. "What happened?" she asked.

"I don't know," he confessed. "They crept up on me."

Very quietly the garden door opened, and Peter, the Perkinses' five-year-old, entered. He walked up behind Thomas, who was still crouched on the kitchen floor, and looked over his shoulder. "My brother's got mumps," he said finally.

Thomas almost fell forward. "Get out of here!" he shouted.

Peter turned and walked out, leaving the garden door open behind him.

Around two in the afternoon the plumber came up from the basement, bringing his dripping equipment and leaving small red smudges behind him as he walked. The paint on the basement floor was not completely waterproof, and a good deal of it had adhered to the soles of his boots.

"Well," he said to Thomas, "she's draining now, but I sure can't figure out what caused her to clog up. Must have been something from one of the outside drains."

Thomas looked at him sourly. "That was our original idea."

"If I was you," the plumber said, "I'd look to my roof gutters. The stuff probably washes down into the drainage system from them." He squidged through the kitchen and left.

"I don't mean to say, 'I told you so,'" Lynn said, "but I suggested a couple of weeks ago that you look at those gutters."

"And I suggested only last week that you get a man to look at the drains."

"I told you, I called him but he never came."

"There's no law against calling a man twice."

"And there's no law against your doing a simple little thing like cleaning out the gutters. I don't call the Department of Sanitation to scrub the kitchen."

"And I'm not supposed to be the janitor around here, either. Remember me? I'm supposed to be a playwright."

"Well, it wouldn't hurt you to do a little something around the house now and then. You don't write all the time."

"You're right, I don't. It's a wonder I get anything done at all."

"I'm not stopping you. What have I done to keep you from writing?"

"Nothing. Nothing at all."

Thomas flung out of the room and clattered down the basement stairs. The floor was still slightly sticky, and he walked gingerly to a chair in his workroom and sat there with his feet up, while his anger bubbled and simmered and finally began to cool off. He sat for about an hour, smoking cigarettes and thinking random thoughts, and gradually his mind worked back to the play. With a little concentration his interest returned, and the dialogue was just beginning to flow in his mind when he heard running footsteps above and the basement door opened.

"James!" Lynn called. "Come up here! Roger's lost!"

Thomas rose and trudged slowly up the stairs. "Do I have to take care of the children too?" he wanted to know. "What do you mean, he's lost?"

Lynn was trembling. "He was out front," she said, "riding his tricycle. And then when I looked just now he was gone. His tricycle is there, but he's gone. I called the Perkinses, and he's not there."

"Where's Jamie?"

"He's still out front."

"Did you look down the block?"

"I looked all around the block. There's no sign of him."

"Why do they have to be out front when they've got the whole garden to play in?"

"I thought it would be good for them to get the sun. I was watching them, but the phone rang, and when I was through w that Roger was gone."

Thomas went into the dining room and down by the telephone. "What was he we ing?" he asked.

"A sweater—his green one; no, it was brown one—and his plaid pants; no—ol can't remember." She was on the verge tears.

There was a rattling in the mail slot, a Lynn leaped up and opened the door. Ro stood there. "Hi," he said.

All of a sudden Thomas' stomach relax and he stamped out the cigarette he had j lighted. He rose and walked into the kitc as Lynn dragged Roger inside.

"Where were you?" she cried. "Where you go?"

"With Mrs. Hawkins." Mrs. Hawkins v a grandmother who lived in the apartm next door.

Lynn took a deep breath, and the relief side her was disturbed by a small lump rage. "Where did you go with Mrs. Ha kins?" she asked.

"To the store, and then her house." Ro was a little bewildered.

Lynn turned to Thomas. "I don't mi it," she said, "when Mrs. Hawkins thro candy into the garden for the children, bu wish she'd let me know when she decides take one of them shopping with her. I th I'll call her," she said.

In any argument, if two men disagree, one is certain to be wrong; but if they agree, both are probably wrong.

—From THE COUNTRYMAN'S YEAR by David Grayson, copyright 1936 by Doubleday & Company, Inc.

"Why not wait till cool off a little?" Thor suggested.

"Mommy, do we h burglars?" Roger as suddenly.

"No—why?" Ly knocked three times the kitchen table.

"Mrs. Hawkins doe

"That's right. I hea about that." She look at Thomas. "Her apa ment was entered a couple of weeks ago."

"Will we have burglars someday?" Ro said.

"I hope not. Now, stop worrying."

Thomas left the kitchen and went down his workroom, but his mind was a comple blank and he felt exhausted. He had a cig rette and thought briefly about the play, b it was all he could do to remember the nam of the characters.

Finally he turned out the lights, lock the door and came upstairs. Lynn was ma ing supper for the children.

"The hell with it," he said. "I'm goi over and sponge a drink from the Perkinse

"We have plenty of liquor here, if you thirsty."

"Thanks. I somehow feel the need o change." He went out the garden door a Lynn heard his footsteps crunch on gravel.

Dinner was unusually quiet. Thomas tr a couple of times to start a conversation, with nothing but monosyllabic answers work on, he gave up. They had their cof in the living room in silence, and after a s ond cup Thomas poured himself a drink

"Look," he said, "I sort of told the P kinses we'd have them over for a drink af dinner. Is that all right with you?"

"Sure," she said. "Fine."

Thomas went to the telephone and dia the number. "Charlie?" he said. "You through? . . . Oh. . . . Well, bring him along. Sure. . . . No, we don't care. . . . Sure." I hung up. "A friend dropped in on them," said. "They're bringing him over."

About five minutes later the Perkinses a rived with their friend, whom they intr duced as a Mr. Turner. He was tall and th and wore glasses, and he made himself i mediately at home by sitting in the ch from which Thomas had risen. Perkins, w was also tall but more heavily built than friend, seemed a little nervous, and almo too pointedly tried to keep Turner from g ting into the conversation. He talked wi Thomas about household matters, mutu friends and Freddie's mumps, but finall and inevitably, Turner got a word in.

(Continued on Page 226)

Water Lily
by Trifari

ool white magic for every Spring nd Summer costume is this versa- le, original jewelry by Trifari.

$5.00*

huge, perfectly proportioned Water Lily with white or frosted etals forms the dainty pendant on a olden Trifanium chain.

50*

or double-duty, the pendant is de- achable and can be worn alone as a ramatic pin. To complete the en- emble, a charming petal bracelet—nd matching earrings perfect a jewel- ouquet exquisitely in keeping with aster and Spring. Where can you nd so much luxury at such pleas- ngly modest prices? At the finest tores that feature—

$3.00*

Jewels by TRIFARI

not authentic unless stamped on the back with the name Trifari extra*

"Sure. Why not?"

Thomas reached in his pocket, smiling, and handed her the letter. She opened it and read:

Tuesday

Dear Group: If you will take your heads out of the aquavit long enough to listen, I will give you the latest word from the block, none of it particularly sensational.

First off, your ménage is in fine shape, and the kids are getting quite fat on the candy Mrs. Hawkins throws them out the window. The word has gotten around that you are away, so everybody seems to want to do something for the children. Mrs. Hawkins had them over for tea (with permission, this time), Mr. Platnik sent them a bag of balloons, and Gerald Green had Roger to his house for supper. It's getting so they scarcely have time to look at the garbage any more.

Today it smelled like snow all day, and Freddie has been grubbing around in the cellar looking for his sled. The leaves are all off the trees in the garden, and the place looks quite wintry. Kind of nice. But I should be telling you about winter. You're probably up to your whatever the word for it is in Swedish in snow.

The cleaning woman is trying to sweep around me, so I guess I'd better close. She's bigger than I, and her muscles bulge.

Rspftly,
crp

Lynn folded the letter and put it in her purse. Thomas had finished his smörgåsbord and was sipping some iced schnapps.

"May I read it?" he said.

"Of course."

She handed the letter to him, and while he read it she nibbled her food and looked around the room. The restaurant was crowded, but there was not one face that was familiar to her. The people were all recognizable as types, and seemed happy and sociable, but she had the feeling that if she were to go up and speak to any of them, they would be polite and no more. Then she realized that few of them spoke English, so they would probably just be embarrassed. All of a sudden, she wanted very much to see someone she knew.

As a main course they had scallopini, followed by sherbet and pastries. The coffee tasted ersatz and sweet, and was so full of sediment that it had to be stirred constantly. Thomas tasted his, grimaced, and said:

"Well, in two weeks we'll be home."

"Yes," she said. "It seems as though we'd been gone two months."

Thomas beckoned to the waiter and asked for the check. "You know," he said, "when we get back, I think we ought to throw a monster home-coming party for ourselves. Get a ham and a turkey, and Charlie and I'll make some punch, and then we'll get everyone we know and just beat the place to pieces. And we can put a lighted sign in the garden window, so Mrs. Gresham will have a running score. We might even decorate the garden a little bit, to make it look more festive."

"That sounds perfectly marvelous."

Thomas paid the check and took her arm as they left. "Then," he said, "around three or four we'll have some chile, just so we won't be hungry, and maybe around daybreak we'll go over to the river and watch the sunrise over Astoria. And we will make three gallons of Bloody Marys for the next day, when we will do nothing but lie down and look at the fire and either play Gregorian chants or read Irish poetry."

When they got outside it was snowing. Big, silent flakes drifted down from the black sky and hushed the already quiet city.

"Let's walk a little way," Lynn said.

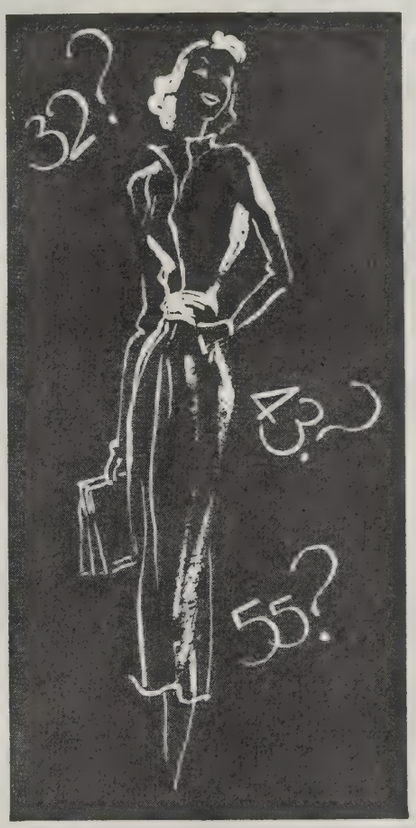
They walked in silence for a while, and finally Lynn spoke.

"I wonder if it's snowing in New York," she said. "Charlie said it smelled like snow, in his letter."

"Maybe it is. It's a little early, though."

They were silent again. The snow was now deep enough so that the footprints on the sidewalk were no longer black. Lynn tilted her face to the sky and closed her eyes.

"James," she said quietly.



"Yes?"

"Let's go home. Now."

"I hoped you'd say that," he said.

THE END

A woman's only as old as her figure

DON'T let your figure gossip about your age! You'll look, feel, and act years younger with a Spirella foundation.

Only Spirella can do all these things for you: first, in the privacy of your home, the Spirella Corsetiere takes your individual measurements with the patented Spirella Modeling Garment. You get a preview of how you will look and feel.

Your made-to-measure Spirella fits like your skin. Doesn't ride up, or constrict at the waist. Doesn't pull on hose supporters. It lifts as nature intended, upward and backward for a naturally beautiful active figure! Retains its shape and your shape longer, too. Thanks to Spirella's designing principles and the famous Spirella stay which lets you bend or twist as you please.

Don't let your figure make you old ...look and feel years younger with Spirella's help! For the name of your local Spirella Corsetiere, write The Spirella Co. Inc. Niagara Falls, N. Y. (In Canada, Niagara Falls, Ont.)

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Get a natural lift with Spirella

Stop BEING A Shoe Dangler

The STRAP
One of many beautiful Drew patterns

SHOES by Drew
SCULPTURED TO FIT YOUR FOOT

*Sculptured to Fit your Foot. No Slipping, No Crowding, No Pinching.

Footwear loveliness is yours in these beautiful Springtime Shoes by Drew, with their exquisitely smart styling, their luxurious leathers, and the custom-like craftsmanship with fine fit which only Drew shoemakers can impart. All Drew Shoes have exclusive *Ankle-Fit features.

Write for Spring and Summer Style Folder.

At Better Stores Everywhere. For the One Nearest You, write —

THE IRVING DREW CORPORATION, LANCASTER, OHIO

PHOTOS BY STUART

The focal point: a crown roast of pork with a subtle herb marinade. Accompaniment: spiced cabbage, sweet-potato puffs.

conversation piece

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

THIS month I'm going to give you a menu as an example of how the judicious use of a few herbs can lift fairly prosaic dishes into the something-special class. Then at the end, instead of talking about how you might serve the meal—which you'll know perfectly well anyhow—I'll give you a few pointers about which herbs I find most useful, and a little about when and where.

We'll build our menu around the aristocrat of the pork family, a handsome crown roast. A roast of pork seasoned with nothing but salt and pepper is delicious, but when it has been treated with a subtle marinade of herbs and allowed to stand in the refrigerator overnight before it reaches the oven, a crown roast becomes a truly royal dish. (Continued on Page 230)

Delightfully refreshing, mint sherbet with orange slices.

Hunt's Heavenly Peaches

at down-to-earth prices!

THE MOST tender-mellow, the most tantalizing peaches that ever won a big blue ribbon in any taste test — that's Hunt's Heavenly Peaches!

And that's facts! For in a series of recent professionally-conducted blindfold taste tests, Hunt's peaches were tried against all other leading canned peach brands!

And Hunt's Heavenly Peaches came out first — way up yonder first!

First for fuller, richer flavor — the sort of golden ripe goodness you get, fresh off the tree! And first for velvety smoothness — for luscious, heavy syrup.

And yet — for all their praise-winning, prize-winning qualities, Hunt's cost you less.

So, ask your grocer for the peaches with the Hunt red label — the most honest-to-heavenly peaches you ever had!

Hunt-for the best

Hunt's Fruits • Vegetables • Tomato Products
Hunt Foods, Inc., Los Angeles, California

Creamy caramel frosting—on a lusciously lovely cake! So beautifully fine-grained, soft and even because of the tiny-bubble double-action of Calumet Baking Powder. Calumet's tiny-bubble double-action works wonders for all butter-type cakes—and my, how it glorifies chiffon-type cakes!

He'll think he married an angel!

Can you blame him? One taste of this homemade beauty is enough to convince any man he's in heaven!

Every melting crumb of a Calumet Cake—any cake—reveals a wonderfully delicate fine, fine texture. That's because of Calumet's tiny-bubble double-action. It raises your batter twice . . . first in your mixing bowl and later in the heat of the oven.

And up comes your batter—so high—so even—so light!

Use Calumet for all your cakemaking—butter-type cakes, chiffon-type cakes—and for super-wonderful biscuits, waffles, muffins, too.

CARAMEL PECAN LAYER CAKE

Preparations. Have the shortening at room temperature. Line bottoms of two round 8-inch layer pans with paper; grease. Start oven for moderate heat (375°F.). Sift flour once before measuring.

Measure into sifter:
2 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
2 teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder
¾ teaspoon salt
1 cup plus 2 tablespoons sugar

Measure into mixing bowl:
½ cup butter or other shortening

Measure into cup:
¾ cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla

Have ready:
1 egg, unbeaten

Now—The "Mix-Easy" Part! (Mix by hand or at a low speed of electric mixer.) Stir shortening just to soften. Sift in dry ingredients. Add milk and mix until all flour is dampened. Then beat 2 minutes. Add egg and beat 1 minute longer. (Count only actual beating time. Or count beating strokes. Allow about 150 full strokes per minute. Scrape bowl and spoon often.)

Baking. Turn batter into pans. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 25 minutes, or until done. Cool. Spread Quick Caramel Frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Garnish with pecan halves, if desired.

Quick Caramel Frosting

½ cup butter
1 cup brown sugar, firmly packed
¼ cup milk
1¾ to 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar

Melt butter; add brown sugar and cook over low heat 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Add milk and continue stirring until mixture comes to a boil. Remove from heat and cool. Add confectioners' sugar until of right consistency to spread.

For fine, fine baking . . .
CALUMET · BAKING POWDER with tiny-bubble double-action

(Continued from Page 228)

Now that the meat has been selected, we can go back to the beginning—the only safe procedure in planning any menu. The criterion of a perfect meal is not how good the dishes are individually, but how good they are in combination.

This time I'm going to suggest a hot appetizer, grilled bread-and-cheese squares. They require only two or three minutes under the broiler before serving, because part of the grilling can be done in advance. As first course of the meal proper, there will be mushroom-spinach bouillon, a soup that is all flavor, no calories, and what a flavor! Then will come the crown roast of pork, garnished with caramelized apple slices and lots of parsley—enough parsley for everyone to have a big sprig to eat. There will be delicious sour-cream gravy, made from the drippings of the roast minus most of the fat, and two vegetables—sweet-potato puffs and sweet-sour cabbage. Some relishes—gherkins, finocchio, celery, watermelon pickles or whatever—and toast sticks will complete the main course. The dessert must be light and refreshing, and what more perfect than mint sherbet with minted orange slices? Good food, I call this. It makes me hungry to write about it—and it's early in the morning and no time to be hungry.

The recipes will serve six or eight people.

GRILLED BREAD-AND-CHEESE SQUARES

Cut sandwich bread into slices ¾ inch thick, remove crusts and cut each slice into 4 squares. Grate ⅓ pound store cheese and mix it with 1 teaspoon curry powder and 1 teaspoon finely chopped fresh tarragon leaves or ¼ teaspoon dried tarragon. Beat 2 egg yolks with ⅓ cup milk (you'll use the 2 egg whites in your sherbet) and melt some butter or margarine in a skillet. Put bread squares in skillet and turn them so that all surfaces are lightly coated with butter or margarine. Dip each bread square quickly into and out of egg and milk so that it won't absorb too much moisture, and then into the grated cheese. The squares should be entirely coated with cheese, and if it doesn't stick well enough, press it on with your fingers.

Put squares on a cooky sheet and cover with wax paper. This much can be done as early in the day as you like. At some convenient time before dinner, put the cooky sheet under broiler and toast one side of the squares until the cheese melts and becomes delicately browned. Turn the squares over and set aside. Just before serving, put cooky sheet under broiler again and toast top side of squares. These are really delicious and certainly easy on the cook.

Two sisters lived together for many years. Neither had ever married, and their affection for each other apparently increased with the passage of time. Then when Samantha was ninety-five she developed pneumonia and died. The family doctor dreaded breaking the news to Matilda, who was ninety-one and a victim of heart trouble. The shock, he feared, might prove too much for her.

But the good old woman bore up wonderfully well. "I suppose it's the Lord's will," she told the doctor. "And now I can make my tea the way I like it!" —WEBB B. GARRISON.

MUSHROOM-SPINACH BOUILLON

This bouillon takes long cooking but little watching, and can be made a day in advance if you like. Put 2 pounds well-washed spinach and ½ pound finely chopped fresh mushrooms in an enamel or heatproof glass pot, add 2 quarts cold water and bring slowly to a boil. Lower heat, cover and continue to cook slowly 1 hour. Add 1 large onion, cut into chunks, ½ teaspoon whole pepper, 1 scant teaspoon each of caraway seeds and celery seeds and 1 teaspoon salt, and continue to cook for 2 hours. Water should be added from time to time to keep water level at its original height.

Let stand several hours or overnight. Again bring to a boil and strain through a fine sieve, pressing gently so that all the flavor but none of the spinach leaves or mushrooms will be strained into the bouillon. Add 2 envelopes beef-bouillon powder or enough beef extract to give a faintly meaty flavor; and, if you like, a very little sherry may be added. But go easy on the sherry if y it—just a couple of tablespoons—b the quite distinct but delicate flavors spinach and mushrooms must not be powered. Serve very hot in preheated

CROWN ROAST OF PORK

Ask your butcher to make you a be crown roast of pork and to grind th scraps with ¼ their quantity of lean fill the center of crown. Sometime butcher will strip the meat off the pork bones that stick up, but I prefer to ha this meat left on. Little wooden skewe be stuck in beside the bones to hold the frills that are so necessary to the good of a crown roast.

The day before it is to be used, r ground meat from center and rub insi outside of roast with a split clove of then with salt and freshly ground blac per. Make a marinade by combining 1 spoon olive oil, 1 tablespoon lemon j tablespoon finely chopped onion, 2 spoons chopped parsley, 1 teaspoon ch fresh sweet basil or ¼ teaspoon dried basil, and 1 teaspoon chopped fresh marjoram or ¼ teaspoon dried sweet joram. With a sharp-pointed knife about ten incisions on inside of crow smooth a little of the marinade into Rub the remaining marinade on the o of the roast.

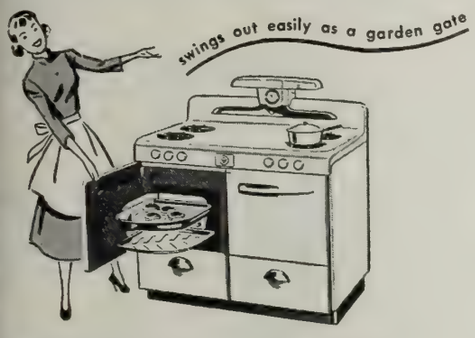
To the ground meat add salt, f ground black pepper, 4 tablespoons bread crumbs, 3 tablespoons chopped ley, 1 tablespoon chopped chives and 3 spoons milk. Stir thoroughly bl and fill crown this mixture. cross some sl strips of salt pork top of stuffing, roast tightly in l paper or plenty of paper and store i frigerator. Before ing, wipe outsid roast with a dry to remove the inade.

The preparatio the pork is rather orate, but the roa of it couldn't be simple or sure. A 35 minutes per pou a preheated 275° F. oven. At the end of 1 add about 1 cup boiling water, and sc the bottom of the pan so that any brow juice or fat will blend with the water. Ex for adding more water whenever the pan dry, the roast needs no further atten When cooking time is over remove roast keep it hot in a warming oven or on heating device.

Tip roasting pan and spoon off most o grease. Put pan over burner, add 1 chicken broth and scrape bottom of pa til broth boils. Homemade soup stoc water jiggered up with bouillon pow cubes or extract may be substituted for canned broth. Now stir in 1 cup sour cr 2 tablespoons catchup and enough wate make the quantity of gravy you w Thicken with flour blended with water add salt and pepper to taste and, if you it, 1 teaspoon gourmet powder (monosod glutamate).

CARAMELIZED APPLE SLICES

Cut 3 or 4 bright red apples in half, rem cores with ball cutter and slice apples wedges about the size of large orange tions. Into a skillet put 3 tablespoons bu or margarine and ½ cup light brown su Cook over moderate heat, stirring consta until fat and sugar are blended and begi bubble up. Stir in ½ cup water, cook u blended and add apple slices. Turn slices casionally with pancake turner until ap are tender and well glazed. They will ab most of the sirup.



To serve roast, place it in the center platter and put a paper frill on each b

(Continued on Page 232)

Is it any wonder more women cook on Magic Chef than on any other range

Only the Magic Chef automatic gas range has the swing out broiler with the Tree-and-Well Platter

Waist-high feature saves your back. Door shields you against hot spatters. You'll love the way the whole broiler lifts out for easy washing at the sink.

Leading home economists recommend Magic Chef's Swing Out Broiler. They agree it is the one broiler that makes all broiling easy . . . that brings out the superb, healthful goodness of all broiled foods.

The bottom tray in the Swing Out Broiler is really a beautiful chrome plated steel tree-and-well platter. It can be removed easily for serving piping hot food right at your table. When in the broiler, it makes a grand place to warm food or plates.

Only Magic Chef has the one-piece top burner that can be washed like a plate

Lift Out

Wash

This new burner makes good cooking easier for you in many ways. Its porcelain finish inside and out makes a clean, hot, fast flame. There is perfect heat distribution and instant touch control for easy adjustment to your exact cooking needs. The burner tray will hold a cup of spillovers without affecting the automatic lighting.

Before you buy, compare Magic Chef feature for feature with any other range and then you'll know why more women cook on Magic Chef than on any other range.

Did You Know... Magic Chef has been approved by the American Gas Association Laboratories for use with ALL gases—city ® gas, "Pyrofax" or other bottled gases. See your Magic Chef dealer or local gas company. American Stove Company, Dept. L-2, St. Louis.

© 1949, American Stove Company

(Continued from Page 230)

or stick that represents a bone. Garnish with apple slices and lots of parsley.

SWEET-POTATO PUFFS

Peel 3 pounds sweet potatoes, cover with boiling water, add 1½ teaspoons salt and cook until tender. Drain off water, return pan to low heat and shake it a minute or two to let moisture boil away. This is an important procedure with any mashed potatoes, sweet or white. Press potatoes through ricer, add 4 tablespoons cream and 2 or 3 tablespoons butter or margarine and beat until fluffy. Taste for salt. I often add a little nutmeg to sweet potatoes, but for this menu I think the seasoning should be simple, in contrast to the more complicated seasonings of the other dishes. When potatoes have cooled to lukewarm, stir in a well-beaten egg and store in refrigerator. This much can be done the day before if you like.

When mixture is thoroughly chilled, spoon out mounds the right size for individual servings onto a well-greased cooky sheet. Shape into cones by drawing the inverted bowls of two spoons up the sides of the mounds. Let the sides of the cones be reasonably smooth and the tops be rough. You can make very fancy contraptions by squeezing the mixture through the largest nozzle of a pastry tube, but I think these homemade-looking cones are quite pretty and certainly they are a cinch to make. Dot tops with butter or margarine and bake in a 450° F. oven for about 15 minutes before serving. If your range has only one oven, put the potatoes in the 275° F. oven with the roast for 20 minutes, and when you remove the roast to make the gravy turn the temperature up to 500° F. and give them 5 minutes more of baking. The cones should have a slightly crusty exterior.

SWEET-SOUR CABBAGE

Cut a large head of cabbage into thick slices, cover with boiling salted water and cook until barely tender. Drain at once. Blend 3 tablespoons cornstarch and ⅛ teaspoon dry mustard with a little water and stir this into 1½ cups water and ½ cup vinegar. Add ½ teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons sugar, ⅛ teaspoon red pepper, ¼ teaspoon dried borage or 1 teaspoon finely chopped fresh borage, 4 cloves, heads removed, and 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly, and let sauce cook gently for a while in top of double boiler. Remove cloves and mix sauce with cabbage about an hour before serving time. Heat on top of range or in hot oven.

BREAD AND RELISHES

I needn't tell you how to cut bread into thick sticks and toast them, and the choice of relishes is up to you. But I would like to put in a little plug for finocchio—Florence fennel—in case you aren't familiar with this delicious root. It looks very much like celery and has almost the same crispness, but it has the flavor of anise. Many fancy groceries carry it, and you'll find it in most Italian markets. When you serve it raw, let it stand first in ice water, as you do celery, to make it crisp. My favorite way of cooking it is to brown it in butter and then bake it in a casserole with a rich cheese sauce.

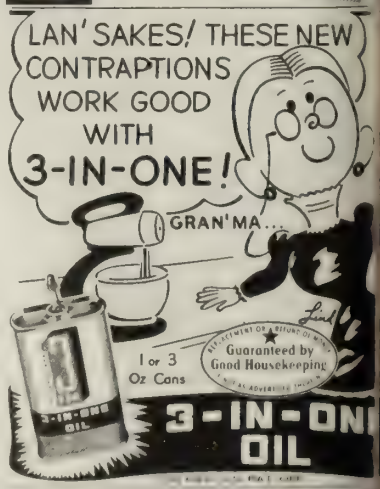
MINT SHERBET WITH MINTED ORANGE SLICES

Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup water. Boil for 3 minutes 2 cups sugar and 2 cups water. Pour hot liquid over gelatin, stir until dissolved and add 1 cup chopped fresh mint leaves. Cover and let stand 1½ hours, stirring occasionally. Strain and add 1 cup pineapple juice, 1 cup lemon juice, 2 tablespoons grated lemon rind and a few drops green vegetable coloring. Put in freezing compartment of refrigerator or in home freezer. Stir occasionally, scraping bottom and sides of pan, until mushy stage is reached. Transfer to cold bowl, beat with rotary beater 1 minute, fold in 2 stiffly beaten egg whites; add more green coloring if needed and blend thoroughly. Return to freezer and again stir and scrape occasionally so that an even consistency will result. I allow about 1 hours for a frozen dessert of this sort.

In a carefully tended Vermont maple gr young trees gradually replace older tree the yield of maple sap will be maintai

Longing for real maple sugar flavo

Anyone who has ever tasted real m sugar can never forget its tempting, mou watering flavor!



To get that real maple sugar flavo Vermont Maid Syrup, our skilled blend select full-flavored maple sugar; t blend it with cane sugar. This gives you moderate cost, a uniformly rich and licious real maple sugar flavor. At your grocer's.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.
Burlington, Vermont

Vermont Maic
Syrup

Be Sure it's a DAZEY

Form a DAZEY CHAIN of kitchen products
• CAN OPENER • KNIFE SHARPENER • JUIC
• ICE CRUSHER • BLEND-R-MIX • NUT CRACK
• FAMOUS DAZEY CHURNS

Best new food idea in years!

Delicious beef gravy in cans . . . ready-to-serve!

Delicious brown beef gravy, all ready to serve, in cans! As good as any you ever made in your own roasting pan. Meat, bread, potatoes, left-overs, economy foods . . . all taste better and look better with plenty of good, rich gravy!

No mixing, no stirring! Just open, heat and pour. Keep a few cans handy. Costs pennies to serve . . . helps save dollars on your monthly food bill.

A LIFE-SAVER FOR MEAL PLANNERS!

- Adds taste and glamor to economy foods
- Livens up left-overs
- Enriches slim meals
- Wonderful on bread for children's snacks

Franco-American BEEF GRAVY

One of the famous Franco-American "MealMakers"
Spaghetti • Macaroni • Beef Gravy

SAVE FOOD

AVOID FOOD SPOILAGE

TEL-TRU Refrigerator-Deepfreeze thermometer shows correct temperature zones for food storage. Proper refrigeration of foods protects your health. $1.25

ELIMINATE GUESSWORK

TEL-TRU Oven Thermometer shows you exact oven temperatures, checks accuracy of oven thermostat. Foods taste better, are more nutritious, when cooked at proper temperatures. $1.25

TEL-TRU thermometers are accurate, sturdy, easy to read. Many other models for cooking, indoor, outdoor use. Ideal gifts. At housewares depts., hardware, and other stores. If your dealer cannot supply, order direct (postpaid). Money-back guarantee.

ASK FOR TEL-TRU THERMOMETERS REFUSE SUBSTITUTES

GERMANOW-SIMON CO., Rochester 1, N.Y.

Slice large navel oranges into sections. Boil for 5 minutes ½ cup sugar and ½ cup orange juice. Add 1 teaspoon finely chopped mint leaves and 1 teaspoon grated orange rind, chill and pour sirup over orange slices.

To serve the dessert, heap mint sherbet in center of bowl or platter, surround with orange slices and garnish with small sprigs of mint.

Now to get back to herbs. My first herb garden held only chives, parsley, sage, sweet basil, dill and one root of horse-radish. I'd hate to be without any of these, but to them I've added sweet marjoram, tarragon, thyme and borage, and I'm still adding—as you will, too, once you get started. Mint is important, but it grows in abundance along our brook, so I don't have to plant it. It's wonderful to have all these fresh in season, but if I could have only four growing, I'd choose chives, parsley, tarragon and sweet basil. You can make a marvelous omelet fines herbes with only these four, and a judicious use of them finely chopped in a mixed green salad will lift it far above the ordinary.

I always keep a jar of herb butter in the refrigerator, to be used as topping for vegetables, or to spread over broiled meats or fish, or to serve as a sandwich spread. To make it, combine ¼ pound sweet butter with 4 teaspoons finely chopped fresh herbs or 1 teaspoon dried herbs in any combination (my favorite is chives, parsley and sweet basil) with a few drops of lemon juice.

Except for chives, all the varieties of herbs I've mentioned can be bought in dried form, although I've little use for dried parsley. Fortunately, parsley and chives are easy to grow in pots, if you have no other space for them. In using dried herbs, remember they have about four times the strength of fresh leaves, so for 2 teaspoons of fresh you use ½ teaspoon of dried. On my herb shelf I always have sorrel, chervil, tarragon, rosemary, sweet basil, sweet marjoram, sage and thyme. This is by no means an exhaustive list, but it gives you plenty of scope.

Both sage and thyme have very dominating flavors, and though they are important, especially in the stuffing of fowls, they must be used with restraint and are frequently overdone. It's hard to overdo fresh, finely chopped chives, sprinkled on soups, meats, fish or vegetables, and they combine beautifully with all the other herbs. Tarragon is another one I use in many dishes, but in very small quantities. You can make your own tarragon vinegar by putting a husky sprig in a bottle of ordinary vinegar. As a marinade for any meat, always start with lemon juice, oil and chopped parsley, adding pinches of other herbs until you achieve a taste that satisfies you; it needn't always be the same—after all, it's a matter of accent.

This is a big subject, with a literature of its own, and here I've run through my space without scratching the surface. My only consolation is that there really are no hard-and-fast rules—you make your own to suit your own taste. Go ahead, experiment—cautiously!

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Immortality

By GERTA KENNEDY

Their early voices scatter
Through years of our sleep;
First birdsong
Then oboe, then deep.
In the loom they struggle,
Chant, cry, leap,
As the warp of love
Holds the cloth tight.
Of our wild threads forever,
Dark, dull, bright,
Our children weave the texture
Between us and the night.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

CUT YOUR MILK BILL by One-Third!

3 BIG SAVINGS with Carnation Milk

1 WHEN THE RECIPE SAYS "MILK"

Use Half Carnation— and half water—

This gives you good whole milk, richer than the average of ordinary milk, and at much lower cost. If you prefer a still richer dish, just use less water. Carnation makes foods better-tasting, more nourishing, yet—

Saves up to 25%

2 WHEN THE RECIPE SAYS "CREAM"

Use Carnation Undiluted

The richness, heaviness, and uniformity of Carnation give you extra-smooth, creamy results every time in frozen desserts, candy and frostings, salad dressings, cream soups, gravies, etc.—at a fraction of the usual cost.

You can WHIP Carnation, too!

Chilled to near-freezing, Carnation whips beautifully—makes rich whipped desserts, sauces, toppings, at amazing low cost!

Saves up to 75%

3 ON THE TABLE

For Coffee or Tea

Undiluted Carnation costs less than half as much as cream—yet millions of people like it better. Just a little gives coffee appetizing creamy color and delicious mellow flavor. Try it in your next 6 cups; you'll find just the blend you like.

On Cereals, Fruits

Either undiluted, or with part water (to your own taste) Carnation is excellent on cereals, fruits, desserts, and in cocoa. Enjoy this "luxury"—for pennies!

Saves up to 50%

Rich whole milk—concentrated to DOUBLE Richness

If you aren't using Carnation for all its valuable purposes, your milk bill may be 50% higher than it needs to be. Carnation Evaporated Milk is concentrated by evaporation to double-richness in all milk food values; homogenized, enriched with vitamin D, and sterilized. Yet it costs much less than ordinary milk, and has many other uses that save money. Get a few cans of Carnation today—for better results at lower cost.

SEND FOR the "Velvet Blend Book" giving many delicious, money-saving recipes. Carnation, Dept. L-49, Los Angeles 36, Calif.

MORE BABIES are fed on Carnation than on any other brand of evaporated milk, according to nation-wide surveys.

CARNATION 50 Years 1899-1949

COPR. 1949, CARNATION CO.

VARIATIONS GALORE . . . BUT ALWAYS

6-way nourishment in ENRICHED BREAD and FLOUR

Biscuit Fans: Roll rich biscuit dough ⅜ inch thick, spread with jam. Cut in narrow oblongs, fold in thirds lengthwise, cut in 3½ inch pieces, slash along edge.

YOUR HOME BAKING. [illegible] . . . make sure they're ex- [illegible] . . . and look [illegible]

TREATS YOU BUY. Your baker has an exciting array of [illegible]

Think about all the wonderful things made from white flour . . . golden-crusted loaves of bread, feathery hot biscuits, stacks of nut-brown pancakes, tender rolls fragrant from the oven. The delectable list would stretch from breakfast to midnight.

You used to enjoy these foods just because they tasted good and filled you up. But see these flags . . . the story they tell! Modern enriched bread and flour give you 6-way nourishment with every delicious bite . . . six real contributions to the balanced diet your family needs for buoyant vitality and health.

"IS BREAD FATTENING?" No more so than [illegible] of equal energy content. Nutritionists point out that the carbohydrates of bread are easily [illegible] as needed.

WHEAT FLOUR INSTITUTE

Learn the Artistic Touch in Arranging Flowers

By Henrietta Murdock
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

THE Garden Clubs of America have encouraged and stimulated women to use flowers artistically in the home. Results show that the skill can be acquired if one isn't a natural, and no more delightful hobby can be imagined. These suggestions may help if you are not already proficient.

What flowers . . . Practically any flower, shrub, budding branch, foliage or evergreen will make a delightful bouquet. For winter, some of the most subtle effects are achieved with dried leaves and grasses, seed pods, vines and berries. Using them with distinction makes your bouquets special, gives results plus. Cut flowers, even more than garden varieties, need skillful arranging, as the blossoms are so much alike.

Containers . . . Simple bowls, vases, jars, bottles, mugs—anything with a graceful shape, soft color and appealing line is good for a bouquet. Try unusual containers such as a pewter coffeepot for larkspur, a copper kettle for zinnias, pressed-glass goblets for garden pinks, a luster pitcher for cornflowers, sugar bowls for violets and pairs of wineglasses for tiny flowers.

Pay attention, also, to the personality of your flowers. Roses look enchanting in glass so the stems will show. A silver container also is flattering to roses and delicate blue or white flowers. Use undecorated pottery, brass or copper for old-fashioned, sturdy garden flowers and branches with berries or heavy leaves. Flat, shallow bowls are good for floating flower heads, or a slender arrangement of tall graceful flowers. Straight glass cylinders, jars or fish bowls are perfect for flowering branches such as forsythia, crab apple, quince and lilac. Put pussy willows in dull green, blue or brown pottery, and jo quils in a square dish or vase so they star upright. You soon will be able to mat flower and container instinctively.

Techniques . . . Some mechanical hel are almost a necessity for good flower a rangement. Needle holders in various siz are good for average and larger stems. Hai pin holders support small or hard-to-anch stems, and fine chicken wire squeezed into bunch is perfect for spraying effects. Y can buy fine flower wire at florists' or har ware stores, and use it over and over aga to support weak stems or curve a spra Bouquets last longer and are easier to a range if the more perishable flowers are wir individually. Stick one end of the wire in the calyx and twist the remainder around t stem. This does not injure the flower.

Reminders . . . Many flowers, such cornflowers or sweet peas, do not have ac quate foliage of their own, or the foliage wi before the blossom has faded, so that addi another variety of foliage is advisable. E sides, leaf shapes are in themselves beau ful, and their varied colors and patterns ma flower arrangements more interesting.

Composition . . . No one rule appli to all flower arrangements; but in gener larger flowers with stems cut short are mass or composed as a base or axis from which e tend the lighter sprays, spikes or branch that give the arrangement grace.

Variety in both color and flower types the same bouquet is picturesque. You deci which flowers look well together and su your containers to them. Your skill gro with each achievement, and sooner than y think you become expert.

WHAT IS MENTAL ILLNESS?

(Continued from Page 37)

warning in a sniffle, however, that we need a rest or some relaxation, and so should we heed the warnings of being slightly "off the beam" in passing emotional upheavals.

To aid you in taking your own mental health pulse, try this list of questions from You and Psychiatry, drawn up by Dr. William C. Menninger, president of the American Psychiatric Association:

Are you always worrying?

Are you unable to concentrate because of unrecognized reasons?

Are you continually unhappy without justified cause?

Do you lose your temper easily and often?

Are you troubled by regular insomnia?

Do you have wide fluctuations in your moods, from depression to elation, back to depression, which incapacitate you?

Do you continually dislike to be with people?

Are you upset if the routine of your life is disturbed?

Do the children consistently "get on your nerves"?

Are you "browned off" and constantly bitter?

Are you afraid without real cause?

Are you always right and the other person always wrong?

Do you have numerous aches or pains for which no doctor can find a physical cause?

If the answer to any of these questions is "yes," then it is Doctor Menninger's "sober advice" that help is necessary. The conditions charted in these questions are the major warning signals of poor mental health in one degree or another. Note, however, as you answer the questions, the frequent use of such words as "always," "often," "regular and "continually." We all get worried som times, or get "browned off" sometimes. O sniffle doesn't make a cold, nor one sympto a breakdown. It is when these symptoms cur frequently, or last for weeks and mont and we cannot shake them, that we need seek help for ourselves or encourage oth to do so. The important thing is to cat your neurosis before it catches you.

For the seriousness of mental illness is direct ratio to the extent that an unhealt attitude dominates. Take, for instance, t difference between a daydream—a norm part of healthy living—and a real delusion a sure symptom of the presence of a ps chosis.

There is a little of the Walter Mitty in of us. Maybe you are sitting in a restaura waiting for someone, and for a minute y daydream yourself into a very rich, beautif and bored-with-it woman. You sit there for minute looking at the very ordinary peop with elegant disdain; then suddenly you s your friend and, probably with some co fusion, you come out of it. Or perhaps y are lying in bed, thinking about what y are going to get for dinner the next da and suddenly you are a famous hostess in evening gown, and your husband is bowi slightly to you as he offers you a cigaret Maybe you go to sleep in the middle of th dream, or maybe you get up and get a gla of water and decide to read awhile.

The difference between daydreaming a the condition of the man prancing through mental hospital calling himself Napole President Roosevelt or God is that the m

(Continued on Page 236)

"Cheese Hearties" FOR A DINNER THAT'S DIFFERENT!

Make 'em with mellow Kraft American

DINNER SANDWICHES they are . . . well-worthy of being a main dish because the ham and the Kraft American put in plenty of high-quality, complete protein.

For the mighty-good filling, mix 2 cups chopped ham (baked or boiled), 2 tbsps. horseradish, 1 tsp. lemon juice, ¼ c. Kraft Mayonnaise, seasonings to taste. Spread generously between bread slices (crusts trimmed). Brush the outsides of each sandwich with melted butter or Parkay Margarine and toast on both sides under low broiler heat.

The "Touch of Gold" is the plenty-thick slice of mellow-good Kraft Pasteurized Process American you place on each toasting sandwich just before it has turned brown. A few more minutes under the heat to melt that glorious cheese, and you're ready to garnish (with pickle fans and radish roses, perhaps) one of the most delicious dinner platters you've set forth in many a moon!

More grand recipes FREE. Write for your copy of "CHEESE CLASSICS." Address Kraft Foods Company, Dept. CC-6, Chicago 90, Illinois.

VERY Special Baked Potatoes

Bake potatoes as usual. Cut a slice from the top of each. Scoop out centers; mash with a little milk, butter or Parkay Margarine, seasonings. Refill the shells. Top with plenty of golden Kraft American shredded, and return to a moderate (350°) oven just long enough to melt the cheese.

When you buy cheese in portions or slices

You are familiar with the transparent wrapper that comes around Kraft American in the ½-lb. package. Slices or portions of genuine Kraft American are cut from a 5-lb. loaf with a wrapper of that same design. Ask! Look! Protect yourself against substitution.

WATCH OUT!

THE WORLD'S FAVORITE CHEESES ARE MADE OR IMPORTED BY KRAFT

VACATION IN PARADISE THIS SUMMER!

Visit Glorious GLACIER PARK!

FOR COLORFUL FREE FOLDER, MAIL COUPON TODAY!

● Glorious Glacier—acclaimed by thousands as "the most beautiful spot in the world!" Hikers and riders follow winding mountain trails through indescribably magnificent vistas. Park buses glide over smooth highways, unfolding mile after mile of unmatched scenic splendor. Beautiful hotels and cozy chalet-lodges, nestled in the majestic Montana Rockies, offer accommodations to suit every taste.

Go One Way—Return Another
See Twice as Much!

Burlington offers a choice of scenic routes to Glacier Park! Travel direct from Chicago in less than 39 hours aboard the popular ORIENTAL LIMITED. Or go by way of the Dude Ranch Country of the Big Horn Mountains. If you like, visit Magic Yellowstone Park either going or returning. For extra travel pleasure, go one way, return another.

Way of the Zephyrs

Burlington Route

Mail coupon today for complete information and cost. Whether you travel independently or join an Escorted Tour, you'll enjoy every minute of your trip when you Go Burlington!

FILL OUT AND MAIL TODAY

BURLINGTON TRAVEL BUREAU
Dept. 108, 547 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.

I am interested in a vacation in Glorious Glacier Park. Please send me complete information.

Print Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

If you are interested in other Western Vacationlands, check here: ☐ COLORADO ☐ YELLOWSTONE ☐ DUDE RANCHES ☐ CALIFORNIA ☐ PACIFIC NORTHWEST

VISIT THE CHICAGO RAILROAD FAIR • JUNE 25 - OCT. 2

BURLINGTON'S 100th ANNIVERSARY
1849-1949

(Continued from Page 234)

lives in his delusion: it dominates him; he has no control over it. He finds the real world is unreal—not himself—whereas with a daydream you know it's not real and that actually you're you, and, when it comes right down to it, you like being you.

Similarly, the person suffering from a mild form of mental illness such as a neurosis knows who he is, where he is and what he is doing—even when he is acting in an unhealthy fashion. But a psychotic's emotional upheaval has shut out the real world even though his intelligence may continue to operate. He may hear, see and often remember actuality, but his mind cannot always respond to it as such. He is absorbed in being ill: his disordered emotions are his world.

The actual "breaking out" of either a neurosis or a psychosis never comes overnight, although it may appear to on the surface. Often certain events are picked out by the uninformed as "causes"—the ill woman's husband died last year, or her child was killed in an accident. These are only "last straws"—events are never the causes of mental illness. The causes lie in the attitudes we take toward events, unhealthy attitudes which we build up as we grow, attitudes which make us incapable of handling stresses and strains which mentally healthy people meet and deal with successfully.

To see what a tremendous force attitude is on your behavior, consider whether you've ever worried about falling out of bed in recent years. It is highly unlikely that you have. Now consider how you would feel if your bed were placed not on solid ground but on the edge of a precipice. Your whole feeling about getting into bed would change. It would be just as unlikely that you would fall out of bed that night as it would be any other night, but your attitude would be such that you would be filled with anxiety and fearfulness.

To him who is shod, the whole world is covered with leather.

This example from psychiatrist George Preston's files not only serves to give you an idea of what forceful things attitudes are, but it should also reveal something of what the mentally ill suffer within themselves.

Cure for mental illness comes with the changing of handicapping attitudes. An attitude which is known consciously, and taken into consideration by the mind, is never handicapping—it is the buried fears and worries which cause us trouble through their unpredictable interference in what we know is best for us. When our needs are satisfied, our anxieties reduced and understood, our attitudes change of themselves. Buried frustrations can best be brought to light through psychiatric consultation, guidance or analysis, each of which seeks to help the patient to face his conflicts so that the emotions and intellect can work in harmony. This facing-up is highly successful in arresting mental illness in its early stages, but difficult to use, obviously, when the ill person's mind is so clouded that it is hard to reach.

THERE are treatments, however, which are helpful in reaching the acutely ill. These include shock treatment (insulin, metrazol or electric), warm baths, drugs (like sodium pentathol, the so-called truth serum) and glandular treatments, like the hormones used in change-of-life breakdowns in women. Since we do not know precisely what happens physically in a mental breakdown, it is not known precisely how these treatments function. This means, of course, that great care must be taken to restrict their use to experts operating under controlled conditions.

In a mild emotional disorder, or a mild neurotic condition, the surface symptoms are repeated failure, unrewarding relationships and a burdensome amount of dissatisfaction, futile worry and anxiety. From these we may deduce something is wrong—but we cannot deduce what. To diagnose the character of the illness, or its potential severity and course, much deeper symptoms must be studied. This calls for trained and expert diagnoses: glib, lay diagnoses are dangerous and foolhardy and may unwittingly add further strain to someone already carrying a heavy burden of maladjustment. The most common mistake is made on people who are erratic or unconventional. They are often mistakenly thought of as "crazy," while the shy, repressed, withdrawn individual who is really heading for illness passes unnoticed.

When emotional illness becomes acute enough to be actually hampering the individual's life, it is classified under the general heading of neurosis. A neurosis does not interfere with intelligence, but with judgment; the mind is not ill, but the emotions, the feeling capacity, are. Thus it comes under the heading of emotional illness rather than mental illness technically.

THERE are four main technical classifications of neuroses. They are the obsessive compulsive, the conversion hysteria, the anxiety neuroses and the reactive depression. While a neurosis may show more than one pattern at a time, or may shift from one type to another, classification is made on the basis of the prevailing disturbance. The disturbance, however, is not a cause, but an effect—of a mechanism of adjustment to conflict. According to Freudian theory—the predominant school of psychiatry—everyone adopts some sort of mechanism of adjustment (technically called a dynamism) in order to reconcile his primitive drives and desires (the id) with the demands of reality. For instance: "repression" is a mechanism which pushes down, out of conscious thought, unacceptable ideas and notions; "rationalization" assigns reasons to actions which are more acceptable to the Self (or the "Ego") than "id-driven" motivation; while "regression" is a return to childish behavior and the pleasures of being taker, not giver.

Another is the compulsive mechanism—when the sick man or woman repeats an action over and over in the belief it has "magic" powers. Most of us knock on wood when we've been bragging. We may know intellectually it won't have the slightest effect on our talents, but we feel compelled to do it as a hedge against fate. A frequent compulsion is endless washing. Under analysis of the problem this washing usually is found to be symbolic and when the real or fancied inner "dirtiness" is understood, the compulsion ceases.

Conversion often entails the using of physical ailments to avoid, or conquer, conflict. In our society, physical illness is held above reproach, even though it may have been our own silly fault that we caught cold, or tripped and fell, or whatever happened to us. Because we get sympathy, not blame, however, we frequently tend to use illness as an excuse to get out of what we don't want to do. This may be deceitful, but so long as we do not deceive ourselves, it does not fall under the heading of mental illness. It is when we use illness as a means of escape and do not know we are doing it that we step into the illness area included in the label "conversion neurosis"—when we start converting our emotional disturbances into physical ailments. The most common forms of conversion show up in digestive disorders, heart ailments and "paralyzed" limbs.

The projection mechanism entails the projecting, or throwing, of your own incapabilities onto other people or other things. The woman who always thinks it is someone else's fault that she didn't catch the right train, or play her bridge hand right, or didn't get enough sleep, is a victim of this mechanism, born of fear of self-responsibility.

Neurotics—or psychoneurotics, a longer label for the same group—are rarely found in state hospitals, because they are usually able to go about their daily lives without disturbing anyone but themselves to any great extent. A great increase in mental health could be secured for these people, if more psychiatric help were available to handle the problems which hamper their success.

In the classifying of psychoses, the most familiar listing is that of schizophrenia, a broad label covering the mentally ill who

(Continued on Page 239)

the MEAT page

How to make 4 fresh-cooked meals from half a ham

When ham is on your shopping list, it's a real economy for the average size family to get a full-cut shank half large enough to make four meals, as shown here.

1 "Boiled" Dinner

Before you bring it home, have your meat-man saw off a generous shank end for lots of flavor in a "boiled" dinner. Simmer it gently with carrots, onions, potatoes and wedges of cabbage.

3 Fried Ham Slices

The remaining piece is boneless and easily sliced with a sharp knife. Cut your first slices from the larger end. Make them fairly thick to fry or broil.

4 Ham and Scalloped Potatoes

As you get to the smaller end of the boneless piece, cut thinner slices. Use them in alternating layers with sliced potatoes to make a dish of scalloped ham and potatoes.

2 Baked Ham

Later in the week you can easily divide the center part of the ham half into two portions as shown here. Bake the piece with the bone. Score it and decorate it, if you like, with your favorite glaze. The slices will be small, but no less delicious.

This way of getting four fresh-cooked meals from one cut of ham will help you give your family more often the generous supply of B vitamins that ham provides, and the complete, high-quality protein that ham, like all meat, offers. Yes, there's thrift in the buying of meat, and also in the way you use it.

P. S. Illustrated booklet, showing six "thrifty use" ideas like this, yours for 5c in coin sent to Box 1133, Chicago 77, Illinois.

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association

ACCEPTED Council on Foods and Nutrition

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE • Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.

Want to know why Live-Water washing gets clothes really clean?

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show you how the only All-Porcelain Automatic Washer launders differently from all others.

See Live-Water action—and the all-porcelain finish that stays beautiful!

Live-Water washing is really different! You can see that difference when you watch the Frigidaire All-Porcelain Automatic Washer in action—rolling, penetrating currents of clean, hot, sudsy water keep the clothes moving with no metal parts to rub and wear them.

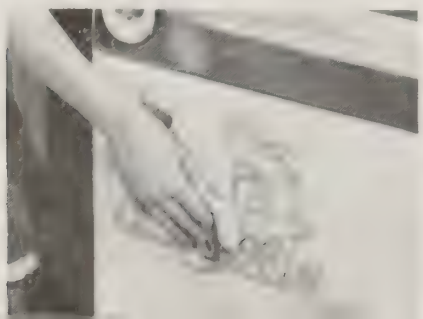
You'll see the difference in results, too—the cleaner, whiter, brighter clothes you get with Live-Water rinsing and re-rinsing in clean water. Lighter clothes, too, because Rapidry-Spinning gets them far drier than most washers—many clothes dry enough to iron immediately!

It's all so easy for you—put in the clothes and soap or detergent, touch the dial, that's all! The new-type underwater suds-dispenser prevents all soap spots or stains. And it's so easy to clean the all-porcelain Frigidaire Washer—a damp cloth does it. The Lifetime Porcelain finish resists rust, scratching, grease, dirt and soap.

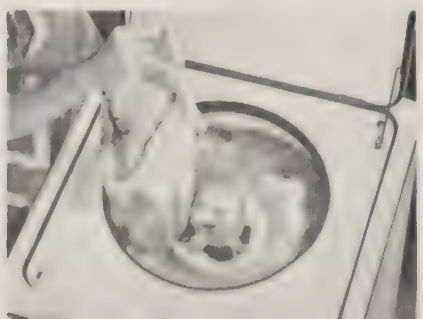
Visit your Frigidaire Dealer today to learn all about this really different Automatic Washer. And ask to see the new Frigidaire Electric Ironer and Automatic Clothes Dryer to complete your work-saving home laundry, as well as all the other Frigidaire appliances for pleasanter living.

Look up name of your Frigidaire Dealer—in Classified Phone Directory; or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights, on your Columbia Station.

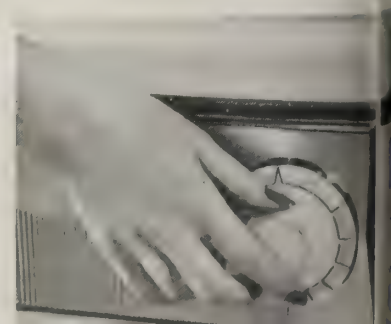


FRIGIDAIRE
the All-Porcelain Automatic Washer



All-Porcelain inside and out — that's only true of the Frigidaire Automatic Washer! And how you'll enjoy the feature! The exterior stays gleaming white with just the touch of a damp cloth. The self-cleaning interior needs no attention at all.

Rolling currents of water do the work! And it's clean water for each operation—you can't expect dirty water to get clothes really clean. Yet Frigidaire is economical with hot water—making maximum use of every drop for finest laundering.



Rapidry-Spinning gets clothes drier—far drier than most washers—really damp-dry. And that means they're lighter to lift, too. Many of the clothes will be dry enough for ironing right away. Your hands need never touch water at all!

Hand-Control it if you wish! For special jobs you can alter the laundering cycle of the Frigidaire Automatic Washer—lengthen, shorten, repeat or skip any operation. But on most occasions you'll just touch the dial and forget it!

(Continued from Page 236)

ve split away from the world of reality into ıental world of their own, and who move,
f awake, between the real and the unreal.
is illness was called formerly dementia ıecox and was thought incurable. Now rerkable results are gained through shock atments, especially during the first year.
But schizophrenics do not all act alike, by y means. There are the catatonic, who is ject to trances which twist his face or ke his body rigid; the hebephrenic, who ys cute, is often more flirtatious than his ırs would deem proper, likes to giggle, exe his body, and often hears voices; the anoid schizophrenic, who may have deions of grandeur one moment and deluns of persecution the next, or both at e; and the simple schizophrenic, who is less, tired, disinterested and uncaring ut life and his appearance, and can't fin-his thoughts, much less his sentences.
Around people who are patient and hune, schizophrenics are rarely violent. Wellffed, well-equipped mental hospitals do use nor need restraints or punishments.
chizophrenia usually attacks young people der 35) of slender, disproportionate build,
l, if the patient goes without treatment ing the first year of the acute stage of his ess, the disease may run a debilitating rse of from four to twenty years. It is erally believed to be a functional dise—that is, it has no organic cause, but is a ılt of faulty functioning. But some psy-ıtric thinkers believe—and there is con-rable objective evidence—that it may e physical causes. For one thing, the nds function poorly in schizophrenics.
ere is hope that new medical research as l as new psychiatric research will give us re insight than we have currently on this up of the mentally ill.

The next largest group is the older people—senile psychotics who number about one rth of the state-hospital patients. Their ıdily increasing ranks are a major factor in overcrowded conditions of our instituns. Sadly enough, however, many of these ile patients have only mild cases of psyses. They could be cared for at home, if y were wanted, or in old-age homes, if re were enough. The senile symptoms are ıiliar to all of us—lapses of memory, a ng in the past, a lack of recognition of ple and places. Some also suffer from psy-choses brought on by hardening of the arteries. At present we know little about helping them, but, when we apply our knowledge of healthy living, both mental and physical, to our way of living, the rate of senile psychoses can be expected to come down.

A smaller group among the psychotics are the manic-depressives, 7 out of 10 of whom are women. They usually alternate between overactivity and depression. Manic depression usually responds to shock treatment if it is caught before it becomes chronic. It attacks people between 35 and 50, usually runs at least a three-year course, with intermittent periods of normal living. The patients, mostly women, ill from involutional melancholia, make up 10 per cent.

A small group, mostly male, suffers from general paresis, the brain disease caused by syphilis. If caught early, it can be arrested in about one case in two.

It can readily be seen from this varied list of kinds of mental illness that there is no one condition that can be described by the term insanity. "Insanity" is a term used by lawyers and others involved in legal matters pertaining to the mentally ill to describe total incompetence in dealing with reality. But it is not used in cases of incompetence induced by drugs or coma in other forms of illness, even though this incompetence may be many times greater than that exhibited by a patient with mental illness. The term "insanity" is out of step with modern knowledge and should be eliminated.

Even with the out-of-date conditions existing in the majority of our mental hospitals, seven out of ten patients will be discharged eventually—but two of these will return to hospital, and only five will remain out permanently. Under prime conditions, it's believed this figure could be raised immeasurably. This demands speedier diagnosis of the early stages of mental illness, better facilities and more of them, and greater public knowledge and understanding than now exist. This is our problem. The psychiatric profession, overworked and few in number, needs public encouragement and interest if it is going to be able to put its hard-earned know-how to work. The sooner we face up to the powerful problem of mental illness, the sooner we shall be able to lick it.

This is the second of four articles on mental health. The next, dealing with psychiatry in the home, will appear in the May JOURNAL.

The Virgin With Saints . . . By El Greco

AMONG the Old Masters, the great prophet of modern art is El Greco. His work foreshadows the abandonment three hundred years later of naturalism for expressionism, of proportions determined by nature for proportions determined by emotion. Academic critics fighting this trend used to assert that El Greco distorted the human form because his eyesight was defective. We now believe that astigmatism affected him less, if at all, than the stylization in Byzantine icons and mosaics he had seen as a young man on his native island of Crete. But the fashion initiated by Parmigiano, that vogue for tall, slender figures with small heads, which became modish in European painting of the late sixteenth century, also played its part and prepared the public to accept the exaggerated elongations El Greco found suitable for his highly emotional style.

El Greco, however, was not merely a precursor of many contemporary artists; he also expressed, through the flamelike forms he created, the spirit of his own time, that ardent and mystical piety which followed the newly launched Counter Reformation. The Virgin Between Saint Inés and Saint Tecla, once in the Chapel of San José in Toledo, the Spanish town which became El Greco's final home, is a summit of such visionary painting. What more marvelous rendering of substance at once tangible and intangible, corporeal and incorporeal, than the cherubim who surround the Virgin? They seem modeled in ectoplasm, formed of some emanation of thought. Even the artist's signature, the initials of his Greek name (Domenico Theotocopuli) traced on the forehead of St. Tecla's lion, seems to have taken on symbolic significance. The whole scene illustrates, so far as this is possible, the experiences described by El Greco's great contemporary, St. John of the Cross, and other mystics.

But if El Greco himself was a mystic, he was a very practical one. We know he was an efficient painter, ran a profitable shop, and was ready to repeat his pictures as many times as the market required. Even his distortions did not diminish his popularity, for his paintings apparently gave concrete and convincing form to visions that many pious people in Spain had seen or hoped to see.

—JOHN WALKER,
Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art.

"Satina makes my starched clothes 3 times easier to iron!"

WRITES MRS. JOHN J. JANDINSKI, JR., NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

"I HAVE OODLES OF COTTONS to wash and iron for my 2-year-old," writes Mrs. Jandinski. "Satina not only makes my starched ironing 3 times easier, but makes clothes stay fresh longer, too."

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you use with boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

It not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, and stay clean longer, too!

FREE FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings! Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself!

SATINA, Dept. 88, Battle Creek, Michigan
Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME_____
STREET_____
CITY_____ STATE_____

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Satina users say: "Put SATINA in your starch! It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

PHOTO BY PRAT

Barnyard Garden

By RICHARD PRATT

Flowers congregate here now instead of animals, indicating that a garden can attractively take over almost any spot that has lost its original usefulness. Lowering a high enclosing wall made available enough stone with which to build retaining walls across the barnyard and turn the sloping ground into a series of level terraces; the lower ones for cultivating beauty, the topmost for sitting—one of gardening's greatest pleasures.

It's perfect for families with children!

You feel so safe driving this easy-steering car. With extra large windows and windshield, you have wide vision all around . . . you see the road right in front of you. It parks in far less space, too.

durable grained-tic upholstery in a
' Station Wagon is able! Mild suds and r rinse keep seats
and fresh despite ed sweets, muddy or even the baby's ula.

Family hauling jobs are easy with a 'Jeep' Station Wagon—even a bicycle can go along when you visit! Rear seats are easily removable if you have an extra bulky load . . . and there's huge parcel space with all seats in.

SO many cars are like formal living rooms—for adults only. But not the 'Jeep' Station Wagon . . . it's made for families with children!

Imagine never worrying about wet clothes and shoes or even a dripping dog—the seats, floor and interior paneling are washable.

And do children love riding in a 'Jeep' Station Wagon. They have lots of room in its all-steel body . . . they sit up where they can see through the wide safety-glass windows.

You'll love riding in it, too, for it is a smooth comfortable car that is easy to handle, smart in appearance and so widely useful for every family need.

With its gas-thrifty engine and overdrive, the 'Jeep' Station Wagon goes farther on a tankful . . . and repair bills will cost you less.

Let a Willys-Overland dealer take your whole family for a trial ride in this grand car.

'Jeep'

Station Wagon

LYS-OVERLAND MOTORS, TOLEDO • MAKERS OF AMERICA'S MOST USEFUL VEHICLES

Not just a Crib Mattress... but a Better
Posture Builder!

THE NEW KANTWET
with the Built-In
DORSAL PAD

PERMANENTLY FIRM, LEVEL SUPPORT THAT HELPS BUILD A STRAIGHT, STURDY BACK!

Now, America's best-known, most-used crib mattress has an added posture feature — a built-in reinforcement that keeps the entire mattress firm and level, all the way through! KANTWET'S DORSAL PAD parallels the line of a normal, straight back — encourages pliant little bones to develop correctly.

Only KANTWET is "Posturized" 4 Ways!

Heavier than usual coil springs, built so that their support increases as baby's weight increases — for better posture!

DORSAL PAD that makes a firm, level foundation for the entire mattress — for better posture!

Extra layers of fluffy, white cotton felt filling where baby's weight rests most heavily — for better posture!

Double-sealed button tufting anchors filling in place, eliminates lumps and hollows — for better posture!

$15.95
Slightly higher Denver west

Gay, new covers—wetproof, washable, flame-retarding!

KANTWET — FIRST in wetproof crib mattresses — PROVEN in over 1,000,000 homes!

WELCOME TO FLOWERACRES

(Continued from Page 210)

a week's menus at a time and markets only once a week. Saturday is always baking day, when she turns in and makes bread as well as a cake and cookies.

Of course, she has plenty of help. Servant problem? "I've been lucky," she says. Their colored couple has been with them nineteen years. Though wages for a servant run about $20 a week in the country district, Willie and Ludie have their own house on the place. They know that when they are old and unable to work they can stay there and be looked after. When they are sick, the Hastings pay the bills. They kept Ludie in a hospital recently for nearly a year. She can't do much in the house now, so they have Annie May, who comes daily. For the big parties the mainstay is Lizzie Miller, a capable colored cateress, at about $10 a day.

At Christmastime Willie and Ludie join the Hastings under the tree for their gifts. Louise remembers not only their birthdays, but also those of their two children and grandchildren. And they know they're appreciated. "Willie," Louise declares as they're working together in the garden, "if the Lord ever takes you, I just hope He takes me the day before!" And Willie likes to tell about the time "Miss Louise" saw the coiled-up moccasin and just stood there screaming "Willie!" She knew he was "bound to fix it." And he did, with a quick blow with his hoe!

Life on a plantation is familiar to Louise, who spent her childhood on one, a happy life with four brothers and a sister. When she was twelve, the family moved to Decatur to be nearer the schools, and that was when Louise and Donald met. He was playing the phonograph for the pupils to march in when he first saw pretty little Louise Brown. "Right there," he declares, "I decided she was the girl I would marry when I grew up."

They were married in 1924. Meantime, Louise had graduated from Agnes Scott College, majoring in biology, and studied a summer with the scientific group at Woods Hole, Massachusetts. Donald had graduated from the College of Agriculture of the University of Georgia, cum laude, with an average of 90.

They had a big June wedding at the Presbyterian church in Decatur. Louise wore a white satin dress her mother had made. Washington was the first stop of the honeymoon, and as Mr. H. G. knew President Coolidge, they were received at the White House. The first person to whom Donald proudly introduced Louise as "Mrs. Hastings" was the President.

When the plantation house was built, ald was in charge of research for the com which his father had founded. Mr. H. G bought the acreage in 1919 to use as testing and production fields and for nu stock. In 1942 he turned over the presid of the company to Donald and became c man of the board of directors. The bus has a three-quarter-of-a-million capital surplus, with retail stores in Atlanta, tanooga, Birmingham and Charlotte, an large mail-order distribution "home of in Atlanta. Annual sales total $2,000 and all officers and employees are on salaries. Donald's own income varies tween $10,000 and $20,000 a year.

At Floweracres, quarters are provide fifteen white families and twenty colored houses are well built, each with a plo growing vegetables. Donald says they h remarkably small turnover, which h tributes to the fair wage scale—$3.5 $10.00 per day. But everybody just natu likes working for "Mr. Donald."

Young Donnie is going into the family ness. Summers he has worked hard i fields, regular hours at a regular salary Hastings are sensible about their childre money. When Donnie and Mary Louise very little they began to receive small a ances. Donald says he's seen too many to-do parents spoil their children by d ing them of the privilege of earning mon themselves, so when Donnie went to C he was given enough to cover his boar tuition, but he earns spending mone working in the college greenhouse, a treasurer for his fraternity, Chi Psi, at $5 month. At Washington Seminary, Louise acted as a paid assistant in sp classes; at Vassar she served as paid w robe mistress for the dramatic group (when she learned all about dry cleanin

Louise and Donald are also strongly o opinion that parents keep closest to growing children by having mutual inter They all love a family fishing trip. Do and his mother have always ridden toge She and Mary Louise are active in the s garden club and they garden long hour gether. Donnie and his father and gr father work in the testing fields together, go on inspection trips to their seed gro farms. While the men were away last Louise and Mary Louise made a studious of Washington and New York art galleri

They're together in church interests Mr. H. G. is a deacon, and Louise head

They Get Paid a Lot—But How Much Can They Keep?

THE highest-paid men and women in the U. S. today work in the motion-picture industry, according to the Treasury's final listings of top salaries for 1946. Actress Bette Davis topped the women, but out of a salary of $328,000 would probably net only around $69,230; her tax would be approximately $258,770, if her deductions were the standard minimum ones, plus one exemption. Film tycoon Charles P. Skouras led the men with $985,000—which, again with the standard minimum deductions and one exemption, would leave him $158,253.

In 1945, 49,750,991 Americans paid income tax. On the basis of standard minimum deductions and one exemption, incomes in the higher brackets, after taxes, would net:

$25,000 income: net $15,605
162,973 taxpayers had a gross income of $25,000–$50,000

$50,000 income: net $23,510
42,753 taxpayers had a gross income of $50,000–$100,000

$100,000 income: net $31,885
9,258 taxpayers had a gross income of $100,000–$500,000

$500,000 income: net $57,485
329 taxpayers had a gross income of $500,000–$1,000,000

$1,000,000 income: net $100,450
71 taxpayers had a gross income of $1,000,000 or more nuine Evenflo Costs No More!

Finish EVENFLO Bottles Better!

he smooth nursing action of Evenflo's ated twin-valve nipple helps babies their bottles easier. They nurse nflo in comfort, thus get more benefit their food and make better gains eight. Because it has better nursing n and is much handier to use at e or while visiting, Evenflo is by far No. 1 choice of millions of American ers.

et 4- & 8-oz. Evenflo Nursers and new flo Brushless Baby Bottle Cleanser by shops, drug, dept. stores.

Evenflo*
America's 25c
ost Popular Nurser

Separate Parts 10c

flo air valves ve vacuum.

*Pat.

BREATHES AS IT FEEDS

ANTS THAT ALMOST "BREATHE" WITH YOUR BABY!

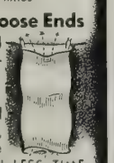
Rand Breeth-eez
BABY PANTS

y "Breeth-Eez" has this patented feature!

's so cool and comfortable in Rand h-Eez Baby Pants! This patented fab- ontains many tiny pores, allowing ure vapor to evaporate. And Breeth- ants are so delightfully soft!

TEED WATERPROOF • WASHABLE • VENTILATED
BBER CO. Grand'as Rand Dress Shields Brooklyn 16, N.Y.

DIAPERS that are KNITTED TO FIT YOUR BABY



PANT-EASE diapers stay in place on the most active infant and the elasticity of this specially knitted cotton fabric keeps your baby comfortable at all times

Folding—No Seams—No Loose Ends to , hang down or become bunched they do not belong - - - -

EN DADDY CAN CHANGE
Pant-Ease diapers

y absorbent—Easy to launder and double thickness with open ends, s hanging so the air can circulate h each garment and — DRY IN LESS TIME

Pant-ease
DIAPERS
are used and approved by Doctors, rses and thousands of modern Mothers e Pant-ease at Department Stores and Shops or Send for FREE LITERATURE
SAMPLE GARMENT 25¢

T-EASE INFANT WEAR CO. DEPT. 515 ARCADE, N.Y.

Altar Guild. Grace is always said at meals. Mary Louise helps her mother with church decorations, and they both take an interest in Donald's project of supplying flowers for Mother's Day services at the Federal penitentiary (he tells you about watching Al Capone fondle one of his roses).

Both parents say they'd rather have well-balanced children than brilliant ones, though they're proud that Donnie won nine out of fifteen possible honors in high school and that Mary Louise was one of sixty students chosen to study at the School of Extra-Mural Studies at Stratford-on-Avon last summer.

They hope their children will take a large share in community life and organizations, for they think that's a duty that all people owe. Louise is emphatic in her belief that being a clubwoman hasn't deprived her family, but has enriched their life together.

As they were living in the country when the children became of school age, Louise drove them into town two days a week and taught them the other days herself, which didn't allow much time for outside activities. Then the senior Mrs. Hastings died, and the family began spending winters with Mr. H. G. in Decatur. It was then, following the presidency of her own garden club, that Louise was asked to become president of the Garden Clubs of Georgia.

THIS seemed a big step. Donald was all for it, but she talked it over with the head of her children's school, whose advice was that with her energy and active mind, it would be good for her to develop outside interests, and would give her children more self-sufficiency. Now for seven years she's been on the board of the National Council of State Garden Clubs. As for lecturing, she went into it with the idea that it would be a real help in the promotion of the love of gardening and appreciation of flowers and their proper use in the home.

Being a clubwoman isn't all luncheons and corsages. The first time she toured the state, staying often in uncomfortable little hotels, Louise came home and cried about it. "You're in this," Donald said, "and I know you can take it." When she lectures, she lugs around heavy vases and urns, in places with no janitor service, spends exhausting hours setting up flower arrangements. "I am fortunate to have inherited the Rutherford family energy. And I feel I'm really doing something when I talk on church flower arrangements. Our Southern churches need beauty so."

"Southern" is a word frequently in the Hastings' talk. They're consciously and loyally Southern, though Donald is only first generation. Mr. H. G., son of the publisher of the Springfield, Ohio, Republican, still votes the Republican ticket, but Louise and Donald both voted for Thurmond. Mary Louise, though encouraged by Helen Hayes, a friend of the family, for a stage career, returned home, because she says, with the grave expression she often has, "The South needs its young people who have had special training." And Donnie decided to go into the business because he's interested in the company's research in seeds adapted particularly to the South, such as their new Dixiana grass, which they've spent ten years developing to withstand the hot Southern summers.

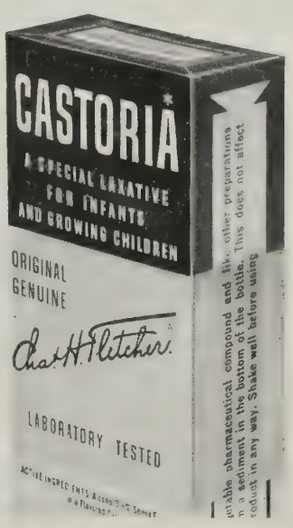
He and his mother are the real "rebels" of the family, though. "That Lincoln!" Louise sniffs. Mary Louise says, "Now, mother, you've never tried to understand Lincoln." Then Donnie grins and tells about the big Confederate flag hung above his desk at college. They're proud of the fact that the tall poplar on the front lawn marks the end of a trench in which the Confederates made a last stand at the time of the Battle of Atlanta, that there's a monument on the place commemorating the formation by young soldiers of a Southern branch of Sigma Chi, and that the old family home of their friend Margaret Mitchell is not far down the road.

They're very Southern, too, in their enjoyment of their "kinfolk." There are always 40 to 50 of them for Christmas dinner. "So many people nowadays," Louise says, "don't go to the trouble of bringing all the family together. But I believe in it. The more people there are whose love and concern children have, the more obligated they will feel in

When a youngster's upset by "Childhood Constipation"

...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your child frets and fusses ...when he's cross because of "Childhood Constipation" . . . it's wise to know what to do. Give him Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drug-store today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.*

Chas. H. Fletcher
The original and genuine
CASTORIA

IT'S NEW! 1950 Rinso WITH SOLIUM

has 3 times the Whiter Washing Action of any other soap!

WASHES CLOTHES WHITER... COLORS BRIGHTER...THAN NEW

YES, this greatest Rinso of all . . . the latest triumph of the world-famous Lever Laboratories . . . will do what no other soap can do! It is the new 1950 Rinso with Solium that gives you 3 times the whiter washing action of any other soap! This sensational new washing action makes clothes whiter than new . . . colors brighter than new . . . and KEEPS them whiter, brighter than any other soap! Even yellowed and grayed clothes become whiter and brighter . . . even in hardest water. The Rinso now at dealers is the 1950 Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient. Get a package today.

SO SAFE FOR CLOTHES
SO KIND TO HANDS

ONLY Rinso CONTAINS SOLIUM—the scientific Sunlight Ingredient making their important decisions in life. They can't let so many down."

Last fall 170 of the clan gathered for the celebration of the golden wedding of Louise's father and mother. She was up until three A.M. arranging the chrysanthemums and yellow roses, decorating the three-tier cake with a gold cup full of golden roses and violets sunk in the top, and gilding all the candles.

There have been many other notable parties at Floweracres. Five hundred came to Mary Louise's debut in 1946. Bouquets sent by friends made a gorgeous display tied into swags of Southern smilax down the staircase, with Mary Louise a picture in flesh-colored satin lamé brocaded with copper. She made the dress herself, of course.

But the party of the year is always the Sunday-before-Christmas Open House. Louise tells you seriously that she cut the invitation list away down last year—to only 250! This party, as all Hastings parties, is like a theatrical production: a smooth performance, but a blithe pandemonium until curtain time. The men bring in great armloads of holly and mistletoe from the woods. Willie makes a rope of boxwood for the dining-room table, to be punctuated by the exquisite Pink Perfection and white Albaplena camellias sent in huge, flat boxes by a beau of Mary Louise. Grandmother Brown arrives to take over the making of the sillabub, contributing the old-fashioned sillabub churn brought from South Georgia. Ludie polishes the huge silver punch bowl and tall silver cups. The fruitcake, made according to Great-great-grandmother Rutherford's recipe, has already been baked, but Annie and Lizzie are turning out platters of minced turkey sandwiches, hot mushroom sandwiches, little rum cakes and their special lemon spongecakes.

Mary Louise and Donnie hang the mistletoe, Mary Louise teasing Donnie about losing his Southern accent among the Yankees. Louise, standing on a chair to arrange holly, drops the clippers, gouges her knee and limps through the rest of the day.

There's a mad scramble at the last. But all is in readiness when the first guests arrive. The parents' friends come from four to six, the young people after seven. They fill all the rooms, the pretty little-girl cousins in long dresses passing out heather to bring everybody good luck in the New Year.

It's ten-thirty when the last guest has said, "Such a beautiful party." Louise sinks onto the couch and rubs her knee. "It was nice, wasn't it? The young people seemed to have such a good time," she says. "Donald and I are sentimental, and we believe in creating lovely memories for our children. We can't tell what the future may hold for them, but we feel that the memory of a happy life here at Floweracres will be something to sustain them always."

THE END

NEXT MONTH

AFTER nearly ten years of visiting American homes to report How America Lives, the editors of the JOURNAL will take readers into their own working quarters next month in the newly redecorated JOURNAL Workshop in New York's Radio City. You can see how—from this working center—the staff which produces How America Lives carries out transcontinental assignments, how fiction and article editors do their work, how Paris fashions and Ann Batchelder's dinner parties are photographed and how new tools for homemaking are tested and selected. With such distinguished contributors as Eleanor Roosevelt, Taylor Caldwell, John Gunther and Al Parker you can meet the JOURNAL editors and learn how, each month, a magazine comes to life. You can visit the Workshop, in photographs and text, in

• the May Journal •

YOU CHI

will get maximum wear and every comfort from "E-Z" because:

★ It's amply sized to the child's we
★ it has strong, durable seams
★ it's made of soft and comfortab knit fabric

Send for "Let the Scales Help You". FREE weight-size charts for infants and children. E-Z Mills, Inc., 57 Worth St., N. Y. 13

E-Z UNDERWE SPORTSWE AND HOSIE "for any Child of any Age"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

First Choice for the Pride of Your Family

See the new Heywood-Wakefield quality models at your dealer's now.

LEARN the Meaning of Your Baby's Name! Our 32-page book "What's in a Name?" gives the meaning of 500 boys' and girls' names. Send 10¢ for it today to Heywood-Wakefield Company, Dept. 14, Gardner, Mass.

MATERNITY DRESSES

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon at low budget prices. Charming fashions with concealing lines for the mo to-be. Also Maternity Corsets and Lin

SPRING STYLES

CRAWFORD'S
DEPT. A, 729 BALT. AVE.
Kansas City 6, Mo.

SPECIALTIES OF THE HOUSE

(Continued from Page 217)

CHEESE SOUFFLÉ

t ¼ cup butter or margarine. Add 6 espoons flour. Blend until smooth. Add easpoon salt, a dash of cayenne and ¼ poon dry mustard. Scald 1 cup milk and to fat-and-flour mixture gradually; cook l thick, stirring constantly. Remove from and add 1 cup grated Edam cheese. erican cheese could be used, but Mrs. tings uses Edam and it really gives the flé a very nice flavor. Separate 3 eggs. t yolks until thick and lemon-colored. l into sauce base. Beat the 3 egg whites l stiff but not dry. Fold in carefully the last. Pour into a greased 1-quart cas-le. Set in a pan of hot water. Bake minutes in a moderate oven, 350° F. es 4.

you decide to hold it over for late ar-ls, lower heat to 200° F.—very slow—r soufflé is done. A soufflé should be served oon as it is removed from oven. It's best n it's just done.

HOT SALLY LUNN

ld ¾ cup milk. Add 2 tablespoons sugar, ıblespoons butter or margarine, ¾ tea-on salt. Cool to lukewarm. Add ½ cake h yeast, crumbled, or use ½ package k dry yeast, dissolved in ¼ cup luke-m water, and reduce milk ¼ cup. Stir un-lended. Add 2 eggs, beaten. Then add 2½ s flour to make a soft dough. Put into a greased bowl, and when it doubles in , punch dough down with a spoon. Pour a well-greased square or bread pan. Let ble in bulk again. It takes about an hour. e in moderate oven, 350° F., 30–40 min-s, greasing top with butter or margarine e or twice during baking. Serve hot, ed, with butter or margarine. Or butter the es, put back together as a loaf and reheat.

ORANGE COOKIES

am ½ cup butter or margarine with 1 cup ar until light and fluffy. Add 1 egg, beaten il light and thick, and the grated rind of 1 nge. Dissolve ¼ teaspoon baking soda in cup thick sour cream and add 1 teaspoon nge juice. Sift 2½ cups flour with ¼ tea-spoon salt and 3 teaspoons baking powder. Add dry ingredients alternately with the sour cream, baking soda and orange juice. Beat thoroughly or until smooth. Drop from teaspoon onto greased baking sheets 1½ inches apart. Sprinkle with sugar. Bake 12 minutes in moderately hot oven, 375° F. Makes 6 dozen small orange cookies.

LEMON CUP PUDDING

Blend 1 cup sugar, 4 teaspoons flour, ½ teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine together. Add 5 teaspoons lemon juice and the grated rind of 1 lemon. Separate 3 eggs. Beat yolks until thick and lemon-colored. Add to first mixture. Then add 1½ cups milk. Beat the 3 egg whites until stiff and fold into the mixture last. Pour into greased baking dish or 6 individual custard cups. Set in pan of hot water. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 45–50 minutes, if in a casserole, 20–25 minutes if in custard cups.

LUNCHEON FOR FAMILY AND GUESTS

Potatoes Luncheon Style
or Stuffed Peppers
or
Deviled Crab
Tomato-Aspic Salad with Avocado
Hot Biscuits
Brandied Fresh Fruits in Season
Spongecake or Hot Poundcake
Tea

POTATOES LUNCHEON STYLE

Scrub 8 medium-size baking potatoes. Place in shallow baking pan and bake in a hot oven, 450° F., for about an hour or until done. Cut a slice from the top of each potato and scoop out inside, leaving a thin shell. Keep each slice with respective shell. Put potato through ricer. Sauté 1 tablespoon finely chopped onion, 1 tablespoon finely chopped green pepper and 2 tablespoons chopped mushroom in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add to potato and season with 1½ her Views and Prices of Patterns on Pages 62 and 63, and 218.

Vogue Patterns on Pages 62 and 63

Vogue Design No. 6720. One-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6729. "Easy-to-Make" suit; 12 to 20, 30 to 42. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6765. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Paris Original Model—by Lanvin. Vogue Pattern No. 1052. Sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $2.50.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3258. One-piece dress; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6735. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.

How America Lives Patterns on Page 218

Junior Vogue Design No. 3269. One-piece dress and topper; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6712. One-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 6711. Two-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 6700. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

3269 6712

6720 6729 6765

ıkground of Paul's family to find the cause his upset. On first examination, this ned to be a normal family, exhibiting y the usual amount of conflict that one st expect in every group of people living ether as closely as families do. In one k with Paul, however, the doctor picked a clue that led him to re-examine the her-child relationship.

The fact was that the boy's father was a ly common type of immature person-y—getting by with his friends and busi-s associates, but taking out his frustra-ıs on his family, and particularly on Paul. it turned out, the cause of his hostile atti-e toward the boy (an attitude, it must be embered, that he himself wasn't aware was a feeling that they were compet-for the love and attention of the wife mother. This is something that I have ın in many families; one of the parents is an nature type that is too self-centered and was necessary to probe deeply into the

Chix Chat

About your baby and you

By Louise Zabriskie, R. N., DIRECTOR, MATERNITY CONSULTATION SERVICE, NEW YORK.

SO YOU'RE GOING TO BE A MOTHER! Since taking care of baby requires 7 to 8 hours a day, you'll be happy to hear about new ideas to save you work and keep baby amazingly comfortable. For example, CHIX layette essentials are such work-saving wonders they're bound to make grandma envious of you, the modern mother.

LATEST DIAPER DATA! It's the happier baby that's diapered in gauze for it's so much softer and more absorbent than birdseye cloth. That's why CHIX Gauze Diapers really cater to baby's comfort. Made of double layers of surgical gauze, they have the exclusive Cushion Weave that makes them the most absorbent diapers ever and so much more gentle to baby's tender skin. And what a help to mother! Light, airy CHIX Gauze Diapers wash easier, dry quicker, always keep their snow-white freshness.

THE INSIDE STORY: What could be more sensible than CHIX Diaper Liners! You'll be thankful for these completely disposable liners every time you put one inside of baby's diaper. The liner holds the bowel movement—keeps it from staining the diaper, and when the diaper liner is soiled you just flush it away. Less washing drudgery!

TRAVEL TIPS FOR BABY: Several days before your trip, check with your doctor to find out if baby's food formula is to be changed. And be sure to take CHUX along—the wonderfully convenient 100% Disposable Diaper. Made with a soft cottoned facing, waterproof backing.

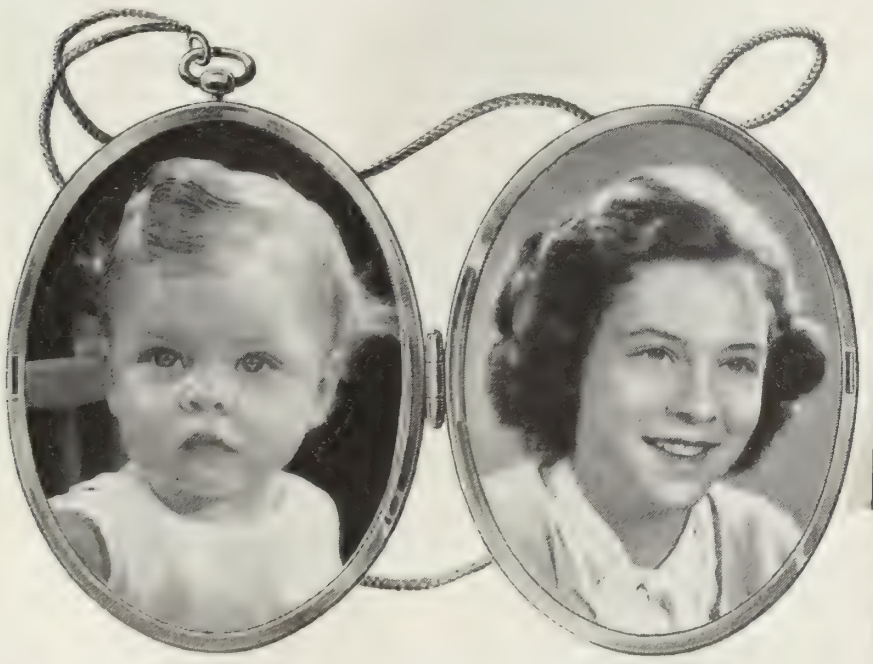
SWEET DREAMS: A well ventilated room will help to assure a good night's sleep for baby. And baby is more likely to sleep comfortably on smooth CHIX Fitted Crib Sheets. They can't crawl or wrinkle. Fine percale.

Send for a free copy of Louise Zabriskie's helpful booklet—"Common Sense in Dressing Baby"—and free samples of CHIX Cottoned Diaper Liners. Address CHIX, Department LH-2.

This advertisement read and approved by a well known Professor of Pediatrics.

CHICOPEE MILLS, INC.
47 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

Peggy Armstrong's story from bottle to 13 years



3 months

Peggy Armstrong's story starts when she was 3 months old. She was one of the lucky few chosen in a special test to prove to mothers everywhere how beautifully babies thrive on Clapp's—the first in baby foods!

8 months

Here's Peggy at 8 months. Every month she's gained a pound, and grown 1½". What did Clapp's have to do with it? "Lots!" says Peggy's mother. All Clapp's Foods, you know, are pressure-cooked! Bursting with vitamins and minerals.

10 months

Peggy was walking at 10 months. Chubby. Bustling. A picture of health! And why not? All Clapp's Baby Foods are made to fill doctors' requirements. So your baby gets top nourishment in every single one.

13 years

Today Peggy is an honor student, a good horseback rider and skater. What a thrill to see how well Clapp-fed babies thrive! And what better proof could we give that your baby, too, will thrive on Clapp's! Try it and see.

Clapp's Baby Foods

THE FIRST IN BABY FOODS

Products of American Home Foods

teaspoons salt, pepper, ½ teaspoon paprika. Beat in 1 cup scalded light cream and 1 egg yolk. Whip all together until light and fluffy. Fold in 1 cup cooked chicken, diced. Stuff each potato shell with mixture and replace top. Brush with melted butter or margarine. Return to oven, bake 15 minutes. Serve hot.

UNUSUAL STUFFED PEPPERS

To 2 cups (about 6) hard-cooked eggs, chopped fine, add 1 cup medium-thick cream sauce, ½ cup ground cooked ham, boiled tongue or crisp bacon, crumbled. Season highly with salt, pepper and prepared mustard. Cut 4 green peppers into halves lengthwise. Remove seeds. Parboil 10 minutes and drain. Fill pepper shells with mixture. Top with buttered bread or cracker crumbs. Bake until brown—or 15 minutes in a hot oven, 400° F. Makes 8 servings.

FLOWERACRES DEVILED CRABS

Pick over meat of 1 dozen crabs—1 pound crab meat, if that's the way you buy it. Be sure there are no bony pieces left in. Add the chopped yolks of 4 hard-cooked eggs, 2 tablespoons soft butter or margarine, a little red pepper and salt to taste and about 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce—more or less, as you like. Beat this up thoroughly, then add ¼ cup finely minced celery and 1 cup heavy cream. Squeeze the juice of 2 lemons, and add it a little at a time to taste. Some will prefer it more lemony, some less, than others. Pour into scallop shells and top with a generous coating of buttered cracker crumbs. Bake 15 minutes in a moderately hot oven, 375° F. Makes 6–8 servings.

Music expresses that which cannot be said but on which it is impossible to be silent.

—VICTOR HUGO.

Fried chicken has always been synonymous with Southern cooking. That served at Floweracres lives up to the best in the Southern cuisine. Mrs. Hastings' barbecued chicken is really something special too. It's featured on her menus almost as often as the fried chicken. If you live in the South, "English peas" is a familiar term to you. When I asked Mrs. Hastings what English peas were, she said, "Oh, peas are always called English peas in the South"—in a tone that meant "everyone knows that!" Well, now you know, if you didn't before.

DINNER—SPRING OR SUMMER FAMILY AND GUESTS

Jellied Consommé
*Barbecued Chicken
English Peas
Tomato or Fruit Aspic
Ice Cream
Coffee

wiches, hot mushroom sandwiches, little run cakes and their special lemon spongecakes

Mary Louise and Donnie hang the mistle toe, Mary Louise teasing Donnie about losin his Southern accent among the Yankees Louise, standing on a chair to arrange holly drops the clippers, gouges her knee and limp through the rest of the day.

There's a mad scramble at the last. But a is in readiness when the first guests arrive The parents' friends come from four to six the young people after seven. They fill all th rooms, the pretty little-girl cousins in lon dresses passing out heather to bring every body good luck in the New Year.

It's ten-thirty when the last guest has saic "Such a beautiful party." Louise sinks ont the couch and rubs her knee. "It was nice wasn't it? The young people seemed to hav such a good time," she says. "Donald and are sentimental, and we believe in creatin lovely memories for our children. We can tell what the future may hold for them, bu we feel that the memory of a happy life he at Floweracres will be something to susta them always."

THE EN

TUMBLE-PROOF for Lively Babies

For Feeding and Play!

Babee-Tenda

The Original Low Safety Chair

Mother, what a blessing to know your lively little armful is safe from tragic tumbles. No worry the minute your back is turned. Baby plays happily while you're busy about the house, and you'll find Babee-Tenda wonderfully convenient for feeding too. Just the right level, and with wide, protecting table surface.

Babee-Tenda is low and scientifically balanced. Swing seat with adjustable back gives posture support and gentle exercise. Foot-rest adjusts with baby's growth. Gay water-repellent cushion and safety halter included. Converts to play table for years-long extra service

THERE'S ONLY ONE BABEE-TENDA

Don't accept substitutes. For you baby's sake, insist on the doctor approved Babee-Tenda, used by million babies. There's only on Babee-Tenda, sold only by authorized agencies and only under this name NOT SOLD IN STORES.

SEND FOR FREE FOLDER

Look under "Babee-Tenda" in your phone book for your local dealer. Or mail coupon for illustrated "Humpty-Dumpty" folder that tells how Babee Tenda can help you.

* Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Babee-Tenda

Babee-Tenda Corp., Dept. 5-4
750 Prospect Avenue
Cleveland 15, Ohio

Please send "Humpty Dumpty" folder, without obligation.

Name _____

Address _____

City & Zone _____ State _____

In Canada: 686 Bathurst St., Toronto, Ont.

Nearly always, a child's emotions and moods mirror those of his parents and others with whom he associates.

Love, a Child's First Need

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

ND that many parents I talk to nowa-ys are positively terrified lest through me careless mistake they may upset eir child's emotional stability, and do g damage to his proper development. e mother had read of complexes a child t acquire through being put to bed in a ned room, with the door closed; gh being required to eat foods that 't favorites; and through being trained e toilet at an early age. She had done ese things with her own youngster. emed a perfectly happy, well-adjusted fellow, but had she possibly planted ses which would show up in adult life? e wide dissemination of knowledge health and child care that we enjoy must certainly be counted among the ngs of modern civilization. Yet like a other benefits, it is not an unmixed blessing. So much has been written, especially about the psychological problems of early childhood, that a good many parents are afraid to do anything, for fear it may be the wrong thing.

As I tell parents who come to me expressing such fears, the possibility is remote that any real emotional damage will come to children whose parents have a genuine love for them and for each other. The real threat to children comes from parents who are themselves emotionally immature, or who have antagonistic feelings toward their children, toward each other, or toward the world in general, which find expression in their relationships with the children.

About a year ago, a young couple of my acquaintance asked me for advice about their seven-year-old son, who showed many disturbing signs of emotional upset. Always in these cases my first suggestion is that the child be given a complete physical examination. In Paul's case, the family doctor could find no evidence of any physical disorder that might account for the youngster's temper tantrums, nightmares, hostility toward his parents and teachers, and other symptoms of deep-seated emotional disturbance. Yet doctors know that these behavior problems never just happen.

It was necessary to probe deeply into the background of Paul's family to find the cause of his upset. On first examination, this seemed to be a normal family, exhibiting only the usual amount of conflict that one must expect in every group of people living together as closely as families do. In one talk with Paul, however, the doctor picked up a clue that led him to re-examine the father-child relationship.

The fact was that the boy's father was a fairly common type of immature personality—getting by with his friends and business associates, but taking out his frustrations on his family, and particularly on Paul. As it turned out, the cause of his hostile attitude toward the boy (an attitude, it must be remembered, that he himself wasn't aware of) was a feeling that they were competing for the love and attention of the wife and mother. This is something that I have seen in many families; one of the parents is an immature type that is too self-centered and GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Just who were you calling a crybaby, Mom?

BABY: If you think I'm a crybaby, Mom, you should see your face! After trying my "easy life," you look ready to howl!

MOM: Lambkin, I certainly am! I've crawled and crept. I've wriggled and twisted. My skin feels sore and scratchy and miserable!

BABY: Well, Mom, that's the way my skin feels all the time. How long do I have to wait before you treat me right—with Johnson's Baby Oil and Johnson's Baby Powder?

MOM: You'll get 'em today, honey! Both —if you need 'em!

BABY: Sure do, Mom! After my bath, you can smooth me with gentle Johnson's Baby Oil. Use it at diaper changes, too, to help prevent what my doctor calls "urine irritation."

And between times, you can bring out the Johnson's Baby Powder, for cool, silky sprinkles that help keep chafes and prickles away!

MOM: Guess I haven't been very smart! Things will be different now!

BABY: Including me, Mom! You won't know your sunny son! I'll smile, and play, and beam, and coo, like all the Johnson's babies do!

Meet the "ECONOMY EXPERTS"!

What? Youngsters "economy experts"? It's true! These boys and girls help you economize on the shoes you buy for your children because they pre-test Poll-Parrot Shoes. They wear them for weeks of lively play to make sure materials will last, toes have room to grow, arches are right. And it's only after this rigid pre-testing that Poll-Parrots are approved for production. That's why you can be sure you get real economy . . . real value when you buy Poll-Parrots!

See What Pre-Testing Means to You:

1. Extra reinforcements at all vital points.

2. Age-conforming arches and heels.

3. Room to grow.

Poll-Parrot Style 8054

Buy

Poll Parrot

SHOES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Pre-Tested

TO GIVE YOU REAL VALUE!

Also Star ★ Brand Shoes . . . at lower prices!

Poll-Parrot Style 9645

Poll-Parrot Style 8088

Approved

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

For nearest Poll Parrot dealer see Classified Phone Directory or write us.

ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND

Division of International Shoe Company • ST. LOUIS 3, MISSOURI demanding to share the other parent's love with the child, who is thus thrust into a conflict in which he is bound to be the loser.

Fortunately, Paul's father was an intelligent man who came to understand his own failure as a parent and made a sincere effort to do better. As we were able to show him, the severely critical attitude he displayed toward the child was itself the chief cause of the kind of behavior that drew the reprimands.

Nearly always, a child's emotions and moods mirror those of his parents and others with whom he associates. Kindness and patience on the part of parents are reflected in an emotionally stable, happy child; nervous, hypercritical parents usually have irritable, unmanageable children.

The amazing thing to me is the fact that this kind of parent invariably believes it is the misbehaving child who makes him cross and critical, whereas the exact opposite is usually the truth!

Here are a few of the situations, all common enough in modern life, that can easily lead to feelings of insecurity in children unless the parents make a sustained effort to guard against ill effects:

1. The arrival of a new baby, with consequent neglect of the older child, can quickly result in a hostile, aggressive attitude toward the baby and the parents. The older child may misbehave outrageously for no other reason than to win back the attention that has been lost. More than anything else, such a child needs lavish displays of affection.

2. Parents with a too active social life which necessitates leaving the child with a succession of baby sitters may soon find themselves with a little demon on their hands. Rightly or wrongly, the child is responding to the feeling that his parents are indifferent to him. Th is only one remedy: stay home more!

3. The father whose job or occupation quires frequent moves from city to city n wonder why his advancing career has brou him so little pleasure from his children, w seem to become more and more troubleso as they grow older. The fact is that these fa ily upheavals are deeply disturbing to c dren emotionally. Each move means adju ment to a whole new set of friends, teach and circumstances. At such difficult perio children need extra surances of love home.

4. At the other e of the economic sca the family with fina cial problems that not concealed fr young children, p haps cannot be, m easily sow seeds of security. The moth who makes a big thi of lack of money a the father who co plains about expen may unwittingly gi the impressionable child a feeling of disas that is far graver than the actual situati

5. Probably the most serious circumsta of all is conflict between the parents. E the child who is too young to understa what is happening is chilled and frighte by quarreling. One can only plead with s parents to remember the child's needs well as their own.

In the foregoing cases, even the best te nique for handling a child's undesirable havior may not avail, for the kind of love needs more than anything else is lacking

Techniques change as our knowledge creases, but the need of a child for love w never change. Supply that, do the best y know how, and you have nothing to be afra of in the most fascinating job there is—th of parenthood.

THE E

WELL HEELED

The term is probably borrowed from the sport of cock fighting. These birds could give their opponents a severe cut with the spurs on their feet. A bird with razor-keen spurs was said to be "well heeled." Because such a bird would be able to take care of himself, being well heeled came to mean equipped with money, personality, fame, and so on.

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

In Bloom For Easter

Wonderfully Wearable

NANNETTES

Nannette ORIGINALS

BABE AND TODDLER FROCKS

She's a little Swiss miss in a peasant-effect broadcloth charmer... or she wears a peplum like Mommie's in a Toddler Frock of finest hanky lawn. Like all our Springtime Nannettes, both Toddler Fracks will stay bright 'n beautiful through many a sudsing! Priced down to earth at about $4.00.

Other Babe and Toddler Frocks, from 9 mos. to size 3. About $3.00. At better stores everywhere.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

NANNETTE MFG. CO., INC., PHILA., PA.

COMPANY FOR DINNER

(Continued from Page 44)

mer, the first time Dick's boss and his fe would ever have been to the apartment. ck was excited about it, for Jim Ferguson d practically asked for the invitation him- f, and what with the rumors flying about at the manager of the London branch was ng to be replaced —— Yes, she wanted erything to be perfect.

And this time it will be, she vowed; I won't get a thing. I'll spend the whole evening nning and making lists of what to get to- rrow.

That was what Dick had told her before left for the office that morning. "Write it down in big, clear print," he had said, nd make three carbons. Put one in your t. For Pete's sake, Mimi, don't leave a ng to that memory of yours. Remember e Brandons."

"Remember the Brandons" was a phrase at had taken on the significance of "Re- mber Pearl Harbor" in their household. he night the Brandons had come to dine, e table had been like a picture in a maga- he advertisement, each course of the formal nner had been planned down to the last de- l. And while they were nibbling canapés, nes had called her into the kitchen. "Where the steak, Miz Gambert? I cain' find it." he steak had been at the butcher's, now sed; Mimi had forgotten to pick it up on r way home. They had served an omelet rnished with the steak's French-fried ions, and Dick had never forgotten it.

During the first year of their marriage he d been indulgently amused by her dreamy sent-mindedness; he had found it "cute" d rather endearing. But during the past w months she had noticed with alarm that s attitude had changed to one of irritation d gathering impatience. And one morning, hen he could not find a pressed suit in his set, he had shouted at her in anger.

"You're a grown woman with responsi- lities!" he had cried. "You've got to stop ndering around like a slap-happy kid. his is getting serious, Mimi!"

It was true that she was a dreamer. She uld cross the street with the definite pur- se of going into a bakery and a car would iss her with plenty of room to spare. She ould think, How close that was—suppose it d hit me? In a series of vivid flashes she ould hear the screams, feel herself sprawled the pavement. Then came the hospital, rself pitifully small and white in the bed, ick's agonized face bent over hers. She would ar herself whispering, "Darling, I want u to marry again." By the time she had re- rned sheepishly to reality, her eyes would misted with tears, the bakery blocks be- nd her, the errand forgotten. And at din- rtime, when Dick asked, "Doesn't dessert me on the two-and-a-quarter dinner?" r hand would fly to her cheek in dismay. ow could she have forgotten the cake?

WITH a troubled face, Mimi now left the tchen. Dick had a right to be angry with r. She must stop her woolgathering. From w on, she would corral her thoughts as a rmer might pen his straying sheep, and ep them within the boundaries of reality.

After a hot bath, Mimi got into a worn ue housecoat to which she was very much tached and went into the living room, here she sank heavily upon the sofa. I ally ought to pension this little number, she ought as she arranged the faded folds out her, I wouldn't want even a burglar to tch me in it. But it was comfortable and e was so tired . . . so tired. . . . Her head lled back. I guess I can just about make it to e dinner table, she reflected, if someone rows me a rope.

She had brought a pad and pencil with r and now, with an effort, she began to int HORS D'OEUVRES at the top of the age. She stared at the ceiling. What was out season? She really wanted to impress the rgusons.

The doorbell rang, but she was only guely conscious of it as Agnes came out of e kitchen to answer it. Dick was home early, she thought absent-mindedly. Frowning, she wrote down Shrimp.

Suddenly her head shot up and her eyes clouded with annoyance. There was the sound of two strange voices in the foyer, a man's and a woman's. She thought in exasperation, If that's Aunt Hattie and Uncle Walt, they can turn right around and go home again. I don't feel like talking to a soul.

But it wasn't Uncle Walt's bass she heard, or Aunt Hattie's high, fluttery laugh. The woman's voice in the hall was low and clear and there was something teasingly familiar about it. Mimi held her head at a birdlike angle. Who in the world ——

And then, in a blurred moment, Agnes was in the archway saying, "Mistuh and Miz Ferguson is heah," and a portly little man and a tall woman were coming into the room, their faces smiling and expectant.

MIMI felt as if she were drowning. She was in an underwater world, floundering, sinking helplessly as her thoughts swirled in dark confusion about her. I couldn't have gotten the date wrong, she thought in terror, I couldn't have! It was Wednesday and she had written "Thursday" in her invitation. Or—could it be—had she said "Wednesday"? Oh, she thought incoherently as she scrambled to her feet, I got the night mixed up.

"Hel-lo!" she said, holding out her hand. "Well! Well!" It was not her idea of scintillating dialogue, but she couldn't think of anything else. She cleared her throat and gazed at them with a heavy brightness. "Well, how nice!" This was a nightmare.

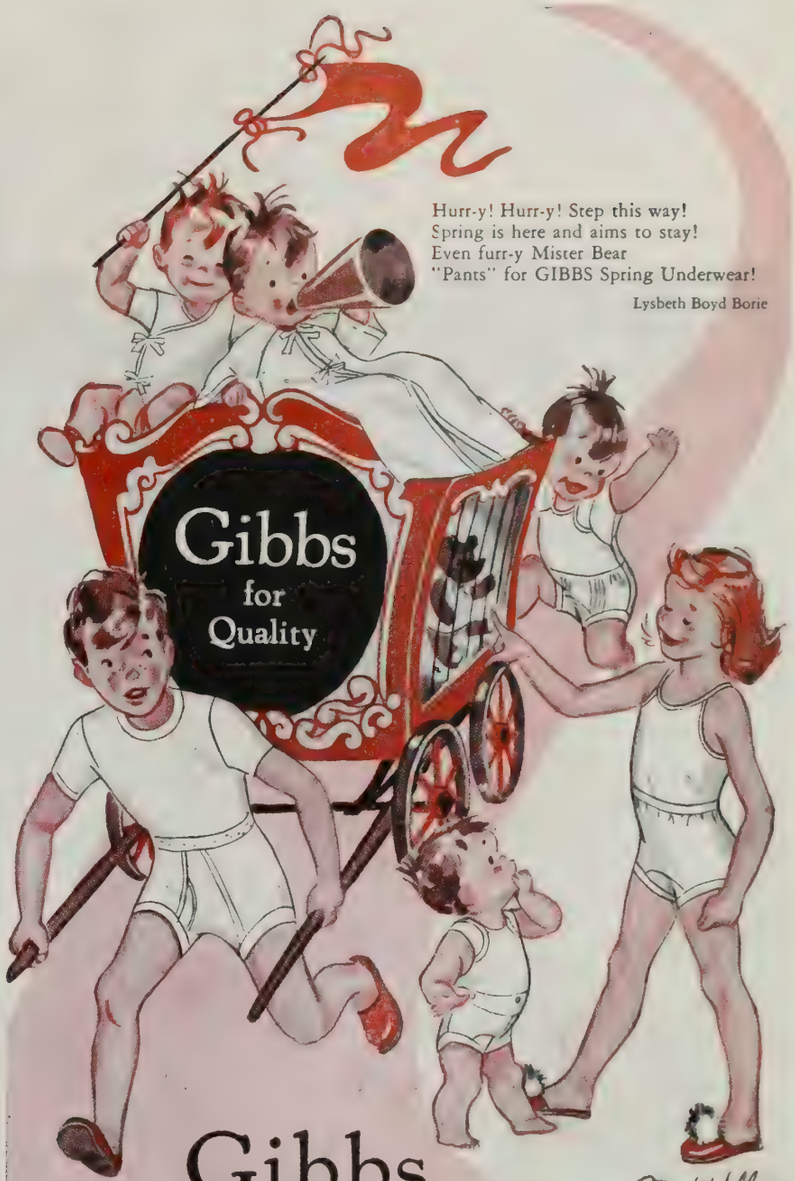
Mrs. Ferguson gazed at her and then turned accusingly to her husband. "There now, Jim," she said in her clear voice, "didn't I tell you we would be too early?" She turned to Mimi again. "But he insisted that it would take a full half hour to get across town in traffic. The truth was, we made it in ten minutes. I think we covered the last twenty blocks in one long skid."

"You're not early at all," Mimi said. Her voice sounded unnaturally loud to her ears. "Do sit down, won't you?"

She moved stiffly toward the door, babbling something about changing, conscious of her uncombed hair and the fact that her mouth was pale of lipstick. The old housecoat no longer had sufficient lap to cover her legs decently when she walked, and as she clutched the skirt folds together, an old dream flashed through her mind: she was trapped in the subway in her nightgown, with people staring and laughing at her.

"Take your time," said Mrs. Ferguson with a smile. "We're not a bit bashful. We'll probably be old settlers by the time you get back." She was a spare woman with intelligent eyes and there was a neatness about her that even invaded her speech.

Mr. Ferguson peered benignly at Mimi over his glasses. "I'll browse among your books, if I may," he said.



Even as her head whirled dizzily, Mimi was conscious of a faint shock as she gazed at Mr. Ferguson. She had met him only twice before, but each time she had been surprised, as she was now, to find him a mild little man with disarming eyes. Somehow, when Dick described James Ferguson's office activities, she pictured a powerful, flashing-eyed business dynamo who barked out orders something like an animal trainer at the circus.

Why, he's sweet, she thought now; he looks like the kind of man who would feed birds.

"Well, then, if you'll excuse me for just a few minutes," she said.

Why don't I tell them? she thought wildly. The only possible solution was to take them out for dinner. But then, of course, they would know the truth and all of them would be thrown into a bog of embarrassment and confusion. There would be laughter, but it would be uncomfortable laughter and the Fergusons would be justifiably annoyed in having to go out into the bitter cold again in search of a restaurant. And Mimi would feel like a fool. Who other than a complete nitwit

(Continued on Page 251)

Hurr-y! Hurr-y! Step this way!
Spring is here and aims to stay!
Even furr-y Mister Bear
"Pants" for GIBBS Spring Underwear!

Lysbeth Boyd Borie

Meg Wohlberg

Gibbs
Style-Knit
Underwear for Infants and Children

Start them right with Gibbs and follow through the teen-age years. Every Gibbs Garment is made of selected Fine Quality Combed Yarn for long wear. Easy to launder . . . stays soft . . . holds shape. Exquisitely tailored to prevent binding or chafing . . . allows plenty of room for action. At leading Department Stores and Specialty Shops.

GIBBS UNDERWEAR CO.
Empire State Bldg., New York 1, Phila. 34, Pa.

Only the Best for Your Baby

TOUCH UP YOUR HEALTH
first thing every morning!

FIGHT FATIGUE!

GUARD AGAINST COLDS!

FORTIFY WITH VITAMIN C!

For good health and good looks there's nothing like a daily tonic of wake-up Florida grapefruit, with that zestful, tangy goodness you'll find in no other grapefruit.

Both the fresh fruit and the canned juice are full of natural vitamin C, other vitamins, minerals, and fruit-sugar energy.

At least once a day make it a point to give yourself a tune-up with Florida grapefruit—either the delicious fresh fruit or the equally healthful canned juice.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT

FRESH  ...OR  CANNED JUICE

(Continued from Page 249)

1 invite people for dinner and mix up ates in her mind? Dick would be so ned. I can't tell them, she thought, I I can't.

)m the foyer, she went into the kitchen. s stood leaning against the sink, every f her thick body stiff with belligerence. her eyes moved to meet Mimi's, and were wary and defiant. For a moment, stood staring at each other in the white listening silence of the little room.

gnes," Mimi said, "I got it mixed up. I ht they were coming tomorrow night. 't imagine how I got it wrong."

es'm," Agnes said. She did not move.

gnes, I don't know what to do." Mimi's t was suddenly dry and constricted; it her to speak. "Oh, Agnes!" She was usly close to sobbing.

raculously, the body of the colored n lost its rigidity, became soft and again as she uncrossed her arms. There ity in her eyes. "Lawd save us," she oftly. "What we gonna do?"

don't know," Mimi said in despair.

ere was another silence as they stared ch other. Then Agnes' eyes darted to lock. "If they done come to dinner," id, "then we gotta feed 'em. Won't be t, but we'll do the best we kin."

mi stood like one in a daze. "On what?" id. "What are we going to feed them gnes?"

rozen stuff," Agnes said. "The sto' on 'ner don't close until seven."

mi's hand flew to her throat. "Do you we can do it?" she asked in a hushed n' nuthin' else we kin do," Agnes said. now we gotta move."

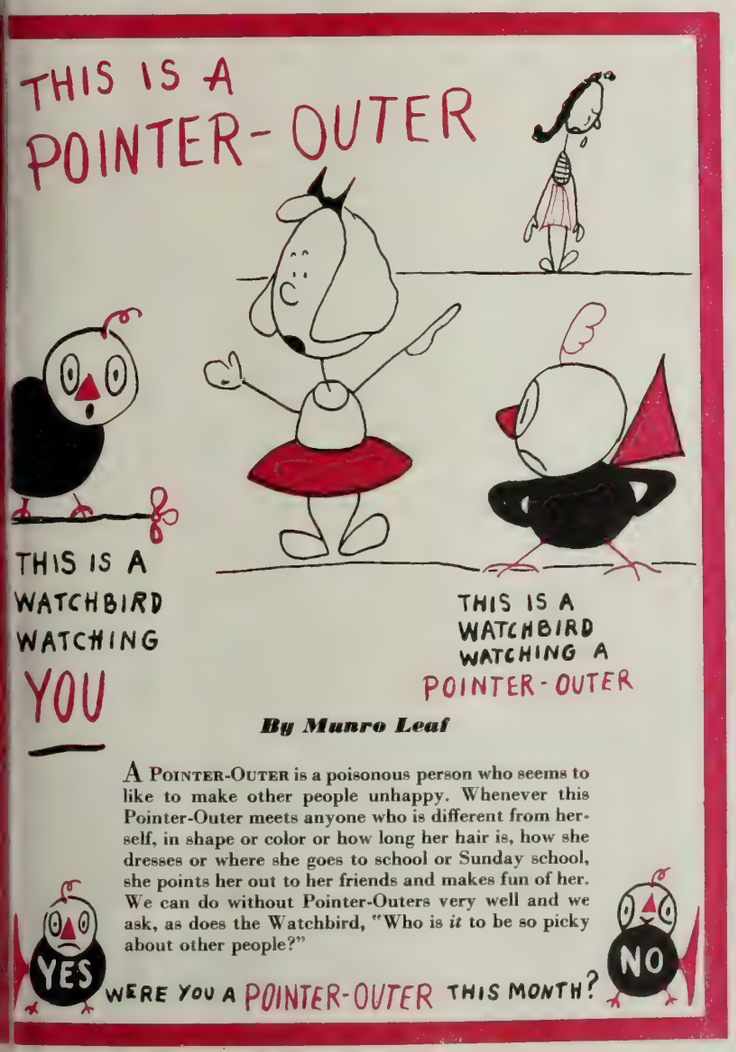
es," Mimi said feverishly. "Get two chickens, Agnes, and asparagus and h-fried potatoes and ice cream and a chocolate sauce. And get a package of and—oh, I can't think of anything else, ou will. And charge everything; they you there."

"Yes'm," Agnes said, moving ponderously toward the little room off the kitchen. Mimi heard her muttering, "Gotta move," before she disappeared.

Immediately, Mimi wanted to call her back. This is crazy, she thought despairingly, it'll never work out. She opened her mouth, closed it again and then ran out of the room.

In the bedroom, she grabbed a dress from the hanger and put it on with fumbling fingers, kicked off her mules and stepped into shoes, ran a comb through her hair and applied lipstick. She was only vaguely conscious of what she was doing. Intermingled with the half-formed prayers that rose to her lips were incoherent thoughts that had to do with canapés, highballs and tablecloths. But the bedrock of her misery was the sickening expectation of what Dick would say.

He'll never forgive me for this, she thought as she fumbled with the zipper on her dress—never, never. This was the most irresponsible thing she had ever done; it was unforgivable. This dinner, he had carefully pointed out, might have some bearing on their future. And now, to think that through her carelessness and stupidity she might actually be jeopardizing his chances ——



She returned to the living room and found the Fergusons sitting somewhat stiffly on opposite sides of the sofa.

"Here we are!" said Mr. Ferguson cheerily, half rising from his seat.

"Please don't get up," Mimi said hurriedly. Her nervousness held her in a vise, and when she caught a glimpse of herself in the mirror she was shocked to see how white and strained she looked. "A Martini, Mrs. Ferguson? A Manhattan—or perhaps a highball?" And you don't have to hurry over your drinks, she thought grimly, you've got time to get the D.T.'s before dinner is served.

"Highballs will do nicely," Mrs. Ferguson said. "Scotch and water for us both, please."

Mr. Ferguson jumped up gallantly to assist Mimi at the bar and she began to get the strange feeling, as Mrs. Ferguson launched

QUAKER OATS HELPS GROW
"Stars of the Future"
Doctors say the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow

THE GIANT OF THE CEREALS IS QUAKER OATS!

A GIANT in Nutrition!
Your youngsters get more growth, more endurance—your grownups get more energy, more stamina from nourishing hot oatmeal than any other whole-grain cereal! That's why Quaker Oats is recommended for a better breakfast! According to a recent survey, only 1 school child in 5 gets the kind of breakfast he should have. So doctors say, the more often youngsters eat a good oatmeal breakfast, the better they grow! Serve Quaker Oats often!

A GIANT in Value!
Nutritious Quaker Oats helps keep your grocery bills down. Saves you money, and saves precious time, too—Quick Quaker Oats cooks in 2½ minutes!

A GIANT in Flavor!
People eat more Quaker Oats than any other cereal in the world because THEY LOVE THAT QUAKER OATS FLAVOR! Tempting recipes on the package. Remember to buy delicious Quaker Oats.

Still Less than 1¢ a Serving!

QUAKER OATS
Quaker and Mother's Oats are the same

You'll be happier with a HOOVER®

Whichever type you need...

Model 50 (above). Hoover's great new cylinder cleaner. Most convenient cleaner of its type to use. Cleans by powerful suction. Features new Dirt Ejector. Complete with cleaning tools in handy kit, Mothimizer and sprayer $79.50

Model 28 (at left). Hoover's popular-priced Triple-Action Cleaner, with exclusive Hoover principle—it beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans. Converts instantly to an above-the-floor cleaner $74.95
Cleaning tools in handy kit, $19.95

How does a Hoover Cleaner make you happier? It gets more dirt. It's easier to use, prolongs rug life and keeps colors bright. It offers you a complete choice of basic types and models to suit your needs. It's the name everyone knows is best. What are you waiting for?

Get happier today

Call your Hoover dealer for a home showing of the model you prefer.

Model 115 (at right). Hoover, Junior. Ideal for small homes, handy for all homes. Cleans far bigger than its size. Stores in small space. Has Hoover's exclusive Triple Action—it beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans. Cleaning tools extra. . . . $59.95

THE HOOVER COMPANY, North Canton, Ohio; Hamilton, Ont., Canada; Perivale, England

● NOTE: See the new Hoover Iron at leading stores everywhere. $11.45, including excise tax into an anecdote, that the roles in this terrible play had shifted; that Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson were the hosts and she the nervous guest they were trying to put at ease.

Soon Mimi heard the door closing faintly inside the kitchen, followed by muffled sounds of movement. A wave of relief washed over her, leaving her body damp with perspiration. Thank heaven, Agnes was back with her frozen booty. She probably needs defrosting herself by this time, Mimi thought worriedly. I wish I could go in and help her. There was so little time! But she could not possibly desert her guests until Dick arrived to take over.

While thoughts burst inside her head like sputtering firecrackers, she made conversation with the Fergusons. When they addressed her, she knew only vaguely what they were saying, and at one time she realized too late that she had been expected to laugh.

The sound of Dick's key turning in the lock, the front door closing, made her put down her highball glass so abruptly that the contents sloshed over. "There's my breadwinner," she said brightly. "Excuse me, won't you?"

Dick was putting down his brief case on the hall table when she rushed into the foyer. She saw at once that he was chilled and exhausted. He probably couldn't get a taxi from the station and had to walk, she thought. He looked as if he had had a terrible day, and now —— She felt sick.

"Hi, honey," he said, bending over to take off his rubbers. "What a foul night. I'm frozen and half dead."

"Dick," she said hurriedly, "the Fergusons are inside; they came for dinner."

He straightened up abruptly and stared at her, his mouth gaping. "The Fergusons!" he cried. "But I thought that was tomorr——"

"Sh-h-h!" Mimi clapped a hand over his mouth. "They'll hear you!" She swallowed hard. "I thought it was for tomorrow night, too, but I guess I got it mixed up. I ——" She stopped short at the sight of his face. The man before her was a hard-eyed, grim stranger.

His mouth was working a little. "You mean they just showed up and you weren't prepared or anything?"

Mimi nodded and lowered her gaze, unable to meet his eyes. "Don't worry," she said thickly. "Agnes went out and bought a lot of stuff and it'll be fine. Don't worry about a thing."

"Oh, sure," he said, and she was so shocked at the bitterness in his voice that she raised her eyes to his again. "Everything'll be just fine and dandy. 'Basket Parties Welcome.'" For a wordless moment, they stared at each other. "Didn't I tell you," he whispered in a sudden burst of fury, "how important this dinner was? Can't you get anything straight in that cockeyed head of yours?" There was something terrible about this hard, flaring anger being forced through the narrow outlet of a whisper.

"Dick ——" Mimi said pitifully. Her eyes, swimming in tears, stared beseechingly into his.

Suddenly the anger left his face, he became her husband again. But he looked very tired; she thought she had never seen his face so lined and weary. "Okay," he said. His hand went out to touch her for a moment on the shoulder. "Okay, I'm sorry. I guess the world won't come to an end if the evening's a flop. Chin up. Let's go in."

Somehow, she found this sagging resignation more painful to bear than the hard edge of his anger. But there was no time to evaluate her emotions or indulge in the luxury of tears. Wordlessly she turned and they went into the living room together.

"Well!" Mr. Ferguson rose to his feet. 'Looks like I have to come to your home to see you, young fella! I haven't run across you in the office for almost a week!"

Dick grinned and pumped the hands of both his guests. "Sorry I'm late," he said, "but, of course, if they had union hours at that sweatshop where I work ——" In the midst of the laughter that followed, he excused himself to clean up.

The ONLY su POSITIVI MOTHPROO method used for ye by big mills – Now s for home use!

No odor • No wrapping No storing away

You can be ABSOLUTELY S moths will never eat your wo clothes if you just spray them few minutes with LARVEX. One spraying with magic LARVEX m proofs woolens for a whole yea

LARVEX is the ONLY SURE m proofing method used for year big woolen mills and now sol home use. LARVEX actually m proofs the cloth itself. Moths commit suicide by starvation than eat anything treated LARVEX. Non-inflammable. Stair Odorless—no moth ball, cam or cedar odors. Just spray garm with LARVEX and hang them in usual place ready for immediate And spray your rugs and sofas, Inexpensive! It costs no more to make a suit or coat mothproof with LARVEX than it does to get it dry cleaned. Only 79¢ a pint. $1.19 a quart.

So Easy! A few minutes' spraying with LARVEX mothproofs for a whole year.

. . . . . ALL DRUG, DEPARTMENT AND HOUSEFURNISHINGS STORES

LARVE

The Largest Selling Mothproo

he Fergusons became Mimi's burden
n. There was a muffled pounding in the hen and the sound made her heart dip in usiness. What was going on? Not until c returned was she able to excuse herself investigate. She found Agnes breathing ily over a frozen slab of chicken, an upd hammer in her hand.
Cain' git it apaht," she muttered.
Let cold water run on it," Mimi said
iedly, rummaging in the refrigerator.
n't there a leftover piece of American se somewhere? She found it in the back, tle hard around the edges but otherwise
ct. "Agnes," she said, "never mind the ken for now. I've to rustle up some of canapés. Grate will you? And add some chili
e and spread it
altines and broil
n in the oven."
he rattled further rs to Agnes in d-fire succession re she left the hen for the livroom. From that nt onward, it ned that she was ver shuttling been two worlds:
small, seething
hen where she and es side-stepped other in grim occupation with r duties; and the n, lamplit living n where there was
ite conversation
l the tinkle of sses.
he canapés were fed and brown
n they were taken
of the oven, but
y looked bare and ewhat forlorn on silver plate. "Ag-
," Mimi said on den inspiration,
en't there some k olives left over n the last time?"
found the opened in the refrigera-took out the six aining olives and anged them been the canapés as
ey were emeralds.
e plate immedi-
ly took on tone.

NES, however, dubious. "I think
y turned," she
i.
Nonsense!" Mimi
d. "They're pert!" She carried the y into the living
m and presented
o Mrs. Ferguson
h all the triumph of a famous chef disying a whole roast pig with an apple in its uth.
The Fergusons each took a canapé, but mi's step faltered as she carried the tray r to Dick. With timid eyes, she stood bee him.
Forgive me, she prayed silently, forgive me,
ase . . . please.
"Listen to that wind outside," Dick said.
was not looking at her as he took the apé; his words were addressed to the Fer-sons. "It sounds like something from thering Heights."
Mimi moved away, caught in a dark mist loneliness. With a forlorn air, she put wn the tray on the coffee table, picked up olive and bit into it.
Mrs. Ferguson was talking to her and so could not betray her reaction as the ran-taste spread through her mouth. It was possible to swallow what she had bitten, and impossible to speak. She simply gazed at Mrs. Ferguson with an expression of terrible alertness, and when Dick finally turned the conversation their way she mumbled something and reached for the dish.

To her horror, she saw that Mr. Ferguson was bending over it with interest, his hand outstretched. Was he going to take an olive? For an endless moment Mimi held her breath, straining in every nerve. He picked up a canapé.

When the chance presented itself, she whisked the tray into the kitchen, where she found Agnes trying to revive a cluster of wilted parsley with a hand shower of water.

"Looks like it's daid," she complained. "I jes' cain' fresh it up."

"Never mind," Mimi said despairingly. She was near tears. "Is the table set?"

HER gaze darted into the small dining room and she saw with relief that the table looked presentable with her best dishes and silver. But something seemed to be missing and she thought bitterly of the floral centerpiece she had ordered to be delivered the following day.

She found some juice oranges in the refrigerator, three apples that were spoiling in spots and a pear in fairly good condition. These she arranged carefully in a Swedish crystal dish, the oranges on the bottom, the apples turned so that only their good sides showed and the pear resplendent on top. Some rather stiff clusters of laurel were resurrected from a bowl and stuck between the fruit. The final result, Mimi decided, was not too bad and might even be rather good later on under the glow of the candlelight.

The problem of a first course could be solved only by canned soup, but when she searched the grocery shelf she could not find two cans that matched. Clam chowder, bean soup, cream of mushroom—it was impossible to mix any two of them together to serve four people.

For a terrible moment Mimi leaned her head against the closet door and clenched her fists. She wanted to shriek, to go off into hysterics, to relieve in some way this terrible pressure within her. But with an immense effort, she straightened up and immediately saw a package of dehydrated vegetable soup in a corner of the shelf.

"Hallelujah," she whispered. "Hallelujah." She took out the envelope reverently and kissed it before handing it to Agnes. "Here's our first course," she said. It wasn't much, but in her Spode cream soups, and with the candlelight glowing ——

I'm sure banking heavily on that candlelight, she thought grimly as she went back to the living room. I wish that we could sit down to dinner in a room so dark that we'd have to grope for the food. . . . I wish that the Fergusons had colds in the head tonight so that they couldn't taste anything. Time seemed to

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Gray Hour

By Sara King Carleton

Remember when you awoke so strangely, so early,
With the wind stirring the frill of
the white curtain,
And you heard three notes of a mourning dove come clearly,
The throb and beat of his song, as you lay, uncertain.

Silence was in the house, listening, waiting,
No clatter of pans in the kitchen . . . no voices, only Silence building stealthily there, creating
Caverns of space about you, frightening, lonely.

And you felt your body shrink from
the shadows that beckoned,
Coiled figures of drifting mist
while your world was sleeping, Terror that crawled like a cat,
closer, second by second,
And you burst into tears, into uncontrollable weeping.

Remember the small high room, the child, lost, lying Awake in that gray, still hour, with the wood dove calling
Its heart-twisted, plaintive,
melancholy crying,
And the walls of comfort you knew, shattered to bits, falling.

Now, in this present time, with no words you can utter
To call out your troubled fear as that child did, waking,
You hear the wood dove throb
beyond the darkened shutter,
And turn your head on your pillow, and pray for day to be breaking.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Lovelier RUGS
The Factory-to-You OLSON Way!

How Your OLD RUGS, CLOTHING Save up to ½

You, too, can have these lovelier broadloom ru this fascinating, money-saving way! Try it!

It's All So Easy! Write today for the bi beautiful, FREE Olson Rug Catalog and D orating Guide in colors that tells how your . . .

Materials Can Be Sent at Our Exper to the Olson Rug Factory, where . . .

By the Famous Olson Process, we sh sterilize, sort, merge and reclaim the good us wools and other materials in discarded carpet rugs and wool clothing of all kinds; then picker, card, bleach, spin, redye and weave into lovely new, deep-textured . . .

Reversible BROADLOOM RUGS

. . . that will give double the wear and luxury.

Sizes for All Needs up to 16 feet wide, seamless and any length, in:—

Solid Colors Ovals 18th Century Early American
Two-Tone Floral Tweed Blends Oriental Designs

Read praise from editors, women everywhere. Nearly 3 Million Customers.

Our 75th Year. Only from Olson Factory can you get genuine Olson Rugs. We do not have agents or sell through stores. WE GUARANTEE to please you, or pay for your materials.

Mail Coupon or 1c postcard for this beautiful 40 page Olson Book of rugs, decorating helps and model rooms. Full information.

Chicago New York
San Francisco

FREE Catalog in Colors

Page after Page of RUGS and Model Rooms

OLSON RUG CO., Dept. N-23, Chicago 41, Ill.

Please mail the Olson Rug Catalog FREE to

Name.....

Address.....

State.....

B.M.A. FAMILY SECURITY PLAN PROVIDES 4 TIMES

As Much Protection For About 2 Times The Usual Premium

Here's an example of how this unusual plan will work for you.

IT PAYS YOUR FAMILY IMMEDIATELY

$10,000 in the event of death during the next 15 years, or a wide choice of income plans. For instance—

$1,000 cash for emergency expenses and

$100 a month for 97 months (8 yrs., 1 mo.)

This plan provides adjustment in benefits after 15 years with minimum permanent protection after 20 years of $2500.

IT PAYS FOR RETIREMENT
(By Using Valuable Options)

$25.00 to $100.00 a month beginning at retirement age and continuing for the rest of your life. If totally disabled for six months or longer the entire plan is automatically self-completing.

COMPARATIVE ILLUSTRATION
(example man age 35)

	Annual Deposit
Family Security Plan	$111.80
The Ordinary Plan	$233.60

Mail the coupon for details.
Please send information on your new FAMILY SECURITY PLAN

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____ STATE _____
CITY _____ OCCUPATION _____
AGE _____

BUSINESS MEN'S ASSURANCE CO.
HOME OFFICE, B. M. A. BUILDING
KANSAS CITY 10, MISSOURI
Offices in More Than 48 Major Cities

LIFE • ACCIDENT • HEALTH • ANNUITIES • HOSPITALIZATION • GROUP

LITTLE LULU

"Don't be a public pest—use Kleenex!"*

Little Lulu says: Block that sneeze! Block those germs with soft, strong Kleenex Tissues to help keep colds from spreading. Be considerate in another way, too. Don't just "drop the Kleenex"—use that waste basket!

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

drag interminably. Dick kept refilling glasses; he darted manfully from one subject to another and trotted out his best anecdotes. But the Fergusons refused a third drink, and Mimi knew that they were hungry. Mr. Ferguson kept sneaking looks at the clock, and his wife's usually brisk movements had become slow and languid. Probably from malnutrition, Mimi thought morosely. This was the worst hour of the endless nightmare, this waiting for dinner to be announced, coupled with her dread of what might be in store for them.

But at last Agnes appeared in the doorway and mumbled, "Dinnah is served." She was wearing, Mimi noted, a lace-trimmed organdy apron over her cotton uniform.

Something like a sigh drifted over them as they rose in concert and went toward the dining room. Mimi walked as if her feet were shackled. The Last Mile, she thought numbly.

"This," Dick said with a flourish as they entered the tiny room, "is our salle à manger. There's room in here for either four adults and two midgets or six midgets and two adults, depending on which way your party runs."

The Fergusons laughed as they sat down, but Mimi felt small waves of nausea washing over her. It was as if all the misery and suspense of the previous hours had solidified into a sickish churning in her stomach. And now, as she sat stiffly in her chair, her eyes rested on the fruit dish and she saw that one of the oranges directly in Mrs. Ferguson's view had Color Added printed clearly on its side.

A TERRIBLE despair gripped her. O God, she prayed, just let me get through this dinner all right. Don't let me go to pieces, dear God. Please let ——

"Honey." She lifted her eyes abruptly and saw that it was Dick who was speaking to her from the other side of the table. His eyes were warm and very gentle. "Hello," he said softly. It was almost as if they were alone in the room together, as if the Fergusons weren't there at all.

"Hello," she said shakily. Why, it's all right, she thought in wonder, he's not mad at me any more.

The Fergusons had started to talk in concert; the moment was over. But Mimi's spirit was immeasurably refreshed as she picked up her soupspoon. Yet, after the first course had been removed, her mind began to strain again toward the kitchen, where she knew Agnes was laboring with the big silver platter.

When it came, she was weak with relief. Agnes had found a can of cranberry sauce somewhere and, heaped on orange slices around the broiled chicken, it made a pretty color pattern with the green asparagus. And when Mimi saw that Agnes had arranged celery leaves as an additional garnish, not uneffectively, she felt tears springing to her eyes. God bless Agnes, she prayed silently; she gets my green hat tomorrow.

The chicken was a little underdone, the cranberry sauce was warm, but otherwise it was not a bad dinner, and the Fergusons seemed to eat as though they had just gotten out of a concentration camp.

After they left the table and returned to the living room, Mimi almost groaned aloud when she sat down. Not until then, with the horror of the dinner behind her, did she realize that she had been straining every muscle for hours. With her relief came an exhaustion so overpowering that she could hardly lift a finger. It was an effort even to speak.

Dick kept the conversation flowing. She realized that he, too, had been under a terrible strain. His eyes were too bright, his expression too animated to be normal. But she could not make the effort to come to his assistance.

Yet, for the first time that evening, she began to notice her guests, listen to what they were saying. Martha Ferguson, she learned, had been her husband's secretary before they were married.

"I knew when I married her," Mr. Ferguson said, "that I'd never get anyone to take her place in the office. And I never did." He looked proudly at his wife, who lowered her eyes and blushed. "Yes, sir, Martha's got a

STRIDE with PRIDE in

Springfoot Sox

FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

YOUR son puts his best foot forward in smart, colorful SPRINGFOOT SOX! They're correctly styled for boys and youths. Knit to fit of fine-quality, fast-color yarns; reinforced toes and heels. That's why mothers everywhere insist on SPRINGFOOT SOX for their boys.

Style illustrated
"ARGYLE" 59¢
Sizes 8 to 12 a pr.
Other popular styles—sizes 6 to 13 at 39¢ to $1.00 — in leading boys' departments and specialty stores in your community.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMERS SERVICE BUREAU
THEY WEAR WELL!

For the name of your nearest dealer write:
Wilmington Hosiery Mills, Inc.,
Wilmington 17, Delaware

Springfoot Sox
FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

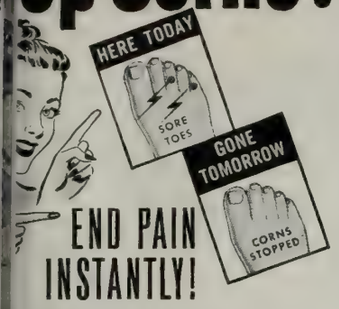
TRY EYE-GENE
AMAZING EYE-OPENING TEST

Eyes can be so tired you want to close them for relief . . .

Millions Thrilled Over Transformation It Makes

2 drops make this striking difference in SECONDS!

Clear, expressive eyes are fascinating. 2 drops of soothing, safe EYE-GENE in each eye floats away that tired, dull, strained, irritated look and feeling in SECONDS—dramatically lights up your whole expression! Safe EYE-GENE is like a tonic for your eyes. Use it every day. Insist on EYE-GENE. 25c, 60c, $1 eye-dropper bottles.



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PAIN
of headache, neuritis and neuralgia
RELIEVED
incredibly fast
the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend—ANACIN®

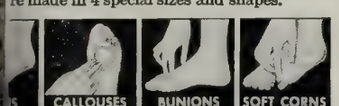
Here's why
Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients. Get Anacin Tablets today.

op Corns!



END PAIN INSTANTLY!

s millions now do and you'll never corns! At first sign of sore toes from r tight shoes, protect them with Dr. 's Zino-pads. Pain ends at once and stopped before they can develop! But ou have corns, callouses or bunions— ng, cushioning Dr. Scholl's Zino- will instantly stop painful shoe fric- lift pressure from sen- spot. Used with the ate Medications in- l, Zino-pads quickly e corns and callouses. her method does all things for you.

THER PAD LIKE IT! New patented creep- pinked edge molds pad to toe and foot. nts slipping; does away with clumsy tap- owny-soft. Flesh color. Won't come off in As easy to apply as a postage stamp. Zino- e made in 4 special sizes and shapes.

Scholl's Zino-pads

mind like a business machine; she never has to write a thing down. Give her twenty things to be done and she'll remember every one, never forget a single detail. She just doesn't know how to make a mistake."

I could show her how, Mimi thought gloomily; I took a postgraduate course. She felt Dick's eyes boring into hers, but she gazed determinedly ahead.

Mrs. Ferguson was making an effort to look modest, but Mimi could see that she was secretly proud of her husband's praise. And I don't blame her, she reflected; it must be wonderful to be like that. For a flashing moment she gazed at Mrs. Ferguson's forehead as if it were made of plate glass, and behind it she seemed to see an intricate machine humming smoothly. Wheels turned and keys pumped in and out, printing notations on cards which were expelled on the other end to the accompaniment of bells. It was an awesome sight.

At eleven o'clock the Fergusons rose and after a chorus of amenities, made their departure. The living room seemed deathly still after they had left and Mimi knew that Dick was looking at her. When she finally forced her eyes in his direction, she saw that he was standing motionless by the window. Something about his attitude—the set of his head, the way his hands were thrust in his pockets, the curve of his shoulders—bore the indefinable stamp of defeat. "Oh, Dick," she said tremulously. She burst into violent tears.

"She certainly was a nervous little thing," Mrs. Ferguson said in her clipped voice as she leaned back in the taxi. "She never struck me that way the other times I met her, but I suppose some women find dinner guests a great strain." She shook her head briskly until the feather on her modish little hat quivered violently. "It was such a simple dinner, too, and she had a maid to help her, and still you could see how worried and upset she was about it. She was in and out of the room all evening. Why, I could have turned out the whole thing with one hand behind my back. Even if you have fifty people for dinner, all it takes is a little common sense and efficiency." For a moment, they rode along in silence. "I could swear," she added thoughtfully, "that the soup was canned."

If spring came but once in a century instead of once a year, or burst forth with the sound of an earthquake and not in silence, what wonder and expectation would there be in all hearts to behold the miraculous change! —LONGFELLOW.

Mr. Ferguson had been very quiet since they left the apartment, but now he stirred himself and sighed. "A pity," he said. "A great pity. I had more or less decided on Gambert for the London branch, you know. That was the main reason I was anxious to get into their home, see how they entertained." He shook his head. "Won't do, I'm afraid. Won't do at all."

Mrs. Ferguson seemed bewildered. "What won't do?" she asked. "What does Mrs. Gambert and her home have to do with the London office?"

"Managing the London branch," Mr. Ferguson explained, "entails more than the man's job. It's the wife's too." He stretched his phrases and expanded a little in his seat, for it always afforded him satisfaction to tell his wife something she didn't already know. It did not happen often. "The social contacts are extremely important over there, a great deal of entertaining has to be done. I could see tonight that Mrs. Gambert would never be up to it. I'll have to take Edmonds, after all."

"That is a shame," Mrs. Ferguson said, but her mind had already closed a door firmly on the subject and opened a series of others in a row. She peered into the compartments they revealed, noted the contents and listed them neatly on her mental calendar. "Tomorrow," she said, "is your annual board meeting for the hospital, James."

"Tomorrow?" he said in surprise. "Are you sure that it's tomorrow?" But he knew FRAGRANCE OF YOUTH...

pril Showers

de Toilette
0, $1.25 ax

by CHERAMY perfumer

4 SIMPLE STEPS TO A LOVELIER COMPLEXION

Try this new 4-step aid to lovelier-looking skin

● Do you want an aid to a more alluring complexion—one that's lovelier to look at, smoother to touch? Then take a beauty hint from thousands of attractive women who have stopped fussing with elaborate treatments, countless jars and bottles. Turn to one cream—Noxzema Skin Cream.

Thrilling Improvement

Recently, 181 women from all walks of life took part in a skin improvement test supervised by 3 skin specialists. Each woman had some little skin fault. Each woman followed faithfully Noxzema's new 4-Step Beauty Routine.

Here are the astonishing results: Of all these women tested, 4 out of 5 showed softer, smoother, lovelier-looking skin in two weeks time!

New 4-Step Treatment

1. In the morning, bathe face with warm water, apply Noxzema with a wet cloth and "cream-wash" your face.
2. Apply Noxzema as a powder base.
3. Before retiring, repeat morning cleansing.
4. Massage Noxzema lightly into your face. Pat on extra Noxzema over any blemishes you may have.

That's all you have to do. No greasy creams to tissue off. No astringents or foundations. Noxzema, unlike most beauty creams, is a greaseless, medicated formula. Designed to aid in healing externally-caused blemishes, and to help soothe and soften rough, dry skin.

Read how 3 women helped solve their skin problems:

A roommate suggested Noxzema to charming Mavis McAvoy for her dry skin. "It left my face feeling so soft and smooth," she says, "now it's my all-purpose beauty cream. I use it for my complexion and hands, too."

Bette George says, "My skin used to be dry and dead-looking. But Noxzema helped improve it so quickly. I use it every day to help keep my skin fresh and young-looking. Many say my skin looks lustrous . . . my secret's Noxzema."

Vivacious Doris Kamp says, "Noxzema is my regular foundation cream. I use it every day. I've found it's wonderful for my skin—and helps keep my nose from being shiny. I've recommended it to many friends."

Over 25,000,000 jars sold yearly. Try Noxzema! See if you aren't thrilled at the way it can help your skin . . . as it has helped so many thousands of other women. See for yourself why over 25,000,000 jars are sold every year! Available at all drug and cosmetic counters. 40¢, 60¢, $1.00 plus tax.

that it was a wasted question. Martha was never wrong.

He stirred a little in annoyance. Sometimes he was proud of his wife's phenomenal memory, her driving efficiency. But for the past few months it had caused him increasing irritation. He kept wishing that she were more like a woman and less like an index file. Often details escaped his memory, or he enjoyed the luxury of letting things slide just a little. Martha always pulled him up with a sharp jerk. She had never stopped being his secretary, that was the trouble, and although she was a great help to him he kept longing for a softer, more relaxed companion as they grew older. If only, just once, she would slip up on something too! It would make her more human in his eyes. But she never did and he knew that she never would.

When they reached their apartment, Mrs. Ferguson kissed her husband good night on his cheek and retired to her room. As was her custom, she decided what she would wear the next morning when she attended a book-club meeting, and she proceeded immediately to transfer the contents of her black purse into a brown one. She had not used the brown handbag for several days and now, when she inserted a comb in the pocket flap, she heard a rustle of paper. She took it out, recognized it at once as the dinner invitation Mrs. Gambert had sent her more than a week ago, and was about to throw it in the wastebasket when a sentence of the sprawled handwriting leaped at her eyes.

"We would love to have you dine with us next Thursday, the twenty-third, and ——" Mrs. Ferguson stared down at the note like one hypnotized. Thursday? But this was Wednesday! What in the world ——

Her eyes did not move from the paper; they seemed transfixed with horror. And now a myriad of impressions that she had gathered throughout the evening came crowding back to her in a vivid series of flashbacks. She saw young Mrs. Gambert sprawled comfortably on the sofa in her shrunken housecoat when they arrived, remembered her startled look, her terribly nervous laughter. There had been no sign of expected company in the room, the bar had been closed, not even a glass visible.

And now scene after scene came back to torment her: Mrs. Gambert leaving the room every few moments and returning with that awful look of strain on her face; those canapés on the salted crackers; the canned soup.

Mrs. Ferguson jumped up in agitation. Why, the poor thing, she thought, what a frightful evening we must have given her! Naturally she had been too embarrassed and c ate to tell her guests that they had o night too early. What a wonderful sp had been to carry it through so bea and with no preparation beforehand you came to think of it, had been a force, really.

Impulsively, she walked toward the tell her husband. They must telepho Mrs. Gambert immediately, of cou apologize. And now James would thin before he eliminated Dick Gambert f plans for the London job!

How could I have made such a stup take? she thought as she reached for t knob. And now, for the first time, th mity of what she had done struck her s With her hand on the knob, she stood less. Why, it was incredible, she ha done such a thing before. Her mental ity was a source of great pride to her knew that James took pleasure in it t he had praised her to the others that e "She just doesn't know how to make take," he had said. And now her reco spoiled. She stood still. After a few m her hand dropped from the doorknob leaned against the wall, her fingers the pattern of the wallpaper.

Mimi lay in bed, one flushed, tear- cheek against the pillow. A little wh Dick had brought her milk and crack insisted on her eating. "You didn't t thing at dinner," he had accused watched you."

Now he sat beside her, smoothing clumsily with his hand. His sweetn given a new depth to her misery, but faint feeling of peace began to steal ov In a way, she thought, the whole eveni been rather dramatic, especially this p scene.

"I've failed you," she said, enjoyi sound of the words. "I'm not the righ of wife for you."

"Oh, for Pete's sake," he said tiently. But his eyes grew soft as he down at her. "You may be a complet wit," he said, "but I'm stuck. I love He bent over and kissed her fiercely. sides, I was proud of you tonight. The evening might have floored many a woman."

They both jumped as the telephone s suddenly. "Who could be calling so Mimi asked wonderingly as Dick to answer it. She heard his "Hello?" then, quickly, "Mr. Ferguson? Did yo get anything?"

Ever hold comfort in the palm of your hand?

• FOAMEX furniture can't pack down, sag or lump... even the cushions never need "plumping."

• Cloud-soft FOAMEX mattresses stay cool, clean, and never need turning.

• In car and transportation seating FOAMEX cushioning already has proved its durability over conventional "stuffing."

Ever see comfort... ever touch it... hold it? Ever have comfort mould itself to your contours, lift you up with buoyant, cradling support— yet yield to the pressure of your fingertip? Only Foamex gives you such heavenly comfort. And it's yours, within reach of your hand... in sleep-invoking mattresses; in the most modern car, plane and train seating; in furniture that owes new beauty of form, shape and line to Foamex cushioning. Foamex keeps its smooth, firm shape and comfort for life! Get to know— and enjoy—this superb, modern comfort, immediately. The best mattresses, easy chairs, sofas in your favorite furniture or department store proudly feature the Foamex label. The smartest new cars are cushioned with Foamex. You, too can rely on the Firestone name that identifies Foamex, everywhere.

Firestone

FOAMEX*

Listen to the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings over NBC

"I just moved next door; do you have any children?"

as dependable as

THE SWALLOWS' RETURN TO Capistrano

As sure as the Swallows' annual return to this old mission is your assurance of the fine quality of Thomaston Sheets! For generations, women have depended on these good-looking, long-wearing sheets for outstanding service, at modest prices. Why don't you make Thomaston your sheet custom, too?

DEPENDABLE THOMASTON Fabrics SINCE 1900

ALWAYS DEPENDABLE

Thomaston Sheets

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Ask for THOMASTON SHEETS at your favorite store —a quality for every purse and purpose.

There was a long silence at Dick's end and Mimi's interest subsided. It must be business, she thought. She heard a few more disjointed phrases and then the click of the receiver being replaced. A moment later, Dick was back in the room. He looked peculiar, she thought as he came over to her, and she half rose from her position.

"What happened?" she asked in a frightened voice. "Did he fire you?"

He sat down beside her, shaking his head in wonderment. "Well, what do you know," he said softly. He still looked strange. "What do you know, even a business machine can make a mistake once in a while. Otherwise, how would machine repairmen make a living? If ——"

"Richard Gambert," she said, "if you don't tell me this min——"

"Okay, okay," he said. "It wasn't you who made the mistake about the evening, it was Mrs. Ferguson. She found your invitation when she got home and it was for tomorrow night."

Mimi sat back, stunned.

"And," Dick continued, "they were both terribly apologetic and thought you had done a terrific job with the dinner on such short notice. And furthermore"—his eyes were very bright now—"furthermore, Ferguson said that there was an 'important matter' he wanted to discuss with me tomorrow morning."

But Mimi hardly heard. "I knew I had it right!" she cried excitedly. "I knew it!" She leaned back with a little sigh. "After all, I couldn't have gotten mixed up on anything as important as that!" she finished virtuously.

"No?" Dick asked. "Wanna bet?"

He grabbed her and they began to rock back and forth, their laughter rising, gathering in little waves until it burst on a high crest of merriment. But after a little while they both grew still, holding each other close.

"You know," Dick said dreamily, "it's a funny thing. Ferguson sounded so happy about that stupid mistake of his wife's. You'd think she'd done something wonderful and he was proud of her. I couldn't figure it out."

But Mimi's mind was far away. She was standing in the middle of Leicester Square and a London bobby was directing her to Bond Street.

A THING OF BEAUTY IS A JOB/JOY FOREVER

(Continued from Page 213)

avoided. For hand drying, a little water softener will help to keep your glass and china in all its pristine beauty. Too much is as harmful as an overdose of medicine. And ammonia in the water is a good shine aid.

The hardened sediment in the bottoms of old decanters and carafes and vases can sometimes be dislodged by letting diluted vinegar stand in them for an hour, emptying, pouring in fine sand, swishing the sand around, and rinsing. To prevent the accumulations of such deposits and the stains caused by some kinds of food, wash the dishes as soon as possible after use. Where have you heard that before?

Finally, the right kind of storage is as important to china and glass as it is to silver. If most people had more shelves and cupboards, we'd say never stack your plates, never hang up your cups by the handles. Confronted with realities, we say try rubber-covered racks, put some kind of padding (paper napkins will do) between your stacked plates, and set as many cups as you can on your shelves without jostling. We feel strongly about this matter of cups. Hung for a long time, they have been known to drop from their handles like fruit from the bough. And so we take comfort in the knowledge that some cupboards now coming on the market make special provision for storing cups and plates too.

They say that woman's work is never done, but who would want it to be? Spit and polish are not only a gauge of your morale, but a booster of it also. THE END

Write for free 40-page booklet on Irish linen.

THE IRISH LINEN GUILD, 24 Wall Street, Norwalk, Conn.

LAVORIS MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE REG US PAT OFF

Action! FOR A CLEAN MOUTH

Tangy Cinnamon-clove Flavor

DETACHES, REMOVES GERM HARBORING FILM

INVIGORATING AFTER-EFFECT!

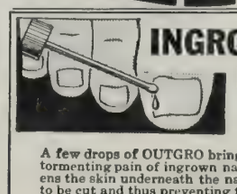
$ $2,000,000 IN CASH (Real United States Money)

For NEW Subscribers and RENEWALS to THE READER'S DIGEST

Here's a chance to subscribe to THE READER'S DIGEST at its regular rate of $4.00 and get a "Mint fresh" Booker T. Washington half dollar (worth $1.00) or take a two year subscription for $5.00 and get a rare Memorial half dollar (worth $2.00). This extraordinary offer actually saves you 50 cents on each subscription in addition to the premium value of the coin. This offer holds good on renewals too.

Memorial half dollars may be secured without subscriptions for $1.00 or $2.00 depending on the coin wanted.

In ordering your subscriptions through us, you are helping to establish an Industrial Training School for Negro youth at Booker T. Washington's Birthplace. Mail your subscription today.



READER'S DIGEST SUBSCRIPTION COMMITTEE
Booker Washington Birthplace, Va.

CERAMICS

Send for free illustrated catalog of CERAMIC supplies and MOLDS. Make beautiful things for home decoration or as a profitable home business! An EASY and FASCINATING hobby. FREE INSTRUCTIONS with each purchase! If interested in PLASTICS send 10¢ for catalog of plastic supplies and an attractive CAMEO without cost! Imbed flowers, butterflies, photos: make unusual jewelry, novelties, etc. Our liquid plastics and Ceramics are as easy to use as pouring water out of a glass!

4637 N. Kedzie Ave. Chicago 25, Illinois Plasticast Company (Dept. 6) P.O. Box 987 Palo Alto, Calif.

CAT-TEX by CAT'S PAW SOLE OUT-WEARS LEATHER!

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You? Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allowing the nail to be cut and thus preventing further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

PERFECT FOR "ONE ROOM" LIVING. If you're "all-in-one", you'll appreciate the way Deltox is easy to keep clean, adds richness to any furnishings. Deltox Delfibre colors: green, brown, blue, rose, grey, natural.

WONDERFUL FOR BOYS, TOO. Tough Deltox Fibres take all the scuffing that small fry dish out. And bright patterns make decorating such fun. Deltox Delplaid colors: green; brown, blue, rose, grey, burgundy.

Deltox gives you the smartest rugs at the smartest price!

Here's where you get real beauty on a budget — sparkling Deltox Fibre Rugs, so handsome and so practical — so right for every room in your home. Deltox gives you stirring colors, stunning patterns woven right in, dust shedding surfaces, and two usable sides on most styles — all for less than $20.* Make a date with your Deltox dealer, tomorrow, and see the rugs that will brighten your home, baby your budget.

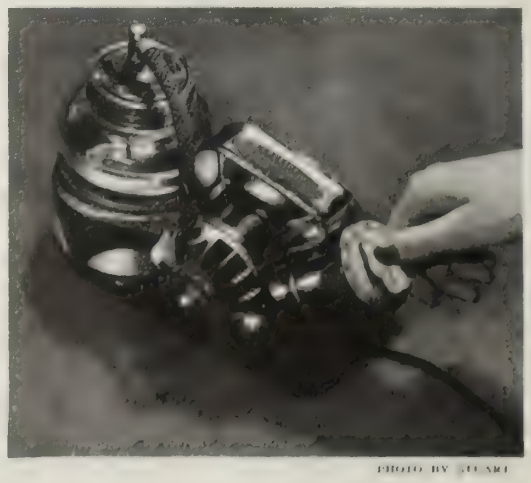
DELTOX

*less than $20 for many 9x12's

*America's smart low price rug

295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16

Not damaging smoke—but protective fog of insecticide is being forced through th house. Fine and dry, it leaves no stains or harmful residue. Also used to rid law and yards of flies and mosquitoes. Reasonable when neighborhood groups chip i



HELP! BUGS

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

A NEW method is coming to the fore for neighborhood eradicatio of almost every kind of bug. It can be surprisingly inexpensiv because many people split the bill, and at a higher price is als available for individual homes.

Killing All Bugs—the Big Blitz. The apparatus used was a smoke-scree generator in the war. Now it is an enormous atomizer of insecticides blowing out clouds of such fine droplets that they don't leave a trace be hind, even on mirrors and windows and polished table tops. It is harmles to humans and animals. In fact, dogs and cats are purposely chase through the fog bank it gives out, so as to rid them of fleas and ticks. Bee are unharmed by it, as used normally, though hornets and yellow jackets ar killed with special solutions. Only your canary is liable to be suffocated and it can easily be removed for the half-hour fogging and the additiona four hours during which the average eight-room house is left closed With this treatment, the inside of a house is protected three to six months

It also comes in amazingly handy for outdoor use. In New York State during the black-fly season, one of these machines, mounted on a heli Small electric sprayer has built-in timer to turn it off automatically. Once motor is started, spraying continues for time set. Since closet or room is not opened to turn off motor, effects are more lasting.

PHOTO BY [illegible]

sprayer attachment, vacuum is effective for insect control venient for penetrating crevices.

Moth larvae in closets are destroyed when vacuum attachment rapidly converts moth crystals to killing gas.

blitzed a 4000-acre tract of and for the first time a lot of enjoyed comfortable vacaere during bug season.

e are 500 fumigating firms applying this service, and will probably be many more long. Depending on the size cation of the job, individual for an inside job costs $25 to ut when a street or neighborigns up, it's cheaper. The outwork during the summer s can run as low as $1 to $1.50 per house when a commuips in on a co-operative project.

Skirmishes—Against Moths.

short of the total warfare of w technique, there are home , many of them new as well, estalling bugs and getting rid of once you have them. Yeardefenses against warmthmoths, for instance, are a in our central-heated houses. your woolens cleaned before tore them—an old chestnut repeating. Dry-cleaning or ng kills the eggs the flying s lay, and it's the eggs that out as larvae to chew those round holes that made your nd's second-best suit look as if ody had filled him as full of s a quail on toast, the last time ore it. Even if some of your r clothes have been worn only r twice, have them dry-cleaned he same. They've been in conith the oil of the wearer's skin ith other clothes.

ybe you'll want to buy one of w chests or wardrobes that are -treated with DDT, and mildewed besides. They're better ng than the old-style storage , their plastic finish is easily ed with a damp cloth, and re fairly (Continued on Page 261)

The familiar inexpensive hand sprayer gives generous spray of insecticide.

Low-pressure dispensing cans with bug-killing mixtures are convenient.

High-pressure insecticide-dispensing bombs can be refilled when exhausted.

Little money miracle

—WITH CRAFTSPUN SHOWER CURTAINS

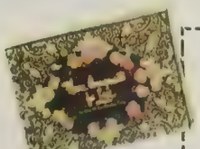
"GINGHAM FLOWER" Design



WON'T MILDEW, CRACK OR PEEL
FADEPROOF DESIGNS
SEAMS ELECTRO-HEAT WELDED FOR STRENGTH
6 STUNNING BACKGROUND COLORS

BEAUTY AND THE BUDGET live happily together with Craftspun's* stunning new ensembles—the smartest Shower and Window Curtains you can buy. This delightful pattern was created by Lurelle Guild, nationally known designer, and developed in genuine Vinylite* for long, hard wear. The design is fadeproof and so easy to freshen it will look lovely for years. Shower and Window Curtains about $3.95 each. *Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

CRAFTSPUN Shower Curtains

ALSO CRAFTSPUN LACE DINNER CLOTHS • WINDOW CURTAINS • KITCHENAIRES*

SEND FOR "FLOWER ARRANGEMENTS FOR LACE" 25¢

Beautifully illustrated book on Flower Arrangements by Mrs. M. Cochrane Cole, nationally known authority. Full-color pictures, easy directions for creating beautiful table arrangements the year 'round.

SCRANTON LACE COMPANY, Dept. L-2, Scranton, Pa.
Please send me "Flower Arrangements for Lace";
I enclose 25¢ in coin.

Name_____
(please print)

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

© 1949, Towle Manufacturing Co.

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you

Whether you prefer the tailored and sleek, the richly decorated, or a happy medium, you'll find your taste represented in Towle's fine collection of patterns. Towle designs many patterns, creating them to suit personalities, because Towle recognizes the importance of personal good taste. When you bring Towle Sterling into your home, you bring the pride, pleasure, and prestige that go hand in hand with lovely things.

Towle creates in solid silver only; yet, [i]n all its beauty, Towle Sterling is not exp[en]sive — and is a fine and wise investment.

TOWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for yo[u]

(Continued from Page 259)

sive. After their first year, their ef-ess for moth protection can be rey re-treating with DDT solution. Or you'll use a chest, a closet, a sturdy or even heavy brown paper you al-ave, in which case you can do your T-ing. The 5 per cent oil-base kind is u'll need, and you can use a squirt he sprayer attachment on your vac-aner. Or a liberal sprinkling with lorobenzene (whtt!) crystals will do
. We insert the jawbreaker because l of moth flakes is the best. But since measures are to protect the contents vent future invasion, the most im-thing is to seal up all crevices, cracks nings with gummed paper or adllulose tape.

are fortunate enough to have a closet ng out-of-season clothing, it is worth make certain it is tight around the rds and door opening. It goes without that it should be soap-and-water
d in addition you can use those unceable crystals or the oil-base DDT
. One of the easiest ways to use the if you have a vacuum with attach-s to put them in the vaporizing con-
It takes about one pound for an sized closet. Turn on the switch, shut
, but connect the electric cord to an utside. If there are yawning cracks he door, cram them full with news-
Sure it's work, but it's also insurance damage. Leave the cleaner running; about two hours
orate a pound of
Then disconnect
d, but leave the ut a day—three,
n do without the hat long.

gh not so fast,
on is provided mall crystals are to evaporate nat-
The idea here is to n in an open con-
laced high in the Then, as fumes
ey seep down through the closet contents.

it comes to DDT, use the 5 per cent solution which doesn't stain clothing
. Pick the method that suits you, the walls and shelves with a brush, or by hand or machine. Whatever you nerous; and close the door afterward.
tion: when using DDT, be on the safe ver your nose with a hanky or cheese-d wear gloves as you work. Check ble check. Use the spray for a quick crystals on a shelf for lasting effect.
ere's a quick trick for the lucky folk freezers, particularly when a freezer nough to spare some space from food and when you're storing small things l sweaters, mittens, scarfs, hats or s when these aren't too bulky. Clean al them in packages or glass jars—e freezer cartons are fine for such Keep them 24 to 48 hours at zero ture. Then they can be put away in age place.

rugs, these should either be stored in use with professional precautions or,
he floor, should be vacuum-cleaned ra care during the summer months, etting the places under the furniture;
aying doesn't hurt. The same thing chairs upholstered in wool. And you our furs should be put into cold

t Carpet Beetles

ens taste yummy to carpet beetles y gnaw little round holes in them, a al like moth holes. But when such pear in your rayons, too, and when l empty beetle shells lying around, can depend upon it—the villains are hs, but carpet beetles. If any of your hasn't been taken up for a long time, hen it is taken up, you find the under hewed, then this is even stronger or the favorite lurking place of car-les is—how did you guess it?—under carpets. These are the bugs in the rugs that various things are said to be as snug as. They also like to hide in the deep cracks of upholstered chairs, where you lose your scissors and your small change, and there pursue their unsuspected ravages.

They are harder to kill than moths, although the treatment is the same: thorough vacuum cleaning and spraying with a 5 per cent DDT oil-base solution. Pay special attention to the cracks between the floor boards and along the baseboards. Sprinkle these with DDT powder as a final touch if you haven't any pets or small children. (It has to be left there several days.) Spray the rug on both sides to kill the beetles around at the time, and spray it afterward every three months to keep off any others moving in. And sun and air an infested carpet before you re-lay it, if you can. There is no use in wasting time on methods like these, however, if the beetles have completely taken over the house by the time you discover them. Call in a reliable exterminator. He has professional equipment, and safely uses products we amateurs can't be trusted with.

Against Ants

When you have ants in your sugar, the best thing to do is to follow them home. A Sherlock Holmes hat, a magnifying glass and a kneeling position are recommended, and even then you may not be able to track them to their lair. In case you do succeed, though, the next procedure is to destroy their colony ruthlessly. If they go into a visible nest, pour one to two tablespoonfuls of carbon disulphide down the hole, repeating after twenty-four hours. Carbon disulphide is highly volatile, and the vapor catches fire; so please don't smoke while you're using it, and please don't use a match or a candle or a kerosene lantern to illuminate the job. Boiling water is safer (for you) and just as lethal to the ants if the nest isn't too far down. But if you try this several times without results, then you'd better buy some carbon disulphide at the drugstore. If the nest is outside, DDT powder mixed with the topsoil over the nest is deadly to ants, but dangerous for pets and children.

When you can't find the living quarters of your ants, you can spray the ants with a DDT insecticide. But since the ants you see are only the workers, spraying will leave the larger part of the colony unscathed, and more workers will go on being born. Sometimes, if enough workers are killed, the other ants will leave the neighborhood. But poisoned ant bait (sweets and fats that ants adore) is practically sure-fire. Moistened and set in the path of the workers, it will be carried back to the nest where all the other ants will eat it and die. At this point, you may feel like bursting into tears and turning Hindu. But harden your heart. Stop-gap methods are just as merciless—setting your canisters in pans of water, for instance. The ants, storming a canister, are drowned by dozens, like medieval soldiers in a moat.

Against Roaches

And hardly anybody could wax tenderhearted over a cockroach, whether it's a half-inch "German" roach or one of those flying monsters that may have come from Central America on bananas. A kitchen alive with any of the four varieties found in this country is a horror chamber when you turn on the light and see them scuttle off in shoals. They vanish like bad dreams, only to come back as soon as the light is off. And they are hard to kill, having hard shells and suspicious natures. They are armored against insect sprays. They twiddle their whiskers at most poisons, and let them alone. But since they live in the drains and are carriers of filth and disease, and since they eat leather upholstery, shoes, gloves, fabrics and bookbindings as well as food, it's worth almost any effort to oust them. First, be sure you always leave your kitchen not just clean, but spotless. A few

We are never more discontented with others than when we are discontented with ourselves. The consciousness of wrongdoing makes us irritable, and our heart, in its cunning, quarrels with what is outside it, in order that it may deafen the clamor within.

—H. E. AMIEL.

Telechron your roast ...and your rest

WHY GUESS AT COOKING TIME?

Right-to-the-minute Buffet helps you keep tabs on your cooking so it turns out just right . . . and it adds a cheery note to your kitchen, too. Because it's a Telechron clock, it never needs winding, oiling or regulating, will give you years of dependable time. In ivory, white, red or green. $4.95 plus tax.

WHY BE A ONE-ALARM FAMILY?

Let Little Tel save you the trouble of calling your family! Its low price makes it smart buying for every bedroom. Its silence helps you make the most of your rest. Its accurate, keeps-sounding alarm is sure to wake you. The Telechron motor makes it the world's most accurate electric alarm. In ivory-colored or brown plastic case. $4.95 plus tax. Telechron Inc., Ashland, Mass.
A General Electric Affiliate.

Prices and specifications subject to change without notice.

Telechron
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
ELECTRIC CLOCKS

"The TELEPHONE keeps our house TICKING!"

It's like having an extra pair of hands to help out — and an extra pair of feet to run errands.

Few things around the house save as much time or so many steps as the telephone. It helps with the shopping. Runs down town. Calls the doctor. Takes you visiting with friends near or far.

Sometimes in emergency the value of the telephone is beyond price. But its cost is low. The increase in telephone rates is much less than the increase in most other things you buy.

The telephone continues to be a great big bargain.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

crumbs lying on the floor, a film of grease on the sink will call the roaches out of hiding. Next, look over your groceries as you put them away, and don't blame the grocer if you find a roach. Third, try sodium fluoride, though only with the greatest caution, for it's a poison. This is a powder you can buy at the drugstore, and it is usually white, although the same thing colored blue is better if you can get it—better because it can't be taken for baking powder, soda, salt or sugar. But keep it away from children and pets. Several nights of gorging on sodium fluoride scattered along the baseboards and over the kitchen work surfaces will usually finish off the roaches. If it is mixed with pyrethrum, it does its business even quicker. And DDT powder has its points.

All these should be carefully cleaned away in the morning—especially, and we repeat, if you have pets or small children. DDT 5 per cent oil-base spray is safest, but less effective. In short, if you have roaches by the swarm, you might as well phone the exterminator first as last.

Against Mosquitoes

We read in our notes: "The draining of swamps and the covering of water areas with oil will suffocate the mosquito wrigglers as they come up for air. This type of treatment must be assumed by the community"—the big brutes. We also take brutal delight in individual aggression against the adult mosquito, and lay in a DDT bomb about the last of June.

Some people would almost as soon be shut up in a cage with a tiger as on a screened porch with a mosquito. For these the 5 per cent DDT oil-base spray, so often urged upon you, applied to the screening and ceiling with a paintbrush or spray, will afford protection. For relief, even though it is temporary, on an unscreened terrace or porch, the water-base DDT solution is kinder to any plants about. Applied to the person, a new product, 612 Insect Repellent, a wartime development, is fine; and one of its best features is that only mosquitoes hate to smell it.

Against Flies

From childhood, most of us have been so indelibly educated to swat the fly that we don't need to be reminded of a fly's disease-bearing talents and sinister fecundity. What we do need to be told is that a fly swatter has become an obsolete weapon, unsanitary and about as useful as a broadsword when compared with blockbusters. The new DDT bomb or the good old 5 per cent DDT oil-base spray, swiped with a paintbrush on window screens, door screens, window sashes, doorjambs and porch ceilings, gives immeasurably better results. But of course the familiar virtues of flypaper and 16-mesh screening should continue to be extolled, provided a warning is included against keeping used flypaper around and against touching the flies stuck to it. Also, spraying with insecticides is ju good as it ever was.

Against Fleas

The trouble with the kind of fleas roost on animals is that they don't c themselves to cats and dogs, but move humans too. Their reluctant human hos hostess—usually feels them first as an irr ible impulse to scratch his ankles. Peeri the floor, he sees them hopping around o rug. But fleas also love the warmth and fort of the family beds. And though they be bothersome in winter, they hatch o full force, of summers.

Every two weeks, flea powder (deri pyrethrum) should be rubbed into the c your pet clear down to the skin, begi with a ring of it around the neck to pen o fleas, and working down toward the t 10 per cent DDT powder is excellent for but should never be used for cats becau their habit of licking themselves. Dog cats both should be washed regularly flea soap, defleaed by hand, and combe brushed. The kennel or the beds shou lavishly treated with flea powder.

As for your flea-infested house, the vac cleaner is again your best ally, picking it does the flea eggs and the fleas. But should also be dusted with flea powd tween cleanings, and floors and baseb should be wiped with a strong disinf solution. If DDT powder is used on th instead of the derris or pyrethrum type, is extra reason for another repetition o warning never to let your pets or smal dren go near it.

These measures may rid you of the and then again they may not. Flea so tiny and so agile, and they propag fast, that we aren't holding out any hopes. All you can do is try—or call i exterminator.

Against Bedbugs

We've been saving the worst for the Here we have the real McCoy and social cast of domesticated insects, the Old himself, loving darkness rather than and seldom seen, but often felt as a dre itching and smelled as a loathsome When seen however, it is reported t semble a tiny turtle, reddish brown in c and redder still after its vampire repa can be picked up in any crowded place. I enter your home like Cleopatra when sh presented to Caesar. And it may get s door delivery between your laundry and house.

Our advice about this menace takes form of what to do till the doctor comes. 5 per cent DDT oil-base spray, shot v ously and long into all crevices of the fl baseboards and bedsteads, plus a sprin of the 10 per cent DDT powder in the places, will hold the bugs at bay. But t your mind at rest, call the exterminator

"H'm-m-m—that's interesting; h'm-m-m, well, what do you know? H'm-m-m-m, h'm-m-m."

Ladies' Home

JOURNAL

May, 1949 25c

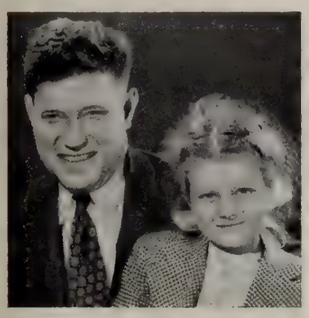
BURLINGAME
PUBLIC
LIB.

The Magazine
Women Believe In

IT LOVE COME LAST
A Serial by Taylor Caldwell

HOW THE JOURNAL LIVES
The Story of

NEW CAREER FOR COLLEGE GIRLS



Journal Contents

SCRIBNERS

TAYLOR CALDWELL

A young and energetic grandmother, Taylor Caldwell manages to turn out a best-selling novel every year or so "in her spare time." Her latest, Let Love Come Last, beginning on page 34, was written as a kind of warning to parents who pamper their children. She herself was not a spoiled child. "I've earned my own living since I was fifteen," she reports, "and put myself through school. During the war I wrote between midnight and three A. M. and got up at seven to do my housework."

JESSE STUART AND JANE

"I've written two volumes of verse, three collections of short stories, three novels, an autobiography (a term paper I wrote at Vanderbilt University) and the autobiography of a dog. The Thread That Runs So True (page 46), about my experiences as a teacher is my eleventh book. I believe teaching is the greatest profession in the world, but the decline of our public schools is alarming. My story is perhaps the story of thousands of other ex-teachers."

JOHN R. KENNEDY

MARY POORE

"I live in a Manhattan brownstone house with husband, two children, a garden, a pair of white mice and twelve goldfish," Mary Poore says. She attended Barnard and Vassar and traveled in the Far East before "settling down." She served in a communications branch of the Navy during the war, which, she says, "changed my opinion of Poe's ability as a cryptographer." The idea for The Battle of the Bulge (page 48) came from table conversation of son Spike, and daughter Susan.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ May, 1949

Vol. LXVI, No. 5

Book Condensation Complete in This Issue

46 The Thread That Runs So True, Jesse Stuart

Fiction

34 Let Love Come Last (First part of five), Taylor Caldwell
36 Summer's End, Gertrude Schweitzer
38 The Little Small Young Thing, Margaret Weymouth Jackson
42 Shut the Door After You, Hamlen Hunt
48 The Battle of the Bulge, Mary Poore
58 The Beckoning Years, Jessamyn West

Special Features

11 Race Suicide of the Intelligent, Dorothy Thompson
11 Built-in Opportunity, G. M. White
31 How to Catch a Husband, G. M. White
40 Mental Illness Begins at Home, Joan Younger
41 Miss Willoughby, George Romney
44 Love, Roald Dahl
45 If You Ask Me, Eleanor Roosevelt
109 New Career for College Girls, Dorothy Entwistle Swenson
185 How the Journal Lives
236 American Women—As Others See Them, Liza Zown
254 Sunshine Stink Bomb Factory, Jan Weyl

General Features

4 Our Readers Write Us
14 Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty
23 Fighting Cancer in Cowley County, Kansas
23 Another Call for Volunteers, Margaret Hickey
24 Reference Library
26 Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams
28 Prom Planning (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Maureen Daly
33 Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town
142 Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox
180 Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber
242 Bringing Up Parents, Dr. Barbara Biber
247 This is a Poison-Ivy Puller, Munro Leaf
248 The Overtired Child, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

Fashions and Beauty

52 Plans for a Summer Bride, Nora O'Leary
54 A Sub-Deb's Memo on Summer Clothes, Ruth Mary Packard
56 Star Performance in Cotton, Wilhela Cushman
100 There's Something About Her, Wilhela Cushman
196 Dear Beauty Editor, Dawn Crowell Norman
198 It's All in a Day's Work, Wilhela Cushman
262 Pretty Babies, Nora O'Leary

Food and Homemaking

60 Let's Go Fishin', Ann Batchelder
62 Line a Day, Ann Batchelder
120 Quick & Easys For Two, Louella G. Shouer
201 Come Into Our Kitchen, Louella G. Shouer
212 Journal Kitchens, Gladys Taber
229 Conversation Piece, Ruth Mills Teague

Interior Decoration and Garden

50 China to Cherish, Rosser Johnson
202 Journal Garden Project, Richard Pratt
204 Entertainment Rooms at the Journal Workshop, Henrietta Murdock

Poetry

12 John Holmes • 70 Hilda Conkling • 80 Esther Wood • 90 Kathleen O'Neill-Bailey • 97 Robert P. Tristram Coffin • 119 Laura E. Detwiler 131 Elizabeth McFarland • 149 Naomi Gilpatrick • 163 Dorothy Stout 168 Mar orie Lederer Lee • 179 Ernestine Cobern Beyer • 208 Bette Richart 214 Lucile Stubbs Graham • 225 Eleanor Alletta Chaffee • 234 May Richstone • 244 Dorothy Smith • 252 Lola Ingres Russo • 257 Dan G. Hoffman

Cover Design by John Mechling

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1949 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada. SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas; 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance. UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed. The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Change of address: Send your Journal change of address to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.
at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent. The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

s you a real ASH! product
as Tide!
New washing miracle
Tide
Oceans of Suds
CLOTHES, sparkling DISHES
New miracle suds!
More suds in hardest water! Kind-to-hands suds that look different, feel different! Wonderful in the dishpan, too! Try Tide for dishes . . . see how they sparkle, even without wiping!
IN— DIRT'S OUT!
WATER SOFTENERS NEEDED!

Metals

n be until you try
re Ware "Kitchen Jewels" amins and minerals
ur family.
nd bright. And
e. You can't burn a hole
ain. And there's a
! Stainless Steel beauties
e percolators, double
ooking more tantalizing, fuel.

PORATED,
. Y.

ERCLAD
VERE ARE SS STEEL

Our Readers Write us

Second Marriage Better

Michigan City, Indiana.

Dear Editors: I, for one, have made a very successful second marriage. Maybe the fact that you are older and more mature in your judgment gives this marriage a better chance.

At any rate, I know that a second marriage can be a very happy and beautiful relationship.

The first and most important thing to keep in mind when choosing a husband is that there is no perfect man, but also remember you aren't perfect either. Marry a man for what he is and don't try to make him over to suit your fancy. If the man isn't suitable for you without a remodeling job, he isn't the right one.

Sincerely,
MRS. DON BEIN.

SUSANNE SZASZ

Carrots . . . and

. . . custard!

Regrets Her Divorce

Melrose, Massachusetts.

Dear Editors: Here is one divorced wife who remarried and has been sorry ever since, and will be sorry every day the rest of her life.

If I could only have a heart-to-heart chat with a few wives who are contemplating divorce, depriving their children of the normal companionship of their father, it might help to save a few broken homes.

Girls have absolutely no conception of the problems and heartaches that are involved in a second marriage, especially where the first husband, the father of her children, sees them regularly, and the second husband disapproves of his seeing them.

Yes, I am sorry, and I am sure there are thousands of others who are in the same unhappy situation with me and my two lovely young children, whose lives cannot help but be deeply scarred by the foolhardiness of their own mother.

Most sincerely,
(Name Withheld by Request)

Satisfied Husband

Ransomville, New York.

Dear Editors: There are fewer "wolves" than generally supposed, especially among older men. We're not too sold on variety. "Oh, blessed monotony!" is more truth than poetry with us. And when a man has seen his favorite girl ripen from a mere "sweet young thing" into a mature, beautiful (I didn't say "pretty") woman, in his home, in his arms, at least partly because of the love he's given her, and knows she not only still loves him utterly, but says she likes him too—well, you can have your pretty green apples. I'll keep my ripe one.

RICHARD TRAVER.

P.S. We're past forty, have four children and our full share of debts, sicknesses, troubles, etc. There!

Home is Where the Heart Is Seaside, California.

Dear Editor: Much has been written about inadequate housing, how tragic crowded living quarters are, how hard women are struggling to maintain decent living standards. I would like to give another side of the story, a glimpse of life with three children and a husband in two small rented rooms four miles out of town.

A rambler rose with scarlet blossoms and dark green leaves growing against the dreary wall of an old garage, insufficient living space, and a happy family, an electric coffee pot and a baby bathing in an old washtub beside a glowing wood range: of such contrasts is our life made, and we love it. When I'm getting dinner or trying to put the children to bed in a crowded house I feel that I can't put up with it, but when I see the healthy glowing faces of my family I look back on my day and say, "Thank you, Lord, for all I have."

How can I tie myself to housework on days like these? How can I describe them? I have an impression of foggy mornings that turn into freshly laundered days, spring suns, cool breezes and a wealth of babies. Across the street a snow-white kid plays beside his mother and a newborn calf takes his first steps, gazing curiously at the universe. My four-year-old and I spend long slow minutes watching the antics of a week-old colt. We go to the rabbit pen and see the tiny babies and care for the soon-to-be-mothers. We discover that the blossoms on the fruit trees have turned to hard green apricots, plums and apples. A snake crawls out of the grass and is allowed to find his hole because we do not molest God's harmless creatures. Not enough room in our garage home? Pooh! The world is our home and our hearts almost fill it.

Sincerely yours,

JILL RAMSEY.

Some Women Have It

Riverside, California.

Dear Editors: From what I have seen in other women's homes, economic status, early training, size of family and state of health have very little to do with whether or not a woman is a good housekeeper. I believe there is a factor, which we might call the H-factor, which is present in some women, and totally absent in others, like me. I wish the JOURNAL would launch a study to investigate the H-factor. Then maybe you could set up a clinic which possibly, just possibly, might help people like me.

We may love our husbands, adore our children, and want homes with all our hearts, but without that H-factor, we feel we're making an awful mess of things. Your clinic would be something like a clinic which helps physically handicapped people to get along without the use of one or more faculties. You may think this sounds a little desperate, but if you could

(Continued on Page 6)

Procter & Gamble's amazing new TIDE gives you a real

MIRACLE WASH!

No soap—no other "suds"—no other washing product known—will get your family wash as CLEAN as Tide!

ld's CLEANEST wash!

ma'am! Tide gets your whole ily wash cleaner than any r washday product . . . gives a miracle-clean wash! Tide, ı its completely NEW suds, only leaves even your heavi- vash free from dirt, but actu- removes dingy soap film, too!

Actually BRIGHTENS colors!

Tide gives you a miracle-bright wash! No soap made gets your wash prints brighter than Tide . . . in hardest water! And never worry about trusting your colored washables to Tide. With all its terrific cleaning power, Tide is truly safe for them all!

World's WHITEST wash!

Turn to Tide for a miracle-white wash! In hardest water, Tide gets your white things whiter than any soap or any other washing product known! And Tide keeps your shirts, sheets, towels, gleaming white, week in, week out. NEVER turns them yellow!

TIDE

GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY OTHER WASHDAY PRODUCT YOU CAN BUY

—yet TRULY SAFE for colors

PROCTER & GAMBLE GUARANTEES EVERY PACKAGE OF TIDE!

Tide will do everything claimed for it in this advertisement. If you are not completely satisfied, return the unused portion of your package to dealer and the purchase price will be refunded.

New miracle suds!

More suds in hardest water! Kind-to-hands suds that look different, feel different! Wonderful in the dishpan, too! Try Tide for dishes . . . see how they sparkle, even without wiping!

TIDE'S IN—DIRT'S OUT!

TIDE WORKS EXTRA MIRACLES IN HARD WATER! OCEANS OF SUDS! NO WATER SOFTENERS NEEDED!

Like an Angel of Mercy to your Face and Hands

Millions find NEW BEAUTY IDEA proves fast aid to:

1. Smoother, lovelier, clearer-looking complexions.
2. Softer, whiter-looking hands.
3. Healing unattractive blemishes.*
4. Glorious soothing relief for irritated or itching skin conditions!

You don't need a lot of preparations to help keep your skin looking lovely. Do as so many nurses, models, actresses do. Give your skin medicated care.

Try it for 10 Days

Use medicated Noxzema as a dainty, greaseless night cream—as a long-lasting foundation for make-up. Try this beauty secret for just 10 days. See how fast it helps your skin improve.

You'll be delighted to discover how quickly medicated skin care helps smooth and soften a rough, dry skin and helps heal unattractive skin blemishes *from external causes.

Smoother, Whiter-Looking Hands . . . often in 24 hours

Nurses first discovered Noxzema for hands irritated by constant scrubbing. If your hands get red and rough from housework, from exposure to water or weather . . . see how quickly medicated care helps soften and heal them back to natural beauty.

Read how 2 typical women helped solve their skin problems:

Gorgeous Pat Barnard says, "Noxzema is part of my regular beauty routine . . . I use it every morning and night. It 'works wonders' for my complexion."

Lovely Rita Tennant uses Noxzema as her regular night cream. "Noxzema is so dainty to use," says Rita. "And it quickly helps heal any of those little externally-caused skin irritations."

25,000,000 Jars Sold Yearly

Try Noxzema! See if you aren't honestly thrilled at the way it can help your own complexion problems . . . as it has helped so many thousands of other women. See for yourself why over 25,000,000 jars are used every year. Available at all drug and cosmetic counters. 40¢, 60¢, $1.00 plus tax.

(Continued from Page 4

see my house, I am sure you would know what I mean. Everyone who knows me, friend and enemy alike, knows that I am a horrible housekeeper, and all deplore the fact, some in joy and some in sorrow. I simply have no H-factor in my system—no system, either. Sincerely,

(Name withheld by request.)

Solves Housekeeping Problem

Pine City, Minnesota.

Dear Editors: I have two children—Nancy, twenty-two months, and Johnny, seven months. I have solved my housekeeping problem by considering myself a homemaker. I find that I am feeding all or a part of the family every two hours:

6:00 A. M.	Johnny's bottle
7:30 A. M.	Family breakfast
8:00 A. M.	Children's vitamins and orange juice
10:00 A. M.	Johnny's cereal and bottle
12:00 noon	Family lunch
2:00 P. M.	Johnny's dinner
4:00 P. M.	Light lunch for Nancy
5:30 P. M.	Johnny's supper
6:30 P. M.	Family dinner

In between I try to sandwich laundry twice a week, marketing once a week, dishwashing, ironing, mending, sewing for the children and myself, as much as time and energy will permit, baking and occasional cleaning. It's a full schedule, but in spite of everything, I wouldn't go back to teaching school for anything.

Sincerely,
MRS. LEWIS C. SHEPLEY.

Boy Found in Readers' Mail

New Haven, Connecticut.

Dear Editors: After years of discouraging search, I have just received a child in adoption as a result of a letter published in your Our Readers Write Us department last April! That letter (of which I was not the author) pointed out that the perfectionist standards of adoption agencies were blocking many placements which otherwise had very good chances for success.

After the publication of that letter, a woman in another state wrote you saying she had had similar experiences with adoption agencies, but from the other vantage point. She had a child she wished to give in adoption, but the social agencies considered him unadoptable because of a slight physical deformity. She asked to be put in touch with the first writer.

In the meantime, the writer of the first letter had received a child from England and did not feel she could take on a second at this time. Her husband, a minister, read in a publication which goes to Congregational ministers that another minister was looking for a child for a parishioner (me) and passed on the information about the available child.

Arrangements were made by long-distance phone for the child to be brought here for physical examination and mental tests. The best doctors assured us that the deformity is operable and there is no question about the outcome. The results of the mental tests were good and arrangements were made immediately for the adoption.

The child is a magnificent little person—a boy, seven and a half years of age. He is making a fine adjustment to his new family and home and school. The moral of this story is, of course, that it pays to advertise! There are no words to tell you of our gratitude to the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

With heartfelt thanks,
A very happy new "mommie."

Heavy Eaters

Albany, Oregon.

Dear Editors: We thought you would be interested in knowing that the owners of 16 most discriminating palates thoroughly enjoyed Ruth Mills Teague's recent Conversation Piece. We should also like to correct Mrs. Teague's measurements. Her recipes supposedly served 25 people, but our 16 gourmet (or should I say gluttonous?) friends completely devoured the entire amount down to the last stuffed pickle! Yours truly,

JEANNE SENDERS.

Dorothy Delivers the Goods

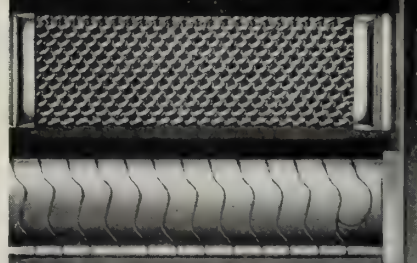
The Duke's Cottage
Rudgwick, England.

My Dear Bruce and Beatrice: Reading an article on childbirth in the JOURNAL led

(Continued on Page 8)

GABRIELEEN

the soft, wide permanen that Fashion favors



Let your stylist create this hair style for yo

GABRIELEEN with Adepsol is th kind of permanent you'v dreamed about . . . completel versatile and exquisite. It' beautifully lasting too!

GABRIELEEN Cold Wave . . Machine . . or Machineless Wave at your favorite beauty salon

Distributed by
GIBBS & COMPANY
CHICAGO, ILL.
World's Largest Manufacturers and Distributors of Beauty Shop Supplies and Equipment

KESTENMADE
Fine Watch Bands

Styled to the Minute
PRICED TO YOUR PURSE
Expansion in all models

KESTENMAN BROS. MFG. CO.
Providence 3, R. I.

Your loveliness is Doubly Safe

because

Veto gives you Double Protection!

So effective . . . Veto guards your loveliness night and day—safely protects your clothes and you. For Veto not only neutralizes perspiration odor, it checks perspiration, too! Yes, Veto gives you Double Protection! And Veto disappears instantly to protect you from the moment you apply it!

Always creamy and smooth . . . lovely to use!

So gentle . . . Always creamy and smooth, Veto is lovely to use and keeps you lovely. And Veto is gentle, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes. Doubly Safe! Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. Let Veto give your loveliness double protection!

Veto lasts and lasts from bath to bath!

"Someone would like to meet you, Mother!"

Dreamily, you listen to the comings and goings in the hospital corridor.

And then your door opens. A smiling nurse bundles in a tiny cart. The white blankets stir. You look down at a pink, puckered face, and your enchanted eyes never saw anything more beautiful. Your baby...

As the evidence convinces you you really are a mother, you vow you'll be the best ever. And in the care of your baby's precious skin, that means knowing the modern better way: Johnson's Baby Lotion.

Use this velvety snow-white Lotion exactly like baby oil, for all-over skin care. Hospitals find it more effective in preventing prickly heat that may lead to actual skin infections such as impetigo.

In a famous Chicago hospital, various skin-care methods were tested on more than 2,000 newborns. With usual methods, as many as 55% of the infants suffered from prickly heat. But with Johnson's Baby Lotion care, this figure dropped to an amazing low of 3%.

Even more amazing, not one case of impetigo occurred over a two-year period among babies who were given routine smooth-overs with Lotion.

Start your baby off right with this new, better protection. Take him home to Johnson's Baby Lotion care!

New! Hospitals prove it's better!

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

(Continued from Page 6)

me to recall other, and sunnier, lyings-in, which might cheer up the beginner at the game, and encourage her not to lose heart. When first I thought I was going to become a mother, I lived in a bungalow on the wrong side of a wide river, outside the station of Bassein, Lower Burma.

The only doctor there was for me to consult—and it seemed necessary to consult someone—was an Indian gentleman. He crept up onto the veranda, though the weather was dry, wearing an immense pair of black goloshes. This made him look exactly like Froggie-would-a-wooing-go. Wishing to take my temperature, he produced a thermometer, minus case, from his trouser pocket. He assured me he had sterilized it at home before he came away, but I simply could not feel enthusiastic about sucking it. Still, there was nothing else to do. Later I learned to keep a thermometer of my own. He did a sum in his pocket book, tore off the page and handed it to me with a polite bow. Like a kind man selling a ticket. On the page was a date. He then departed. I never saw him, or any other doctor, again until the day my baby was born.

It had been planned that the interesting event would take place in Maymyo, the hill station, where there was a small maternity home just opened. Until it was time for me to go there, I was parked in the firm's house. The firm's house was on a lonely hilltop just outside the town. It was a largish house, split up into quarters with a communal dining and sitting room, and anyone who needed a rest or a change would go there.

The only other person in residence when I arrived was an elderly bachelor who probably still believed in storks and gooseberry bushes. It was indeed an odd arrangement by modern standards, for here I was dumped, alone save for Maung Thaik, a Burmese house servant (male). Maung Thaik wore a sort of silk petticoat, which gave him a comfortably sexless air, and he was most thoughtful and kind.

I had nothing to do except consult my little ticket, verifying the date, try to reassure the elderly bachelor, and wait. Most unfortunately, the date on the ticket was not the right one. Monsoon mists gathered, blotting out the plains, and there I still was, and there the elderly bachelor was also. He was chairman of the Burma Chamber of Commerce, and he was, I remember, up there writing some important speech. He practiced it on me: "My lords, ladies and gentlemen ——" But by then I was so desperate I would have stood for anything.

At last there was the happy day when pangs assailed me at four A.M. and I roused (with difficulty) the dark lady who was the only nurse available for maternity work just then. It was during the first war. White nurses were mostly elsewhere. The dark lady was scornful. She said I would be lucky if the baby, being my first, was born this time tomorrow. She went back to bed, and advised me to do the same. She had a very musical snore.

I paced the room. I watched the dawn break. An eastern dawn, and one I have never forgotten. By this time, though I knew little about the business, and had not even read many books with much intelligence, I felt sure the dark lady was wrong. I had some difficulty in rousing her. I was, I remember, very worried that no one seemed to have ready those knives I thought essential, for I thought the only manner in which babies were born was the Caesarean method. By seven A.M. I managed to get the dusky lady to take a little interest in me. I had at least the satisfaction of knowing I was right, before the picture got a bit muddled.

The next child I had, I had at the firm's bungalow, where no doubt I scared off all other prospective tenants for a bit. It was in the rains, and the roof leaked onto my bed quite a bit. The last baby I had, also in the bungalow, arrived ten days early. There was no nurse, and no doctor, and I was alone on the hilltop with the two other children, and the ever-faithful Maung Thaik, who by now had taken on the characteristics of a kind grandmother. One told him positively everything. I sent him off to fetch help, dressed and fed the children and sent them for a walk, saying, "When you come back, there will be such a surprise!" And there was. It was daughter Mary, yellow as an orange.

Love to you all,
DOROTHY BLACK.

. . . Launder like a hanky and dry just as fast! Curity Diapers are better for mother and baby. Why—? Because they . . .

Wash Easier—Their open weave permits quick, thorough cleansing in the suds of pure Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Dry Faster—Drying air, indoors or out, acts faster on their open weave.

Resist Wrinkles—When Curity Diapers are machine-washed, a new Curity process reduces after-laundering wrinkling to a minimum.

Absorb Fully—Their thirsty surgical weave always assures maximum absorption.

Fold Easier—The patented Curity Foldline, woven into the fabric, indicates a simple, desirable fold pattern . . . readily adjustable as baby grows. Of course, Curity Diapers are also easily adaptable to any shape fold you prefer.

Reduce Chafing—Smooth, flat, hemless pinked edges eliminate irritation usually caused by bulky hems.

Curity Diapers offer all these advantages. That's why mothers, medical authorities, leading hospitals use and endorse them. Available at your favorite infants or department store.

NURSERY PADS • BIBS • MASKS • COTTON
PAT. NO. 2,145,137

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. JN-5

Enclosed is 25c for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

First Aid in Learning

How to be a Knockout

DRESSING up like mother . . . mimicking her manners . . . practicing mother's good-grooming routines! Yes, this youngster has already learned an important secret of feminine charm. This little lady knows what no lady ever forgets . . . that daintiness is the first step to popularity. See that bottle of Listerine Antiseptic in the picture? With this delightful aid to make her breath fresh and sweet, no one will ever whisper . . . "Wall-flower!" . . . behind her back! She'll always have beaux aplenty . . . dates galore!

A quick rinse with Listerine Antiseptic night and morning is a happy, healthy habit to form early in life. Listerine Antiseptic is an extra-careful precaution against simple cases of halitosis (unpleasant breath) of non-systemic origin. Leaves your mouth tingling clean . . . and your breath as fresh and sweet as a May morning.

How nice to know that it will stay that way, too, not for seconds, not for minutes, but usually for hours! Make Listerine Antiseptic "Step One" in your good-grooming routine . . . every morning . . . every night . . . and before every date when you want to be at your best. Don't risk offending at any time!

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC FOR ORAL HYGIENE

P. S. IT'S NEW! Have you tried Listerine TOOTH PASTE, the MINTY 3-way prescription for your teeth?

NOW READY FOR IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

Amazing NEW Thrift-Group!

by KROEHLER

Suite No. 270-1. An unusual value in modern design, tailored in carved pattern mohair bouclé.

NEWLYWEDS! This stunning upholstered furniture is especially designed for today's living rooms . . . for today's modern-minded couples. It gives you exclusive Kroehler Cushionized* Construction . . . the most amazing comfort development in upholstered furniture. Yet, the price is almost unbelievably low! See your Authorized Kroehler Dealer.

WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURER

KROEHLER Furniture

(Soy KRAY-LER)

Choice of 9 exquisite colors

Ladies' Home
JOURNAL
Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

Built-in Opportunity

By G. M. WHITE

THE Spring Savings Bond Campaign, beginning May 16, is a renewal of the Government's invitation and recommendation to start a savings program. Many people already have the habit of buying Savings Bonds regularly. Bond sales reached a record peacetime high in 1948. Relieved of the stress and emergencies caused by war, fewer people are cashing their bonds. They have become a basic part of the family savings program.

Take Mrs. Smith, whose oldest boy graduates from high school next year. She began a $3.75 weekly investment in Government bonds in 1940. In 1950 she will have $2163, which insures her son the opportunity to go to college. The fortunate young couple who have managed to buy an $18.75 bond every week since 1941 can pay cash for a fair-sized dream house with the $10,828 they will have in two years. If they want to, they can continue to reinvest in bonds and assure themselves of a comfortable income in their old age. Not many people can save $18.75 a week, but everyone can save a few dollars before that pay check melts away. A regular savings plan is the key to future independence.

The person who began buying an $18.75 bond every month in 1940 will begin receiving $25 a month in 1950. If he reinvests that in Savings Bonds, plus his regular monthly $18.75, his monthly savings of $43.75 will begin coming back to him as $58.33 monthly in 1960. If he follows the same procedure for another ten years, the bonds will mature at the rate of $102.77 per month in 1970. That may seem a long time away, but the time to begin saving is right now.

Buying Savings Bonds is more than the exercise of the simple, time-honored virtue of thrift. It is the smart thing to do. There isn't a wiser, safer investment, with as high interest, that even the most astute financier can make. The way to family fortune is not through stock tips and rumors, but through common-sense saving. Only the person who can afford to lose can run the risk of speculating in stocks or real estate or anything else—and that eliminates most of us.

U. S. Savings Bonds, purchased through the Payroll Savings Plan (painless deductions from your pay check), or the Bond-a-Month Plan (your bank will buy them regularly for you, if you wish), provide a handy way to save money. The interest rate of 2.9 per cent is higher than you can get almost any other way with comparable lack of risk. Sale of U. S. Savings Bonds has done a great deal toward building economic backbone into this country. It is your opportunity to put more opportunity into your future.

Race Suicide of the Intelligent

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

A GREAT many eugenists have been pointing to one phenomenon of American life with great concern. Dr. Lewis M. Terman, professor emeritus of psychology at Stanford University, recently pointed it out in addressing the International Council for Exceptional Children. Doctor Terman apparently thinks that, if matters go on as of the present, there will be fewer and fewer exceptional children in the future. For by and large, intelligence reproduces intelligence, but in our society the most gifted of the present generation are not reproducing themselves.

Doctor Terman illustrated this with the case histories of 1450 especially talented persons whom he had traced to the age of 35. These had altogether only 1500 children, barely more than one per family. He found that these averaged 10 to 12 per cent higher in intelligence than the general population. But there are simply not enough of them.

On the other hand, the greatest numerical acquisition to the population of this country comes from the most backward and impoverished. The population is growing, but it is growing one-sidedly, and in the wrong direction.

The opposition of the intelligent to having children is a quite recent phenomenon. The distinguished men and women of earlier days were not bent on committing race suicide. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, for instance, produced four eminently distinguished sons—Henry, John Quincy, Charles Francis, Jr., and Brooks, all of whom contributed to American statesmanship and three to American letters.

Intelligence usually contributes to prosperity, and the intelligent of the nineteenth century used their relative prosperity to feed, house and educate substantial families, and thereby greatly contribute to the American republic. It is only in the twentieth century that intelligence, education and fertility are walking backward as far as the race is concerned.

And this walking backward is neither personally nor socially intelligent.

The reasons are manifold. One of them undoubtedly has to do with the so-called "emancipation" of women. Every field of life and activity—business, the professions and the arts—is open to women today, and every year thousands of women leave our colleges and universities determined to make careers for themselves. They marry, but find many reasons to postpone having children. Often Nature, as well as birth-control measures, assists them in this. Women who lead very active lives, under conditions of nervous stress and strain, often do not conceive, and, when they do, miscarry.

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman • Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Maureen Daly, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Joan Younger, Lonnie Coleman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary • Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey • Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Lily Glendinning, Dorothy Counselman Selby, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Jan Weyl, Jeanne Scribner • Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Iris Wilken, Betty Coe, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Cynthia McAdoo, Eleanor Pownall Simmons, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Plummer, Lois Witherspoon, Philippa Herman, Jeanne Stiles, Elizabeth McFarland, Polly Tcland, Leone Seastrom, Elizabeth Crawford, Elizabeth Goetsch, Joan Aucourt, Marthedith F. Stauffer, Virginia Brown.

These women are violating their own biological natures, and for this they pay a heavy price. One price they pay is psychoneurosis, which afflicts American women to an alarming extent, as every psychologist in this country can testify.

The second price they pay in postponing childbirth is to lessen the chances of producing a normal, healthy child with the least mortality risk to themselves and the infant. The safest years for a woman to have her first child are between 20 and 24.

The third price they pay is in their relations with that child, especially if it comes by "accident." It appears (even though unconsciously) as an intruder in an otherwise organized life; as a being for whom no proper place has been prepared; as an interferer and invader. The mother may love the child intensely, and yet find it an irritating burden, the clash of interest arousing in her a sense of guilt, which she tries to overcome by pampering and spoiling the little one. Children have an extraordinary unconscious sensibility. They are never emotionally deceived. They sense the difference between quiet, serene, continuous affection and sporadic bursts of it. They notice the absent look which appears so often in the eyes of women concentrated on external cares.

The fourth price they pay is in their relations with their husbands. Most men want children. No matter how much a husband may fall in with the argument for having no children or postponing having them, his emotional reaction is to doubt the seriousness and profundity of his wife's love, and to see in her desire not to be a mother a reflection on his capacity to provide for her. A man's protective and philoprogenitive instincts are strongest in the earlier years of his marriage. It is then that he most wants children, and is most likely to be irked by his wife's concentration on affairs external to the home.

A witty woman once remarked that the course of a man's feelings toward his wife's working is first to protest, then to resign, and finally to expect. The first instinct, to undertake full support of his wife and children, wears off under the recognition that she is perfectly able to support herself; and as he becomes used to this fact, with the attendant lightening of his responsibilities, he is often alarmed when several years of such an arrangement may be terminated by his wife's desire for a child, his own having evaporated meanwhile.

FINALLY, no matter how many infant schools, kindergartens and what not may be organized, the only child has a bad break. Again, unconscious emotional factors operate. There is far too much emotional concentration of parents on an only child. He and he alone has to realize all his parents' ambitions for their progeny. If he is a sensitive child of highly intelligent parents, he fears to disappoint them. In his own home he is a child between two adults and in an inferior position, constantly protected, yet humiliated. There is nothing like the give and take, the shared responsibilities, the healthy natural quarrels, the release of energies that occur among three or four children in the same family, born not more than two years apart.

These seem to me very high prices for women to pay for the privilege of exercising their intelligences. They do not add up to happiness, but to physical and emotional frustration.

AND behind it all, I think, is a not yet r solved rebellion of women against their ow sex and their role in the race. Why, for i stance, do intelligent women so despise th "drudgery" of housework that they hav reduced the position of domestic to th lowest social status—thereby making it in creasingly difficult for them to get domest assistance? Their own attitude is basicall responsible. Girls will work as filing clerks stand behind counters selling hats and rib bon to cranky customers, work as waitress in restaurants—all of which is drudgery—rather than help another woman to care fo a home, purely because the domestic is ac corded a much lower status.

The feminist movement was an attemp to break into "a man's world," and in th process women, through envy, accepted t an alarming extent the values of men, in cluding the values men put upon the wor of women in the home, when women reall did have a servile status. In winning fo women the right to vote, to own property to educate them selves and to earn living, the feminis movement did, in deed, emancipat them, and it was a emancipation lon overdue.

But it did n emancipate wome from their biologic natures, nor does demand of them tha they must choos emotional frustra tion for the sake o educated intelli gence. An educated intelligence is pleasure in itself. It does not have to be harnessed to a job nor should it inter-fere with a normal womanly existence. Rather should it enhance that existence.

And, from the viewpoint of the welfare of the race, which is precedent to the individual in any sound society, if intelligence leads to breeding out intelligence, the whole movement will describe a vicious circle.

Gifted parents do not always produce gifted children, but they have a far higher chance to do so than ungifted parents. And they also have a higher chance of producing one exceptional child out of four than they do out of one. Intelligent parents restrict their families to a point where they don't reproduce themselves because they want to give them "privileges." But they can exaggerate the benefit to the child of too many such privileges—and also confound the privileges they want for their children with their own unwillingness to sacrifice. The best and most distinguished citizens come from homes above poverty, but below luxury, where the children have to help their parents and one another; where there is "high thinking and plain living"; where treats are special gifts and not everyday luxuries, taken for granted; where one early learns, among brothers and sisters, both to hold one's own and to co-operate, under the guidance of a most affectionate judge.

From such homes has come most of the leadership of America in every field: our statesmen, scholars, inventors, great soldiers, organizers, divines, teachers, engineers, craftsmen. And democracy can be lifted only by leadership. It is the gifted and energetic who leaven and lift the level of the masses, who never can lift themselves alone.

And though environment accounts for much progress in the race, inheritance accounts for more. Those who refuse to pass on the gifts with which they were born are withholding from society the sources of its continuation and renewal, and whatever their other contributions may be, are failing the coming generations. THE END

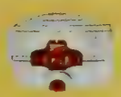
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mother

By John Holmes

Your face was bone and width your own,
But half of yours is mine
To stare with at a world not wrong,
Not right, but by design
A clearing, a clouding tree of stars
That put down roots and grew.
I live under its shine and shade
And can what I must do.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Make no Mistake About It!

CUP AFTER CUP AUTOMATICALLY TO YOUR TASTE

VALUE MAKES IT YOUR BEST BUY!

Universal's superb quality and features make this the finest coffeemaker money can buy... at any price! No wonder it's America's first choice!

Flavor-Selector gives choice of coffee strength.

Redi-Lite goes on when coffee is ready.

Serve right at the table, coffee stays hot . . . full eight-cup capacity.

No breakage, no fragile parts.

$24.95

CHOOSE COFFEEMATIC — ITS FLAVOR-SELECTOR MAKES IT AMERICA'S FAVORITE COFFEEMAKER

You can't go wrong with Coffeematic! Simply set the Flavor-Selector to mild, medium or strong, and this graceful beauty does the rest! Fast action "Cold Water" pump makes coffee without boiling. When coffee's ready, a light goes on, but Coffeematic stays on the job, keeping the coffee hot 'til the last perfect cup is poured—just as delicious as the first!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COFFEEMATIC

THE UNWATCHED "POT" THAT NEVER BOILS

BEAM-O-LITE IRON

AUTOMATIC TOASTER

MIXER AND JUICER

HEATING PAD

COOK-A-MATIC WAFFLE-GRILL

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

"I commend to you our pleasant California custom of the Olive Bowl"—says

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Queen of American authors, Kathleen Norris is beloved by millions of readers. In addition to her prodigious output of 73 novels (her latest, High Holiday, is just out) and countless heart-warming stories for the top magazines, brilliant, energetic Kathleen Norris has found time for family and national affairs—and is noted for her hospitality.

"It's an easy, well-liked gesture of hospitality when friends drop in...an enjoyable "first course" when just the family comes to table"

"I'M GLAD TO HEAR our good California custom is becoming so popular throughout America today," writes Kathleen Norris. "Do try it at your house soon, if you haven't already: simply fill a generous bowl with your favorite brand of California ripe olives and set them out for all to enjoy. Compliments never fail you."

Ripe olives from California fill an honored place in the diet. Among other food values, California ripe olives offer you nourishing protein...and they're a source of Vitamin A, and iron. But the reason California ripe olives are famed throughout the world is FLAVOR!

Bite into one. Here's plump, meaty goodness. Here's good eating. Have another...enjoy all you want! (Yes, even if you're a "calorie-counter." For 8 to 10 California ripe olives just about equal 100 calories.)

This advertisement is published by the growers and processors of California ripe olives, acting together as the Olive Advisory Board. All California ripe olives are held to standards of quality, strictly graded and correctly labelled.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHO

Bali, white Persian with blue eyes, was a hit at the Paris Cat Show.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

THE CATS IN OUR LIVES is a delightful and very personal account of the many cats that have lived, and still live, with the two authors—movie actor James Mason and his actress-wife, Pamela Kellino.

The Masons have all kinds of cats, but a Siamese always leads the rest. Pamela was given her first Siamese for a wedding present on the night before her wedding.

"He was about ten weeks old, and very loud-mouthed. Instead of taking to me immediately, like every cat I had met in the past, he rushed under the bed and made threatening noises. No amount of coaxing had any effect. I couldn't sit up all night because I wanted to look reasonably fresh for my wedding. So I got into bed and managed to get a little sleep. But at four in the morning I was awakened by fearful yowls. When a Siamese really gives voice it is something. A mixture of a baby's scream, a howling wind, and the death agony of a soprano. (I have learned to love the sound.) Anyhow, my new kitten was lying on his back under my bed with all his claws stuck into the mattress and dragging himself around, letting out these fearful yells. My pleas were quite useless. He struck out at me and hissed and told me to go to hell. When I offered food, he spat and shouted. When I tried to stroke him he scratched. Finally, I told him that I hated him and all Siamese cats. I couldn't understand him at all! This was Gamma, my first Siamese cat. I have never been without one since and I never will be. Let all the praise that has ever been heaped on dogs, horses, cats and children be added together in favor of this wonderful friend."

This department admits to a prejudice for and against certain kinds of cats. We've never liked white cats, and to overcome this narrow-mindedness, went to the Empire Cat Show in New York this year to see the famous Rockridge White Marksman. His is a real "success story." It began with a shivering kitten found under the snow in Mt. Vernon, N. Y., almost dead, who last year walked off with the title of All-American Blue-Eye White Domestic Female Short Hair Champion, under the name Rockridge White Wistaria. All Wistaria needed was the perfect white, short-haired, blue-eyed mate, who was, after much search, located in Joseph Riley's Square Deal Vegetable Emporium in downtown New York near Washington Market. Rockridge White Marksman is the result, the pride of his parents, now fully grown and on exhibition at the cat show.

Well, we saw the champion. We saw the family. And we still prefer a tiger coon cat or a café-au-lait Siamese to any other cat in the world.

A visit to the zoo is a bold step after the Cat Show. But we made it, and heard a tiger purr. It was something like a B-29 flying low, but ingratiating nonetheless. In a cage near by were two young creatures, a part-grown lion and a part-grown tiger, both females. They were born about two days apart, and the mother of each refused to nurse her child. As a consequence the little tiger and the little lion were brought up by hand, on a bottle, and together. Now they are great friends and make a terrific fuss if anyone tries to separate them. The lioness is rough and obstreperous, and the tigress calm and satisfied as any well-fed cat would be, but completely in command of the situation and always the dominating force.

Helen Traubel, Wagnerian soprano, received two lion cubs as a Christmas present from Lauritz Melchior, Wag-

(Continued on Page 16)

Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

Here's the surest way I know of to top off a May meal just right. Simplest, too. Delight your brood at dinner's end with mounds of ever-welcome, nourishing ice cream! And—please—MEADOW GOLD. For I think MEADOW GOLD is ice cream at its very finest. You can prove this to yourself just by sampling. In vanilla, notice the golden tint and definite "golden" taste. That tells you there's good, country cream in it.

And in other Meadow Gold flavors you'll find, as I have, that the fruits used are always ripe and delicious . . . the nuts crisp and fresh. Next time you buy ice cream, do try MEADOW GOLD. Packaged with a special color for each flavor — so you can buy the flavor by the color. If you like a touch of the unusual in ice cream desserts, here's an idea I know you'll fancy:

Meadow Gold "Double Decker"

All you need is your favorite loaf cake and a pint of Meadow Gold Vanilla Ice Cream. Slice the loaf cake in ½" slices. Divide the ice cream into 8 equal portions. Make the "double decker" with two slices of cake and two slices of ice cream, alternating the layers. Top with a rich chocolate sauce made in a jiffy by simply adding ¼ cup of boiling water to 1 cup of CHOX Instant Hot Chocolate.

Wonderful, this Chox! I always keep some on hand. Makes fine, rich fudge and chocolate cake topping. And I don't think you can equal it for a good, steaming cup of breakfast or bedtime chocolate! Costs about what you'd pay for the best cocoa. But the difference is that CHOX already contains whole milk and sugar as well as cocoa and real chocolate. Actually saves money because no extra milk is needed. You just add hot water. Try some, hm?

MORNING BECOMES ELECTRIC!

I'm not the annoying type that bounces out of bed in the morning a-crackle with instant energy. Are you? If you aren't, you'll probably appreciate my tried and tested recipe for early sparkle. It's a glass of sun-bright, ruby-red VEGAMATO Cocktail. Different from any vegetable juice cocktail you ever tasted! For it's the only cocktail which blends the juices of seven salad vegetables with the sunny tang of real lemon. Just start using it. I promise, a glass of VEGAMATO will spark your appetite—for eating and for living!

can't stay in these spring days ?

Neither can I! But I've found a way you can indulge the gypsy in you and still have dinner on time. Just keep a couple of packages of LA CHOY CHINESE DINNER on the shelf! Then you can ramble among shops, or garden overtime, just as you please. For LA CHOY CHINESE DINNER is a complete and tempting Chow Mein meal. There's a can of savory Chop Suey, a can of brown, crunchy Chow Mein Noodles, and a small bottle of Soy Sauce. A delightfully different dinner for 2 to 4 people. Ready to serve in just the time it takes to heat the Chop Suey and Noodles. Get some today at your grocer's — and have more time to enjoy this wonderful weather!

Free—Book of 27 Chinese Recipes! You'll want this booklet. I know! A treasure house of fascinating recipes! Mandarin Salad . . . Golden Pheasant Omelet . . . Egg Foo Yong . . . and other Oriental wonders. Illustrated with color photos. And free—if you write at once to Dept. J-2, LaChoy Food Products Division, Beatrice Foods Co., Archbold, Ohio. Send today!

You'll make table talk with this!

If you've a hankering to be talked about for delicious and unusual cookery, I give you this with my blessing. Plenty of surprise in it! And for family lunch or party highlight, it's the most delightful dish I've tasted in years!

Eggs Con Fuego

3 tbsp. Meadow Gold Butter	1 medium size onion
½ clove garlic	1¼ cups Vegamato
⅔ cup tomato paste	1 tsp. parsley, minced
1 bay leaf (optional)	½ tsp. salt, dash pepper
6 Meadow Gold Eggs	6 slices hot toast

Melt butter in frying pan, then add onion (minced) and garlic. (Place garlic on toothpick for easy removal later.) Cook slowly until tender but not brown. Add Vegamato, tomato paste, parsley, bay leaf and seasoning. Stir until combined. Cover and cook over low heat for 12 min., stirring occasionally. Remove garlic and bay leaf. Break each egg into a cup and slip it into sauce. Cook, covered, over very low heat 15 min., or less, as preferred. Serve eggs on toast with sauce and a sprinkle of grated Meadow Gold Cheese if desired.

REMINDER:

If you're very demanding about butter quality, take a tip from Chicago's famous Pump Room. Please the people at your table with

Meadow Gold Butter

I happen to know that MEADOW GOLD is the butter served at the Pump Room in Chicago's exclusive Ambassador East Hotel. And in scores of other world-renowned dining places. Which I think proves that when you ask your grocer for MEADOW GOLD, you'll get as fine butter as money can buy!

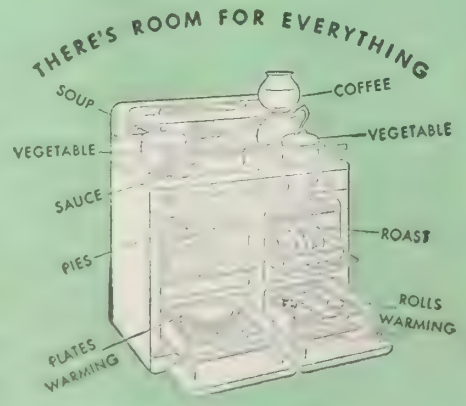
© 1949, Beatrice Foods Co.

"Soup to Dessert" Cooking

This Spacious Caloric Cooks Entire Meal At The Same Time

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

RUTH SHELDON, famous Washington, D. C., home economist, gives high marks to the time-saving convenience of this roomy Caloric Range with 6 burners, 2 ovens and 2 broilers.



With a roomy Ultramatic Caloric Gas Range, you'll never be handicapped for lack of cooking space. Your entire meal—soup, roast, vegetables, pastry and coffee—can be cooking at the same time—and done at the same instant.

And think of all the other desirable Caloric features. Flavor-Saver Dual Burners give you "Flexible Heat"—exact "measured" temperatures for perfect cooking. Save lots of gas, too.

With Caloric's Automatic Oven Time Control, meals practically cook themselves while you go shopping, or to the movies.

Caloric's Porcelain Enamel Finish, inside and out, Removable Broiler and other easy-cleaning features make the Ultramatic Caloric America's Easiest Range to Clean and Keep Clean.

For list of local dealers see "Caloric" in classified tel. book—or write Caloric Stove Corp., 1232 Widener Bldg., Phila. 7, Pa.

America's Easiest Range to Keep Clean

Ultramatic

Specially engineered models for use with LP-Gas ("bottled" gas). Every model can include "CP" features if desired.

CP

Caloric Automatic Gas Ranges

(Continued from Page 14)

nerian tenor. They are now (the lions) in the St. Louis zoo, and are named Helen and Lauritz.

•

On June 10, 1948, the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, rapped his gavel for the last time. James Hard, 106 years old, sounded the 82nd and final encampment of the G.A.R. in the state, read a prayer, called the roll and then closed the books for all time.

As the men of the Civil War have died off, so have the K-9 Corps veterans of World War II. In 1947, 278 war dogs were registered; in 1948, only 191. And the U.S. Army Signal Corps has announced with regret the death of Blackie Halligan, outstanding pigeon hero of the Pacific. Blackie was cited and decorated after being wounded by Japanese flak on Guadalcanal while successfully carrying back to headquarters a patrol message that led to the extermination of 300 enemy troops. As far as we know, Kaiser, aged 32, veteran pigeon of World War I, is still living. (Normal life expectancy for a pigeon is 9 years.)

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

Kaiser (left) and descendant.

Kaiser was captured by American troops during the Meuse offensive. Now definitely on the right side, Kaiser has sired many of the homing pigeons used in World War II, though still wearing on his left leg the aluminum identification band he wore when captured, embossed with the German imperial crown.

•

Remember ANIMAL FARM, by George Orwell, which described the Soviet system through the medium of barnyard figures? Now there's a similar book for children, THE BEAR FACTS, by Polly Culbertson. This is the story of the Big Black Bear who lives in a big black cave behind an iron curtain. He tries craftily to get the smaller animals into the cave with him, and succeeds in luring in the little Chipmunk and the Squirrel. But most of the other animals join hands against him. In the end he is destroyed, with hornets, wasps and bees flying through the air. You get the idea. And whether or not you approve, you can't fail to be sharply interested.

•

Suddenly—and at long last—we are roused on all sides. Conservation books are pouring in telling us how we've misused the good old earth and warning us what to do before it is too late, about saving our dwindling food supply. (OUR PLUNDERED PLANET, by Fairfield Osborn, THE ROAD TO SURVIVAL, by William Vogt, and ruminations from time to time by Louis Bromfield.) There are also a number of excellent books on the positive side, mostly about new Palestine—Israel,

(Continued on Page 18)

NO DUST BAG TO EMPTY

NO ROAR... IT'S QUIET

NO LEAKING DUST

NO CLUTTERED CLOSETS

NO EXTRAS TO BUY

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Approved by Underwriters' Laboratories

Lewyt

(Rhymes with 'do it')

VACUUM CLEANER

It's actually two vacuum cleaners in one! Cleans your carpets better than an upright ...yet gives you the light, easy-to-handle efficiency of a tank-type cleaner! Brightens draperies and upholstery...suction-sweeps bare floors...dusts furniture... even sprays paint, waxes floors, de-moths closets! See it...try the new Lewyt yourself!

COMES COMPLETE—NO EXTRAS TO BUY!

LEWYT'S REVOLUTIONARY NO. 80 CARPET NOZZLE

Cleans rugs more thoroughly than ever before! Actually gets more embedded dirt...picks up more lint, thread, and hair...yet with less carpet wear! It will amaze you!

FREE! PICTURE BOOKLET ON MODERN HOME CLEANING. WRITE TODAY!

Lewyt Corporation, Vacuum Cleaner Division
66 Broadway, Brooklyn 11, New York

Here's new freedom from sink drudgery!

Hate scrubbing messy pots and pans? Use S.O.S. every day, as thousands of women now do. Saves work! Saves time! S.O.S. cleans, scours, polishes. It works so fast, you work less.

try this easy S.O.S way to clean pots and pans

"PYREX" WARE—easier to clean! S.O.S. quickly scrubs off food that's crusted on, wipes away "boiled-over" streaks. Soap in each S.O.S. pad cuts grease — hustles you through the job — lightens daily sink drudgery!

STOVES—easier to clean! S.O.S. quickly removes crusted grease from grills, stove tops and burners. Cleans broilers, oven racks. Handy oval S.O.S. gets into corners — makes light work of stove-cleaning.

WHITE-WALL TIRES — easier to clean! Amazing S.O.S. removes curb marks and dirt. Car owners, auto dealers, tire dealers agree S.O.S. is best for white-wall tires. Try it!

Use S.O.S every day

It works so fast — you work less!

© The S.O.S. Company, Chicago, Illinois
S.O.S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Food today deserves the finest protection!

Extra-Heavy... Cut-Rite is waxed through and through, not just surface waxed. Saves expensive meat, keeps leftover chicken, lamb and beef from drying out. Keeps sandwiches for hours..."right from the kitchen" moist and delicious.

No Waste in Handling... Cut-Rite is extra-heavy yet perfectly pliable. Twist it—there's no wasteful breaking, no splitting! Save icebox space by wrapping small things small and tucking in corners. A Scott Paper Product.

"CUT-RITE" REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Famous cutting edge tears easily

More women choose it ... love to use it!

(Continued from Page 16)

where conservation is No. 1 government policy and deserts are blooming. There is even a book on the subject for children: THE LITTLE TRACTOR WHO TRAVELED TO ISRAEL, by Evelyn Greenberg. It is not only for Jewish children, but for all children who will have to grow up and do their bit to save humankind from starvation.

•

National Pickle Week falls in the lovely month of May. At this year's convention Amerigo Vespucci is to be honored, we hear. Only incidentally was Amerigo a traveler with a name to be long remembered. By vocation he was a pickle dealer in Seville.

•

Why, we once asked in this column, did Cary Grant do stilt-walking? "To make a living," writes in Madeline Lee, who signs herself "Old Timer," "and to break into show business. He was the 'rear end' of the comedy horse with the

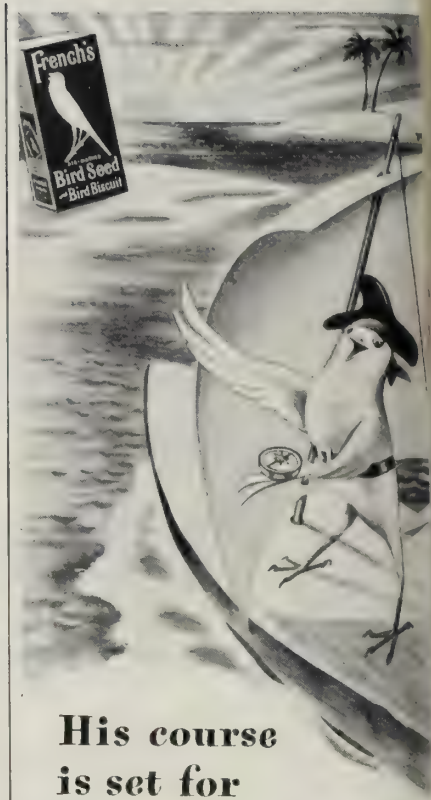
COLLIER'S

"Like all comedians, I suppose you hope someday to play Hamlet."

Lumas Troupe." And speaking of "old-timers," it is good to realize how they last. For twenty years now we've been seeing, not only Cary Grant, but Claudette Colbert, Joan Crawford, Bing Crosby, Bette Davis, Clark Gable, Bob Montgomery, Walter Pidgeon, Barbara Stanwyck, Spencer Tracy. Long may they wave!

•

Katharine Cornell, who has probably the longest theater runs of any actress, was nearing the end of one of her tours when Mrs. Roosevelt asked her, "Now what will you do?" To which Miss Cornell replied, "Enjoy a cold." She is always having colds, and always, during her periods of work, having to subdue them.



•

Here are a few outstanding current books, not destined for enormous sales, but each unique in its field:

DESIGN IN SWEDEN TODAY, edited by Ake H. Huldt and Eva Benedicks, and published by The Swedish Institute for Cultural Relations, is a breath of fresh air. A small book of photographs of modern art in furniture, textiles, ceramics—the manifestation, one would say, of a calm spirit. It is hard to think the world is going to pieces when you see this pure, clear, simple art.

THE CITY OF THE BEES, by Frank S. Stuart, a story of romance and high adventure in a colony of wild bees living in the heart of a forest oak. Badgers attack it, and hordes of robber bees. Diseases decimate its numbers. Ants steal honey from the bees' tongues. Wasps paralyze them. Wars are fought in which the death of a whole population is staked against the death of one queen bee. It is beautifully written and will

(Continued on Page 21)

His course is set for Sweeter Song!

What little feathered pirate wouldn't feel perky with French's on the horizon? Any canary's song depends on his happiness and health—and these depend on his diet. Always feed French's Bird Seed and Biscuit—favored for generations—the complete diet of twelve tested ingredients.

A haphazard mixture of a few common seeds isn't what your pet needs. He should have the nourishment and stimulation of French's Bird Seed and Biscuit. So many canary owners realize this, that 7 out of 10 are feeding French's. Try French's—for just ten days—and listen!

There's extra song in this tempting Biscuit!

A French's Bird Biscuit, chockful of canary "goodies," comes in every package of French's Bird Seed. Fed together, the Seed and the Biscuit make the complete diet your canary craves.

French's

BIRD SEED and BISCUIT

THE LARGEST SELLING BIRD SEED IN AMERICA

The right one to buy today

. . . and a thousand tomorrows will prove it!

THE FIRST CHANCE you have, go and look at this great, new 1949 General Electric Space Maker Refrigerator.

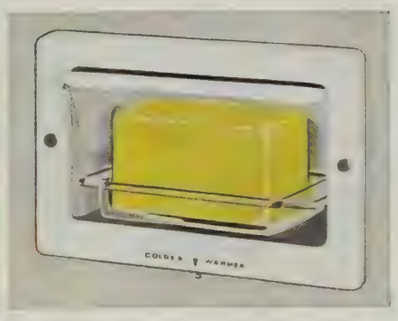
You'll know—instinctively—that it's the one for you to buy!

And every day you use it—week after week, year after year—will prove how right you were!

For everything about this refrigerator . . . from the clean simplicity of its styling to its sealed-in refrigerating system . . . is designed to be right in the beginning and stay right through years of use.

The chief reason, of course, is the famous General Electric sealed-in refrigerating system. Airtight and oiltight, this dependable system has never been excelled for efficient, economical operation . . . year in, year out.

Decide now on a new refrigerator. Decide now on a General Electric. You'll always be glad you did! General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.



The new 1949 General Electric Space Maker Refrigerator

Practical Advantages . . . Usable Accessories . . . Lifelong Conveniences olds more food! The G-E Space Maker ves you up to ⅓ more refrigerated food orage in the same floor space.

Butter conditioner in door! Keeps butter at just the right temperature for easy, wasteless spreading.

Ample frozen-food compartment! Holds 24 packages of frozen foods, plus four ice trays (20 cubes each).

Big bottle storage! Room enough for 12 square quart-size milk bottles. Takes tall bottles with stoppers, too!

More than 2 million G-E Refrigerators in use 10 years or longer

GENERAL ELECTRIC

WOODBURY PRESENTS NEW MIRACLE DISCOVERY FOR LOVELIER SKIN

Penaten in Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream Cleanses Skin Cleaner

In Penaten, Woodbury introduces a modern-miracle . . . a penetrating ingredient newly developed.

Almost unbelievable! Penaten means Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream penetrates deeper into pore openings! Cleanses deeper and cleaner. Seeks out grime and make-up. Amazingly thorough—thoroughly gentle. Your skin looks clearer because it's cleaner!

Twin miracle! Penaten helps Woodbury's rich skin softeners penetrate deeper. Seep deeper into pore openings. Skin is smoother, softer—glorious as never before!

Today, get this new, new magic—Woodbury De Luxe Cold Cream with Penaten. See the difference—the lovely, lovely difference—in your skin!

Jars with smart pink-and-gold labels. Trial size, 20¢ to largest luxury sizes, $1.39. Plus tax.

Your cleansing tissue proves it!

If your skin's dry . . . New, Deeper Softening with PENATEN in Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream

A marvel, too! . . . the velvet beauty that comes to dry skin . . . through deeper, richer softening! Penaten, in Woodbury De Luxe Dry Skin Cream, helps rich, smoothing emollients penetrate into pore openings. Lanolin's softening benefits go deeper, softening tiny lines . . . smoothing flaky roughness to fresher, younger-looking beauty.

(Continued from Page 18)

appeal to readers of fancy as well as to bee tenders.

THE MYSTERY OF "A PUBLIC MAN," by Frank Maloy Anderson, unravels a real historical incident. In 1879 a famous magazine carried, in four installments, unsigned, "The Diary of a Public Man." From the "Diary" have come several well-known sayings of Lincoln, and many anecdotes which everyone has been accepting as authentic. But neither in 1879 nor since has anyone been able to discover the identity of the writer. Now Mr. Anderson has done it—or practically done it. But it is his method of detective work that makes the book so fascinating.

•

Two first-class mysteries which we've just caught up with are THE FRANCHISE AFFAIR, by Josephine Tey, and HE DIDN'T MIND DANGER, by Michael Gilbert. BLUE HARPSICHORD, by David Keith, is good, too, on the funny farcical side.

•

Gene Fowler, who has in the past earned astronomical pay checks in the movies, and can do so again any day he chooses to, has deserted it all in favor of writing for his own pleasure—and the public's, one may add. His latest biography, BEAU JAMES: THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JIMMY WALKER, is a remarkable book. Remarkable for its research (checked and double-checked) into the smallest crevice of Jimmy Walker's fabulous career, and for its deep nostalgia. Many of us have lived to scorn the '20's, but none of us can forget the fun we had. We get a little teary over Moanin' Low and Hallelujah and I'll See You Again. Those of us in New York approve highly of the children's playground in Central Park where the old Casino restaurant used to stand, but we shall never forget the soft music and the lanterns against the dark trees of the park and the elegance of those evening dresses that stopped short at the knees. Those were the days when Jimmy Walker held forth. He was not a good mayor. But he happened to live in a Lucullan day and made the most of it. He was Mr. New York.

Jimmy Walker's father arrived in New York from Ireland in 1857. That was the day when most of the Irish got off the boat at Boston—because it was six dollars cheaper than continuing on to New York.

•

Fly fishermen might be interested to know that in the early part of the third century A. D., Macedonian fishermen were doing the same thing, come May. In a zoology of that day Claudius Aelianus writes that these fishermen "cover a hook with a purplish wool and fasten to this wool two wings, similar in color to beeswax, from the plumage or wattles of a cock. The fishing rod is six feet long, and the line likewise. This trap they let down into the river."

•

Educated young men get baldheaded sooner than uneducated ones, or so says Dr. E. G. Armattoe, of Londonderry, in his report to the American Association of Physical Anthropologists. According to his findings in Europe, premature baldness is high among male intellectuals in Great Britain, Sweden and Switzerland, but strangely enough, rare in France, reaching a low of 5 per cent in the Paris region.

Costume Colors by Gordon

help you achieve that smart, all-of-a-color "costume look". They're lovely, long-wearing nylons specially created in ensemble shades of Moonlight, Stardust, Sunset, Dawn, Sherry, Champagne, and Luster.

Gordon Hosiery

A first store everywhere

Softer... stronger too, because it's double!

Try this remarkable double-textured tissue today and you too will like it! It's not only soft as cleansing tissue—it's really firm, too—because it's actually two layers of tissue!

Cleansing tissue soft ...toilet tissue firm

"Soft-Weve" "Scotties" "soft as old linen" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Scotties* are softies!

*another tissue by Scott that's "soft as old linen"

the smart way to TRAVEL

and still look smart

This attractive woman traveled a thousand miles today. Looks as though she just stepped out of a bandbox, doesn't she? Yet, she is just one of thousands of modern American women who travel by Flagship. It might even be you...

You'd choose American because you're a wise shopper. You know this modern way of travel saves wear and tear on your clothes, on your smart hair-do, but...most of all on you yourself. Miles melt into minutes on a Flagship. That's why at journey's end you're refreshed, rested, as perfectly groomed as when you boarded the plane. Air travel can make this possible for you.

ALL YEAR 'ROUND, TRAVEL IS BETTER BY AIR... BEST BY AMERICAN AIRLINES INC.

FIGHTING CANCER...

Another Call for Volunteers

By Margaret Hickey

THIRTY-five years ago a group of doctors founded the American Cancer Society for the purpose of educating both the lay and the professional groups in the implications of the disease. By 1936, many leaders, feeling they had reached their limits in arousing the public, turned to the General Federation of Women's Clubs for help. This organization then launched an intensified program of education, later extending its activities to include service to cancer patients. In the meantime, much has been accomplished toward breaking down popular prejudice against open discussion of the disease, and responsible volunteers in ever-increasing numbers have found many ways to serve.

What Some States are Doing

In Michigan, volunteers have introduced the American Cancer Society into each of its eighty-three counties. To fairs, along with prize-winning bakery goods and pedigreed stock, go the society's educational exhibits. Mrs. Harold H. Cornelius, state commander of the Michigan Division, believes this to be one of the most valuable features of the state program.

In Grand Rapids is the Kent County Medical Society's new Cancer Detection Center. Clinical aides have joined in the volunteer program at the center, helping to weigh and measure the examinee, take temperature, pulse and respiration; conduct vision, hearing and other tests. Other volunteers perform clerical and secretarial duties.

"The Little Red Door" in Indianapolis is the information center and permanent office of the Marion County, Indiana, Cancer Society. Officials estimate they serve a good cross-section of this half-urban, half-rural area of approximately 500,000 people. Conveniently situated on the campus of the Indianapolis General Hospital and the Indiana University Medical Center, the office is the center of volunteer activities. The latest project is a Mobile Cancer Health Education Unit, which now tours the state.

Volunteers Work in Hospitals

In New York's Sydenham Hospital, 4 of the 20 volunteers do case-aid work under the direction of Miss Frances M. Kline, Medical Social Service director. Bellevue Hospital has 388 volunteers who gave 4952 hours during November, 1948. Memorial Hospital for Cancer and Allied Diseases has 145 volunteers, 6 of them men, ranging from elevator operator to trained Nurse's Aides.

These examples are typical of the work being done by volunteers in divisions of the Field Army of the American Cancer Society throughout the country.

"Our program couldn't get along without volunteers," says Mrs. Harold Milligan, national commander of the American Cancer Society. "The shortage of doctors, nurses and medical social workers has been aggravated by the increasing age of the population and its resulting increase of chronic diseases. This means that if professionals are to spread their trained care farther volunteers must help where they can." THE END

in Cowley County, Kansas

"YOU may go back to school Monday, Leila," the white-coated surgeon smiled at the wide-eyed, serious little six-year-old who sat facing him. "You can play hopscotch, and you can jump rope. Just be sure to report to Doctor Hynds in six weeks. I'm going to take you off my 'worry list.'"

That was five years ago at St. Mary's Hospital, one of two hospitals in Winfield, Kansas, having tumor clinics approved by the American College of Surgeons for diagnosis and treatment of cancer in this county-seat town of 10,000 people. The patient, Leila Smith, from another town, had been referred to the clinic by a young physician who realized as a result of his examination that an enlargement in Leila's abdomen might be cancer.

"But why must we take Leila to Winfield?" Leila's father had argued at the time.

Mrs. Smith was adamant. She had carefully read the pamphlet left at her door by a member of the American Cancer Society. She went to the Civic Center in Winfield, headquarters for the Cowley County Chapter of the American Cancer Society, and explained her problem. She found that the child could receive aid as soon as the Cowley County Welfare Department approved her case. X-ray diagnosis showed that Leila Smith had cancer of the kidney. Now, five years after removal of the diseased organ, Leila is as strong and sturdy-looking as her three brothers and sister.

Leila's recovery was no accident. Detection of her malignancy in its early stages, and expert treatment available in her own county, are the result of intelligent planning. Cowley County is unquestionably one of the best informed sections in the entire nation on the subject of cancer.

If any two people can be given credit for the spread of this information, they are Mrs. Leland W. Kesler, pioneer worker in the Field Army, and Dr. Howard E. Snyder, president of the Kansas Division of the American Cancer Society. They are both residents of Winfield. Doctor Snyder has worked untiringly for state-wide establishment of tumor clinics. And there are few homes in the county in which Mrs. Kesler and her (Continued on Page 251)

Mrs. J. H. Snell, a volunteer, and Mrs. E. L. Sullivan, president of Cowley County home-demonstration units, check case-history sheet with Mrs. Carl Telford, who has been a cancer patient.

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON

MR. PETER PERKINS, international 8-goal polo player. Mr. Perkins is a discriminating judge of horses and is equally discriminating in his choice of cigarettes.

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because they appreciate the kind of smoking that only a cork tip can give. The cork tip doesn't stick to the lips . . . it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LIKE

Copr., The American Tobacco Company

Reference Library

EASY-TO-MAKE COTTONS

YOU will love them for summer—crisp and fresh, easy to launde Wear them as brunch coats, afternoon dresses and on the beach. E comfortable, be pretty—make more than one for your wardrobe. Even beginner can follow these simple patterns.

2484. CAPE-COLLARED WRAP-AROUND. 25c. To make in dots or contrasting plain colors. Sizes: 12 to 20.

2481. EYELET-TRIMMED WRAP-AROUND. 25c. Lovely in dotted swiss. Sizes: 10 to 18.

2483. SHORT-SLEEVED WRAP-AROUND. 25c. Trimmed with cotton-lace butterflies. Sizes: 12 to 20.

2547. FOUR-WAY PATTERN. 50c. Make this version in white piqué. Sizes: 12 to 20.

2485. HALTER-NECKLINE WRAP-AROUND. 25c. Available only in sizes 10, 12, 14 and 18.

2487. WRAP-AROUND WITH QUILTED BORDER. 25c. Try this in bright chintz. Sizes: 10, 12 and 14.

2488. WRAP-AROUND WITH RUFFLED TRIMMING. 25c. Charming in gingham. Sizes: 12 to 20.

2482. SLEEVELESS WRAP-AROUND. 25c. Bound with contrasting color. Sizes: Small, Medium, Large.

OTHER FEATURES

Lists are sent free on request. They give title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. List of Departmental Booklets. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.
1695. Sub-Deb Booklet Library.
1660. List of Journal Hat and Bag Patterns.
2333. Children's Patterns List.
2076. Things-to-Wear Patterns. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. Reference List of Knitted and Crocheted Patterns.
1752. Handicraft Pattern List. Things for you to make for your home, your children, gifts or yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Its distinctive styling goes far beyond just pleasing the eye. Here's design that flows naturally from advanced engineering . . . to fit form to function . . . to offer you a great New Plymouth that, inside and out, is better in every way!

Beauty with Reason

That sweeping, new low silhouette is something to see. And this is beauty with a reason. It helps give you a great new car that's easier to use in all ways. It's easy to start—easy to stop—easy to drive—easy to put in the garage—easy to park—easy to service—easy to see out of—easy to get in and out of.

Beauty for Comfort

The beautiful new interior styling is even better than it looks. The famous chair-height seats are now even wider. There's plenty of room for long legs and high hats. Windows lift and lower easier. Diagonally mounted rear shock absorbers resist side-sway. Famous Air Pillow Ride is smoother than ever!

Beauty for Convenience

There's no starter button or pedal in the New Plymouth. You just turn the ignition key—and the engine starts! The handsome new instrument panel has everything where you want it. Fenders flow into the body but they're separate and detachable—and it doesn't cost a fortune to repair them!

Beauty for Safety

The greatly increased glass area in the New Plymouth is nice to look at from the outside. But it's there to look out of from the inside. Both windshield and rear window are larger. The entire car is designed to give the driver a clear, undistorted view of the road in all directions—day and night—rain or shine!

Just your style!

Special De Luxe 4-Door Sedan with Longer 118" Wheelbase

the great new Plymouth

For More Safety

New body construction makes the New Plymouth a sturdier, safer car. Frame and body are 23% more rigid. The New Plymouth has a lower center of gravity. It hugs the road better. And this car handles with such amazing ease that you can drive it for many hours and still feel fresh.

Beauty for Performance

Under the curving new low hood of the New Plymouth there's a livelier, more powerful, more efficient engine. This is the result of a newly designed cylinder head, increased compression ratio and a new intake manifold. New chrome compression ring gives even longer engine life.

Beauty for Value

To see how new car beauty helps make a better new car—see your Plymouth dealer now! You'll find that this great Plymouth—more than any of the great Plymouths before it—is the low-priced car most like high-priced cars—the greatest dollar-for-dollar car value your money can buy!

NOW there's more difference than ever in low-priced cars—and the great New Plymouth makes the difference. See this new car at your Plymouth dealer's now.

PLYMOUTH BUILDS GREAT CARS

PLYMOUTH Division of CHRYSLER CORPORATION, Detroit 31, Michigan

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

The wife who is willing to go more than halfway to please her husband seldom has to

Husbands are Not Perfect

MUCH of our attention is devoted to ways wives can increase the happiness of their marriages. It's usually the wife who takes the initiative in any change. Nevertheless, husbands are undoubtedly responsible for many difficulties in unhappy marriages and for minor irritations in happy ones.

How can a wife modify her husband's undesirable traits? It's folly to try to "reform" him, but this does not mean passive acceptance. She should actively try to eliminate any source of conflict, whether it arises from her fault or his.

Here are ten most commonly mentioned changes wives would like to bring about in their husbands. We asked several hundred representative wives this question: "What changes would you make in your husband if you could?" Replies are reported for all wives, as well as separately for happy and unhappy ones.

Changes Desired	Happy Wives	Unhappy Wives	*All Wives
His temper	8%	27%	18%
Tendency to scold	7	26	16
Strength of sex desire	2	25	16
Lack of talkativeness	6	21	15
Capacity for showing affection	5	19	12
Serious-mindedness	5	18	12
Religious life	4	16	11
Carelessness in dress	4	15	10
Selfishness	1	14	10
Thriftiness	1	10	9

*(Includes those of "average" happiness.)

Bad temper and a tendency to scold and nag are similar in origin and effect, and neither is pleasant to live with. Many husbands will control their tempers all day, only to take out their irritation and fatigue on their wives when they come home at night. By adapting the household routine to her husband's comfort—serving meals on time, quieting the children, forgetting her own woes until he is rested and ready to hear about them—a wife may prevent too many and too violent outbursts. But if, despite her best efforts, the husband's behavior continues to hurt and upset her, she should tell him so. The same approach may diminish scolding.

Strength of sex desire is mentioned by 25 per cent of unhappy wives, almost all of whom feel their husbands' desire too strong and demanding. But 43 per cent of unhappy husbands say their wives' desire is not strong enough.

For the very reason that sex is usually more important to men than to women, many husbands demand too much of their wives. The husband who regards sex as his right and his wife's duty, rather than as a mutual privilege, is courting difficulty if not disaster. To be really rewarding for either, the sex relationship must be satisfactory to both, and the responsibility for making it so lies mainly with the husband.

Lack of talkativeness is high on our wives' list of desired changes. Wives really need to "talk things over" at the end of the day. It is their opportunity for companionship. But, before condemning your husband as a poor talker, make sure you are a good listener.

Capacity for showing affection is a desirable trait in both husbands and wives. Even though a wife knows that her husband loves her, she still likes to be reminded.

A husband's serious-mindedness, if carried to an extreme, can make life dull and boring for his wife. Concentrating on getting ahead is commendable, but everybody needs a little fun along the way. On the other hand, husbands frequently object to their wives' lack of serious-mindedness. This difficulty usually results from lack of understanding on both sides, rather than from the exclusive fault of either.

Religious life is an important influence in raising a family. An area of agreement on fundamental matters of faith should be established before marriage. In the details of religious observance, the husband usually defers to the wife, since her interest and responsibility are generally greater.

Carelessness in dress, though a superficial trait, is an annoying one, the more so because it can easily be overcome.

Fundamental selfishness is contrary to the whole spirit of marriage. True harmony between husband and wife demands self-forgetfulness. But don't magnify your husband's faults; if he is generous in large matters, you can overlook thoughtlessness in little things.

Thriftiness is essential if income is limited. Emotionally as well as financially, it is less of a hardship for either if practiced by both.

Are You Capable of Love?

Love is a very complex process, not easily defined and almost impossible to measure. These questions to be answered "Yes" or "No" may help you see some of its major elements.

1. Do you know many selfish, inconsiderate people?
2. Will you really sacrifice to have expensive clothes?
3. Do you try to get even when people hurt you?
4. Would you dislike being a teacher or nurse?
5. Is having a job after marriage very important to you?
6. Are you strongly attached to your parents?
7. Do your friends bring their troubles to you?
8. Are you free from disgust and aversion about sex?
9. Can you enjoy staying home as much as going out?
10. Are you usually cheerful and happy?
11. Did you like most of your schoolteachers?
12. Are your parents quite affectionate with you?
13. Do music and beautiful things move you deeply?
14. Is it easy for you to make and keep friends?
15. Do you very much want children when you marry?
16. Can you usually stay within your allowance?
17. Do you like your friends to visit your home?
18. Is it easy to discuss personal things with your mother?
19. Do you try not to hurt others' feelings?
20. Are you affectionate with persons you like?

The first 5 questions should be answered no, the 15 remaining yes. With a score of 16 or more, you should have few doubts when the right man comes along. If your score is 12 or less, you can hardly be sure of your feelings about any man you have dated less than two years.

Make sure you're justified in seeking changes in your husband; perhaps the solution lies in changing your own attitude. But if you are doing your best, and he is not, seek his co-operation. Remember that a wife who is willing to go more than halfway seldom has to.

Your Daughter's Marriage

TENS of thousands of girls are now happily preparing to be married in June. Plans for the wedding are uppermost in the minds of many, and in these the whole family is usually involved.

But far more important than preparations for the wedding is the daughter's preparation for marriage. This is primarily the mother's responsibility, and the process should begin long before a girl reaches marriage age. But whether it has or hasn't, there are still opportunities for helpfulness which no mother should overlook.

● Training in household skills. The bride who is an accomplished housekeeper starts her marriage with an advantage. If the mother hasn't already taught her daughter to cook, to clean, to market, she can still teach her the rudiments, even in the last weeks before marriage. Shrewd marketing warrants special attention, for the young wife is often accustomed to a higher standard of living than her young husband can afford.

● Attention to finances. Many a new husband, wanting to give his bride the best, consents to a scale of living beyond his means. A mother should encourage her daughter to be realistic about budgeting from the start.

● Importance of physical relationship. Some mothers neglect altogether their obligation to instruct their daughters in the sex relationship; others create the false and harmful impression that sex is a duty and a cross.

Instead, a mother should help her daughter to understand sex as the physical medium through which husband and wife express their affection for each other. Because men differ from women in physical responsiveness, weeks and even months are often required before a satisfactory adjustment is achieved. The girl who is frightened, uncertain or misinformed is poorly equipped to make this adjustment. The wise mother will do her utmost to inform and encourage her daughter. Sex is a vital part of marriage; sexual maladjustment is almost always a factor in early divorces.

● Encouraging companionship. The parents' good example is the most effective way of teaching a girl the importance of companionship. Even so, a mother will do well to urge her daughter to make a deliberate effort to be a good companion for her husband.

Marriage is not a perpetual idyl; it is a working partnership between two dissimilar human beings. A girl should expect to work for the happiness she hopes to find in marriage. The mother who has so taught her daughter has prepared her soundly for the most difficult and the most rewarding role she will ever undertake.

Do You Agree?

Is there any reason why a wife should put more in a marriage than a husband?

Yes—for selfish reasons if no other. She has more to lose. Usually she cannot earn as good a living, her social status declines, the children become her responsibility, she is less marriageable. In short, a divorced wife has far less security than a divorced husband.

Coty
now adds
a brilliant new Creamy Lipstick
smooth · easy to apply · yet never smears!
IN SIX FASHION-RIGHT SHADES THAT HARMONIZE
BEAUTIFULLY WITH COTY AIR SPUN FACE POWDER
Rose Fuchsia
Geranium
Red Ribbon
Continental
Sophisticate
Coty
NEW CREAMY LIPSTICK IN JEWEL-LIKE FLUTED CASE • $1.00 PLUS TAX
Compounded and Copyrighted by Coty, Inc. in U. S. A.

Prom Planning

THE SUB-DEB · EDITED BY MAUREEN DALY

HOP into your blue jeans, tie a big kerchief round your head and let's get started. It's time for the decorating committee to get to work on plans for decking the gym for the school prom. The No. 1 problem for every decorating committee is: How to cover up the most space with the most color for the least money. So besides scissors, wire, crepe paper and stepladder, you'll need new ideas, and lots of them! Balloons can be bought at $3.40 for 12 dozen (they even come in white and silver) and crepe paper is $1.10 for 12 rolls; but before you try stretching the budget to include glamour items, get the help of your school's classes on tickets, posters and dance bids, the camera club for photographic blow-ups and pictures for the walls, and the drama-club prop room for scenery from old school plays, such as the white picket fencing and cardboard-rock wishing well from last year's production of Smilin' Through. Pick your theme, line up all the materials your school has on hand, and then get to work!

It's in the stars . . . And we predict that a "Futuristic Prom," as a send-off to the seniors, will be a big success. It's a combination of fantasy and sophistication, heavenly predictions and down-to-earth decorations. Make the gym a mystic world hung with crystal balls, signs of the zodiac, shooting stars and half-moons, all cut out of silver paper and used with backdrops and streamers of crepe paper in dark midnight blue. Balloons, in silver and dark blue, bob from the ceiling on long strings, to be broken at midnight and send a shower of "fortunes" to the floor. (Insert a slip of paper with a fortune on it into each balloon before blowing it up.) Keep the lights low and place fortunetellers (underclassmen, the drama club and a few empty fish bowls will help) in dark corners to peer over crystal balls. Invitations reading, "I see you at the Senior Prom with a tall young man on —— at ——," can be printed on heavy, white circles of paper, then covered with clear cellophane to resemble crystal balls. Senior proms need souvenirs, and a small sterling-silver "world," in charm-bracelet or key-ring size, engraved with "1949," can be bought for about $1.50 each—or cheaper by the dozen. (Check with the company from which you ordered class rings on this.) For a comic touch, either around the entrance or in the refreshment room, line the walls with big advertising cutouts on which you have pasted the heads of prominent fellows and girls in your class. Each ad will predict a future, of course. Joe Smith, hot man with the glee club, might find his head on the body of Frankie Laine, mike in hand; or one of the glamour gals might see herself in house dress and apron, vacuuming a rug. The camera club can help you here with blow-ups of photographs, but try to keep the idea a secret from the rest of the class till prom night. Even the music can be mañana in theme, with such songs as Always, Tomorrow is Another Day, I'll See You in My Dreams and whatever new songs with a similar theme happen to be popular. In fact, everything is in the future except the fun you'll have, and that will be right on hand all evening.

April showers, May flowers . . . This is a colorful, pretty-pretty prom, especially good for a girls' school, where the gals will want the gym to look all fussy 'n' female for the evening. Your problem will be indoor planting—to bring the outside inside, like a big spring garden. Line the sides of the gym with as much white picket fencing and trellis as you can find in the drama-club prop room or can rent from one of the department stores in town. (Many stores use such fencing for decorating display windows.) Arrange a white trellised arch, twined with flowers, through which couples must pass to reach the dance floor, and a terrace of imitation-grass matting for sitting out dances. Use pastel crepe paper, thin wire and your own ingenuity to make dozens and dozens and dozens of flowers to grow up the fences, fill empty corners and hang down from the ceiling on long strings tied to gas-filled balloons. (Check your faculty adviser and then a dental-supply company for a special harmless gas for blowing up balloons.) Clear white cellophane, cut in long fringes and hung the same way, shimmers and rustles like spring rain. Turn the bandstand into a big flower cart by crowding the upper edge with flowers and placing two huge cardboard wheels and handles in just the right positions. As dance favors, give each girl an imitation carnation boutonniere to pin on her beau boy's lapel, and for each girl herself, a tiny bottle of perfume in flower scents to tie on her wrist with a short silver ribbon. For refreshments, serve small white cookies and a fruit-and-ginger-ale punch with tiny fresh flowers, such as violets or sweetheart roses, frozen into the ice block. The whole evening should have a gay, flowers-that-bloom-in-the-spring feeling about it, and the gals will be just as festive and pretty as the gym looks when the last daffodil is wired in place!

Here come the clowns . . . A circus motif is a good idea for a big school prom because the climbing ropes and ladders hanging from the ceiling, the basketball loops and the heaps of tumbling mats piled in the corner of the gym can all be worked in as part of the circus scenery. Turn the gym into a big circus tent by stringing alternate strips of red and white crepe paper, either from the center of the ceiling to the floor in a canopy or down the walls like a tent. Tie bunches of brightly colored balloons everywhere, dress the ticket taker in checked trousers and a bright vest like a carnival barker, and perch him on a high stool just inside the entrance door. Put the art class to work on huge, splashy posters of circus clowns, bright-striped tigers and aerial artists, painted on brown paper and hung along the walls for colorful circus atmosphere. A round bandstand can be draped with crepe paper and painted with gaudy horses to look like a merry-go-round, and a good-natured band leader might be persuaded to dress up in top hat and tails like a circus ringmaster. The Big Parade (grand march, to you!) can be marched to rollicking calliope tunes, and the refreshments for the evening should be served circus-style, with pink lemonade, hot dogs, peanuts and animal cookies for sale in two red-and-white-striped booths. Keep the music loud, the lights bright and the colors in the reds, blues and yellows of circus splendor, and the whole crowd will agree that this year your committee has put on "the greatest show on earth."

STAR DUST IN YOUR EYES?

. . . walking on air? Got that "this is it" feeling? Maybe you have found your No. 1 dream man, or maybe you're just too much in love to see the truth. Why not take time out for Sub Deb booklet Know Your Man No. 1552 and Going Steady, No. 1669, before you make up your mind for sure? Each booklet just five cents from the Reference Library, Leaflet Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Just Imagine!

PRELL REMOVES DANDRUFF IN AS LITTLE AS 3 MINUTES... LEAVES HAIR RADIANTLY SOFT AND RADIANTLY SMOOTH!

William Bendix, star of Prell's radio show and Universal-International's movie "The Life of Riley," says: "No embarrassing dandruff when you're a regular Prell user! And that Prell tube works great in the shower."

"My hair looks so radiant after a Prell shampoo, it simply shines! And after Prell it's so easy to do!" says Meg Randall—"Babs" in the film "The Life of Riley," based on Prell's radio comedy.

Doctors' examinations proved Prell—with its exclusive formula and its amazing patented cleansing ingredient—removes unsightly dandruff in as little as 3 minutes! They proved too, that regular Prell shampoos actually control such dandruff! Your hair is radiantly clean after Prell—more radiant than with the most expensive soap shampoo known! More radiant—in hardest water—than with any known cream shampoo! Radiant, and so easy to manage, to comb, to set, and to curl!

Prell in that handy tube (no spill or break!) goes farther than any other known shampoo, because it's more concentrated. Get a tube of this exciting Radiant * Creme shampoo—today!

Created by Procter & Gamble

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Very personally yours

New luxury comes into your life—the da you discover the new Kotex. For it gives yo the softness that fulfills your fondest dream o comfort. Actually . . .

Miracle softness that you've never know before! You see, this softness really lasts, hold its shape without sacrificing safety, because the new Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. Moreover . . .

You'll never have a moment's qualm, with those flat pressed ends that prevent revealing outlines. And with that exclusive safety center —designed for your extra protection.

Welcome features all . . . and all 3 absorbencies of Kotex provide them. You have a choice of Regular, Junior, Super, to answer your needs exactly. To help you maintain that carefree assurance . . . so very personally yours

*more women choose Kotex

than all other sanitary napkins—

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

How to Catch a Husband

By
G. M. WHITE

UCH has been written about the human male; nevertheless, many girls still want husbands. "How can I get a husband?" is a question single girls n ask themselves and others, but they om get an answer from an authority, as a husband. Even a husband may know how it is done, although the secret been in his family for generations. Those do know may be reluctant to tell. But e cads will tell everything.

here are some unmarried girls who pre- l not to be interested in getting a man. se who expect too much say there aren't men worth having. Others claim there aren't any men. They believe all eligi- nen live in faraway uninhabited places. s is hard to understand when there are almost every place you look. (Unless look in outlandish places, of course.) k around you. All men are obviously somewhere else. No, not those million- s with physiques like Greek gods, not se cunning wolves with chiseled profiles. y are mirages. But real men are all ut, undisguised. They are like sheep in ep's clothing.

here is no shortage of marriageable men he United States. And it simply isn't e that all desirable, handsome and in- igent men are married, as this writer pens to be.

ome women never marry because they men exactly as they are rather than as n see themselves. They ask, "What is so nderful about a man? They are no longer ential either for protection or support. men necessary?" (Do not trouble your- with questions of this sort. By consid- ble research the fact that there are two essary sexes has been fairly well estab- ed.)

Now you do want a husband, but let's ep it a little secret, shall we? This does mean that you should act as though don't want one. That will only defeat ur purpose. But wearing a sign, either e that says "Hands Off" or "Help Your- f," will defeat it much quicker. One of two gravest mistakes a girl can make is expect not to like a man before she even ets him. The other is to expect to fall in e with him immediately after the intro- ction. Men at best are merely likable, ver lovable, at first.

Men don't bite unless you know them ry well indeed. If you have good teeth, , why not be friendly? If you have found an you like, just say "Hello, Mr. Man!" en you meet, in the brightest, most nor- l way possible. Usually he will say Hello" right back unless he is thinking of other girl. If this is the case, it will re- ire the use of an obscure mathematical stem called "Transformation of Invari- ts," which is too complex to go into here, t it consists of substituting yourself for e other girl he has in mind. This system understood perfectly by most women, en by those who are poor at arithmetic.

One school of thought on man trapping has as its motto, "First, bait trap." This was formerly known as "setting her cap for him." Modern hats reveal the desperate trend. With some hats you couldn't catch a cricket. It's what's already under the hat that counts. But the thought behind the old-fashioned expression is worth considering, both for its delicacy and for its practical results. The main thing to remember is the real you is the bait. Some girls trap nothing but themselves.

Let's face facts: you've got all you're going to get to work with. There is absolutely nothing you can buy that won't wear out, collapse or wash off. A clean-cut young man does not come with every package of bubble bath—not immediately, anyway. Of course you want to wear cosmetics properly, and as many pretty things as you can afford—heavens, yes! But don't confuse these wholly external things with the real you. A man marries the essential woman.

Suppose you do set your cap a bit for some fellow you like. Do you begin by chasing him right off? Not on your life, or that's just what you will do. Don't try too hard. (Some girls appear not to try at all. Whether it is worth the effort, only they can say.) The first step is to attract his attention without his noticing it. This you cannot fail to do if you are both human beings. If he is not, maybe he isn't the man for you. But do not despair. The best is none too good.

A man is seldom wonderful in mere physical being, but the girl who wants a husband must remember that the high value placed upon the male is easily understandable to him. This value is fixed by women, for rarely does one man think another is as wonderful as he is. A man likes to bask in admiration too strong for words, just as a woman likes to be pampered for herself alone. The ego is fed chiefly by the opposite sex, and empty flattery isn't food. Only genuine appreciation is spiritually fattening. It is doubtful that there are any truly self-made men; there most certainly never was a self-made husband.

You probably think you are reading a lot of platitudes, but there is no greater wisdom than this: know thyself, be thyself, love thy neighbor, if he's single. The surest way to catch and keep a husband is to love him. This takes time, and perhaps effort, but many husbands will testify it's worth it. A man sticks to love as a fly to flypaper. Sweetness attracts him, but love holds him.

This is probably not the only way to catch a husband, but it is a tried-and-true way and it requires neither brazenness, subterfuge nor firearms. It is the only method which assures lasting success. If any man is to belong to you, you must love him wholeheartedly, unselfishly, out of the agony of your soul, from the tips of your toes to the ends of the earth. At this moment he should be running close upon your heels. Just slow down and pretend to let him catch you.

When a Slip becomes a social error
... switch to
Mary Barron

* Based on an embarrassing episode of Mrs. T. Otto of Cincinnati, Ohio, to whom we have sent a check for $50. Sets of 3 slips have gone to five other letter writers.

Slip in bad behavior! Shy boy grabbed mother's skirt. Slip had crawled up. In-laws' dignity suffers shock and young mother endures blushing embarrassment. "Never again!" she writes. "From now on Mary Barron "Biastrait" slips for me." For they do not crawl up, tug down on straps nor twist maddeningly around the hips. How beautifully they behave under sheer or heavy dresses (with no front or side seams) and give full freedom in action or repose.

MADE OF BUR-MIL QUALITY CO.

A lavish Alencon lace and Bur-Mil* crepe slip in shell pink and white. Sizes 12, 32 to 44, 31½ to 39½. Buy Mary Barron slips in the same size as your brassiere.
*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
About $6.00

SUBJECT TO A STUDY OF RESULTS BY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Mary Barron Slips are sold at leading stores in U.S.A. and Canada.

If not available at your favorite store, write to Mary Barron.

* WIN $50.00 for your most embarrassing slip moment if used in our advertising. Five other awards of 3-slip sets. Mail to Mary Barron, c/o The Davidson Brothers Corp., 180 Madison Avenue, New York 16, N.Y.

I dreamed I was buying my silverplate.
It was the kind with these nothing but the best for my dreams you know, and what lovely patterns!

★ The new Spring Garden and Danish Princess and Lovely Lady and Youth.....All of them inlaid with the two blocks of sterling silver at the backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks to stay lovelier longer!

Such beautiful silverplate!
Such a wonderful dream!
I hope it comes true!

Youth Spring Garden
Danish Princess Lovely Lady

SEE Holmes & Edwards at your jewelry or department stores. In this, the finest of silverplate, you'll find the loveliest of patterns. Spring Garden, Danish Princess, Lovely Lady, and Youth. All made in the U. S. A. by The International Silver Co.

BUY Holmes & Edwards now! It is the greatest silverplate value your money can buy... and the price is only $68.50 for the 52-piece service for 8 with chest, $99.95 for the 76-piece service for 12.

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

MADE BY THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.

★ SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER—4 FIVE O'CLOCK TEASPOONS FOR ONLY $1. These lovely spoons in the new Spring Garden design are ideal for desserts, cream and sherbet. At all jewelry and department stores for a limited time on Copyright 1949, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn.

Sold in Canada by The T. Eaton Co., Ltd., °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

IN May, 1899, Chicago opened a women's athletic club, the only club of its kind in the world. The Florodora Girls were the rage of New York, and Queen Victoria celebrated her eightieth birthday. A new long-distance speed record for automobiles was set: 17.6 m.p.h. In The Hague, Queen Wilhelmina opened the Peace Conference.

"No girl in the world dresses more becomingly than the self-supporting girl of America," writes Editor Bok in the May, 1899, JOURNAL. "Give her a straw hat, a shirtwaist and skirt, with tie and belt to match, and she steps forth fresh, comely and charming."

"Too frequent washings will turn the hair gray," believes Mrs. Humphrey, who thinks about once a month is enough. "Brushing the eyebrows and eyelashes with a solution of green tea improves them," she believes.

Food prices: Lamb chops, 5 cents, lobster, 20 cents, a prime rib roast of beef, $1.00.

"Do not hold the baby the whole time he is awake," advises the author of Suggestions to Mothers.

"Personally," states food expert Mrs. Rorer, "I do not believe that liver and kidneys should ever be eaten. They are palatable, but not nutritious."

A piece about nineteen-year-old Helen Keller reveals that the deaf and blind girl had already mastered Greek, German, French and algebra, could use a typewriter and swim, and was about to enter Radcliffe College.

For whitening the hands: "Make a lotion of horse-radish and hot milk."

Bicycling advice: "When the hill is so steep that you cannot ascend without opening the mouth, it is far better and wiser to dismount."

Journal about Town

PHOTO BY DI PIETRO

The Workshop has closed, but Mary Bass and John Morris are still busy.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

FOR a long time now, all of us who have worked on How America Lives, but Mary Bass especially, have been asked again and again when we were going to get around to telling how the JOURNAL lives—turnabout being fair play, readers have pointed out. So this month it is all in the magazine, including Mrs. B., who as Executive Editor in charge of the Workshop has handled the story night and day; as you can see by the shot above, in which long after dark she's still making Kodachrome selections with Picture Editor John Godfrey Morris. "Like doing a dozen families," she described it, "all at once."

•

Gladys Taber, along with countless readers, was so won over by the bridal quilt in February that she sent for the pattern, and we are now dropping a hint to her fans that she needs scraps of material in plain soft colors (dots and checks will do, too)—blues, pale greens, rose, but nothing in the orange scale. Must be cotton, and must be rather rugged because of an Irish setter and assorted cocker spaniels.

•

We didn't mean to make a mystery of the girl in the Victor hat on the March cover, but so many readers have written to ask who she is, and so many have phoned, that in case you, too, have been wondering—it is Gene Tierney.

•

And in case anyone wants to know who the girl this month is, it's Miss Karen Stewart, of Laguna Beach, California, who became an accomplished model in a single day, posing her best after a bottle and a fifteen-minute nap, and is now just twice as old as she was last November, when her age was five months and she became a cover girl.

JOHN MECHLING

Five-month-old cover girl.

Remember Betty Conrad, of How America Lives, back in September, 1944? Thirty-three, seven children, test-pilot husband, and more get-up-and-go than almost anyone else in the series, before or since—remember? Well, we've just had a ten-page letter. She's in Switzerland for a year with all the children (eight now, but still hoping for ten); the trip a long-planned present from her husband, who flew over for Christmas. All the kids old enough are at Swiss country schools, while Mrs. C. just sleeps, eats, reads, walks, knits, collects recipes and enjoys her family. No movies, no phone, no washing machine, no car. If there's a place too far to go on foot, there's always the village taxi you see in the picture she sent us.

High in the Swiss Alps, the Conrads set out for a trip in the village "taxi."

With the whole Workshop coming in for close attention this month, we'd like to give you a glance behind the scenes of this particular page, too, concerning a certain kind of titillating tip we get occasionally from our colleagues around the office. Such as the one about an endowment fund at Harvard for providing free ice cream in the dining halls for students, and at Yale for free strawberry shortcake. Naturally, we check. And in this case the tip, while charming, turned out to be baseless, causing quite a little consternation at both Yale and Harvard. But our time wasn't entirely wasted, because during our research we did discover an endowment fund at Vassar which provides, for the girls there, free logs for their fireplaces.

•

A hat designer Cynthia McAdoo knows got tired of hearing women say they couldn't afford, for only one occasion, such a frivolous creation; so now, for that one occasion, she rents them any hat they want, for $3 a day—$15 deposit. If they don't come back for the deposit, she knows they're going to keep the hat. One customer was a girl who spent hours picking out a hat to rent for a blind date, then came back the next day and rented another hat—for her wedding.

•

May turns out to be quite a month for birthdays, beginning on the 2nd with Bing Crosby and ending on the 31st with Fred Allen; Gary Cooper on the 7th, Henry Fonda, Robert Montgomery, Beatrice Lillie, Cornelia Otis Skinner on the 16th, 21st, 29th, and 30th; and to top it off, on the 8th—Harry S. Truman.

•

What kind of laugher are you? A British professor has classified laughers as follows: People whose laugh has an A-A sound are cheerful and kind. An E-E sound means they are egotistic and moody. Children and old people laugh I-I. O-O means melancholy and pessimism. As for U-U—that's the sign of a hypocrite and cheat. . . . According to a recent survey, an abortion is performed almost every minute of the day—and 90 per cent of the women are married. . . . Of people who read books, 57 per cent rent them, 31 per cent buy them. . . .The best section gang on the Alaska Railroad is composed of eight Indian women, says the general manager. . . . More than 16,000,000 American women are now holding pay-roll jobs, 27 per cent of the nation's total labor force.

For the first time she was touched with jealousy. "You have never said you loved me, and yet you have asked me to marry you, William?"

Let love come last

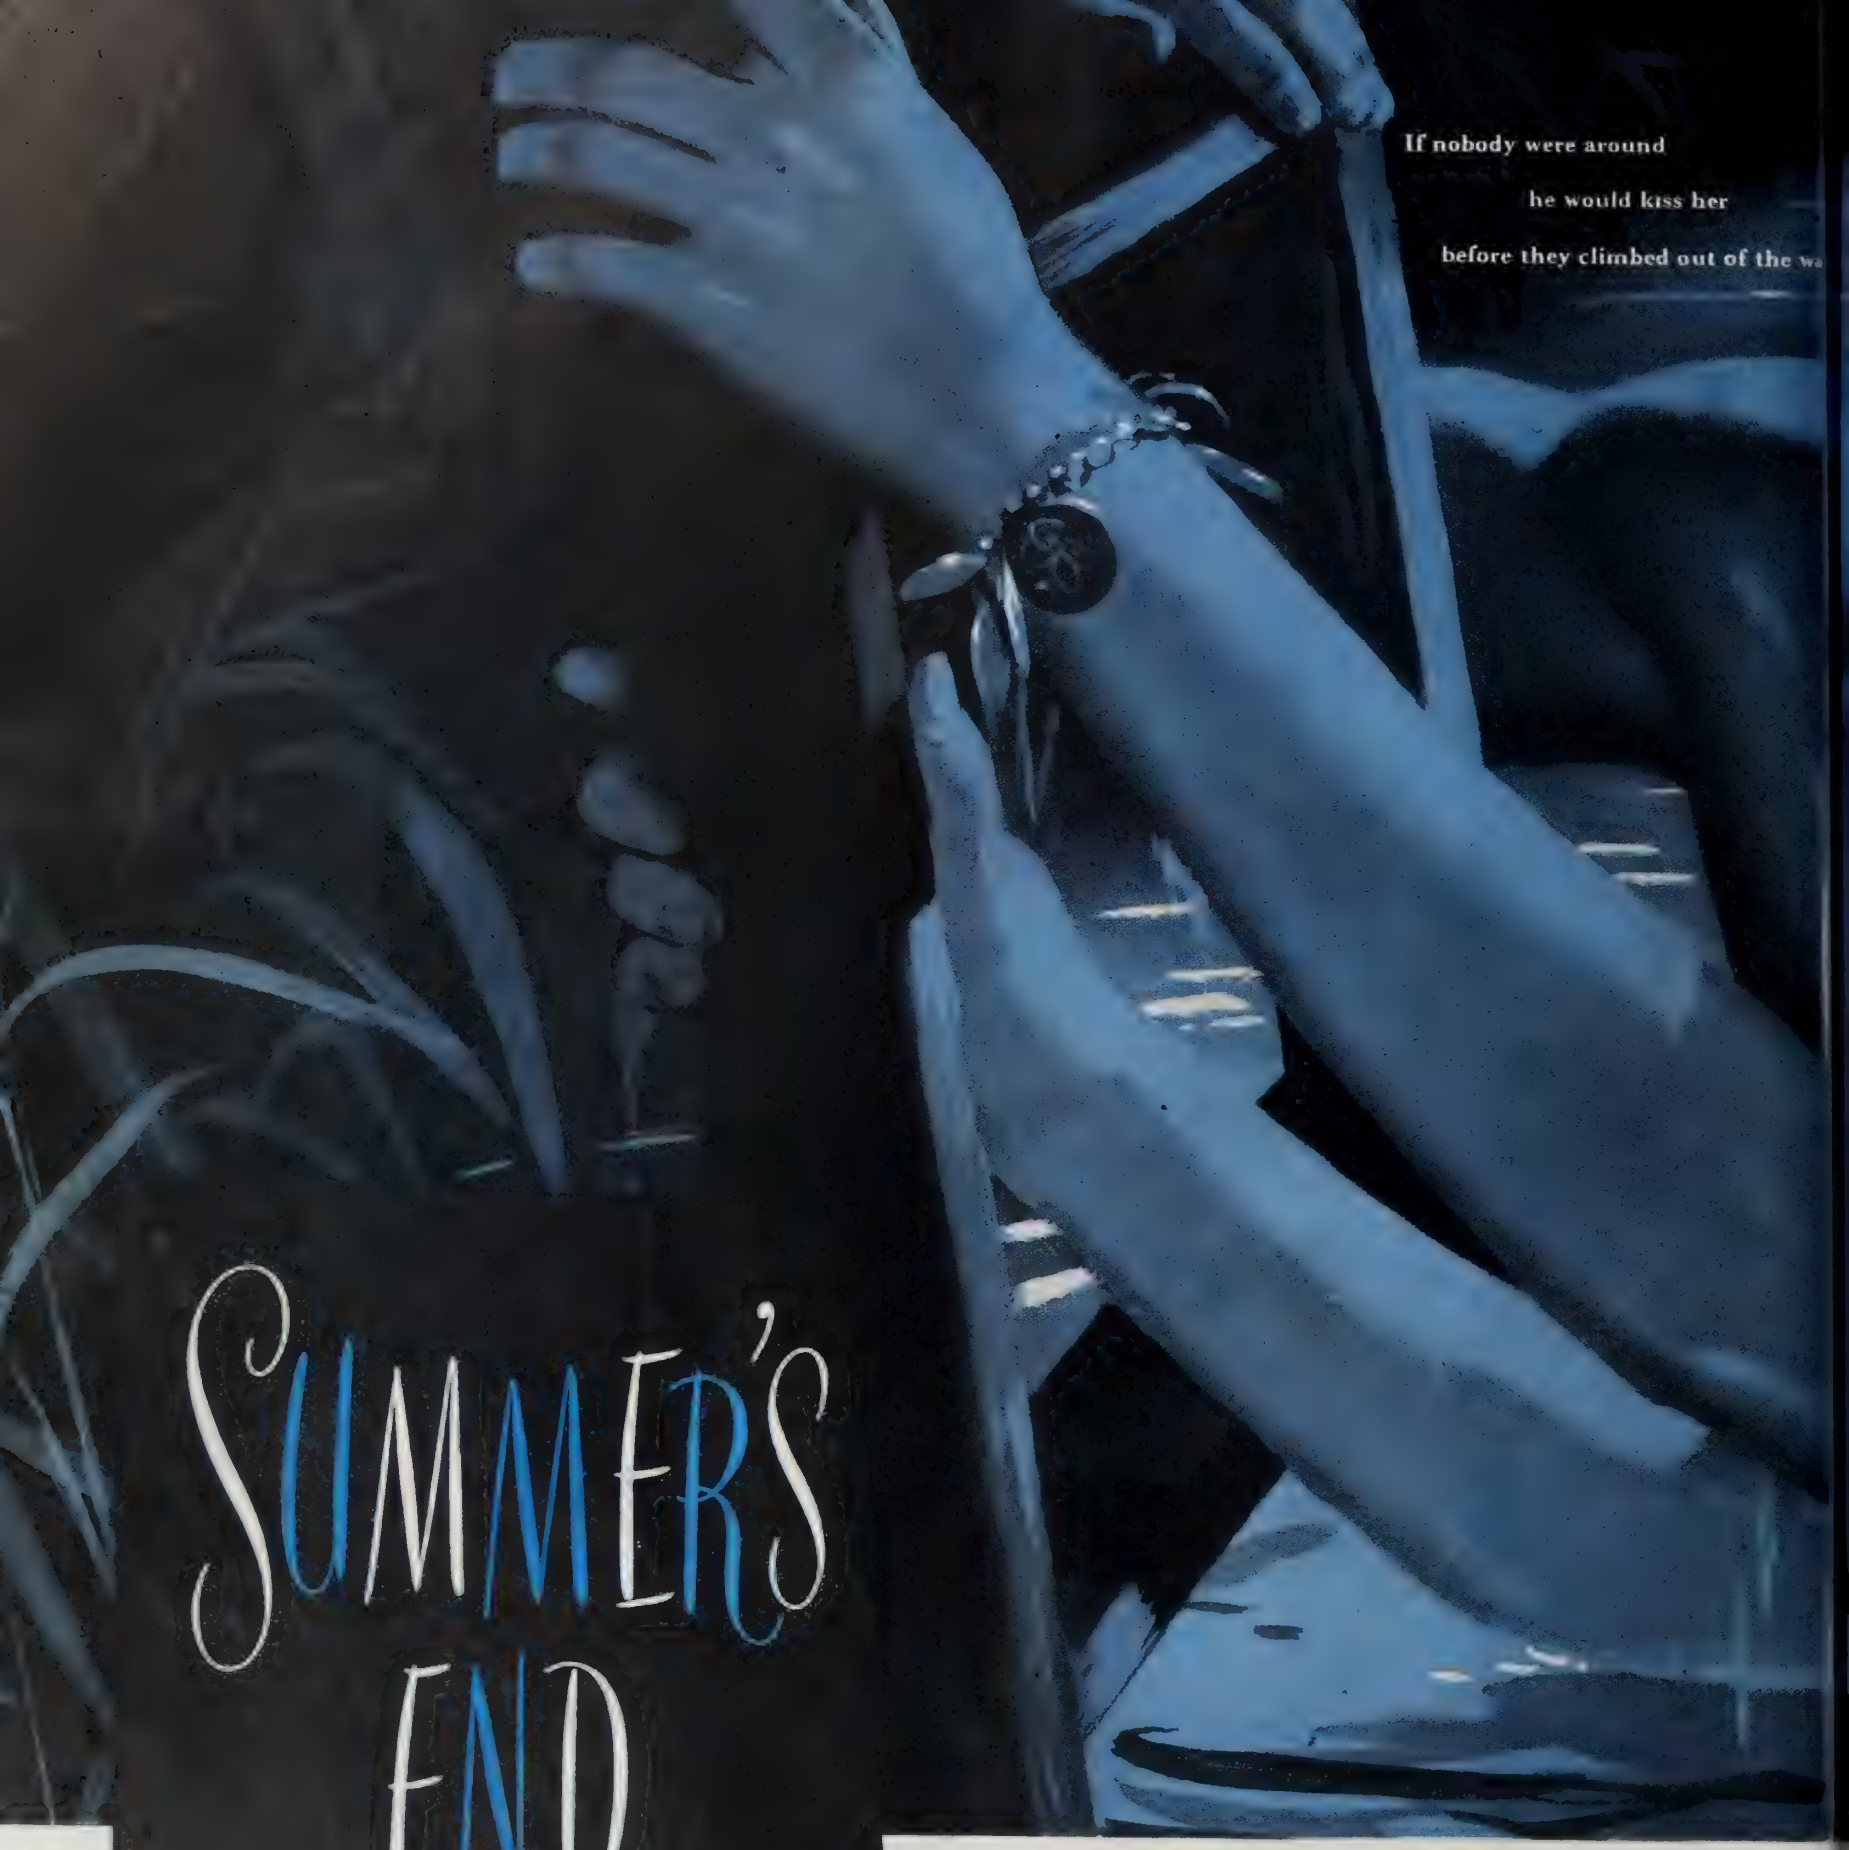
beginning a new serial

What choice can there be, for a woman in love?

"MY dear and beloved children ——" The words had a grave resonance, sonorous and measured. They were an epilogue to a man's life, thought Ursula Prescott, her bent head throwing a shadow upon the paper in her hands. But then, was there ever prologue or epilogue? In the beginning the end was already inherent. The epilogue should begin the story of a man's life, for his end was the beginning, as the overture carries an opera's whole theme. William Prescott had uttered his entire existence in his birth cry.

Ursula's hand touched the paper gently. She was not a woman who cried easily. She felt the cold salt drops on her cheeks, and the sensation was strange and unfamiliar. She folded the paper slowly, but not before she had again read the words: "My wife." She said aloud, as a mother would speak to a tormented child who begs for forgiveness: "Yes, my darling. I understand. It doesn't matter." She was never a religious woman. She had hoped, at one time, for personal immortality. Now, almost with passion, she hoped that William had found complete annihilation, complete darkness and nothingness. Only then would he have merciful peace and rest.

She stood up, went to the casement windows and glanced out. The small private park swept before her, darkening steadily under a dark opal of a winter sky. The naked black trees were daubed with snow; the ground glimmered spectrally. Far off, she could see the low gray wall that surrounded the grounds. How often she had stood at this window, and had seen this exact scene, and felt its desolation! She had always hated this house. But William had loved it, and though she had never spoken of her detestation, he had known with that brooding subtlety of his. It had been another of her crimes against him.



Her thoughts ran on. She thought of Oliver, who would be coming with Barbara soon. It was hard to believe (Continued on Page 64)

Copyright, 1949, by Reback & Reback

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

by TAYLOR CALDWELL

SUMMER'S END

By GERTRUDE SCHWEITZER

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

No one can ask for more than one spring.

DAVE BANNON walked the long way around, up the hill from the pond, carrying his wet swimming trunks over his shoulder. By the time he got to the top of the hill they were almost dry, and he sat down in the shadow of the big sugar maple in front of the high school to cool off again.

Tomorrow, he thought, Lorrie will be sitting here with me. We'll hold hands, and she'll tell me about her summer, and I'll kiss her.

The thought of Lorrie, which had been with him the whole day, made his heart hammer with a familiar excitement and anticipation. He had not felt this good for a long time, not since graduation in June. He leaned his head against the tree trunk and looked up at the remember

big gray field-stone school. It would be funny, he thought, never to go in there any more except as a visitor, never to walk through the musty, school-smelling halls to classes, or listen to old Fillmore's yearly joke about the freshmen, or dribble a basketball the length of the gym with everybody cheering, or wait for Lorrie in front of Gaynor's statue and walk home with her.

It hadn't been much of a summer. He had thought it was going to be wonderful, with high school behind him and everything else ahead, but it hadn't turned out that way. There didn't seem to be anything he really wanted to do. His dad said it was the letdown, after being president of the G.O. and making All-County basketball, but Dave didn't know. Everything seemed different, sort of—well, dead. And then the worst of it was that Lorrie had gone away for the summer for the first time in all the years he had known her, to some mountain resort up north, and she had written to him only three times.

Of course she had warned him about that the night before she left, right here under their tree.

"I'm awful at letters," she had told him, "but it won't mean I'm not thinking of you. And before you know it I'll be back."

"You don't really want to go, do you, Lorrie?"

"Well, it's sort of exciting, you know," she said, "when I've never been anyplace but here. But I hate to

(Continued on Page 113)

The little small young thing

ILLUSTRATED BY

Coby Whitmore

"Rest now, darling," he said. "In a little while [illegible] they'll need you."

BACK home again after the war and G. I. schooling, young Bob Eagan, big, blue-eyed, quiet and kind, settled down in his parents' home and worked in Judge Ramsey's office, as the most junior of the three lawyers who, from their offices overlooking the square, looked after the troubles of the community.

Almost at once Bob felt lonely. The girls and boys he had grown up with were married, with babies and prefabricated houses and mortgages all their own. Only Bill Henry, who was a little younger than Bob, was still running around single, and he was going about with a crowd even younger than himself. "Don't worry," Bill said. "I can fix you up with a date. Elizabeth is going to the dance with me Saturday night and she'll get a girl for you. Just leave it to us."

"A blind date!" groaned Bob. "Shades of freshman days! What kind of girl can you dig up around here on a blind date?"

"Take a chance," Bill urged. "The girls you used to know can't date you now!"

Bob laughed and agreed. On Saturday night he went to Elizabeth's with Bill. He remembered Elizabeth. She must be all of twenty, he thought. She had been a kid in junior high when he was on the basketball team. He dreaded what lay before him, but he didn't want to spend another Saturday evening playing contract with his parents and his grandmother. Elizabeth was pretty as a picture. She wore a striped lavender-and-silver frock that was surprisingly smart. Her fair hair was cut quite short.

"Your date's upstairs, Bob," she said. "She's dressing. I had to lend her an evening dress." This didn't sound too promising, but Elizabeth turned to Bill. "It's Jane Smith," she said, and she winked at Bill.

Just then heels came clattering rapidly down the steps and Jane Smith came flying into the room, fairly running. Bob stood up and his heart stopped beating. She was moving right in on them and fast, yet it seemed a long time to him while she took those few last steps. It was almost as though it were all in a slow-motion picture. She looked quite grown-up in the long scarlet dress. A cloud of dark hair hung down on her shoulders. She had the biggest, softest, darkest eyes Bob had ever seen. Her oval face, flawless and beautiful, her soft, young red mouth, her excitement—there was something almost incredible about her. Her small waist gave her a kind of precious look. Her neck was slender, as were her wrists and ankles. She had on some dark flat shoes that looked all right on her but were not really the shoes to wear with the dress. But Bob didn't care about anything like that. He gulped.

"For heaven's sake!" he said. "Where have you been? Don't tell me you live around here. I never saw you before!"

She laughed—a chime of sound. She blushed. She ducked her head.

(Continued on Page 171)

She was just the size
to slip through the old crack, right into his heart.

By MARGARET WEYMOUTH JACKSON

MENTAL ILLNESS BEGINS AT HOME

by JOAN YOUNGER

Mental illness seldom strikes a member of a family in which love is the old stand-by home remedy and is given daily in large doses.

Just as pasteurization of milk and the nature of contagion have become matters of household knowledge, so the hygiene of the emotions and of the mind should be a matter of current information and use in the home and in the school. Maladjustments are made—no one is born with them. They are symptoms of frictions in the struggle to satisfy human needs. There is no fatality or futility about these problems of growth—nothing to be gloomy about. Help and knowledge are available. This article should be required reading for all adults.

—KENNETH E. APPEL, M. D.
Associate Director, Philadelphia Institute

Emotional strength comes from the capacity to love and be loved. Mental health throughout life is largely determined during childhood, when one is most dependent upon parental love.

PHOTO BY BRADLEY SMITH

FOR days, the boy had been crouched in a corner of his room. He refused to talk; he ate next to nothing. When anyone came near him, he raised his young, thin face from his arms, and the cold hostility of his eyes under his unkempt dark hair stared with a seeming menace.

His family was afraid of him. His father raged at him to get up, to get to work; his mother wept and screamed at him to obey his father. When they sent for help to take him to the hospital, it was in punishment. He stood up when the intern came into his room, his fists clenched threateningly. The intern stopped still before him, but behind him the nurse kept coming. She walked up to the boy and handed him a pocket comb.

"It's for you," she said. "You'll want to look nice if you're going out."

The boy looked at the comb and at the nurse. Slowly he unclenched his fists, took the comb and straightened first his hair, and then himself. The nurse took his hand; together they walked from house to ambulance.

"He'll be all right," the nurse said to the boy's mother. "He's sick now—but he's going to get well."

We have all heard of love's healing power. We have all brushed now and again against the mysteriousness of its working. We have heard of how a sick child rallied at his mother's whispered words of strength—and of the long vigil a wife kept at the bed of her husband when he seemed doomed to die, but whose coma was pierced by her love.

These are great moments, glorified by song and story. But there are also thousands upon thousands of small, everyday incidents like the one related above—incidents in which love and understanding spelled the difference between success and failure in human relationships.

Love is also the key to the growth and strength of mental and emotional health, and thus to the prevention of mental illness. Over and over, in case after case psychiatrists have discovered cruelty, hate, fear and rejection at the roots of mental disease. Over and over, they have seen love and its handmaidens, acceptance, understanding and tolerance, form the foundations of good mental health.

If love could be injected like a vaccine, our rate of mental illness could be brought to a halt. If it could be prescribed like a pill, we could open the doors of our mental hospitals and let the patients wander at will. But love, being a thing of the spirit, cannot be plotted or graphed, nor sold in a slot machine at a penny a pill. Science cannot handle this problem for us; but it can help us to learn to handle it ourselves. (Continued on Page 102)

MISS WILLOUGHBY • BY GEORGE ROMNEY

Who will be the Old Masters of the future? If there were only some method of foretelling this, one might commission a portrait today, enjoy it in the present, and enrich one's descendants a thousandfold. In 1784, for example, Miss Willoughby's parents paid Romney less than a thousandth part of the price their daughter's picture brought a century and a half later, when it was acquired for the National Gallery of Art.

But how can we tell what pictures will gain in appreciation? Why has the painting of Miss Willoughby come to be so highly treasured? It is merely the conventional and scarcely individualized portrait of a pretty child. Perhaps Romney was even bored with the commission, for he disliked portraiture, and the only sitter he seems to have taken pleasure in painting was Emma, Lady Hamilton, whose strange, restless magnetism enthralled and maddened him. When he painted other people, his real interest lay less in getting a likeness than in solving certain problems of color and design.

But it is because of Romney's genius as a colorist and as a decorator, irrespective of whether or not this portrait is like its sitter, that we enjoy Miss Willoughby today. The harmonious tone of the picture is a lesson in the adroit use of a limited palette, in this case a palette of only three colors, red, yellow and blue. The carmine and white pigments mixed for the flesh, with a little more intensity of color, serve for the sash and the streamers of the hat; the indigo used for the eyes appears again in the sky, where a last faint echo of the rose of the ribbons dies out in the pinkish clouds; and finally the ochreous foliage in the background ties in the cool brown of Miss Willoughby's hair with the warm ivory tones of her dress and hat.

The design is as simple as the color, but no less skillful. The child's gesture seems spontaneous and unposed, but note the tilt of her head to suggest a diagonal movement cross-cutting at right angles the diagonal of the sloping landscape in the background. Imagine the head upright, and the rhythm of the composition vanishes. And how satisfactory in scale is Miss Willoughby in relation to the canvas! These qualities of harmonious color and fine design, so frequently to be found in eighteenth-century English portraiture, are strong indications that a painting will continue to interest posterity and afford to the fortunate sitter a vicarious immortality.

—JOHN WALKER,
Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART, MELLON COLLECTION

MISS WILLOUGHBY

PAINTED BY GEORGE ROMNEY, 1734-1802

Shut the door after you

By HAMLEN HU

Afterward she wondered

if a woman ever

"knows" a man she loves . . .

THROUGH the Public Gardens in the autumn dusk, footfalls quiet on the earthen paths; noting favorite trees—the dark copper beech, and the silver-boled beech at the corner of Charles Street; noting the rather mothy-furred squirrels and the leisurely ducks. Noting the other people: the tired ones, resting on benches for a few minutes; the mated ones, waiting, or meeting or reluctantly parting for just a little while. And the lonely ones. The lonely ones walked, with fixed gaze and even pace, not daring to pause, not daring to sit, trying to look as though they must be somewhere soon, where someone waited.

Fiona Duncan, in a dark plaid reefer and skirt, and a dark beret with a quill at the side, walking alone. On the way home from work to a Beacon Hill apartment, where nobody lived but herself, the last leaf on the barren tree in autumn. Where nobody waited.

Should I have married Skid? she thought. Wouldn't it be better to be married to anyone, than to be alone? At least, I'd be a little useful. What good am I this way?

It came over her with sickening force, as it did now and then, when something made her remember, that once you had loved, you were never the same again: if things went badly, you could not return to being complete in yourself, but instead you ached, with all your awakened heart, for what you knew you wanted.

What had made her remember today was having lunch with Bill Meyer, who had been one of the old group.

"I suppose you know old Skid's going to be married tomorrow?" he said, kindly not looking at her to see how she took the news.

"I haven't heard from him in almost a year," Fiona said steadily. "Is the girl nice?"

Bill sounded a little relieved. "Very nice, she seems. She's got pots of money. As a matter of fact, I guess she's the boss' daughter, and all that, but she's kind of a shy, scared, homely kid, just the same. She and Skid ought to get along."

She was about to retort, If there's enough money and security in it for Skid, indeed they ought! but she was pleased to hear herself say slowly, instead, "Skid would be good for a girl like that."

"Any regrets?" Bill Meyer asked suddenly.

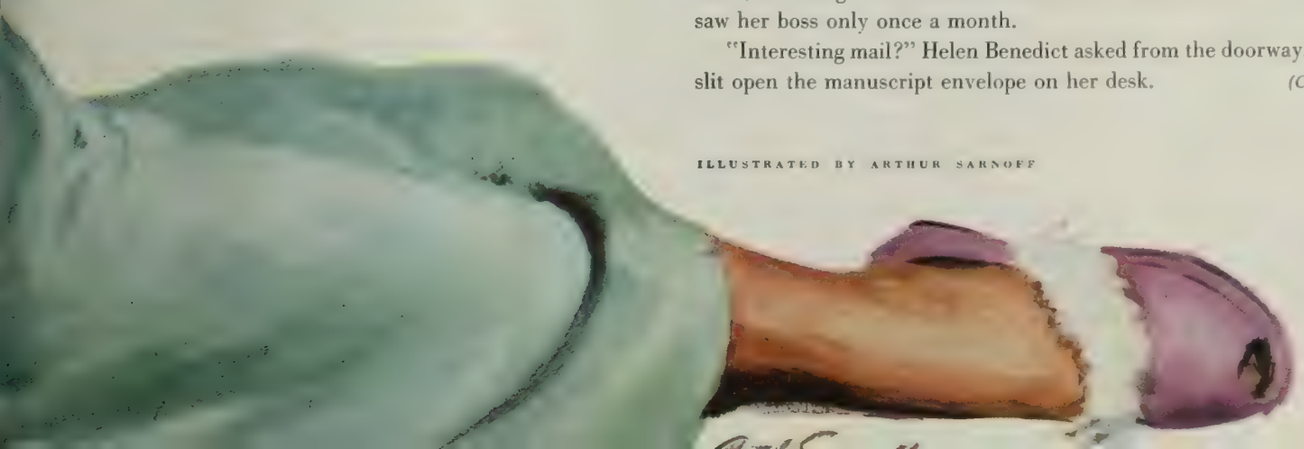
"For Skid?" she said, glancing up at him, and smiling steadily. "No. Not for any of it. I'm glad I knew him, and sorry we broke up, but there's no going back, you know. If I were in Cleveland, I'd dance at his wedding with a light heart, Bill. So don't worry."

Bill said, "That's what I thought, and now let's have the most extravagant lunch on the menu—it's all on the expense account."

Obediently, Fiona ordered lobster, because Bill did. When it came, it had swelled to an enormous size, from the blur of tears in her eyes, and though she poked at it, she could not eat it.

"Just coffee now, thanks," she said.

"Next time I'm in town, let's go to the theater," Bill Meyer said; and she could feel the warmth and kindness in his voice. He liked her. She was a girl men liked now. "I'm leaving at five this afternoon, after this conference, so we can't do it this time. I'm sorry."



"It's been a wonderful lunch," Fiona said, and when she looked at him she could smile, and her dark eyes were clear. "Give my best wishes to Skid when you see him tomorrow. You're going to the wedding, aren't you?"

"I'm best man," Bill said. "Good-by, Fiona."

She walked back to the office in the Park Square Building where she wrote or rewrote most of what went into a geological magazine with an international, if small, following. Old Professor Martin was the editor, but Fiona did the work, and saw her boss only once a month.

"Interesting mail?" Helen Benedict asked from the doorway, as Fiona began to slit open the manuscript envelope on her desk. (Continued on Page 216)

ILLUSTRATED BY ARTHUR SARNOFF

LOVE

A formula for love? Here are four. Only one is the right one, the maker of happy marriages.

By ROALD DAHL

PHOTOGRAPH BY HENRI CARTIER-BRESSON

FROM HARPER'S BAZAAR

Publicized as glamorous, desirable, 'love at first sight' is a bad risk.

LET us first be clear about one thing: when I talk about 'love,' I do not refer to the love of parents for children or of brothers for sisters. That is not 'love' in the modern, un-Biblical sense. That is a straightforward, uncomplicated emotion—nothing more, really, than an exceedingly strong affection, usually constant, invariably powerful, easy to understand and easy to accept. But however constant and powerful it may be, it can seldom win a running battle with the other kind of 'love' when the latter is in full flood.

This other kind of love, the love of two comparative strangers of the opposite sex for each other, is neither straightforward, uncomplicated nor especially constant. It is an alarming and uncontrollable state of mind which causes those afflicted to be lifted suddenly to the most astonishing pinnacles of happiness and to be dropped with equal suddenness deep down into the darkest wells of despair and misery. The fact that in the long run—whatever the romantics may say—despair and misery predominate over happiness does not deter the mass of young people all over the world, and especially in the U. S. A., from wishing constantly, fervently, desperately to achieve this state.

And having achieved it, or believing that they have achieved it, what happens then? They marry. And having married, what then do they do?

Some live together happily ever after.

Some live together happily for a while and then relapse into a state of mutual and benign resignation.

Some live together happily for a while and unhappily for the rest of the time.

Some—and this section constitutes a very large proportion of the whole—live together happily for a while and then separate and divorce and try again.

The above is neither a cynical nor an exaggerated summary of the outcome of modern 'marriage by love,' and we can assume therefore that somehow, somewhere, all is not well with this method. It's no good saying that it is, because it isn't. It can't be, not with the divorce rate the way it is today.

Let us, then, try to examine this question of 'love.'

Our object in doing this will be to try to prove that there are, in fact, two kinds of love, that there is a distinguishable difference between the real kind, the rare one, which causes people to marry and live happily ever after, and the other one, the one which causes them to marry and divorce.

There is on the surface no difference between them. They both produce roughly the same symptoms in the sufferer. Those who are afflicted with the wrong kind of love, the one that leads to divorce, cannot usually tell that it is the wrong kind until too late.

First, we'll take the real love, the rare one, th maker of fine marriages.

What is that kind of love made of? Obviously is a complex sensation comprising a number different feelings, but I personally believe that i it there are two main ingredients mixed in approximately the following proportions:

60 per cent profound affection and respect.

40 per cent intense sex attraction.

Now this is a rare mixture. It is rare enough t find it in one of the two lovers, and rarer by fa to find it in both; but when that happens, the you can be fairly sure that you'll get the happy fantastic, fairy-tale result.

The important point about this kind of love i that affection and respect (which must be deep) predominate over sex attraction (which must b intense). For as the years go by, the sexual life of the two people passes inevitably through its various phases, beginning with excitement and passion, moving on to pleasurable normalcy and thence to a satisfactory (Continued on Page 97)

If You Ask Me

by Eleanor Roosevelt

Why is there so much hysteria against Russia, but seldom any criticism of Fascist Spain or Argentina? Isn't it because whenever a country adopts socialism or communism it is closed to further exploitation by American monopolies?

No, I do not think there is hysteria against Russia. There are perfectly valid criticisms of the U. S. S. R. for certain practices with which we do not agree. There are also valid criticisms of fascism as it appeared in Spain and as it has appeared in the Argentine.

I do not think that today American manufacturers are exploiting any part of the world in the way many interests did two or three decades ago. Exploitation is more difficult for any nation, but it is certainly not because the nation has adopted communism or socialism that this is the case. I would be inclined to say that in the case of communism it is the communist government which does the exploiting, and there is no citizen to do much criticizing. If any of our monopolies, so-called, were to try to do much exploiting in a socialist or democratic state there would be plenty of criticism.

. I am twenty-nine, unmarried, and have a secure but mediocre job in the town where I live with my parents. I want marriage and a home, but there is only one type of man who genuinely appeals to me—a type which is very rare in my locality, but numerous in a different section of the country. I am seriously considering moving to that section in the hope of finding a desirable husband. Would it be foolish of me to take this step?

No one can make the decision which you have presented to me except you yourself. I have never found that one could pick a type as a husband.

As far as leaving your parents goes, hard as that sometimes is, it is justified if one has the opportunity to really accomplish something definite by so doing.

A group of businesswomen in Southern California have been studying the terrible situation of the Indians, and those of us who are registered Democrats and who stood behind your husband ask one another why nothing effective was done during his incumbency for these first Americans. While you were traveling here and there getting aid for backward groups, why did you never do anything for the Navajos?

I have known about the situation of the Indians for a long time. My husband and I were always troubled about them and I am sure that the former Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harold Ickes, would tell you that both my husband and I were concerned during the whole of my husband's administrations about conditions among all the Indians. It is not just the Navajos. There are many other tribes that are having a bad time and nowhere has the problem been completely solved. This is largely, of course, a question that is in the hands of Congress and of the people of the country, who must be willing to have certain things done by their representatives in Congress and show an interest in pushing them.

It may be that the present campaign of information may help more than anything else, but I have found it very difficult in the past to get anything actually done in Congress for the Indians.

What do you think is the reason that President Truman does not investigate un-American activities in the United States?

I think President Truman feels the proper body to investigate un-American activities is the FBI. He could hardly do it himself and therefore he must count on the branch of the Government which is supposed to do this work, to carry through and report to him.

I am a citizen of Holland. Is it true, as people say here, that colored people in America have a hard life? Is it true that there are special places where they must live just like the Indians? Do the Americans lynch a Negro when he is trying to vote?

The colored people in America have in some ways a hard life because they have been discriminated against in many ways in the United States. They are not treated as some Indians are, who are placed on reservations and treated as wards of the Government. The Negroes are full-fledged citizens, freed by Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, but in large cities there are often sections which become almost entirely occupied by different groups of people—colored people, Italian people, Puerto Ricans, and so on.

Lynchings in the United States occur only very occasionally, and I do not think a lynching would occur in the majority of states because a Negro was trying to vote. It might in a few states be considered as a way to prevent the Negro from using the ballot.

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S

"This is the greatest plea for racial tolerance I've ever read . . . but I'm afraid it'll offend too many people."

I have a daughter, seventeen, who will graduate from high school in June. She is planning to go to college and is willing to work for her room and board. Her father says we cannot afford to send her and will give no encouragement. I thought I could work part time to help her. Do you think it would be right for me to do this?

If your daughter is really bent on going to college she can earn her way through, and if your husband will consent to your working in order to help her it would, of course, be entirely right for you to do so and make it easier for your daughter in her first year, because colleges are not anxious to have their students work to earn their way during the first year.

Don't you think it's time that genuine American clubwomen do more than they are doing to fight communism?

We are able, all of us in this country, to make our own choices and stand up for what we believe in, and that is the way I think American clubwomen can make their contribution to American democracy. By making sure that democracy progresses, that we wipe out those failings, such as racial and religious discrimination, in our own country, and that we foster an increasing economic justice. Thus we will wipe out fears of communism because we so evidently have better conditions and greater justice here than in any other country in the world.

I read your answer to the question about teaching religion in the public schools. I agree that religion cannot be taught in schools because there are too many religions. My question is, what is your opinion of the Bible being taught in public schools?

I imagine there are few literature classes which do not teach the Bible, since many of our best writers have been influenced in their style by the Bible. Teaching the Bible as it bears on some particular church beliefs, however, would be teaching religion in the public schools.

Why doesn't the United Nations pass a libel law to prevent the poisoning of the minds of the people of one nation against the people of another nation through the use of propaganda in history books, newspapers, radios or movies?

The United Nations does not pass laws. It gets agreement among various nations and they may sign covenants or declarations or treaties.

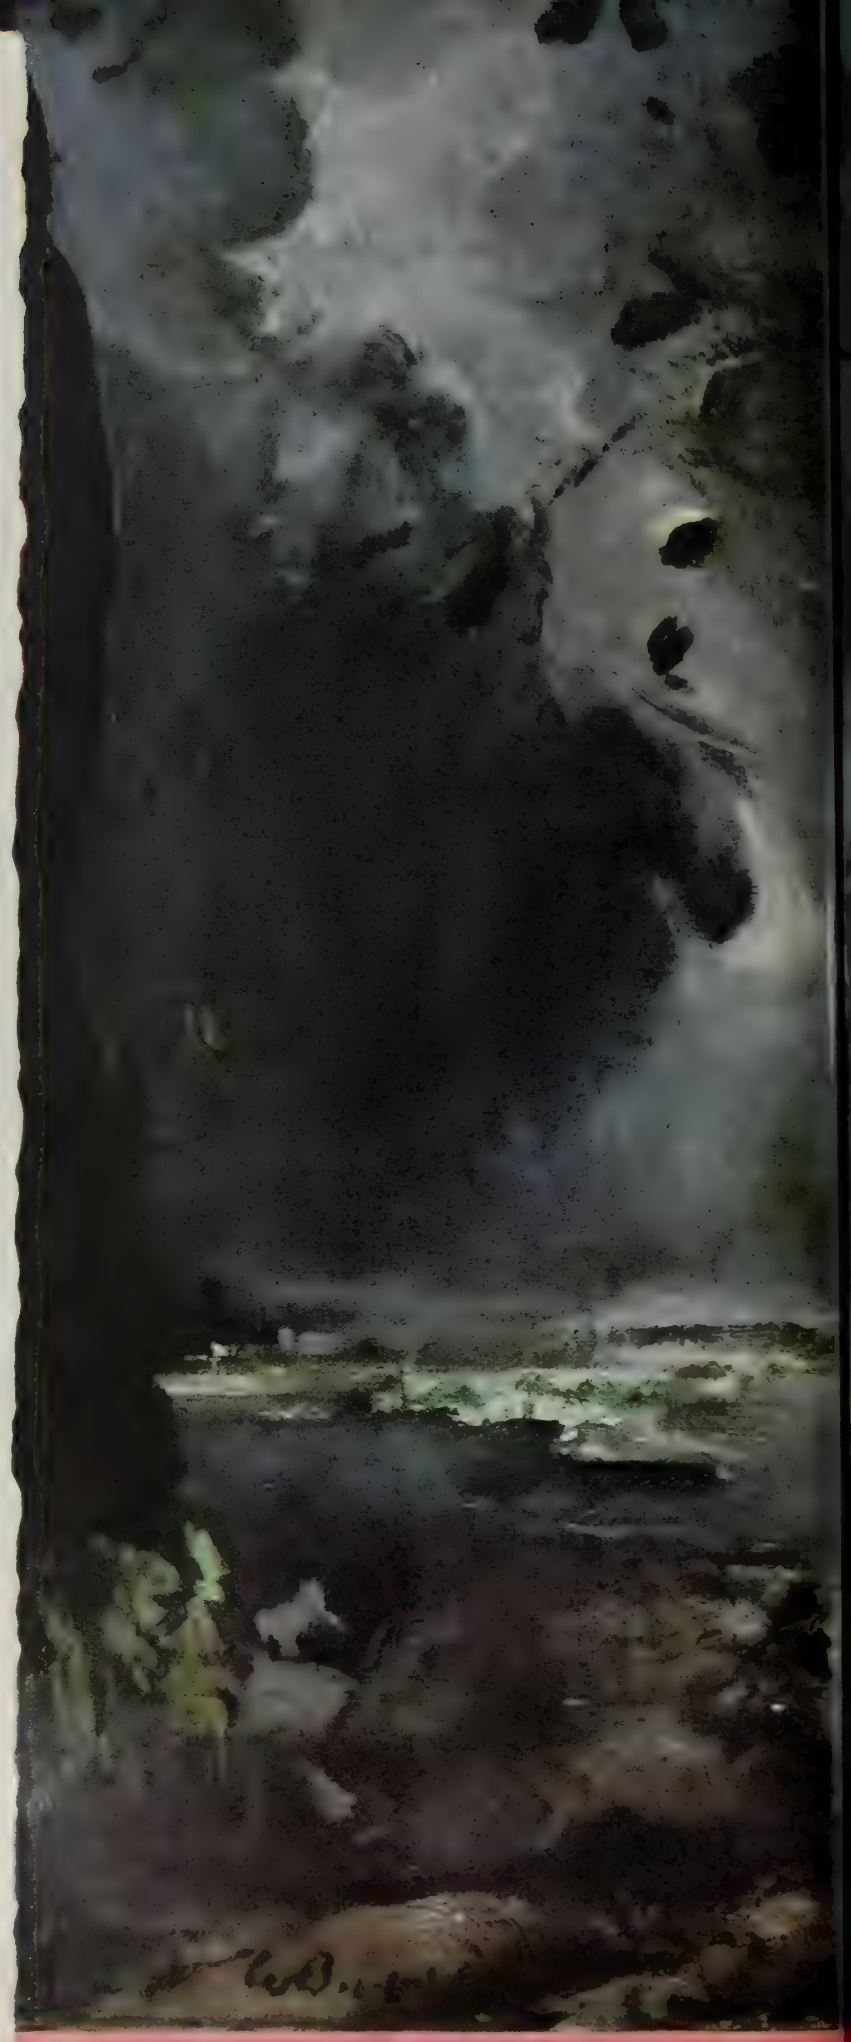
It would be interference with the freedom of information if you tried to prevent propaganda or tried to prevent the printing of certain books and newspapers or the production of certain movies or radio programs because they gave only certain types of information. The conventions which are designed to insure freedom of information will probably try to bring about some sort of agreement as to what type of information can really be considered warmongering and can therefore, by mutual agreement, be stopped.

This is the final page in a series devoted to answers by Mrs. Roosevelt to questions asked by JOURNAL readers.

A boy barely used to long pants brought new wisdom and gaiety to the valley. He was a miracle-maker with a haymaker.

MONDAY morning when I started on my way to school, I had with me Don Conway, a pupil twenty years of age, who had never planned to enter school again. I was the new teacher at Lonesome Valley. He had left school when he was in the fourth grade, but he had two good fists and he would be on my side. All day Sunday while I had worked at the schoolhouse, I was trying to think of a plan so I could stay at Lonesome Valley school. I knew I had to stay. I knew if one had to go it would be Guy Hawkins.

It had taken a lot of persuasion to get Don Conway to return to school. He had planned to get married after his tobacco crop was sold. But I explained the value of an education in dollars and cents. I told him I would teach him how to measure a field and figure the number of acres, how to figure the number of bushels in a wagon bed and cornbin, and how many cubic yards of dirt one would have to remove to dig a cellar or a well. Don Conway was interested in this type of knowledge. I told him no man should be married and live on a farm unless he knew these simple things, for he could easily be cheated the rest of his days.



Don, his two small brothers, his sister Vaida and I went to school together. I congratulated John Conway for sending all his children but one. It would have been hard on John to try to worm and sucker his ten acres of tobacco and care for his other crops if Flossie, his older daughter, had not volunteered to help. And Bertha, his wife, assured him she would divide her time between the housework and work in the field. Flossie, eighteen, who had left school six years ago, would gladly have started back to school if I had insisted. But I knew John and Bertha had to have someone left to help them.

I almost begged Don to return to school when he and I were sitting on the porch late on Sunday afternoon and Ova Salyers and Guy Hawkins rode past on their horses. They glanced toward the porch for their first look at the new teacher, never spoke, but rode silently down the road.

Don Conway looked at Guy Hawkins and Ova Salyers and then at me. He didn't ask (Continued on Page 122)

★ Copyright, 1949, by Jesse Stuart. This is a condensation of the book shortly to be published by Charles Scribner's Sons. ★

ILLUSTRATED BY WALTER BIGGS

The Thread that Runs so True

THE JOURNAL'S
COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE
CONDENSED BOOK

By JESSE STUART

Maybe all the world

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

THE front door closed with the shattering bang which, Mrs. Parks thought, was her son's signature. He liked to do things the hard way—which, in this case, was the noisy way.

"Sam?"

"Hi, mom." He came into the kitchen. There were drops of melted snow on his fair hair and on her linoleum. His eyes were kindled by some inner joy. "Where's everybody?"

"Upstairs." And she wished they would stay there. This was the first time she had seen Sam alone since he had come back that morning for his Christmas vacation. "How was the skating?"

"Fine till it started to snow. What's that you're making?"

"Soup. Hungry?"

"I'm always hungry."

Mrs. Parks had anticipated this. "There're some hard-boiled eggs in that red bowl."

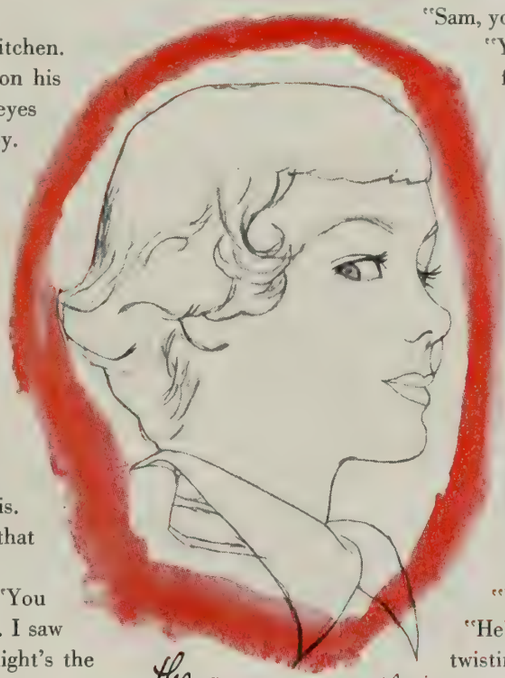
Sam sat down and started to eat. "You know, that skating was a lot of fun. I saw several boys from school. . . . Tonight's the Martins' party, isn't it?"

His mother thought a moment. "Yes. Why?"

"Oh, I just wanted to make sure. A girl I met said she was going."

Aware that this was a historic moment, Mrs. Parks stood very still. The soup boiled over.

"She goes to the same school Selina does."



"Who does?" (As if she didn't understand.)

"Betsy Williams. This girl. Of course, she's old. She's a junior."

Williams, Mrs. Parks said to herself. She had a former classmate called Williams. She had been very pretty but not obvious, not the type her brothers admired when they were Sam's age. But you could not expect a subtle taste at sixteen—or could you?

"Betsy must be an attractive sort of girl," Mrs. Parks said at a venture.

"She is," he told her. "The trouble is everybody else thinks she is too. It's going to be a battle with all that competition."

the cause of it all—

Sam, meantime, ate four eggs and drank two glasses of milk. Then he went to the icebox and came back to the table with the meat she was saving for the next day.

"Sam, you've really had enough," she protested. "You mustn't eat so much. You're getting fat."

Sam looked at the remains of the ham with regret and then an expression of horror spread over his face. "Who, me? Am I really? Gosh!" He jumped up, knocking over a chair, and rushed out of the room.

Mrs. Parks picked up the chair and put the meat back in the icebox. How, she asked herself, could you tell Sam he was getting fat without telling him he was getting fat? At this point her daughter came running into the kitchen. There was red paint on her chin and the front of her dress. Selina liked to make her own Christmas cards.

"What's wrong with Sam?" she asked. "He's standing in front of your mirror and twisting around and making faces." She acted it out.

Mrs. Parks sighed. "He's worried about his weight," she said in an ill-advised moment.

Selina giggled and made herself a peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwich of august dimensions. Selina, in spite of a phenomenal appetite, stayed thin. She was eating when Sam came back again. She was a sight to enrage anyone who had just realized the tragic necessity of dieting. Sam glared at Selina, ready to pick a fight.

In spite of the four years' difference between them, she was no mean adversary. She looked him in the eye and said, "Hi, Fatso."

"Sh-h, Selina." Mrs. Parks felt it was like saying sh-h to Vesuvius.

"Oh, mom, she's right." Selina's mouth dropped open in surprise. "I am fat. Look how I stick out here."

Relieved, Mrs. Parks laughed kindly. "Everybody sticks out behind," she told Sam. "You have to have something to sit on."

(Continued on Page 257)

oves a fat boy, but Betsy was out of this world

LEEDS green-glazed earthenware, with leaf-and-weave design in relief. These beautifully modeled forms, reflecting the Chinese influence, were made in the best period (1800–20) of Leeds work.

STAFFORDSHIRE earthenware, a collectors' favorite, with hand-painted polychrome design of birds and flowers, here arranged in luncheon setting with silver-luster teapot. About 1820.

China to Cherish

By ROSSER JOHNSON

PINK LUSTER is one of the rarer types of Staffordshire china, its soft underglaze color creating in this intimate setting an effect of great charm and unusual delicacy. About 1825.

STRAWBERRY LUSTER makes a delightful tea setting, its hand-painted berries refusing to show their 120 years. Teacups are without handles, a characteristic of many early pieces.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

The handsome pieces of china and earthenware in these settings were produced in England over one hundred years ago, at a time when the art of making fine pottery was at its height. The most famous English potteries flourished at Staffordshire and Leeds because of their ample supply of coal and the excellent quality of their clay. Through the skill of such great artisans as Spode and Wedgwood they were able to match the highly ornamental work of the European centers of Sèvres, Meissen and Delft, but their most popular products by far were pieces of useful tableware like those shown here, both beautiful and practical, which for generations have been cherished by families all over the world, especially in England and America. The pieces you see above are but a small part of the fabulous John B. Morris private collection, one of the largest in the world, and destined eventually for museums, where people will be able to enjoy it face to face.

PLANS FOR A SUMMER BRIDE

By Nora O'Leary

PHOTOGRAPH BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Each bride is prettier than the one before, or so it seems. A radiant face set off by a lovely dress is an enviable combination. Our white organdy with eyelet insertion has all the charm of a Godey print with its tiny waistline, small puff sleeves and slight train. We suggest bridesmaid dresses in pastel organdy made the same way . . . perhaps with ribbon sashes and parasols. Ivy leaves and blossoms for the wreath and garland. Vogue Design No. S-4993.

Calico or tie silk, tiny waist nipped in. Vogue Design No. 6703, 12 to 18.

Your coat: high shade of butcher linen or flannel . . . an ensemble by adding print cuffs, hat. Vogue Design No. 6641, 12 to 20.

Spectator sport dress, crisp rayon; with bright accessories. Vogue Design No. 6647, 12 to 20.

© VOGUE

Plan your trousseau so that you will look lovely every hour of the day. Something fresh and pretty to wear in the morning . . . a classic dress for sight-seeing . . . a comfortable costume for tennis . . . a feminine afternoon dress . . . and something lovely for under the stars. Your versatile coat in a gay color looks well over everything. Be sure the colors are your most becoming, the fabric packable (always find room for a tiny travel iron), your accessories changeable.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order them by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, Ontario. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Polka-dot cotton softly tailored shirt, Vogue Design No. 6763, 12 to 42. Wear matching tailored shorts, 6579, 24 to 32.

DRAWINGS BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

Three-piece play dress: black linen bolero and skirt, with white linen halter. Vogue Design No. 6727, 12 to 20.

Plain and eyelet piqué in the most feminine of afternoon dresses. Make in pastel. Vogue Design No. 6761, 12 to 20.

Your white linen halter with huge printed organdy skirt, No. 6580, 24 to 32.

Other views and prices on page 116

A SUB-DEB'S MEMO . . .

ON SUMMER CLOTHES

Candy-striped chambray, by Salem K. Saba. Linen pumps and piqué turban.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Morning news: dark green cotton bare-top sun dress, with triangle scarf and straw basket-bag.

Sleek lines are best: coral-color two-piece bathing suit stretches two ways; by Mabs Barnes.

This is the summer that I WILL make a plan, and not let the situation get out of control. Bare-top cottons are sensational, for mornings and the beach—but not for town. I'll watch for good "cut" in shorts—crash cottons with a cuff hem—and I'll match playshoes to the halter. I'll have at least one two-piece cotton suit or dress complete with hat, short white cotton gloves and a straw bag . . . one pair of higher-heeled pumps, and the rest flat or with those inch heels and quarter-inch straps. My square-dance skirt can be a big bold plaid, but the prom dress will be quite another thing—"fragile" is the word for it, romantic the mood. I'll jot down "cotton" by everything on my list because—(A) I love it and (B) it costs less. ★ By RUTH MARY PACKARD Square-dance skirt in block-plaid cotton, black top with a boat neckline. By Marjorie Montgomery.

Prom dress in ankle-length, off-the-shoulder cotton voile print, wound with velvet ribbon; by Sol Rappaport

Your well-cut shorts in cotton crash, bosun halter by Edwina Patterson; option sleeveless to make it a Pan Jumper Bare-tops with new ways: print with pocket; halter dress, crisscross tie. Shoes by Ben Sommers.

Senior-week parties: crinkled organdy, white linen pumps and gloves.

Janet Leigh (star of "Little Women") wears an afternoon cotton: mauve piqué over organdy ruffles.

STAR PERFORMANCE IN COTTON

THE FASHION OF COTTON KNOWS NO BOUNDARIES . . . YOUNG STARS ADORE IT . . . EVERYBODY WEARS IT. PERFORMANCE TIME: MORNING TO MIDNIGHT. ★ BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

This iridescent blue chambray performs equally well in city or country. Buttons down the back.

Diana Lynn in a popular fashion: cotton jacquard shirting dress, a bare-top with bolero jacket.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

iana Lynn (co-starring in "Bitter Victory") wears a sheer ummer-night cotton, camisole top, designed by Dorothy Cox.

Mrs. William K. Stewart, of Pasadena, in a fresh blue two-piece cotton, by Valerie Galembert.

Colorful beach dress in rough Mexican-border cotton. Its wide skirt designed in strips, like ribbon, straw bag.

This house was different.

They used their hearts for its door.

The Beckoning Years

By JESSAMYN WEST

JESS wakened before daylight and listened to the far-off crowing of a cock. A cock in his own barnyard answered and Jess stretched himself on his good cord bed with pleasure. "Summer's come," he said. He whispered the news to himself, lightly. He would not think of awakening Eliza, sleeping soundly by his side. Still, if she overheard him and awakened of her own will, that would be a different matter.

It was neither day nor night. Someplace in between. The sitting room of the log house, which was also his and Eliza's bedchamber, was like a roiled stream when the mud first begins to settle. There was less and less blackness. Jess could pick out here and there the shape of a piece of furniture. Slats of a chair back against a window. Curve at the top of a secretary. Knobs of brass on the firedogs where the broad mouth of the chimney let down a shaft of morning grayness. White muslin curtains straight-hanging in the motionless air. Air itself scented with hay and ripening fruit and the cinnamon pinks under the window.

"Summer is here," Jess said, a little more loudly, though still privately and to himself.

Eliza opened her black eyes. "How does thee know?" That was one of the things Jess liked about Eliza. She was awake or asleep, one or the other, no in-between states.

"Can tell by the way the cocks are crowing."

"Have they crowed?" asked Eliza.

"Yes," said Jess. "Didn't they waken thee?"

Eliza plumped up her pillow and from the extra height looked across at her husband. "Thee knows what wakened me."

Jess often marveled at the way Eliza, sleeping, was diminished. Rising to speak in meeting, lifting a child in her arms, she was good-sized, commanding even. Asleep, she was near to nothing. One of his legs from hip socket to toe would like as not outweigh her. She lifted the two heavy braids of black hair away from her neck and shoulders as if in the growing warmth she did not like their weight.

"Thee knows well enough what awakened me, Jess Birdwell," she repeated. "Thee whispering to thyself. Can't thee make out to think without whispering?"

"Don't seem so," Jess admitted. "There!" he said. "Hear them?"

Eliza listened: in the distance the broken scratching of roosters' voices; young roosters growing toward a Fourth of July skillet. "Sounds as usual to me."

"Listen," bade Jess. "When roosters wake crowing hoarse, summer is here," he explained.

Eliza marveled at the relish her husband had for the seasons. As another person ticks off the hours of the day, saying, "It's sunup, high noon, lamplighting time," Jess kept track of the year's changes. He would appear suddenly before her as she straightened up from making a bed or buttoning a child's drawers, put a leaf into her hand and say, "Fall's here." He appreciated it if she answered, "What makes thee think so, Jess?" but whether she did or not he told her.

"Seems I recall thee saying summer had come when flies buzz before sunup. Or when there's morning thunderclouds."

"There's more signs than one," Jess admitted. "But cocks crowing hoarse—that's a sure sign."

Eliza liked weather herself; sun and a brisk wind on washday, warm weather when her Plymouth Rocks hatched, snow for the children at Christmas, a mild spell for Yearly Meeting. She liked to hear weather busy doing its duty: sending the windmill round, distributing a leisurely rain once the corn was

(Continued on Page 237)

"When we were first married," Eliza said softly, "I'd walk out at night to this tree just so I could look back at the lights in our house."

ILLUSTRATED BY Alex Ross

Menu

serves six

Tomato Madrulene à la Russe

Rye Wafers

Planked Shad with Roe

Duchess Potatoes

Peas

Wilted Cucumber and Radish Salad

PHOTO BY STUART-FOWLER

Crusty Finger Rolls

Coffee

Strawberry-Meringue Shortcake

By ANN BATCHELDER

WHEN I was young and in my prime, and first of May came round, the time was ripe to get the line and bait; and oh, I never had to wait to hear the welcome words: "The date is open—let's go fishin'."

You'd be surprised, or maybe not, if you could know the thoughts I thought, a-sittin' on some alder brink, watching the line and sinker sink, the sunlight lacing through the trees, and never blew so sweet a breeze, and never tangled line more fast in those same alders till at last I got a tug and felt a bite, hook just working, worm just right. Sleepy? Well, I came awake when I felt the old rod shake and reeled her in and there a sight that any fisherman calls right. The speckled trout—and then another. There was a tale to tell my mother. For I'd been fishin'. And I could prove it too!

It's here, and how! Well, it's May again. It always seems so long in getting here, but one thing I've noticed, and that is that the seasons, minding their own business and not getting pushed and hurried, come around just as regular and easy and sort of insinuate themselves into the picture with no fanfare and no trumpets. They get here, and for the most part pretty much on time. Ever notice it?

Speaking of time. And speaking of time, there's hardly a day goes by that I'm not struck with the way folks dwell on it. Every hour, every minute all allotted to this or that, all set in an inexorable pattern and try to change it. Slaves, I call them, these time eaters. Never a free minute. Nothing extemporaneous in their lives. They live and die by the clock and the calendar. Why, even their meals have to be "on time," and they make a virtue of that. Well, I don't.

Maybe there are others. It's been years since I had a meal on the same hour as the one yesterday. And I know that tomorrow the chances are that something will come up and I may want to read another chapter or go downtown to get a cucumber and meet an old friend and drop in at the drugstore and forget what I went down for in the first place and—oh, (Continued on Page 233)

NEWARK MUSEUM

LINE A DAY

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Dilys Bennett Laing has now essayed a full-length novel, THE GREAT YEAR. It's a saga of a Vermont farm family. Three generations play their homely parts in a story that is cloaked only in the iridescent mantle of the four seasons. This book has charm.

2 Now to go from novels to real life. Making meat pies, chicken pies and fricassees, there's seldom enough gravy. Don't turn on the tap. Open two or more cans of beef broth or strong chicken broth and extend your gravy that way.

3 Here's something as new as baby's first shoes. Deals with peas. Cook them in a very little water till almost done. Then put in a shallow frying pan with a good piece of butter, a seasoning of sugar, salt and pepper, and a few tablespoons of julienne strips of cold boiled ham. Toss and turn until well heated through. These are definitely delicious.

4 Watching the hens gadding about in the spring, being very vocal over their achievements, I naturally have chicken on my mind.

5 Make some rich, thinnish griddlecakes, butter them and keep them hot. Spread with plenty of chicken hash, roll them up. Serve with mushroom or cream sauce.

6 Tomatoes will come to the rescue of many a last-minute crisis. Cut off the tops. Scoop out the insides, add the pulp of the tomatoes to a can of corned-beef hash. Season well. Fill the tomatoes and cover with crumbs. Dot with butter. Bake until tomatoes are tender, the tops brown. This is a top dish.

7 This is something you won't find in a beanery. Prepare a pair of sweetbreads. Cut them into small, even pieces. Sauté half a pound of sliced mushrooms and add sweetbreads. Add a small can of truffles, sliced thin.

8 Second verse: Make a very light cream sauce. Add half a can of pâté de foie. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. When done, serve very hot on chicken breasts, steamed and sautéed in butter. This is a very special dish for a very special occasion.

9 Cook up a mess of ground hominy. Have it on the stiff side. Pour it into a bread pan and set away overnight. (There's more to this.)

10 Slice thin slices from the loaf; put a slice of cheese between slices of hominy, dip in beaten egg and crumbs (cracker, please) and fry in hot fat. Serve with chicken or with any creamed dish.

11 Appetizers know no end. They come up in the most unexpected places. And often ad lib. So—give these a mind.

12 Toast some buttered crackers. Mash up a can of skinless and boneless sardines with enough tartare sauce to make a spread. Spread on the crackers.

13 Being on the subject, let's stick to it. Again it's toasted crackers or fingers of buttered toast. Open a can of crab paste and season it with a little lemon juice. Spread on the crackers.

14 One more, and we'll leave the subject. Take grated tuna fish. Mix with tartare sauce, heap on toasted crackers, garnish with lemon slivers and sliced ripe olives.

15 From an old cookbook: "At each course at breakfast—there should be no less than six—guests should be asked if they will take tea or coffee warm." After six, who cares!

16 Oh, to be in Georgia now that spring is here! And that reminds me of Aunt Persis' crackle bread. A memory—out of the past.

17 All there is to it is a fine old-fashioned corncake, baked thin, and liberal it is with crisp bacon broken up all through it. Hot, buttered, it's good!

18 Dried beef in cream is one of the dishes I like. Instead of baked potatoes with it, try this: make a rich cream sauce.

19 Chapter II. Now "pick" the dried beef into pieces, not too prissy and fine. Put the beef in the sauce. Season to taste. Serve on hot buttered toast with a beautiful poached egg on each slice. This has elegance and good taste—and all stems from dried beef.

20 Next time you roast a duck, try this: stuff it with an orange cut into eighths (rind and all) and two onions, cut into pieces. Gives the duck a nice flavor, and what it does to the gravy is really something special. To my notion, bread stuffing does not go with duck.

21 Floating Island may surprise some sophisticates. Make a smooth soft custard, in the double boiler. Three eggs to a pint of milk. Cook until it coats the spoon. No more, no longer. Strain, flavor and chill.

22 Canto two: Beat now, very stiff, the whites of three eggs, with a little salt and three tablespoons of sugar. A meringue—that's all. Take it up by spoonfuls and drop, one at a time, into furiously boiling water. When set, take out with care (use a skimmer) and place on your custard.

23 Have I told you, as I passed by with a platter of fritters, about glazing the delicious things? Sprinkle them generously with sugar, put on a rack and under the broiler, not too near, until the sugar makes a glaze.

24 By the way, I've found that fritter batter takes to flavoring as neatly as kittens take to cream.

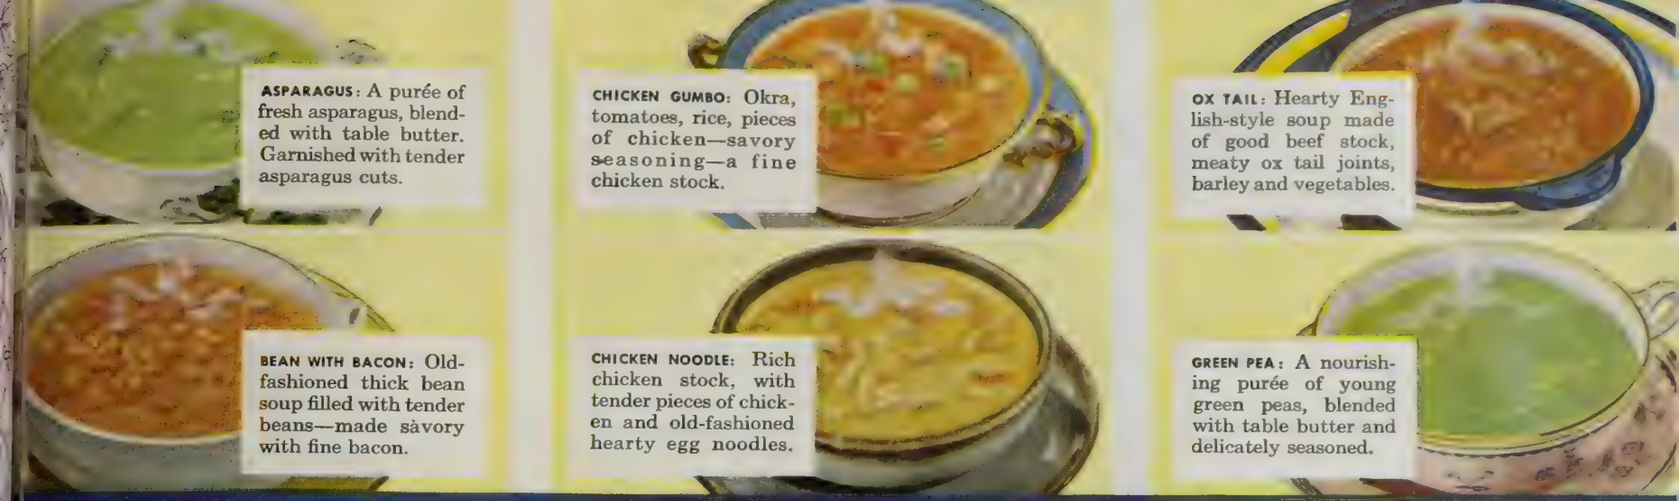
25 A little lemon juice with a few drops of lemon extract to point it up is a safe bet for fruit-fritter batter.

26 For a tea-table treat cut hot toast into fingers, spread with soft maple sugar. Sprinkle with cinnamon, broil a minute and serve. Cinnamon toast to end all cinnamon toast.

27 Another little titbit is done this way. Make up a fine white cake and bake it in one big sheet. Cut out rounds, split them carefully and fill them with jam. Then frost all over and roll in shredded coconut.

28 Here's a new trick with that roll receipt. Add one cup finely shredded blanched almonds to the dough. After shaping the rolls, sprinkle them with more shredded almonds and a little sugar. Bake as usual. Delicious.

29 Serve chocolate and pistachio ice creams together—and you have something as good to eat as it is to look at.



30 Don't forget that few prouder moments come to a husband than the one when he reels in the big trout. So cook them with care and praise his prowess.

31 My garden may not resemble the Garden of Eden—but who can prove it? Looks like it right now. And more so—later. I hope.

SONG FOR SORROW

Oh, think not of tomorrow,
'Tis twelve long hours away.
And they who dwell on sorrow
Mind not the time of day.

Think more of countless others
Whose woes from heartbreak stem.
They are your soul's own brothers:
Let your heart break for them.

ASPARAGUS: A purée of fresh asparagus, blended with table butter. Garnished with tender asparagus cuts.

CHICKEN GUMBO: Okra, tomatoes, rice, pieces of chicken—savory seasoning—a fine chicken stock.

OX TAIL: Hearty English-style soup made of good beef stock, meaty ox tail joints, barley and vegetables.

BEAN WITH BACON: Old-fashioned thick bean soup filled with tender beans—made savory with fine bacon.

CHICKEN NOODLE: Rich chicken stock, with tender pieces of chicken and old-fashioned hearty egg noodles.

GREEN PEA: A nourishing purée of young green peas, blended with table butter and delicately seasoned.

"21 KINDS TO CHOOSE FROM"

BEEF: Plenty of tender pieces of beef, with nourishing vegetables and barley, in a hearty beef stock.

PEPPER POT: Early American-type soup. Pieces of meat, macaroni, carrots and potatoes in a meat stock.

HOW MANY OF THESE FINE SOUPS DO YOU KNOW?

The next time you visit the grocer's, give an "extra look" at the Campbell's Soup Section. Go adventuring among the 21 Kinds. You will find them all delicious, all nourishing. All good value, too—something you'll specially appreciate these days!

Campbell's Soups

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

BEEF NOODLE: A deep-flavored stock, slow-simmered from selected beef, with pieces of beef and egg noodles.

SCOTCH BROTH: A thick, nourishing meat-stock soup—with fine vegetables, barley, and tender pieces of mutton.

BLACK BEAN: Smooth purée made of fine black beans, seasoned to your taste. Nourishing and delicious.

TOMATO: It's America's favorite soup. World's finest tomatoes, blended with creamery butter, gentle seasoning.

BOUILLON: (Beef Broth) A clear beef broth delightfully flavored with garden vegetables—a grand dinner-beginner.

CLAM CHOWDER: Chopped clams, tomatoes, potatoes, and savory herbs, in deep-flavored tangy clam broth.

VEGETABLE: Fifteen different kinds of garden vegetables in a nourishing beef stock. It's hearty and homey!

CHICKEN with Rice: Fine, plump chickens are simmered to give a chicken-rich broth—rice, pieces of chicken.

CONSOMMÉ: Rich, clear amber beef broth, pointed up with herbs, tomatoes, celery, and carrots.

VEGETARIAN VEGETABLE: Another fine vegetable soup, filled with tender vegetables. Made without beef stock.

New! CREAM of CHICKEN: Rich chicken stock, heavy sweet cream—with pieces of chicken and tender celery cuts.

CREAM of MUSHROOM: Cultivated mushrooms blended with extra-heavy whipping cream. Mushroom pieces.

VEGETABLE-BEEF: Garden vegetables, nourishing barley and tender pieces of beef—all in a hearty beef stock.

Are you really Lovely to Love?

try the test below

Have you ever wondered if you are as lovely as you could be—are you completely sure of your charm? Your deodorant can be the difference . . . and you will never know how lovely you can be until you use FRESH.

FRESH is so completely effective, yet so easy and pleasant to use . . . Different from any deodorant you have ever tried. Prove this to yourself with the free jar of creamy, smooth FRESH we will send you.

Test it. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for your free jar.

LET LOVE COME LAST

(Continued from Page 35)

that any of her children had passed the age of thirty.

Ursula pressed her forehead against the cold, leaded window. Behind her lay shrouded rooms, with only a single light burning in the entrance hall. The servants had been dismissed. She was alone in this mansion, where all her children had been born, and where William had died. The room in which she stood, her bedroom, was growing cold; the fire had died down to a heap of ash and sparks.

Dear, dear Oliver. She loved him more than she had loved any of the other children, even Barbara. Restlessly, Ursula walked back and forth before the windows, watching for Oliver. She passed the table where she had laid the paper, put her hand over it, protectingly. "Yes, dear," she said aloud, very gently.

She heard a loud and staccato series of explosions. She turned to the window again. Oliver and Barbara had arrived. They would rescue her and take her away.

It would be a beginning again. Not the beginning of youth, with joy and anticipation. Perhaps for her, however, it would be the beginning of peace.

Ursula often thought that the real beginning of her life had taken place on a cool white twilight in late March, 1879, in the city where she had been born, Andersburg.

Andersburg was never to grow larger than one hundred thousand souls. There had been no impetus for growth, for Pittsburgh was less than one hundred miles away. Foothills covered with forests gave it a natural beauty. But even from the hills, Andersburg had a brawling and untidy character.

Never hurt anyone consciously; you do it too often unconsciously anyway.
—KANT.

Ursula Wende's father had been a teacher in a small private school. When he died he left a small field-stone house to his daughter, a plot of uncultivated land, eight thousand dollars in cash, and his books. There was nothing else, unless one added a capacity for self-understanding, a serenity of mind, pride and a balanced ability to observe the world and its doings without overmuch heat.

Ursula was twenty-seven years old, a "confirmed" spinster. Fortunately, she had no relatives to support. Her mother had died when her child was ten. As Ursula had always made her own clothing, she was a clever seamstress, and milliner. Therefore, she had her choice of three ways of making a living. Teaching had "prestige," but dressmaking and millinery might bring in more money.

In her early twenties, she had considered marriage. But though she had attracted a number of young men, she had never been overly attracted to them. At twenty-seven, she had no suitors who interested her. Men of her own age were already married or contemplating marrying women much younger.

She finally decided that she would accept a teaching post in a small girls' school, with a salary large enough to take care of her very modest requirements. She would not sell her home, though good offers had been made. It was her refuge, with its library of books, its excellent old furniture, its elms and perfect garden. She and her father had both had exquisite taste. There was not an ugly note in the house or on its grounds.

Here, Ursula could entertain her very few friends. She did entertain them, but not too frequently. There were moments when she felt quite warm toward her friends; there was in her a quiet capacity for affection. But she still preferred large doses of her own companionship. Yes, I am really a spinster, she thought, without regret. If there was something missing in her life, she did not allow herself to enlarge upon it.

In the autumn, she would take the teaching post. But now it was March, with its wan cold twilights and silences. Often she stood in the wet brown garden, her shawl over her shoulders, drawing the chill air into her lungs. Nothing, she thought, will ever change. She was not sorry.

But on the twenty-eighth of March that year, with spring definitely established, things changed for her forever.

The jonquils massed themselves in cold and golden pools near the rear wall of the house. Ursula had not as yet lighted a lamp; the house waited for her, dark and silent, with a low red fire in the parlor. She was cutting an armful of the jonquils, and thinking, with tranquil sadness, of her father, who had preferred these flowers above all others. She would put the jonquils into water tonight; tomorrow, she would carry them to his grave.

The curve of the moon brightened, and the wind became colder. Even the jonquils faded in the darkening twilight. It was then that she heard the brass knocker sounding abruptly on her front door. Echoes bounded back to her. The whole street would hear that peremptory summons.

Annoyed, Ursula thought of heads appearing at windows, staring down at the gray cobblestones and at her door. She entered the rear door, laid the jonquils on the table in the kitchen, thrust a spill into the glowing coals in the stove, carried the wavering light into the parlor, and lighted a lamp. Whoever stood outside must have seen the warm flare against her undrawn curtains; again the knocker resounded. Ursula laid down her shawl, passed her hands over her hair, went composedly to the door, and opened it to the rush of dark night air.

The gas lamps along the street outlined the tall broad figure of a man. She could not see his face. He took off his hat, and said, "Mrs. Wende?"

"Miss," corrected Ursula. "What is it you wish?"

"Miss Wende," said the stranger, "you have a plot of land, fifteen acres, to the east of the town. I want to buy it. What is your price?"

Ursula was exasperated. Her first impulse was to say, "The land is not for sale," and shut the door. But that was absurd. She wished to sell the land. She said, "You must see my lawyer, Albert Jenkins, in the Imperial Bank Building."

"Nonsense," said the stranger. "Why should I wait until tomorrow? I don't want to diddle with lawyers. You sound like a sensible woman. Why pay your lawyer the commission?"

"Simply because he is my lawyer."

"If I go to him," said the stranger, "I'll offer him five hundred dollars less than he asks, and you'll pay his commission to boot." He paused. "I suppose I was mistaken. You aren't a sensible woman after all."

"But why does it have to be settled tonight?" asked Ursula, with a sharp edge to her voice. "I can't bargain with you on the doorstep ——"

"Then you can invite me in." His voice softened as if he were smiling. "I'm harmless and I'm in a hurry. You don't need to be afraid of me."

"I'm not in the least afraid," said Ursula. She hesitated. If she admitted this man, the news would be told at breakfast in every house on the street: "Ursula Wende had a male caller last night; she allowed him to enter her house, though she had no female friend with her. Of course, everyone knows that Ursula is the soul of discretion, but still ——"

Suddenly, Ursula was sick of discretion. Besides, she was by nature respectful of money. A thousand dollars extra would not harm her in the slightest. She did not doubt that her caller would do exactly as he threatened: offer, and probably gain, a reduction in the original price. The land was in the least fashionable of the suburbs, and no one wanted it. She resented the taxes she had to

(Continued on Page 67)

The Countess Jean de Caraman

Her lovely face gives out to you the bright Magic of Herself

She is beautiful—and more—you think when you look at the Countess de Caraman's face. For her face gives out to you her delightful Inner Self. It sends you eloquent messages of her individuality, her quick responsiveness, her charming femininity.

Your Face* has something special to say to the world about you. Are you helping it to speak for you with originality and beauty? Your face is the You that others see first, remember. Make sure it is showing the real You happily—at your very best. You should. You can.

The Countess de Caraman's pearl-smooth skin tells you she gives it beautiful care. Her trusted beauty help is Pond's Cold Cream. "I'm devoted to it," she says.

THAT HALF-REALIZED SELF WITHIN YOU CAN MAKE YOU OVER

Never think you are cut to just one pattern. You are not. You are changing every day. And you can direct this change.

Within you is a wonderful force that can help you. It grows out of the close relation of your Inner Self to your Outer Self and the power of each to change the other.

You have felt it in the happy confidence that glows out from you when you know you look lovely—you have felt it, too, in the uneasiness that comes when you miss looking charming and right. It is the very important reason why those special daily niceties that make you look lovelier can work a magic change in You—your whole outlook, your whole appeal to other people.

"Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

Your face is the first picture others see of you. To keep it a bright, appealing picture needs understanding help. Discover now this new "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment with your Pond's Cold Cream. It can bring your face a special cleanness, greater softness, brighter color.

Always at bedtime (for day cleansings, too) cream your face this rewarding way. Do it like this:

Hot Stimulation—splash your face with hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl your Pond's Cold Cream—lots of it—all over your face. This will soften and sweep dirt and make-up from pore openings. Tissue off well.

Cream Rinse—swirl on a second soft Pond's creaming. This rinses off last traces of dirt, leaves skin lubricated, immaculate. Tissue off again.

Cold Stimulation—give face a tonic cold water splash.

The Countess says, "I don't know any face cream of finer quality than Pond's." Get this favorite big size of Pond's Cold Cream today!

This special Pond's "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment literally works on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—Pond's Cold Cream softens and sweeps away surface dirt, make-up as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this face treatment stimulates beauty-giving circulation. As the charming Countess de Caraman says—"it leaves your face glowing."

Remember always—It is not vanity to develop the beauty of your face. Every one who cares about you wants to see you looking lovely. It helps you add to their happiness—it helps you feel happier yourself. And this greater happiness brings the real Inner You closer to others.

Tonight!..Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a Lustre-Creme Shampoo

NOT A SOAP!
NOT A LIQUID!
BUT KAY DAUMIT'S
RICH LATHERING
CREAM SHAMPOO WITH LANOLIN

for Soft, Shimmering Glamorous Hair

No other shampoo gives you the same magical secret-blend lather plus kindly LANOLIN . . . for true hair beauty.

Tonight he can SEE your hair smartly groomed and sparkling with unexpected sheen. Tonight he can FEEL your hair caressably soft and silky. Tonight he can THRILL to your hair's glorious natural beauty . . . if you use LUSTRE-CREME Shampoo today.

Yes, only Lustre-Creme brings you Kay Daumit's magic formula for glamorizing your hair as you wash it. A blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin, Lustre-Creme gives "loveliness-lather" even in the hardest water. Leaves hair fragrantly clean and free of loose dandruff; glistening with sheen; so soft and manageable . . . gives new and shimmering beauty to all "hair-dos" or permanents.

Famous hairdressers use and recommend LUSTRE-CREME Shampoo. Beauty-wise women have made it America's favorite cream shampoo. Try it! You'll love the lovely results Lustre-Creme shows in your hair . . . And so will the man in your life.

(Continued from Page 64)

ay on it, small as they were. She thought of ie grasping Mr. Jenkins. If there was grasp-g to be done, she could do it herself.
She opened the door wider, and said,
Come in."
The man promptly followed her into her ny hall. She led the way sedately into the arlor beyond. The lamp had a heartening ght. It revealed the walnut paneling of the alls, the faded Aubusson rug, the well-olished, ancient furniture.
The stranger looked about him, smiled.
e had a dark saturnine smile, unwilling and nfriendly. There was about him an atmos-here of force and ruthlessness.
"A nice room," said the stranger.
Ursula eyed him narrowly. He was well essed in an excellently cut coat of black oadcloth and discreetly striped trousers. His aistcoat was of heavy silk. He carried a eatcoat on his arm. His clothing advertised ie gentleman. But Ursula knew he was no ntleman, for all he wore his splendor with
se. She felt an unfamiliar curiosity, and studd him with more interest. He had a large, arrow head, with straight, black hair well mbed and neat. Eyebrows, unruly and ry black, almost met over deep-set, gray
es. His nose was predatory, thin and rved. His wide mouth was set tautly; he d a sound hard chin with a deep dimple.
"Won't you sit down, Mr. ——"
"William Prescott," he said, and sat down, acing his hat and greatcoat on a sofa. He anced at the fire, then before she could eak he was up again, tossing coals on the nbers, and vigorously stirring them. "I ate to be cold," he remarked. "I like heat, lenty of heat. I suppose that is because I ave been cold so often in my life."
Nonplused, Ursula watched and listened.
le spoke in the phrases of a gentleman, but ithout a gentleman's accent. She waited ntil he had seated himself again. All this ould have made her uneasy. But on the ontrary, the queerest excitement stirred her.
She saw he was studying her candidly. She ad no vanity, and knew that she was not eautiful. Still, friends had commented upon er long oval face, so smooth and cool and olorless, except for a rather inflexible mouth f a pale coral tint. Her hair was very long nd thick, and of a deep russet color. She had yes to match. She wore her hair parted in he middle, over a high white forehead, and rawn back austerely to a large knot with ever a curl or coquettish fringe.

William Prescott said, "You think me precipitous, coming like this hardly two hours after seeing your land?"

Ursula answered in a cool, indifferent tone. "It does seem extraordinary. You were not expecting to build on it tonight, were you, Mr. Prescott?"

He laughed suddenly. "Strange to admit, but in a way I am. I never wait. I take plenty of thought, but I do it faster than the average person. When I saw that land, I had not only bought it in my mind, but I had built what I wished upon it."

Ursula was irritated. "You haven't even asked the price. I am not prepared to sell the land cheap."

"How much?" he asked.

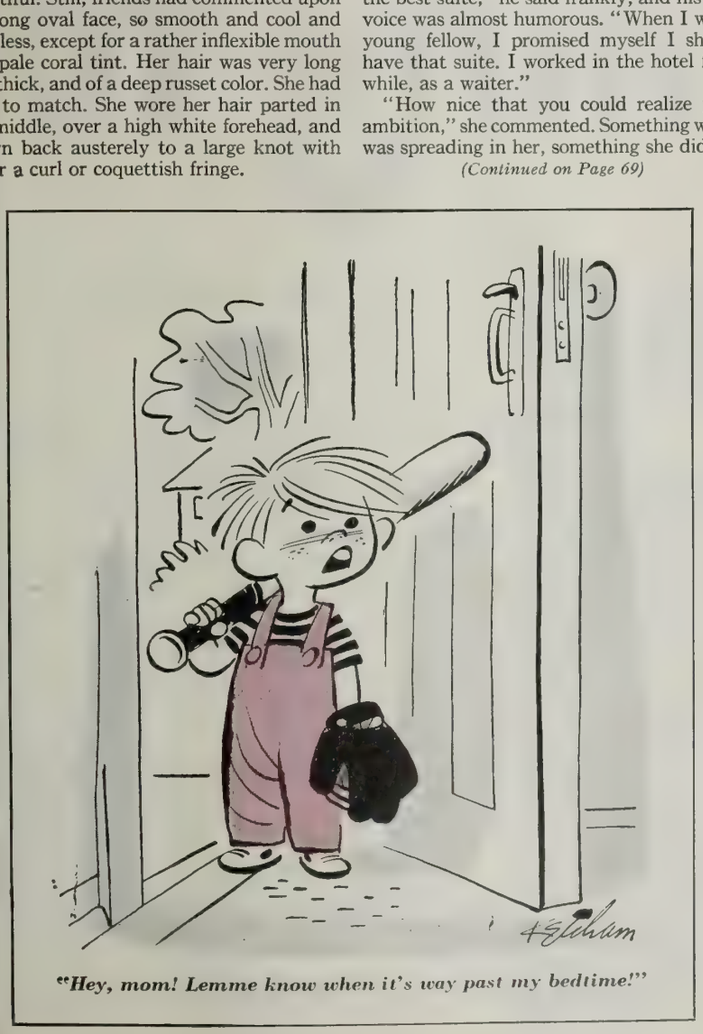
She became aware that there was always a demand in his questions. She began to dislike him more and more. She had placed a price of fifteen hundred dollars on the land. She said disinterestedly, "Two thousand dollars."

He objected, "I had expected no more than fifteen hundred. Even that is too much."

"I am not going to argue about prices," Ursula said. "I have given you the price I will take. If you do not wish to pay it—or cannot," she added, with a sudden awareness that this would cut him sharply, "then we need not go on with the discussion."

She saw she was right, for he reddened. "You know nothing of my financial condition," he said rudely. "You know nothing about me."

So, he was vulnerable. "You are correct, Mr. Prescott." She made her voice haughtily insolent. "Are you a stranger to Andersburg?"



His mouth tightened. "I was born in Andersburg, Miss Wende. I am temporarily living in the Imperial Hotel." He watched her closely, then smiled. "You aren't impressed?"

"Should I be? Should I admit that I know that the Imperial Hotel is very expensive?" Her words were unkind, but her voice had become gentle.

Again she heard his abrupt laugh. "I have the best suite," he said frankly, and his own voice was almost humorous. "When I was a young fellow, I promised myself I should have that suite. I worked in the hotel for a while, as a waiter."

"How nice that you could realize your ambition," she commented. Something warm was spreading in her, something she did not

(Continued on Page 69)

"Hey, mom! Lemme know when it's way past my bedtime!"

Step into it, zip its Talon . . . see how the high elastic top hugs you from waist to ribs, banishing that bulge . . . as only Hi-Top can! Airy leno and satin elastics smooth you, slim your hips . . . yet, you're unaware you have anything on, Hi-Top is just THAT comfortable! Choice of two popular lengths. With it, wear our satin Goss-uP bra . . . with scroll stitched, four-section cups for CONSTANT uplift support . . . in A B C cup styles. Try both in white as well as nude.

the Gossard line of beauty

At good stores and shops, everywhere, or write The H. W. Gossard Co., 108 E. Ohio St., Chicago 11

Because it's so different!

Because it's so much better!

Good cooks are switching to Swift'ning*

Swift'ning is the trade-mark for Swift & Company's Shortening.*

The shortening that gives you both perfect quick-mix cakes and extra flaky pies

IT'S THE shortening good cooks have hoped for—a truly all-purpose shortening that's ideal for both cakes and pies!

Thanks to an exclusive quick-mix ingredient, Swift'ning is superlative for all types of cake. As for pies—tests prove it makes pies flakier than any other all purpose shortening.

Here is a shortening white as wedding-dress satin . . . so pure, so delicate, so fluffy, there's pleasure just in spooning it out. It's tasteless, odorless, digestible. It needs no refrigeration.

Just try this finest of all-purpose shortenings. Try it for cakes, for pies, for fried foods. You'll switch to Swift'ning, too!

Highly Digestible! Extra Nutritious!

(Continued from Page 67)

ize as pity. She had never really pitied
e, for she had never cared enough.
y mother kept lodgings on Clifton
, for the men who worked in the Leslie ge shops," he said. "Of course, this is interest to you, Miss Wende, and I know why I am telling you this. I am a rman now. After I left my job as a
, I went to work for the American Lumompany."
ula knew Mr. Chauncey Arnold, presiof the American Lumber Company. The intanceship was slight, for she had al-considered Mr. Arnold to be very gross.
ut I won't bore you with such details," William Prescott. "Ladies, I know, are terested in commerce or money. Ex-when they try to wring the highest price poor piece of land," he added, smiling.
ula returned the smile. She did not that her smile was charming. "Mr.
ott, I'll bore you with a few details of wn. I am a lone female. My father was a lmaster. He died less than two years
He left me a sum of money, but not gh to keep me for the rest of my life. I secured a post as a teacher. The salary
all. I am quite healthy, and may live a time. I am not married, and do not ex-to marry. You are obviously a gentle-of means. You will forgive me for driv-s excellent a bargain as I can."
e was amazed at her retreat from habit-serve. This man could certainly not be ested in the state of her finances. He d say to himself, How like an emotional n, to trade on her necessity.
r voice was loaded with self-contempt ride when she said, "I have put a price teen hundred dollars
e land. You may have this."
e had braced herself is contempt, but he not look contemptu-
"I'll take your origiffer of two thousand,"
id.

Flattery is a ticklish food, but no food in the world satisfies the palate more.
—LEISEWITZ.

sula could not endure this. She stood up.
arently he remembered that gentlemen when ladies do and he, too, got to his
They faced each other.
Mr. Prescott," said Ursula, "my price is n hundred dollars. I shall take no more.
us end the matter."
Fifteen hundred then." He put his hand ne inner pocket of his coat and drew out rse. "I will give you a deposit now, of hundred, and take your receipt. Within v days, you may give me the deed, and ree the balance." He looked at her steadily.
shall I call on Mr. Jenkins?"
rsula could not help laughing, for all her
She did not know that her laugh, like her e, was charming. It had a clear smooth lity.
Never mind Mr. Jenkins," she said.
hy should I pay him a commission?
y last week he told me that I would never that property."
miling, William Prescott extended two l-backed bills to her. She took them. Her ers brushed his, and she stood there, star-at him in confusion. All at once, she beto tremble. Her knees felt weak.
I'll give you a receipt," she stammered.
turned and went to her rosewood desk
l sat down quickly.

E heard his voice beside her. "Let me it the lamp for you." He had taken a box natches from his pocket, taken the chimoff the desk lamp, lighted it. The little e trembled as if a breeze had touched it.
here," he said, as if he had accomplished
nething of difficulty and importance.
She wrote the receipt. Involuntarily, her nd brushed his fingers again. They looked each other, as he folded the receipt with-t glancing at it, and put it in his purse.
He said, "You ought to have gas in this use. It isn't expensive. And quite safe."
"I've heard about the fumes," said Ursula ntly. "I understand they give you a head-
he. I don't think I should care for gas."
"But you must have gas!" cried William escott. "One should progress."

Then he fell into silence, staring down at Ursula. The smooth cool pallor of her face was suffused. She was beautiful as she had never been beautiful before. The light brightened her hair to a ring of gold about her head. William Prescott turned abruptly and went back to the hearth, and stood there, looking at the fire.

The delicate ormolu clock chimed a sweet, clear note in the silence. The man started a little. He said, "It is nine. I must be going." He turned to the sofa, picked up his greatcoat and hat.

"Yes," Ursula said, "it is nine o'clock." Something was beating strongly in her throat. "May I ask, Mr. Prescott, what you are going to build on that land?"

"I am going to build a house upon it. The biggest house in Andersburg."

It was surely nothing to her that he was building a house! But when one built a house, one had a wife, or intended to have one very shortly. "Mrs. Prescott will be pleased," she murmured.

William Prescott put on his coat. He said in a hard voice of denial, "There is no Mrs. Prescott. I am not married. I want the house for myself! I am going to have what I've always wanted, and be damned to everybody!"

Ursula was silent. No one had ever sworn in her presence before. She was not aware that William Prescott was swearing.

"If and when I marry, the woman won't matter," said this strange man. He looked at her now, almost as if he hated her. "I will marry only for children. I want to fill my house with children. A woman, for me, has no other reason for existence."

They regarded each other in thick silence.

"I'll pick the best," said William. "Nothing but the best. Because of the children. A lady. But I am not ready yet. I won't be ready until the house is built. Then I'll do my searching."

There was a kind of virulence in him, an alien quality which Ursula had never encountered before. Then she felt a blinding anger against him. "I wish you good luck, though I am sorry for the lady."

Without a word, he turned away and went out of the room. Ursula waited to hear him open and close the vestibule door. Nothing in the world could have dragged her to do this courtesy for him. But the door neither opened nor shut. She felt him there, in the small closed darkness. She was not frightened. She was enraged, with the first real rage of her life.

Then she heard his voice: "You don't need to be sorry for the 'lady.' She will know why I am marrying her. She will know there is no sentiment involved." He stopped. "I expect to marry a sensible woman."

"Good night," said Ursula gently, though the rage was huge in her. Now he did open the door. He slammed it behind him.

Albert Jenkins beamed at his visitor, Ursula Wende. He was a widower. Three years before he had been relieved of a remarkably repulsive wife, and a year later had proposed to his old friend's daughter. He had considered himself a catch of no mean attributes; he was one of the richest men in Andersburg, a former judge, a director in the Imperial Bank, the American Lumber Company and the Leslie Carriage Works. He was not yet fifty—not too old for the twenty-five-year-old Ursula, he thought. Nor was he physically distasteful to other spinsters and widows—a lean, red-faced little man with a reputation for amiability and shrewdness.

Ursula did not consider him a great catch. She had rejected him gently, and with a faint surprise. Mr. Jenkins did not become her enemy because of this. He liked her very much. She was wholesome and mature, sympathetic and sensible, and he admired her self-sufficiency and independence. He had not entirely lost hope that she would marry him one of these days.

Now, as she sat in his office, he thought how superior she was to other ladies of his

BETTER BETTER BETTER RICE

"Uncle Ben's" and "Converted" are trade-marks of Converted Rice, Inc.

New Uncle Ben's Rice Recipe

Uncle Ben's Spanish Rice

1 cup diced onions
3 tablespoons fat or bacon drippings
1¾ teaspoons salt
½ cup diced green pepper
2 cups cooked tomatoes
1 bay leaf
2 teaspoons sugar
3 cups hot cooked Uncle Ben's Rice
5 slices diced cooked bacon

Cook onions in fat 3 minutes, but do not brown. Add salt, green pepper, tomatoes, bay leaf and sugar; simmer 15 minutes. Remove bay leaf; add rice and diced bacon; cook 10 minutes. Serves 6.

Better to Cook—Yes, this is the sensational new rice that always comes out white and fluffy, each grain separate, never gummy. No rinsing, steaming. Stays fluffy, even cold or reheated.

Better to Eat—Most people who have tasted it say they'll never use any other rice—its flavor is so good.

Better For You—New scientific process, exclusive in this country with Uncle Ben's Rice, seals into long-grain polished rice B vitamins that used to be polished off.

Ideal for overseas packages or for your pantry shelf—every grain weevilproof.

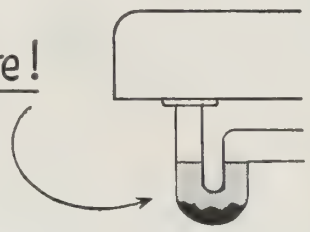
If your grocer hasn't Uncle Ben's Rice, ask him to order it for you. ©C. R., Inc.



SEND NO MONEY! JUST ENCLOSE BOX TOP!
Converted Rice, Inc., Dept. LHJ 4
P. O. Box 1752, Houston, Texas
Please send me your new recipe booklet, "Rice Can Be Wonderful." Enclosed is top from package of Uncle Ben's Converted Long Grain Rice.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ STATE_____

You wouldn't leave filth there!

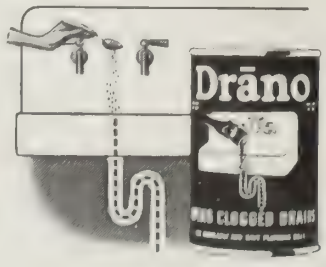
-so don't leave it here!

NOBODY sees the dirt that collects under your carpet—but you don't leave it there, just because it's out of sight.

And you can't see the ugly muck that collects in your sink drain—but it's there! Only a few inches from the family dishes lies nasty filth that slows drains and breeds sewer germs!

You want your house rid of this filth, too! Liquid disinfectants can't do it. It takes Drāno to boil out this grease and chase it down your drain!

Make it a weekly habit!



Put a tablespoon of Drāno in your drain once a week—every week!

Drāno's churning, boiling action will keep your drain clear! Drāno loosens grease, makes drains cleaner and faster-running!

P.S. Remember—Drāno also opens clogged drains in a flash!

Drāno®

removes the muck that slows drains and breeds sewer germs

Harmless to septic tanks; makes them work better—cuts down odors.

TUNE IN: DOROTHY KILGALLEN, Thursdays. See local paper for time and station.

Copr. 1949, by The Drackett Co.

acquaintanceship. She was all in brown: her woolen frock with the white collar, the neat plain cloak, the gloves, the bonnet with its inner ruching of tulle and brown ribbons. He liked to hear her calm, clear voice, which always probed directly to the matter at hand.

This morning, Ursula had been telling him of William Prescott's visit.

"Well, my dear," Albert Jenkins said, leaning back in his chair, "at least you are rid of an unprofitable piece of land. And at a very good price. I always considered you a good businesswoman." He surveyed his visitor admiringly, wondering whether he ought to broach the subject of nuptials again. But Ursula had a composed and practical air, and a lawyer's office was the least romantic of settings. He said, "So Prescott wants to build a house, eh? Well, it is just like him, the scoundrel. I'm glad you sent him to me for the final details."

"Yes, I sent him a note, at the Imperial Hotel," said Ursula. "I thought the final negotiations had best be conducted by you, Albert."

"A very good thought," admitted Mr. Jenkins approvingly. "It is just like him to rush out to see you the very night he had first seen the property, and demand it. None of those who know him will be surprised."

"Oh," said Ursula guilelessly, "then he is known in Andersburg?"

"Do you mean to say, dear Ursula, that you never heard of him? Why, the Clarion has something about him every week! He is notorious!"

"I don't read the Clarion often," admitted Ursula. "And none of my friends have mentioned Mr. Prescott to me."

"His name is not fit to be mentioned in decent company!" exclaimed Jenkins. "A thief and a felon like that! Surely, you must have heard what he did to Chauncey Arnold, of the American Lumber Company? And Arnold was like a father to him. Prescott has ruined Arnold. I don't know all the details, but the Clarion is going to publish the whole nefarious story. Prescott's crookedness will have terrible consequences for the company's stockholders." He paused. "Fortunately, I had some hint of this a few months ago, and sold my holdings."

"How clever of you, Albert," murmured Ursula.

"Just a weather eye, my dear," he said, with self-deprecation. "But there are a number of my friends who will be involved."

Ursula gazed at him ingenuously. "How sad that you could not tell them what you knew, so that they could salvage a little from their investments."

There was a sudden sharp silence in the office. Jenkins stared at Ursula, and his small eyes narrowed. But ladies, he reflected, knew nothing of business.

HE said, "I—I wasn't sure, my dear. It was all done under cover by that scoundrel. A feeling, let us say. You ladies would call it intuition." He smiled at her indulgently. "One does not rush to one's friends without proof, you see."

Ursula still smiled. This man before her was a villain, if only a small and petty one. She became aware that Jenkins had said something. She spoke quickly: "Forgive me, Albert, I am afraid my thoughts strayed for a moment. What did you say?"

"I said that I have already made out the deed for your land. Prescott is to call for it tonight. But I understand that he has actually begun excavation. No one knew what his intention was. But you tell me he wishes to build a house." Jenkins became thoughtful. "I wonder why he wanted that par... lar piece of land? Very strange."

Ursula smoothed her gloves. "Anders... can't move farther west, because that i... industrial section, where all those new... tories and mills are. It can't move north... cause the hills are there, and most of the... is in estates. It can't move south, becau... the river, and the docks, and the f... near by. It seems odd to me that no on... thought that it might move east. I sup... that is because Andersburg hasn't g... much recently. But if it should start to g... the east is the only place, isn't it?"

IF Ursula had been a man, Albert Jen... would have sworn suddenly and violently... course, it was obvious! Just because And... burg had hardly increased since the war... no reason it shouldn't do so now, with... new mills coming in! Of course the far... along the river would eventually be indu... by high offers, to sell their land for subur... or city development. But the prices w... be high! To the east, however, one could... all the land one wished, from the miser... squatters and truck gardeners who l... there.

Jenkins dropped his eyelids, to conceal... sudden sharp gleam in his eyes.

"Did Prescott mention buying any o... land in that vicinity?" he asked.

Ursula knew w... was in Albert... kins' mind. "No. ... our interview ... very short. I f... him most disag... able. We concl... our arrangeme... and he went aw...

Suddenly, he ... membered that ... ment when Willi... Prescott stood bes... the desk. Ursul... shoulders moved ... der her cloak. ... wanted to go. But ... impulse which ... brought her to t... office held her in ... chair. She did not ... know that this i... pulse was connect... with William Pr... cott, and a desire ... know more about hi...

"I suppose you are right, Albert," s... said indifferently. She paused. "A most u... civil man, Mr. Prescott. And apparently d... reputable, from what you have told me."

Jenkins agreed emphatically. "Do y... know what he did a year ago? He adopte... brat left in a slum hallway by someone ... whom the less said the better in the preser... of a lady like yourself. The brat was abou... year old. Now, the wretch has a nursem... for the brat, and has rented the best suite ... the Imperial Hotel."

"It was a kind thing, at least, to adopt t... child."

Mr. Jenkins laughed shortly. He w... about to make an insinuating remark, but r... frained, remembering his visitor's sex. I... said, "Do you know what else he did, a we... ago? Gave the orphanage five thousand d... lars, for a new wing!"

Ursula's eyes became bright and intent, ... they regarded Mr. Jenkins. Without know... ing why, he flushed sullenly.

"I suppose," he said, "there are some wh... would approve of that. But I think he i... tends to try to work his way into Andersbur... society and believes he will ingratiate him... self. He will be sadly undeceived, I am sur... No one of any standing socially will ev... have anything to do with Bill Prescott."

"But why is he held in such low esteem?" ... asked Ursula.

Mr. Jenkins became quite excited. "M... dear Ursula! Who is the man? The son ... a woman who kept lodgings for workers i... the mills. An upstart, a climber from th... slums!"

"He speaks like an educated man," sai... the daughter of a schoolmaster.

(Continued on Page 73)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Promise

By HILDA CONKLING

If you'll weave me a web of bird song,
Spun from the thrush and the linnet,
Then you will hold my heart alone
With all the love there is in it!

If you can bring me a scallop shell,
Purple as violets in May,
I'll belong to you and only you
And never go away!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

SHE'LL WHISTLE WHILE SHE WORKS for here's a happy combination of more beauty and less work for mother! Notice how that easy-to-keep-clean Sloane-Blabon floor gives this Utility Room the decorator's touch. The diagonal effect, which makes any room look larger, is achieved with alternate strips of Marbletone Linoleum, patterns 0107 and 0170. The handsome edging is Koroseal* Cove Base. You'll even find work-saving beauty above the washer! It's Sloane-Blabon Resilient Enamel Wall Tile.

*® B. F. Goodrich Company

3 Ways to Brighten Mother's Life

Planned for work-saving beauty with the better design and truer color of Sloane Quality Linoleum Products

You can do it—easily! For it's no trick to give old space a new beauty treatment. Just start with the floor, as decorators do—as we did to create the livable charm of these inviting rooms.

Yes, start with your nearest Sloane-Blabon department when you want a room to be useful and attractive. You'll get decorating ideas aplenty from the many stunning designs and matchless colors—in Sloane Quality Inlaid and Marbletone Linoleum . . . Koroseal, the miracle plastic, in Tile, Cove Base and Cove Molding that never shows its age, never needs waxing . . . a new and better Asphalt Tile that costs so little and wears so long . . . Resilient Enamel Rugs, Floor and Wall Coverings. All so delightful to live with—for their lovely looks . . . for the ease with which you can keep them clean and sparkling.

SLOANE-BLABON CORPORATION
295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

CHILDREN WILL PLAY—and what a grand idea to have their playroom right off the kitchen. Mother can cook and still keep an eye on the kiddies. Another help to mother is that beautiful floor—Sloane-Blabon's Resilient Enamel Rug, pattern 3210. Inexpensive, yes—but how wondrously well it wears! How easily it cleans! The Cove Base is Koroseal—never needs painting or waxing!

MOTHER'S DAY gets off to a pleasant start in this breakfast-room beauty. With that handsome Sloane-Blabon Marbletone linoleum floor it's the brightest, cheeriest spot in the house. That wonderful "roomy look" comes from using alternate strips of patterns 0191 and 0197, laid diagonally. And here's an added attraction for mother . . . this floor is so easy to keep sparkle-bright!

SLOANE
LINOLEUM PRODUCTS

". . . for better design and truer color."

From experience comes faith . . .

A man who cannot see walks down the street—confident and unafraid.

Here is complete faith—in both the man and the dog. The man relies on the loyalty and intelligence of his companion. The dog has faith in the friendship of the man.

This faith has come to each from knowledge and understanding of the other—through experience.

Faith grows like this—firm and sure. It is one of the truly solid things in an uncertain world. It gives a man something to measure the unseen values, the things that count most.

E·R·SQUIBB & SONS

Manufacturing Chemists to the Medical Profession since 1858

Anesthetics • Biologicals • Antibiotics
Sulfonamides • Endocrines
Nutritional and Medical Specialties

The priceless ingredient of every product is the honor and integrity of its maker

© 1949, E. R. SQUIBB & SONS

(Continued from Page 70)

Je ins shrugged. "There is a rumor that l(wlesbury, the doctor who died about rs ago, took an interest in him, let ad his books, and tutored him. But bury was more than a little mad him- ring off there in the woods. He had two thousand dollars when he died, left it to Prescott."

U la vaguely remembered Doctor sbury, who had been a town "charac- r many years. She had never seen him, ad heard his name mentioned. She suddenly that she had known more of Cowlesbury.

S rose, and Mr. Jenkins came to his feet allant alacrity.

"y dear Ursula," he said, "let me send me in my carriage."

U la was about to refuse. Then, all at she was very still. "Thank you, Al- she said. "I intended dropping in at Bassett's tea. But I do feel rather fa- ."

early April afternoon had turned chill. l and relentless wind poured down from ills. Andersburg, never a handsome appeared preternaturally ugly in this light, and the "square," as Ursula past it, had an untidy and disheveled was no day for an excursion, especially pulsive one, Ursula reflected. She ought sitting by the cozy fire in Mrs. Bassett's ng room, sipping tea and exchanging and gossip.

began to wonder if her friends, prob- now murmuring questioningly about bsence from the tea . might not be scan- d if they knew where as going at this mo- , and why.

t then, she thought, I do not know myself. sume that if I should wn quietly, and really ntrate, I might come upon a clue. In I know I should. But I prefer not to an- my behavior even to myself.

r cheeks became suddenly warm, and ushed aside the robe. How absurd, how common, this was! She would call to oachman and ask him to take her to the etts', after all. Her gloved hand lifted; very slowly, it subsided. Her cheeks ined hot, but her mouth set itself firmly.

IS only curiosity," she murmured d. Then, because she was seldom capable otal self-deception, she laughed ironi- . The coachman turned his head in in- y; Ursula pretended to be returning the of a lady in a passing carriage.

'hat a smug dolt I have been all my life! remarked inwardly. I have placidly com- with all the conventions, and even in- d some in my priggishness, feeling supe- as I did so. These are fine thoughts indeed n incipient schoolmistress, she told her- as the carriage rolled through streets be- ing less and less respectable. Ursula was ngrossed with her thoughts that she ed up surprised when the carriage halted g the side of the cobbled road. She knew plot of land well. She had seen it last in ruary, broken, uneven, blotched with y snow and puddles of water. Now the w had gone, but the water lay in larger s, partly filled with rubble and trash. At a siderable distance, Ursula could discern kmen with shovels and buckets. Near n loomed heaps of wet earth, which they thrown up. Carts and wagons tilted and ved near by; men were filling them with earth. Ursula, surprised at this activity, ssed that a huge foundation was in the cess of being dug, though the deed to the perty was not yet signed. Then she ed. It was to be expected of the precipi- Mr. Prescott.

itting in the carriage and looking out r what had once been her land, she let her ditations have their way. She started n she heard the rumble of wheels, and ced to her left. A resplendent carriage, ch made Albert Jenkins' comfortable victoria appear commonplace, was drawing up beside her. It was a closed vehicle, and had two black horses beautifully groomed. The coachman wore a smart uniform.

Ursula flushed deeply, and hated herself for being in this place. She had an impulse to tell old Bob to drive on, but this would only add to the humiliation she had brought upon herself. So she waited with every appearance of serenity as the coachman sprang down and walked to the side of the other carriage, and opened the door.

WILLIAM PRESCOTT descended, wearing a fur-collared greatcoat. He stood for a moment, and gave the desolate land he had bought, and the workers, a quick glance.

Of course he knows I am here, thought Ursula, vexed. How silly of him to pretend to be unaware of me. And how awkward it will be if he carries his pretense a little further, and strolls off for a closer view of his property.

But Prescott did not carry his pretense that far. He turned and came toward Ursula's carriage. She saw his face in the thin, shadowless light. Again she was excited by the contradictions in that face, the mingled eloquence and brutality, power and wariness. She detected what she had missed before—a sullen uncertainty in his small, hard eyes. But he was smiling amiably.

Ursula was accustomed to the dictum that ladies never explained, and gentlemen never asked them to explain, so she was not prepared when he said, "It is Miss Wende? Come to look your last on your property?"

She was at a loss for a second or two, but replied, "Good evening, Mr. Prescott." She paused to let him meditate on his impoliteness. But he came closer to her carriage, and stared at her with open question; it was a question, inexplicably, full of hostile implications in spite of his fixed smile.

Don't judge anyone harshly until you yourself have been through his experiences.
—GOETHE.

She could have touched him from where she sat, and her heart began to beat thickly. It was not a pleasant thing to feel, but neither was it unpleasant. It made her fingers tremble in their gloves; it made a lump in her throat. The man was certainly a dreadful creature. But she looked at him in silence, and did not know that both her lips and her eyes had opened very wide.

She forced herself to smile again and to speak calmly, but she detected the falseness in her own voice.

"I am out for a drive," she said. "The first dry day, you see."

Her head swirled with confusing thoughts. She knew that all the strange ideas which had come to her in the past days had been because of this uncivil and disagreeable man, that he had, unwittingly, forced her to think honest thoughts for the first time in her life. But the strangest thought of all came to her at this moment: She saw that in spite of the honesty he had aroused in her, she could never be honest with him. She did not know how this was, or why it was, but she understood that it must be so.

She saw that she was quite right in this, for the hostility, or resentment, with which he had recognized her began to fade, and was replaced by a heavy awkwardness. He did not know what to say next, so she graciously helped him, feeling more in command of herself:

"You have not wasted any time, Mr. Prescott, in beginning your house."

"I never waste time." In another man, this might have been boasting. But in Prescott, it was simply a stating of fact. He studied her with hard candor. What feeble men you must have known before! he seemed to be saying contemptuously. Men without force or vitality or knowledge of what they want. He went on: "I have hopes that it will be finished within six months. I have all the furnishings ordered from New York, and am importing others. Then I shall move in."

He was looking again, over his shoulder, at the dismal tract of land.

Ursula waited. "A very unlikely spot for a fine house, don't you think, Mr. Prescott?"

(Continued on Page 75)

Some Facts About HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

BLOOD PRESSURE rises when a person is active. After the strain has passed, the pressure generally returns to its regular level. If it is persistently and excessively above normal, however, that condition is called hypertension—or high blood pressure. This affects the circulatory system and may lead to serious conditions of the heart, brain, and kidneys.

High blood pressure itself is not a disease, but a symptom of some underlying disorder. Medical science is constantly increasing its knowledge of this condition, and is striving for improved methods of treating it. Special diets have sometimes proved effective. In a limited number of cases, surgery has been used. Additional research is concentrating on mental and emotional factors. There is also hope that newly discovered drugs may prove beneficial.

Periodic physical examinations help reveal hypertension early, when doctors say that chances for control are best. Such check-ups may also discover possible infections which may be causing the condition.

As a result of physical examinations, the doctor may make suggestions for improving your health, such as eating wisely and keeping weight down. The latter is especially important, for high blood pressure is more than twice as common among fat people than it is among persons of normal weight.

In many high blood pressure cases, the best "medicine" is often simply moderation in every physical and mental activity. The patient may be advised to work and play at a slower pace, to avoid emotional strain, and to get plenty of rest and sleep. This helps to lessen the demands on the circulatory system, and may lower blood pressure.

Today, under good medical guidance, the outlook for people with high blood pressure is better than ever before. By carefully following the doctor's advice, they can often avoid complications and look forward to long, useful lives.

•

Aiding in the development of more effective measures to help combat high blood pressure is the Life Insurance Medical Research Fund, supported by 148 Life Insurance Companies. This fund is making grants for research in diseases of the heart and blood vessels, including high blood pressure.

For more information, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 59-J, entitled, "Your Heart." This contains many facts about high blood pressure and diseases related to the heart.

COPYRIGHT 1949—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
1 Madison Avenue,
New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of the free booklet, 59-J, "Your Heart."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

HERE'S WHAT YOU SPEND... ABOUT 1½¢ A NIGHT
HERE'S WHAT YOU GET... BEAUTYREST COMFORT!

1. A mattress is a big, IMPORTANT purchase! You want to get full, honest-to-goodness value. And you'll discover there's no better value than Beautyrest at any price!

You get luxury rest—the healthful, deeply refreshing rest Beautyrest is famous for! And you get unbeatable mattress quality.

How about that 1½¢? Here's how it works out. The price is $59.50, and it's guaranteed for 10 years. Do some simple arithmetic. Out comes the answer—only about a penny and a half a night!

Get your money's worth—your Beautyrest—today!

2. Water-glass test shows why Beautyrest is unique and better! Every Beautyrest coil spring is individually pocketed. Each spring acts independently. That's why water glass stays steady, even when surrounding springs are pressed down.

3. More evidence that Beautyrest gives you more comfort! "Ordinary" mattress springs are tied together. Springs pull each other down, causing sag. But those 837 Beautyrest springs are not tied together—can't sag, always give luxury rest!

275-lb. mattress-mauler pounds Beautyrest "torture" test conducted by United States Test Co. Laboratories. Beautyrest took 740,774 t poundings than any other mattress tested—lasts twice as long as the next best mattress tested!

Beautyrest defies edge-of-bed sitters! Pre-b border and no-sag edges protect that trim Beauty shape for the life of the mattress! Coils are buil to the mattress' edge, giving you mid-mattress c fort right out to the edges! 8 ventilators.

Only SIMMONS makes BEAUTYREST*

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS—the greatest name in bedding: Hide-A-Bed—the sofa that doubles as an "extra bedroom." Electronic Blanket—a new defense against colds. Deepsleep mattress—a fine Simmons mattress at a lower price. Babybeauty crib mattress—made to doctors' specifications. Ace Spring—the modern spring for the modern mattress.

*TRADE-MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. COPR. 1949 BY SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART, CHICAGO 54, ILL.

(Continued from Page 73)

turned to her, smiling disagreeably. t for long, Miss Wende. You see, I have ht up a great deal of land, all around it, ast seventy acres."

ndeed!" cried Ursula. She thought of rt Jenkins, and began to laugh.

r. Prescott stared at her, frowning. "I lad I have amused you," he said. Then miled, with some dark amusement of own. "I suppose you would not tell me ends of yours have become interested e properties around here, since I have ht yours?"

Oh, I should not, really I should not!" imed Ursula with delight.

see," he said, and they smiled at each r. He continued, "What fools they are, ink I'd be such a fool myself. Of course, ow that Andersburg must grow this way, that all property will eventually be val- e in this area. I bought your land first. n I bought the rest. Yours was the key I intend to use only your fifteen acres ny house and grounds. The rest will be only for houses commensurate with ." He shrugged, a coarse and heavy ges- A hand tapped on the window of his car- , and he glanced in that direction. He "Would you like to see my son, Miss de? He is in my carriage." His expres- was almost friendly.

Your son?" asked Ursula. "But I ght you were not married, Mr. Pres- "

Of course I am not married," he answered impatience. "I adopted a child some e ago. A little boy. He is now two years and a very likely little fellow."

I should like to see him, indeed."

Without another word, this peculiar man oned to his coachman and spoke curtly. servant promptly got off his seat, and ned the carriage door. Ursula saw the rl of a cloak, and outlines of a bonnet. sat up straighter and a little thrill of ness went through her. Then she saw t the young woman wore the uniform of ursemaid. She was carrying a child in her ns, a child richly dressed. She came to- rd Ursula's carriage.

She was quite a pretty creature, but it was dent that Prescott did not see her pretti- s or her sex. She had hardly reached him ore he snatched the child from her arms. retreated, then stood meekly waiting. Prescott held up the child for Ursula to . To her bewilderment, he was all gentle- ss and tenderness. There was an air of ost idolatrous absorption about him, a d of exulting pride.

"His name is Oliver," he said. "Look at n, Miss Wende. Is he not a fine lad?"

Ursula was not fond of children. But in spite of herself, she became interested. The little boy was larger than ordinary for his age. He wore a round, fur-trimmed hat, to match the ridiculous furred collar of his coat. But under that hat, entirely too ostentatious for a baby, was a round and rosy face, full of shy but curious intelligence. The child's eyes, dark, fearless and smiling, caught and held Ursula's complete attention. There was a wiseness about them, as if they saw more than such a young child should see.

"What a darling!" she said involuntarily.

Without meaning to, she held out her arms, and took the boy, lifting him into the carriage and settling him on her knee. She gazed at him with unrestrained pleasure. She had never kissed a baby before, but now she impulsively bent and kissed that red cold cheek. The baby looked up at her, no longer smiling, but intent and quiet.

"I see you like children," said Prescott, with such gentleness that Ursula was startled out of her preoccupation with little Oliver.

She had been about to say, "Certainly not. I do not dislike them, but I am a mature woman and so cannot help finding children extremely boring." But with her queer awareness that she could never be honest with a man who had made her honest, she answered evasively, "Who could help loving this darling?" She was still so stirred by the gentleness in his voice that she continued to study him keenly after she had spoken.

Apparently he had not detected her evasion. He came closer to the carriage and rested his elbow on the side. To hide her own emotions, Ursula bent her head over the baby. The child smiled at her gravely and steadfastly, as if he understood her. She did not dandle him, or talk to him foolishly. She merely looked into his great dark eyes, and he looked into hers, and a sympathy flowed between them.

Ursula spoke softly to Prescott, though she did not turn away from the baby: "I heard, only today, of your kindness to our orphan asylum. All of us know it is in a fearful condition, but selfishness, or indifference, has kept us from doing much about it."

"Yes," replied Prescott bitterly. "The children are poorly clad, they have little or no medical attention, they are hired out at an early age at work unsuited to them. It is my intention to put a stop to this."

Ursula was intensely moved. "You must be very fond of children," she said.

To her faint alarm, a look of fanaticism flashed into his eyes. "I am fond of them because they are the only decency in the world!" he exclaimed. "They are what men were intended to be, and are not. There is no

"Don't just stand there; start looking for a sitter!"

You'll be happier with a HOOVER®

Whichever type you prefer

No other cleaner has ever matched a Hoover in getting deep-down grit, keeping colors bright, prolonging rug wear. It makes life easier for the woman with cleaning to do. Now Hoover offers you the greatest possible choice—two basic types, four models. Why wait? Get happier today! Call your Hoover dealer for a home showing of any model.

MODEL 50 (above). Hoover's cylinder cleaner. Cleans by powerful suction. Easiest-to-use of its type. Features exclusive Dirt Ejector. Complete with cleaning tools in handy kit, Mothimizer and sprayer. $79.50

MODEL 28 (below). Popular-priced Triple-Action Cleaner—it beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans. Instant conversion for above-the-floor cleaning..... $74.95 Cleaning tools in handy, lightweight kit..... $19.95

You'll be happier with the new Hoover Iron. Light, slick, quick, made for speed and ease. Many features. Exclusive Pancake Dial, large, easy to read, gives positive heat control. See it . . . "feel" the difference. At leading stores everywhere.

MODEL 115 (left). Hoover, Junior. Newest, lightest Hoover. Ideal for small homes, handy for all homes. Low, light, neat and trim. Cleans far "bigger" than its size. A Hoover through and through. It beats, as it sweeps, as it cleans..... $59.95

Cleaning tools extra.

THE HOOVER COMPANY North Canton, Ohio; Hamilton, Ont., Canada; Perivale, England.

SMART WINDOWS

SMART BERKSHIRES

SMART BUY

Dress your windows with elegance, style and character. Project your sense of fine taste within your budget. In flower pastels, in purest white and off-whites, they're deep-ruffled . . . fine spun . . . crisp as narcissus petals. Washing? Nothing to it—for these airy organdies are permanent finished, don't need starch. All Berkshire curtains are vat-dyed, color fast. See lavish Berkshires, lightly priced, first thing this Spring!

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET: "FASHIONS IN WINDOWS" for bright new curtain ideas. Just drop us a penny postcard with your name and address. Dep't LHJ5, Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, 40 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

Berkshire®
FINE CURTAINS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Berkshire® is also the world's largest producer of fine combed cotton fabrics for men's, women's and children's wear evil in children, no cruelty, no greed, no heartlessness."

Astounded, Ursula could only keep an incredulous silence.

He took the child and held him almost fiercely in his arms. "I want to do what I can for children, all children," this preposterous man said. "I want to give them everything they want, to make the world a happy place for them, and a clean one."

"And you think that by denying a child nothing, by giving him his way, he will be happy?" asked Ursula.

"A child has a right to everything," replied Prescott, and again he was fanatical. "Nothing should be demanded of him, but everything should be demanded of his parents. He owes nothing to anyone, but everyone owes everything to him. He is the world's responsibility."

Really, thought Ursula, the man is not only a barbarian, he is a fool. Of course, it is easy to see that he is speaking out of memory of his own childhood, and the deprivations and mortification he must have suffered. He does not love children so much as he loves the memory of his helpless young self, whom he now wishes to avenge.

"It is kind of you to feel so strongly about children, and to care for them so much," she said with mendacity. But Prescott did not answer. He was fastening a button on little Oliver's coat, and he did this with absorption. Ursula raised her voice. "I really must go home," she said.

He heard this. He gave her a smile so open, so friendly and gentle, that she was more startled than ever. Again her heart began to beat thickly. "Yes, of course. It is getting cold," he said.

He shifted Oliver to his left arm, held out his right hand to Ursula, without bothering to remove his glove. She hesitated. Then she gave him her hand, and she felt the warmth and strength of his fingers. A great weakness flowed over her, and involuntarily her slight fingers clung to his. They looked at each other in an odd and sudden silence.

"Good night," he said, and then again, in a lower voice, mysteriously troubled, "good night." But he did not release her hand. He looked down at it. "Oliver likes you. He is very reserved with strangers. Perhaps I could bring him to call on you soon?"

"By all means," said Ursula faintly. "I am always at home to my friends on Sunday afternoons."

He released her hand now. Ursula murmured a word to Bob, who flicked Mr. Jenkins' horse with his whip, and drove on. Ursula sank back on the leather cushions. The carriage carried her through the streets of Andersburg. As it did so, she felt an overpowering desolation as if, moment by moment, she was leaving something it was not bearable to leave.

The spring that year had been unusually warm, so that it was hardly past the middle of April when the lilacs bloomed. Ursula was extremely fond of gardening, which usually calmed any slight ruffle or anxiety in her mind. She busied herself with planting and transplanting as usual. But now it was not "calming." The very murmur and bursting of the spring heightened the mystifying restlessness from which she had begun to suffer. Mysteriously, however, this very restlessness made her natural awareness of spring more acute. She found herself pausing in the act of digging about a plant to look at the hills, warm purple and intense blue, in the distance behind her house; she would often lift her eyes to the sky. And as she did so, her heart rose on a sudden wing of mingled ecstasy and pain.

She had no words for all this; she had lived too controlled a life to analyze every emotion which came to her. It was only in her dreams that that which she repressed in waking hours could come to haunt her. Always, it was the face of William Prescott. Yet, so forceful was her self-control that she never remembered her dreams. There was only a residue in the morning, veiled and disturbing, a kind of hurried excitement and urge.

Beauty depends on Hold-Bobs

. . . because HOLD-BOBS really hold. The perfection of this beauty is assured because those perfect curls are formed and held in place gently, yet so very securely, by this truly superior bobby pin. There is nothing finer.

More women use
HOLD-BOBS
than all other bobby pins combined

*T M REG. U. S. PAT OFF

HOLD-BOB* is a GAYLA* hair beauty aid

©1948 GAYLORD PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED, CHICAGO, ILL.

FEET HURT?

When Your Feet Hurt, You Hurt All Over!

For Fast Relief Get Dr. Scholl's!

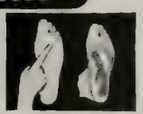
PAINFUL foot trouble can slow you down, make you hurt all over. Millions like yourself have won quick relief with Dr. Scholl's clinic-tested, dependable Aids for the Feet. Their cost is very small.

This famous consultant on diseases and deformities of the feet has designed and formulated Appliances, Arch Supports, Remedies, Pads and Plasters for the relief of all common foot troubles. At Drug, Shoe, Department Stores and Toilet Goods Counters.

CORNS—SORE TOES

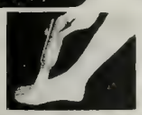
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads quickly relieve pain and gently remove corns; lift shoe pressure; soothe, cushion. Prevent corns, sore toes and blisters. 25¢ and 35¢ boxes.

PAIN HERE?



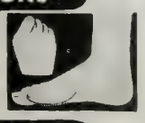
Dr. Scholl's LuPAD, a soft feather-weight cushion; loops over forepart of foot; relieves pains, cramps, callouses, burning, tenderness at ball. Washable. $1.50 pair.

WEAK ARCHES



Dr. Scholl's Foot-Eazer and exercise relieve tired, aching feet, foot and leg pains, when due to weak or fallen arches. Light, flexible and adjustable. $5.00 pair.

PAIN, CALLOUSES



Dr. Scholl's Metatarsal Arch Supports and exercise quickly relieve pains, callouses, bunions, tenderness due to arch weakness. Light, flexible, adjustable. $1 pair, up.

TENDER FEET

Dr. Scholl's Foot Powder relieves tender, chafed, sweaty, odorous feet; eases new or tight shoes. Helps reduce excessive perspiration and aids in preventing Athlete's Foot. 35¢.

SEVERE BUNIONS

Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reducer, of soft rubber, relieves pain from shoe pressure, hides the bulge, helps preserve shape of shoe. 75¢ each. Leather Bunion Protector, 75¢ each.

ATHLETE'S FOOT

Dr. Scholl's Solvex relieves itching feet and toes; kills fungi it contacts; helps heal red, raw, cracked, peeling skin of Athlete's Foot. Liquid, Powder or Ointment. 60¢.

RELIEF—PROTECTION

Dr. Scholl's Kurotex, soft, soothing, cushioning, protective foot plaster, relieves shoe friction and pressure on corns, callouses, bunions, tender spots on feet and toes. Cuts to any size and shape. 30¢.

Dr Scholl's

FOOT COMFORT® REMEDIES, APPLIANCES AND ARCH SUPPORTS

FREE Foot Book, also sample of Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads for Corns. Address Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10.

Name.....

Address..... HJ-5

She thought she had forgotten that cold afternoon when she had met William Prescott near the land he had bought from her. But she remembered that he had promised to visit her some Sunday afternoon with little Oliver. A kind of urgent excitement began to rise in her every Friday. On Saturday her restlessness became almost unendurable. On Sunday she often trembled when she heard a knock on the door at teatime. But Sundays always passed placidly, with an old friend or two dropping in for a chat and a cup of tea. Then the evening would come, and she would be alone before the fire, with the church bells ringing softly and plaintively through the spring twilight.

She thought, How could I have been so stupid? And why do I not know that I have been even more stupid waiting for that impossible and dangerous man? She stirred up the fire, then sat down before it, her fingers laced together. She began to cry, as she had not cried even when her father had died. But tears could not wash away this hunger, this loneliness, this passion, now acknowledged, to see William Prescott again.

Once she thought, I shall go tomorrow, and see if he is there near that land he bought from me! But her next sensation was of shame and disgust with herself. She rose and began to walk up and down the room. I am behaving like a schoolgirl, she told herself with scorn.

She did not want to see him again; she did not want to think of him. And so she forced herself, deliberately, to prepare for her post as schoolmistress in the autumn. She brought out lengths of brown wool and black cloth, and, as she was an expert seamstress, commenced to transform these lengths into garments for the schoolroom.

There could be no better surplus in the world than that of gratitude. —JEAN DE LA BRUYÈRE.

But one day she remembered the rich blue silk which her father had given her only a week before he had died. She brought out the silk, and then, after long contemplation, began to fashion a handsome gown.

Her taste had always been impeccable, and she brought all her natural genius for design to the making of this gown. The bodice was plain and closely fitted; she added buttons of crystal from throat to waist in a close sparkling blaze. The skirt was molded, yet formed of rows of full ruffles. She made the sleeves tight, so that they shimmered, then broke into wide ruffles at the wrist. When the gown had been completed, and she stood before her mirror, she saw how the color brought out the copper in her hair, and made her eyes appear of a deep amber shade. She was a woman, and young, and desirable.

Then she put away the gown, wrapping it in a sheet.

It was the next day that the news about William Prescott burst out in headlines in Andersburg's newspapers. There were editorials, too, which, while they did not cry "robber" and "swindler," implied these things. Ursula read them avidly, learned much of the lumber business. It seemed that William Prescott had started as a clerk in the offices of Chauncey Arnold, "a gentleman well known to most of Andersburg residents, and respected and admired by all." Mr. Arnold had taken much interest in young Prescott and had taught him the lumber business. Prescott had learned to be a lumber surveyor, and frequently had been sent to survey virgin forests and buy options for the American Lumber Company.

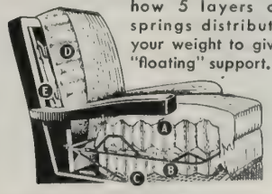
A year ago, Mr. Arnold had sent him to Michigan to survey a certain region to discover if the wood was suitable for expanding railroads. Prescott had returned, and reported that the wood was of no consequence, and advised Mr. Arnold not to take options on the forests. But Prescott had taken up options in his own name on ten thousand acres. He had then gone to New York, and persuaded Jay Regan, the great New York financier, to finance him. Mr. Regan had

(Continued on Page 79)

Every Day is Father's Day

And here's something he will look forward to with pleasure every day, and enjoy for years. It's the popular Pullman*aire*. His own big, inviting chair—in whose cushioned depths he can relax with a deep, happy sigh of content after a hard day. So, to prove your affection, give him a Pullman*aire* . . . NOW.

Sitting is believing



CHOOSE A

Pullman*aire*

It's HIS Chair

Pullmanaire A NEW LINE BY PULLMAN

Spring Float —the Secret of PULLMAN*AIRE* Comfort

Cutaway view shows how 5 layers of springs distribute your weight to give "floating" support.

A, B, D—Layers of individual muslin-covered springs.

C—Flexible steel suspension.

E—Sinuous-wire-spring back foundation. 195 Springs in all.

Only the Pullman*aire* chair offers the wonderful buoyant comfort of Pullman's exclusive Spring Float construction. Note in the cutaway view how the layers of springs (195 springs in all) distribute body weight to produce that marvelous feeling of complete relaxation. It's a new sensation in sitting comfort—in a masculine-looking chair that is highly decorative and soundly built to serve for many years.

Priced at $119 and up, according to style and fabric. Sitting is believing. See and try the Pullman*aire*. If your furniture dealer cannot supply you write us.

For a generous selection of smartest coverings, weaves and colors see the exclusive Pullman Collection of Decorator Fabrics at your dealer's.

Plan for FATHER'S DAY, June 19th. See your furniture dealer NOW.

PULLMAN COUCH COMPANY · Chicago 9 · New York 16 · Newton Falls, Ohio

Makers of fine furniture for half a century

Raleigh, pattern RH 13, shell design, in Ceri

Very first entertaining
ON A MOHAWK CARPET

It's never too early to learn the elegance and finish given to entertaining by a deep, soft, luxurious Mohawk-carpeted floor. Shown here: Mohawk's wall-to-wall Cerise Raleigh, an embossed Wilton weave. Smart color when great-grandmother's doll was new . . . newly smart again today, as a traditional foundation for rosewood and mahogany, or a brilliant accent in pale blond wood modern decor.

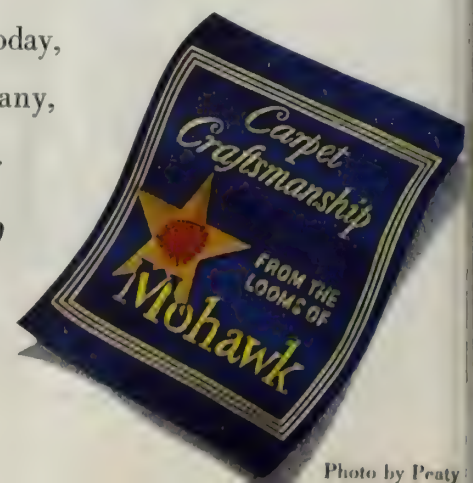

Photo by Peaty

Mohawk

MOHAWK CARPET MILLS, INC. • AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

OW—Be Your Own Decorator!

ny color material . . . fabric, paper, chalk, wood veneer to your own color combina- of walls, furniture, drapery carpeting. Put the Mohawk e Color Planner" room trans- ey over your color scheme iew the results. So simple to ment before decorating your Achieve professional results. 25c to

Carpet Mills, Inc., Amsterdam, N. Y. Department

.....STATE.....

(Continued from Page 77)

packed" Prescott, who, still working under ver, had set himself up as the Prescott umber Company, incorporated only two onths ago.

The snowball of this man's evil had begun enlarge. Mr. Arnold had offered a certain ilroad a tremendous quantity of lumber. he railroad officials had practically prom- ed to buy, but suddenly had rejected the of- r, and placed the order with the Prescott umber Company, of which Prescott was esident and, as yet, sole officer. Moreover, had bought up several sawmills near An- rsburg, had placed large orders for coal and gun to hire men. Machinery was already riving in Andersburg. He also purchased wmills in Michigan and other states.

The American Lumber Company, small ut prosperous, had felt this terrific blow. ther orders fell into the hands of the con- mptible Prescott. The stock of the Amer- an Lumber Company had begun to drop angerously in the market. Dozens of local usinessmen who had invested in that com- any would be almost if not entirely ruined.

Ursula said aloud, "What an unprincipled coundrel!" She sat back in her chair, and ried to summon up moral indignation. Cer- ainly the story was bad enough. The man ad deceived, exploited and betrayed his em- loyer.

The reprehensible part was that Ursula, ry though she did, could feel neither revul- ion nor contempt. She knew Mr. Arnold uite well, knew that his own hands were soiled," to use a delicate xpression to describe that entleman's own chican- ry and avarice. No, she ad no pity for Mr. Ar- old. If he had trusted Mr. Prescott and paid him an excellent salary, then Pres- cott had been worthy of his hire.

But, if I had never met the man I should have been very indignant, thought Ursula. What has meeting him got to do with it?

Love at first sight is only realizing an imagination that has always haunted us: of meeting with a face, or figure, or cast of expression in perfection that we have seen and admired in a less degree or in less favorable circumstances a hundred times before. —WILLIAM HAZLITT.

All at once she felt exhausted. She put on the kettle to brew a cup of tea, and then walked to the kitchen window. It was two o'clock in the afternoon; the hills had become a deep and brilliant green under the mild spring sky. The lilac bushes in the garden frothed in white and lavender and purple, and their perfume came to her as she pushed open one side of the casement.

She heard someone strike the knocker on her door. She stood very still near the stove. The caller was undoubtedly a friend, come to discuss the horrid news with her. It was well known that she had sold Mr. Prescott her land, and that he had visited her.

The knocker sounded again. She opened the door and, with a rush of relief, saw that her caller was a young man shabbily dressed, who held a letter in his hand. He pulled off his cap. "A message from Mr. William Prescott at the Imperial Hotel, ma'am. He said I am to wait for an answer." He stared at her curiously.

For a moment Ursula could not take the letter, and when she did, it dropped from her trembling fingers. She bent for it swiftly, before the young man could reach it. Then, caution coming to her again, she said, "Mr. Prescott? Why should he write to me? I think you should have taken this to my lawyer, Mr. Jenkins."

The messenger said awkwardly, "Mr. Prescott wanted an answer personal, ma'am. He didn't say to give this letter to no one else."

Ursula said primly, "Well, I shall read the message, and you may wait for an answer."

She left the door ajar and tore open the envelope. There were only a few lines scrawled in a large, black and arrogant hand. "Oliver and I should like to call upon you at six o'clock this evening, on a matter of importance." There was no salutation; Mr. Prescott had signed his name without any of the accepted and polite conclusions.

Ursula slowly refolded the note and bit her lips. She must really control herself, she thought. The message had been hard and cold enough; why, then, did it assume such significance?

The young man shuffled on the doorstep, and coughed. Ursula said coldly, "Tell Mr. Prescott that I cannot change any of the terms agreed upon between him and Mr. Jenkins, and that if he is not satisfied I shall be glad to tell him so myself."

"Yes, ma'am," said the messenger. He walked away, and Ursula closed the door. Would William Prescott understand? What if he did not come? She remembered his dark and sullen face, and the quickness of his small, cold eyes. He was a subtle man, for all the coarsenesses which could make his features brutal at times. Surely, he would understand!

At four o'clock, Ursula Wende tried to force herself to work in the garden. But a silvery rain had begun to whirl down from the hills. With the rain had come a chill in the spring air, and Ursula made a fresh fire in her charming little parlor. Now the hiatus of the day had arrived, when she was accustomed to eating a small but refreshing tea.

She made tea, cut a slice or two of bread, laid out the preserves, and her cup and saucer. But she found that she could not eat; it was an effort to drink the tea.

She sat motionless, her fingers closed stiffly about the handle of the cup. He must come, she thought. He must understand. If six o'clock arrives, and he does not appear, I shall not be able to stand it.

Her thoughts no longer shocked or vexed her. She said aloud, slowly, wonderingly, "I love him." She heard her voice in the warm silence of the kitchen, and caught her breath. To no one in all the years she had lived had she spoken of love, not even to her father. She repeated her words.

She did not know she was weeping until she tasted the wet salt on her lips. She rose, washed her cup and saucer. She did not try to deny what she had said. She did not attempt to raise scorn against herself.

Ursula thought, It is not possible that he might come to love me. Why should he? I have seen him twice, and he looked at me with sharp dislike each time. Each time we ended by quarreling. Yet all the time, I loved him.

Slowly and wearily, she went upstairs. She lighted the lamps on her dresser, and studied her face with somberness. It was pale and strained, she saw. But it was strange to her; the eyes were too intense and dark, the mouth taut and drawn.

Abstractedly, she removed the pins from her hair, brushed it slowly. She was about to wind it up again, when she paused. Swiftly, she opened her wardrobe door, took out the blue silk gown. Now her hands were trembling again. She coiled up her hair, drew a wing over her forehead. She put on the gown, fastened the crystal buttons. She opened the bottle of French scent which her father had given her on her birthday; it had never been used before. With new artfulness, she touched her ears and her hair with it, and let fall a drop on a lace-bordered handkerchief.

All at once she heard the chiming of the little clock on her mantelpiece. It chimed six times. He will not come, thought Ursula. She carefully blew out the lamps, went down the stairs.

She had just reached the bottom of the winding curve of stairs when she heard a carriage stop before her house. Her heart jumped so violently that she pressed her hands to her breast. Then the habit of a lifetime reasserted itself. Why am I permitting this indiscreet thing? I ought to have had a female friend in the house with me. If he knocks on the door, a dozen heads will be at windows, and I shall be ruined.

Before the knocker could be sounded she flung the door open. William Prescott's carriage stood outside, its lamps burning in the misty street; the wet cobblestones gleamed

the LESTER Concert Grand

Peerless Quality

Since 1888 there has been no compromise with quality in the building of world famous Lester Grand Pianos. Three generations of the same family have steadfastly adhered to the founder's policy of using only the finest craftsmanship and materials.

Distinguished by glorious tone, full volume and responsive touch, today's models are more beautiful than ever . . . the ideal selection for home or concert stage.

Whether your choice is the regal 8-foot, 11-inch Concert Grand pictured, or any of the complete line of Lester Grand Pianos . . . it will be a lifetime investment in true musical excellence.

Your dealer will be happy to show you the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet . . . made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc.

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

A BEAUTIFUL PIANO WITH A MAGNIFICENT TONE

ONE name quality price

SOLD BY AMERICA'S FOREMOST PIANO DEALERS

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., Inc., LESTER 13, PA.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____ 3Y-J

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

in the yellow light of the street lamps. Prescott was alighting from the carriage which his coachman had opened. He was carrying the child, Oliver.

Ursula stood on the threshold. The light of the street lamp fell on the dark plane of his cheek, and she drew in her breath with a quick sound. For the first time, he became aware of her. He was smiling, and, as usual, the smile was hardly more than a grimace, reluctant and unfriendly.

"We have come to see you," he said in his flat and toneless voice.

"So I see," she answered.

Prescott entered the little vestibule, and Ursula led the way into her parlor. She stood in the center of the room, her hands clasped before her, and watched him remove his hat and coat, and then Oliver's, revealing the child in an absurd little frock of wine-colored velvet and lace. Oliver stared at Ursula gravely with his large dark eyes, then smiled. Involuntarily she smiled back, and took a step toward the child. It was not possible to feel resentment against such a child. He was really a darling.

Without waiting for her to seat herself, William sat down near the fire, lifted Oliver on his knee and looked at his hostess. He appeared less unfriendly now. "Of course I understood your message," he said. "And the reason for it. It must be dreadful to be a lone woman at the mercy of gossips."

She was surprised at his subtlety. Something tight relaxed in her. She sat down and smiled. "Well, I must preserve my reputation, if I am to teach the young ladies of the best families."

Though she knew him to be unpredictable, she was startled when his face became suddenly malignant. "'The best families!'" he repeated. "Do you really consider them 'the best'? And, if so, on what evidence?"

Why was it not possible to conduct a conversation with him that was pleasant and well bred? That anger which always stirred her when he was near flooded Ursula again. She spoke slowly and clearly: "What is 'the best'? I should say it is in people who are considerate, polite, with a respect for civilized amenities, with a code of honor ——"

He interrupted rudely: "I agree with you. But I have never met such in this town, or anywhere else for that matter."

She was silent, her lips pressed together.

Then he said awkwardly, "Except you, Miss Wende."

She could hardly believe that he had said this. She stammered, all anger foolishly draining away, "I beg your pardon?"

He pretended to be engrossed with straightening Oliver's frock. "I think you heard me." Then abruptly he set Oliver on his feet. "This is Miss Wende, Oliver. A very nice lady. Go to the lady, Oliver."

Ursula's hands were hot and tremulous. She wanted to act the hypocrite in her elation. So she wished that she might cry out softly to Oliver, to woo this man through the child. But she could not. She could only sit in rigid silence, staring at Oliver, who appeared uncertain. She struggled against her iron paralysis. Then she understood that William Prescott was willing her not to move or speak; he was about to judge her through the actions of his child, his response to her.

Oliver was not smiling now. Ursula's fingers tightened over one another convulsively. If the child did not come to her, all was lost. It was ridiculous and nightmarish.

Oliver clung to his father's knee, doubtfully studying Ursula. She saw his eyes, intelligent and searching, as if he were indeed weighing and considering her. That was not possible; he was so very young, this child. Ursula had never considered children vulnerable before, or touching. But all at once, without her volition, her heart opened painfully toward Oliver with a kind of yearning and tenderness. She remembered his origin the misery from which he had been rescued. It was not to be believed that he remembered. Or could he possibly remember, and was it remembrance that made his round face so grave?

Oliver dropped his arm from his father's knee. Slowly, but firmly, the child moved toward her, his eyes fastened eagerly on her face. He reached her, flung his small arms over her knees. She bent and caught him up, pressed him against her and kissed his forehead. The scent of his baby flesh was good and sweet to her, soft and fresh. His arms tightened about her neck; his small moist mouth responded to her own kisses, and he sighed contentedly.

Ursula had completely forgotten William Prescott. She actually started when he said in his loud flat voice, "Oliver!" There was a jealous intonation in the word.

Ursula lifted her head and looked at him. She set the baby down, and said, "Go to papa, darling." Oliver peeped up at her mischievously. Then, as if he comprehended, he shouted gleefully and ran to his father, throwing himself into the man's arms and kissing him. A subtle child, thought Ursula, smiling. Perhaps there is an instinct in children, after all, compounded of pure understanding and awareness.

Mr. Prescott held the child to him, smoothing the baby's hair tenderly. He said, smiling, "It is plain to see that Oliver likes you, Miss Wende."

Ursula said, with care, "Naturally, I am flattered. I have known many children, and I have never seen one so sweet and intelligent as Oliver. You are to be congratulated, Mr. Prescott."

He smiled disagreeably, shifted Oliver to a sitting position on his knee. He said, still stroking the child's head, "I presume you have seen the newspapers, Miss Wende?"

"Yes."

Again he scrutinized her. He could read nothing in her face. Curious, he leaned toward her. "What did you think about it?" he asked.

The question affronted her with its lack of taste. She did not know what to say.

"Would you prefer that I deny the stories?" he asked.

"I assure you, Mr. Prescott," she said coldly, "that what you do or do not is none of my affair."

"But you are evading my question," he said impatiently. "Would you prefer that I deny the stories?"

"I should like you to deny them, if they are not true."

He was obviously amused, for his browned face wrinkled about the eyes and mouth dryly. "And if they are true?" he suggested.

Ursula shrugged. "Though I am a woman, and have led a quiet life, I am not ignorant of the world. The saga of entrepreneurs is the saga of a rising America. They seem to be a natural phenomenon, and civilization and the building of a nation appear to be dependent on their inventiveness, violence and energy. Though I doubt very much that they care particularly whether or not a nation becomes powerful and rich because of them, so long as they themselves profit. The power and richness of a nation are only the strange by-products of such men's activities. So, in a way, I suppose that they serve a valuable purpose."

He concentrated with thoughtfulness on her reply. "I don't suppose you really mean to flatter me," he said. "At any rate, I can tell you this: On the surface, the newspaper tales are true." He waited. "You are not shocked? After all, what I have done doubtless affects many of your friends."

Ursula ought to have thought of half a dozen of her friends, agreeable, gentle, honest folk, who had been injured by this man.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Paradox

By Esther Wood

A candle or a flower,
It is the same:
Lit for one lovely hour
The slender flame.

A universe of night
Bends o'er the glow.
And yet it is the light
We love and know.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

ADD Zip— to your favorite salad dressing WITH Colman's Mustard

Here's a quick easy trick that gives salad dressing extra flavor and dash— the zesty tang men prefer

Blend 2 teaspoonfuls of Colman's (dry) Mustard with a little water. Then add it to an 8-oz. jar of your favorite prepared salad dressing. Equally good with prepared mayonnaise or French dressing. Try this flavor trick tonight!

THE FAMOUS DRY MUSTARD used by fine cooks everywhere

She thought, instead, of Albert Jenkins. Sh said with constraint, "I think that you did not particularly have it in mind to in jure so many people. It was unavoidable.
They were merely in the way of what you wanted." She paused. "But there was someone whom you not only needed to injure, but whom you wanted to injure, was there not?"

She saw his swift look of surprise. After a long moment, he carefully set Oliver on the chair beside him. Then he said quietly,
"Yes. You are quite right. I needed, and wanted, to injure Chauncey Arnold. Is he a friend of yours?"

"He tried to be a friend of my father's."

He nodded. "Well, you must know him.
A blustering, conceited idiot. He is a thief on a small scale, a liar and rascal. Had he been a big thief, a great scoundrel, one might almost admire him. But, of course, you do not know what I mean."

Ursula could not answer. Prescott regarded her with attention, as if challenging her.

"When I went to work for him ten years ago, the American Lumber Company was almost bankrupt. I made it a flourishing concern. I learned all about lumber not from Arnold, but from experience." He stopped for a moment. "I made some money in small investments, by surveying forests for other lumber companies; I also received a legacy from Doctor Cowlesbury. It was all he had. I saved the American Lumber Company, and Arnold finally paid me nine hundred dollars a year. Nine hundred dollars! For rescuing him from bankruptcy, and enabling him to buy the handsomest house in this city. All the time he thought that I was a fool, suffering his arrogance and his stupidity, without the intelligence to know that I was being exploited."

"If it will help at all, Mr. Prescott," said Ursula, "I think Mr. Arnold is a crass and doltish idiot. My father despised him."

"You really think that?" he asked, and there was a hard suspicion in his voice.

"I should not have said it if I did no think it."

"Then you do not condemn me?" Hi words were childish, yet infinitely touching

"No. But why should you care whether condemn you or not?"

He stood up abruptly. He took a step to ward her, then turned to the hearth and looked grimly at the fire. He said, with quie and bitter wrath, "Why should I care? Be cause I came here tonight to ask you to marr
me."

Ursula could not move. His expression, th tone of his voice, terrified her. You love m
she said feebly to herself, you love me, an you hate me because you love me. You neve intended to love any woman.

"Well?" he said harshly. "Can't yo speak?"

She turned her head toward the fire an gazed at it blindly. "You have a most singu lar way of proposing," she said.

He ignored this. "You have not answere
my question. I will understand if you refus but I want you to consider what I am offerin you. You are not a rich woman. I am a ric man, and I shall be richer. There is nothin you might want that I cannot give you."

Ursula turned and regarded him stead fastly. "Why do you want to marry me, M Prescott?"

Now his expression became as she had see it before—coarse, brutal. "Because Olive needs a mother. Because I think you will h a proper mother for my children. Becaus the house I am building needs a mistress.
He threw the words at her insultingly, bu
she knew he was defending himself agains the thing he would not admit, because h had never wished to love her, and hated he for it. He continued: "I intended to marr a woman like you, a lady of good family
But I had hoped to marry a woman wit money. It is unfortunate that you are poo
But I still wish you would marry me."

Ursula turned scarlet with affront and in dignation. "Mr. Prescott!" she exclaime

He stared at her implacably. "I am bein honest with you. I am a rich man. I wan money, a great deal of money. I might hav

WESSON OIL is the big news of Betty Crocker's* wonderful Chiffon Cakes! Never before was cake so light, yet moist and rich! And Betty Crocker's recipe for delicious Nesselrode Chiffon calls for Wesson Oil. Chiffon is so delicate in flavor and texture that you must use a light, dainty salad oil as shortening. Wesson Oil—America's favorite Salad Oil—enhances all delicate flavors! Try it for digestible frying, too!

New recipes—218 of them! Send for "How to Win Compliments," new 100 page cookbook, chock full of photographs, many in color. Send name, address and 25¢ in coin to Wesson Oil and Snowdrift People, Dept. A2, New Orleans 12, La.

with de Chiffon!

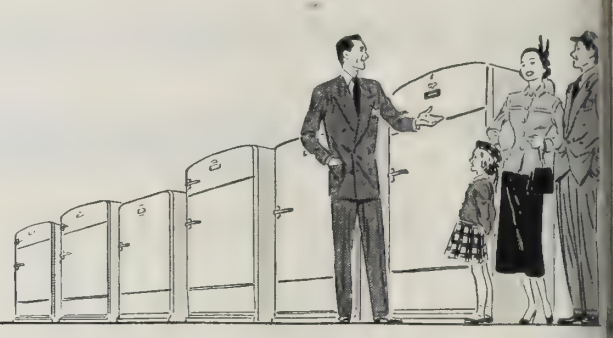
for delicate salads—Wesson Oil!

HOLLYWOOD SALAD...with cracklin's!

¼ tsp. salt
½ tsp. sugar
⅛ tsp. paprika
¼ tsp. mustard
dash pepper
⅓ cup Wesson Oil
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 raw egg
½ cup radish slices
spring salad greens
¾ cup suet cracklin's*

Combine all seasonings with Wesson Oil, vinegar and egg; beat with a rotary beater. (Taste this new sunny dressing...see what a difference Wesson Oil makes. Its delicacy plays up good flavors!) Toss crisp greens and radish slices in salad bowl with this smooth piquant dressing, and top with cracklin's. Every leaf crisp and gleaming...every taste fresh and delicate. No wonder Wesson Oil is America's Favorite Salad Oil!

To make cracklin's:* trim excess fat from steak, chops, etc.; cut into small pieces and fry gently until crisp and brown. Drain on soft paper.



Wesson Oil
FOR SALADS & COOKING

Want the brand of refrigeration that' been chosen over 10 million times?

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer to show you why millions have picked America's No. 1 Refrigerator —the one that's different from all others.

You have your choice of this Frigidaire De Luxe Refrigerator or 8 other models!

There are over 10 million reasons why America's No. 1 Refrigerator, Frigidaire, should be your No. 1 choice. More than 10 million Frigidaire refrigerating units for homes and business have been built and sold over a period of more than 30 years. This experience is a feature no one else can match—it means dependable service for years to come. It is built right into the new refrigerators you'll see today at your Frigidaire Dealer's.

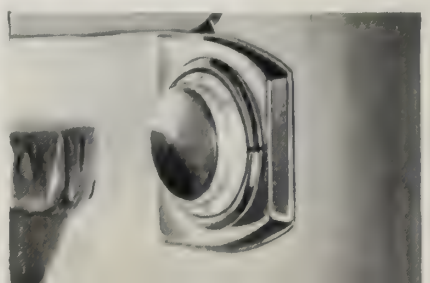
The Frigidaire De Luxe Refrigerator shown here is just one of 9 different models, designed to meet the particular requirements of your family, your kitchen—in size, price, special features. In the roomy, flexible interior there's 10½ cu. ft. of cold space—room for up to 50 lbs. of frozen foods in the Super-Freezer Chest—room for ⅔ bushel of fruits and vegetables in the glass-topped full-width Hydrator-room for loads of foods of all shape and sizes on nearly 25 sq. ft. adjustable shelves—even a speci place for eggs and small package a handy Basket-Drawer!

Ask your Frigidaire Dealer t show you the one thing that make all Frigidaire Refrigerators differen from all others—the famous Meter Miser, simplest cold-making mech anism ever built. Look at it care fully—you probably won't hav to pay any more attention to it fo years. Look, too, at the Frigidair Electric Ranges, All-Porcelai Automatic Washer, Kitchen Cabi nets and Sinks and other appliance for your home.

Find dealer's name in Classifie Phone Directory. Or write, Frigid aire Division of General Motors Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leasid 12, Ontario.

Listen to Frigidaire's New Lum and Abner Show, Sunday nights, on your Columbia Station.

FRIGIDAIRE Refrigerators



Quick to freeze, quick to pop out—ice cubes are far easier to make with Frigidaire's exclusive Quickube Ice Trays. Just pull a single lever—cubes "come clean" with no sink splashing, prying or chipping. All-aluminum construction for fastest freezing.

No tipping allowed! Stemware, small bottles and other "tippy" things rest firmly on close-spaced bars, stay right side up. And these gleaming shelves are easy to clean, easy to keep clean—because they're made of rust-proof aluminum.

Here's your Cold-Control — another Frigidaire development that gives you 8 individual temperature settings. It's precision-built, automatically maintains just the degree of cold you select. And it's conveniently placed right at eye-level, just inside the door.

It's the "heart" of your refrigerator— the one-and-only Meter-Miser! Built as precisely as the finest watch, the Meter-Miser is sealed-in-steel against dirt and moisture, oiled for life, backed by a 5-Year Protection Plan.

(Continued from Page 82)

ally denounced Mr. Prescott for not allowing a man as solid and as established as Mr. Bassett to profit by a hint or two. Ursula was about to marry this man. And Ursula was not one to forget her friends. She would have influence with her husband. Mrs. Bassett's voice came, shaken with an attempt at loving severity:

"It was indeed imprudent of you not to have sent the gentleman to your friends before accepting his proposal. But I do not condemn; I understand. What a naughty rogue that Mr. Prescott of yours is, to have stolen so quietly behind our backs, and to have robbed us of our treasure! How precipitous and sudden ——"

"Yes," sighed Ursula humbly. "I can hardly believe it myself. We have met but a few times. But we understood each other at once."

"How could he have failed to be enraptured with you?" said Mrs. Bassett. "One can understand his recklessness in proposing so soon. And, of course, no one really believes the stories about him. It is all envy and jealousy."

It was then that Ursula revealed her ring, the great emerald which she had turned in toward her palm after removing her glove. Mrs. Bassett caught her breath. Never had she seen such a glorious gem before!

She glanced up at Ursula's smiling face then. "A lovely stone, my dear. It is, certainly, a ——"

"An emerald," replied Ursula, with immense indifference. "It is so impetuous of dear William, is it not, to insist upon our being married on Monday!"

There is only one natural communistic group; it consists of husband, wife and child.

—DEAN INGE:
Our Present Discontents
(Putnam & Co., Ltd.).

"Monday!" gasped Mrs. Bassett. "This coming Monday?"

"Indeed," sighed Ursula.

Mrs. Bassett's head went into a spin again. Then out of the chaos came a glorious plan; a plan which would not only be magnificent for Ursula, with her poor little house, but which would immediately fortify Mr. Bassett's position with Mr. Prescott. Mrs. Bassett sprang to her feet, clapped her hands together dramatically.

"My dear, dear child! You cannot be married with such unseemly haste! Mr. Prescott would not wish you to be placed in such embarrassment! You have only to impress this upon him, Ursula. You must insist on being married in the home of your best and most devoted friends, in my home, and Ezra's. But that will take at least two weeks to manage. And there is the matter of your wedding dress, your trousseau—the guests, the dinner ——"

Ursula was about to decline all this at once. Then she paused. She remembered William Prescott's expressions of scorn for Andersburg's "best" citizens. Now, suddenly, she knew that he did not intend to remain the town's pariah, that it was his own plan to establish himself firmly and with conspicuous eminence in the ranks of those who pretended to despise him. She glanced down at her ring. It was not the gift of a man who wished to live in splendid isolation. A man who wanted children did not plot to have them ostracized. William Prescott had known that Ursula had a considerable position in Andersburg society; she was a lady; she had influential friends. Mr. Prescott would not be unaware of all this.

She would write him a note this evening, and send it by messenger. She would write it at once, and Mrs. Bassett would send her gardener with it. William Prescott would not be enraged at the delay in his wedding. He would read the note, and crush it in his hand, and smile.

Mrs. Bassett was embracing her again, and pleading that Ursula consider her plan. Ursula gently put her aside.

"Dear Jemima, it is so kind of you. I accept. Mr. Prescott will agree, I know. If I could send him a note at once ——"

Mrs. Bassett became wildly animated. "At once!" She clapped her hands together. "And, dearest! It would never do for you to remain alone in your house now! A companion must be found for you. I know the very lady—Mrs. Templeton, the widow of our minister. I shall approach her this evening and I know she will be delighted. Oh, Ursula, how marvelous all this is!"

Next day both Andersburg newspapers carried this paragraph: "Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Bassett, of Englewood Street, have announced the betrothal of Miss Ursula Wende to Mr. William Prescott. The marriage will take place on May twentieth at the Bassett residence. Miss Wende is the only daughter of the late Dr. August Wende. Mr. Prescott has recently founded the Prescott Lumber Company. Several receptions will be held in the near future to honor the betrothed pair. The wedding will be one of the most important to be celebrated in this city this year."

Ursula had sent her note to William Prescott. She had mentioned the fact that Mrs. Templeton would be her companion until the day of the wedding. Mr. Prescott replied immediately:

"I consider that you have acted with extreme prudence in all matters. I am leaving for New York day after tomorrow, and shall not return for two weeks. Thereafter, I am at the disposal of your friends."

The answer was accompanied by the most enormous sheaf of red roses, bearing Mr. Prescott's card: "From Oliver and your ever faithful servant, William."

Mrs. Templeton, installed as Ursula's companion and chaperon, exclaimed ecstatically over the roses. But Ursula turned away from them, tearing the card to shreds between her cold fingers.

What did she want? Did she wish him to declare furiously that he would be no party to an extravagant and ostentatious wedding, and insist that they be married quietly on Monday? She did not know. Her emotions and actions were inexplicable even to herself. Once she thought, He is a hypocrite. But she could not believe this. Then, he was expedient. Did she believe expediency dishonorable, or contemptible? She was not sure.

If Andersburg had been electrified at the news in the morning newspapers, it had another exciting event to discuss later in the day. For, at noon, William Prescott was observed entering Mr. Bassett's bank, the First National, and it was reported that Mr. Bassett received him with the warmest expressions of regard and conducted him to his private office.

Two hours later, Mr. Prescott emerged, and Mr. Bassett accompanied him to the door of the bank. Mr. Bassett's arm was linked cozily with Mr. Prescott's, though Mr. Prescott walked stiffly and rigidly. If Mr. Bassett felt some lack of response on the part of his visitor, this was not evident; his unctuous banker's voice held that blend of obsequiousness and warmth reserved for only the most important clients.

What had transpired in that office was not to become public property until just before the marriage of Mr. Prescott and Miss Wende. In the meantime, the town simmered.

The afternoon before Mr. Prescott went to New York, Ursula received a note from him. He had not attempted to see her since the announcement of their betrothal, and this had disturbed while it obscurely relieved her. His note read, "It is my wish that you become more accustomed to little Oliver, so that when we are married he will not feel strange with you. So I am sending him, with his nursemaid, Lucy Jones, to remain at your home until I return in a few days." He signed himself, "Your servant, William Prescott."

Ursula was both dismayed and chagrined. She resented this highhanded method of

So Clean and Wholesome
So Pleasant to Feed

A Dog's Best Meal
Is Wilson's Ideal

RECIPE FOR FEEDING YOUR DOG or Cat IN 7 WAYS

First, smell the clean, wholesome, meaty aroma of Ideal. It is highest quality food. Second, watch your dog or cat eat it with gusto! Third, smile and relax, because now you are sure that your pet is being fed completely. Ideal supplies all the vitamins, minerals and proteins he needs in one can. This is Ideal's complete 7-Way Feeding.

1. MEAT BY-PRODUCTS (including dehydrated extracted LIVER)—for strong muscles and growth.
2. COD LIVER OIL, fortified—source of vitamins A & D.
3. CARROTS—for clear eyes and glossy coat.
4. BONE—calcium and phosphorus for bones and teeth.
5. WHEAT GERM—for vitality and nerves.
6. SOY GRITS—for strong sinews and tendons.
7. WHEAT AND BARLEY—carbohydrates for energy.

WITH DEHYDRATED EXTRACTED LIVER

WILSON & CO. INC.

Send penny postcard for free premium folder to Ideal—Wilson & Co., Inc., U. S. Yards, Chicago, Ill.

Another WILSON Quality Product

QUICK NEW EXCITING BREAKFAST..

Introduced by JACK HALEY
Star of "Inside U.S.A."

TUNA 'n EGGS

TWO EASY WAYS TO PREPARE!

(1) Scramble eggs; push to one side of skillet. Put tuna and chopped pepper in cleared space of same skillet; fry lightly. (2) Combine tuna and eggs and scramble together.

"Two wonderful things have come into my life," says this popular stage star, "The customers like Jack Haley in 'Inside U. S. A.'... and I like Tuna 'n Eggs inside Jack Haley!

"I lived in Hollywood for ten years. That was where I first got to know about this famous quality tuna. I like it hot and I like it cold. I like it for lunches and I like it as a main dish for dinner. And I love it for breakfast ...ummm, Tuna 'n Eggs!"

Tuna 'n Eggs is a satisfying dish for real he-man appetites. Rich in protein, containing Vitamin "D," minerals and other valuable food elements, this famous tuna is a rich food but not a "heavy" one.

But, remember... the finest Tuna 'n Eggs "Inside U. S. A." is made with these quality brands of grated tuna. (If you don't need the entire can for Tuna 'n Eggs, use what's left for tuna sandwiches.)

Buy THE BRANDS THAT MADE TUNA famous

Buy either brand... the Quality

burdening her without consulting her wishes, and Mr. Prescott's assumption that anything he desired would be accepted by her. Indignantly, she read and reread the curt note, then, so deep was her love for this strange and violent man, she detected, or thought that she detected, his innate insecurity and uncertainty under the arrogant words.

I am certainly bewitched, she sighed. She wrote a note in which she tried to express pleasure over Mr. Prescott's arrangement. She sent off the note by messenger. But Mr. Prescott's carriage, containing Lucy and Oliver, arrived before he could possibly have received the note. Ursula did not know whether to be vexed or amused. Being a sensible woman, she decided to be the latter, and received Lucy and Oliver with graciousness, and installed them in her father's bedroom, where there was a couch as well as a bed.

Mrs. Templeton, a tall, spare and meek-faced woman, was delighted at this invasion. She busied herself carrying in linens and blankets to the pretty if sulky Lucy, and once she even dared to embrace little Oliver. Ursula watched these proceedings from the doorway.

"You will be quite comfortable, Lucy, on this couch," prattled Mrs. Templeton, laying the linens and blankets assigned to the nursemaid on the narrow sofa.

Lucy was silent. She had removed her bonnet and shawl, and her pretty yellow ringlets fell on her shoulders. She gave the couch a brief glance, but did not speak. Lucy was a full-sized girl; the couch had not been meant for prolonged sleep. It was quite adequate for a child, but certainly not for an adult.

Ursula moved quietly into the room. "Lucy," she said to Mrs. Templeton, "cannot possibly sleep on that couch. She will occupy my father's bed. The baby will have the couch."

Mrs. Templeton started. "But Ursula," she protested, "the little one ——"

"The little one will be comfortable on the couch. He is very small," said Ursula firmly.

"But—he is Mr. Prescott's child," stammered Mrs. Templeton.

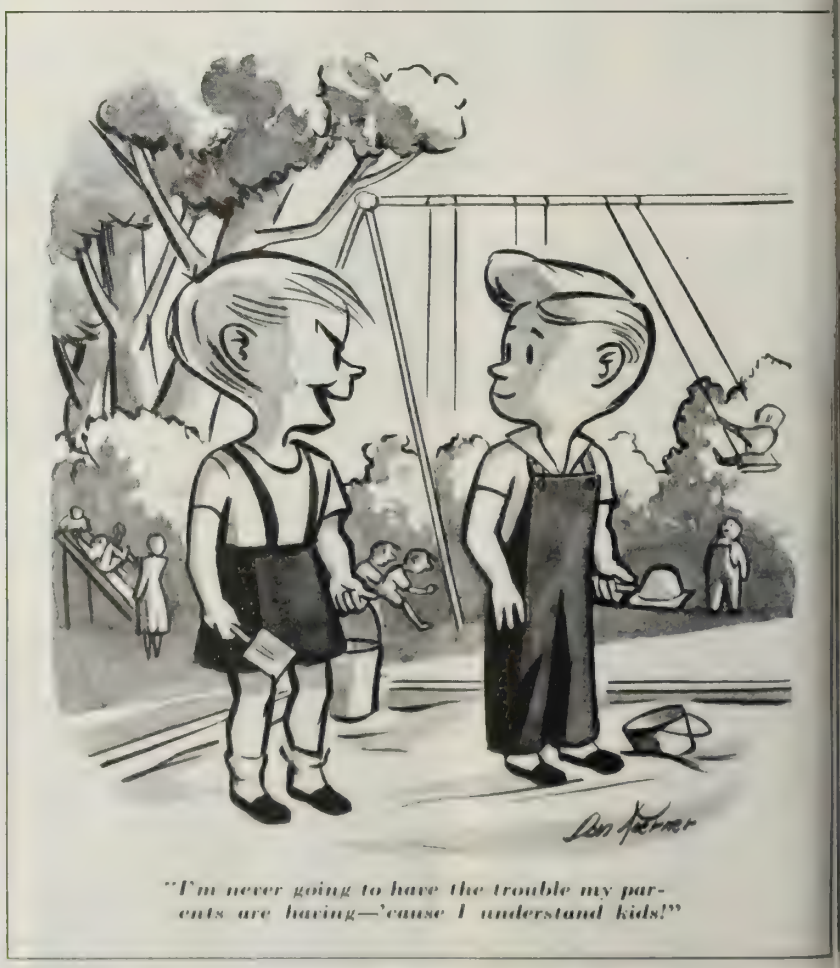
"And Lucy is a young woman whose comfort is very important, if she is to do her tasks competently," replied Ursula. Her mouth drew together in a somewhat thin line. "I am very fond of Oliver. Again I he will be very comfortable on the co and on the couch he will sleep. Lucy will h my father's bed."

Mrs. Templeton was speechless. Her t worn hands fluttered impotently. Lucy h discreet smile behind Oliver's head. L Oliver, sensing something exciting, boun on Lucy's knee, chirped and beamed. spite of her annoyance, Ursula could not l smiling at him. She went across the ro picked up the child, and kissed him. L watched with appreciation. She had been p pared to hate Ursula, as she hated her (ployer, but now she looked at Ursula a surprised. This was a real lady, and pre and distinguished, and no mistake.

"I'll be quite suited on the couch, ma'a she ventured.

"Nonsense, Lucy," said Ursula, gen pinching Oliver's cheek. "Why should you uncomfortable? Why should anyone be comfortable when it isn't necessary?" returned the child to Lucy.

Lucy looked uneasy. But before she co protest again, Mrs. Templeton found voice. "I think you are forgetting, Ursu that the child is—is the son of Mr. Pr cott——"



"Mr. Prescott," interposed Ursula tart "does not live in this house. It is mine. mistress here, I insist on making the arran ments I deem most satisfactory to eve one." In spite of her measured calm, heart was beating with angry vigor. "Let discuss it no longer. Lucy, you will broth and stewed chicken and pudding in kitchen. Doubtless you will want to t Oliver downstairs and give him his din and have some refreshment yourself."

Mrs. Templeton, with the dark color high on her cheeks, went out of the ro with a rustle. Ursula sat down in an rocking chair and surveyed Lucy with pleasant expression.

"Oliver seems to flourish in your car she said. "I hope it is your intention, Lu to remain with him after I marry Mr. Pr cott."

Lucy stared at her shyly. All the sulkin had disappeared from her pretty face. "C yes, ma'am!" she said. "I hoped you wo want me!"

Ursula gave her a quizzical smile. "W not? I know nothing about children, an am not overly fond of them. I find th

"I'm never going to have the trouble my parents are having—'cause I understand kids!"

WHY NOT MAKE IT
Easy
ON YOURSELF
Cadillac cleaners are easy on you. Light to handle, a pleasure to use, these superpowered Cadillacs get all the dirt—take the drudgery out of every cleaning task from floor to ceiling.
Easy ON YOUR RUGS AND CARPETS
Powerful, but oh, so gentle describes the beating, sweeping action that makes Cadillac so efficient, yet safe for your finest floor coverings.
Easy ON YOUR PURSE
Compare the dirt-getting efficiency of Cadillac cleaners with any on the market. Then compare the price. You'll find Cadillac is today's best value in fast, thorough cleaning.
CADILLAC
CYLINDER TYPE
With Attachments
$69.95
Slightly more west of Rockies
Hand Cleaner
Upright Cleaner
You buy all 'round satisfaction when you buy a dirt-hungry Cadillac. Ask your dealer to show you why. (Write us for his name if you can't find him listed in your classified directory.) Ask him to demonstrate all four Cadillac cleaners. There's a model to suit every home cleaning requirement.
CLEMENTS MFG. CO.
6607 S. Narragansett Ave., Chicago 38, Ill.
Since 1911, Sold Only By Reliable Dealers
CADILLAC
Revolving Brush and Cylinder
VACUUM CLEANERS
Cadillac cleaning attachments reach high places, low places, hard-to-get-at places.
For health's sake, don't raise dust!
Vacuum, instead,
with CADILLAC

quite tiresome, in fact. I have friends who profess to be fascinated by what they call a child's 'mind,' but I suspect they are only being affected."

She waited. Lucy did not comment.

"Have you not discovered that those who are elaborately devoted to children are generally hardhearted and suspicious and without real sensibility?" asked Ursula.

Lucy straightened Oliver's frock. "Well, now, ma'am, I never thought of it before, but it's true. Not that I don't like babies, Miss Wende. I do. In their proper place. And it's cruel to the children, ma'am, to push them out, forward like. It's wrong for the children. They've got to be taught their place, and how to control themselves, so that people won't hate 'em, as they always hate children who've always had their way, and no discipline!" Now she became affrighted at what she had said. She hugged Oliver against her. "But Oliver's not spoiled."

Ursula sat back in her chair. "No, I see he is not," she said. "Lucy, you know I am about to marry Mr. Prescott. You may trust me. Does Mr. Prescott try to spoil Oliver?"

Lucy hesitated. "Well, yes, ma'am, he does. If it was another baby but Oliver, he would be ruined. Toys all over, ma'am, so you can't walk. If he doesn't want to sleep, then he must be sung to, until he sleeps. If Oliver's naughty, he mustn't be punished, because punishment is 'barbaric.' That's what Mr. Prescott calls it. You know what that does to a child, ma'am? A baby wants to feel his father cares if he's naughty. He wants to feel his daddy is a strong man, standin' no nonsense. A baby's got to learn that there's others in the world, too, with rights, some rights more important than his."

Ursula had listened with serious attention. She regarded Lucy with respect. "You've had other charges besides Oliver?"

"Oh, yes, Miss Wende. I've been in service for six years." Her round face darkened a little, and she sighed. "I know children, ma'am. There was eight of us, and I was second eldest, and brought up a whole mess of brothers and sisters. I've been with Oliver ever since Mr. Prescott 'dopted him."

Oliver sat quietly, as if listening. His dark eyes wandered from one woman to the other.

"But Oliver has not been spoiled," Ursula said.

"No, ma'am, and it's a miracle why, everybody bein' ordered not to cross him. Mr. Prescott said, when I came to work for him, 'Nobody is going to cripple this child's mind or break his will.' But in spite of everything, Oliver is so good, and always seems to know what's goin' on around him, and understandin' everythin'. Not that Oliver's an angel. He's a healthy baby, and has his tempers, but you can talk to him, little as he is. You can tell him what's right and wrong. But only behind Mr. Prescott's back. He wouldn't stand for it."

Ursula was moved. "You are such a sensible girl, Lucy! I do hope that you'll never leave us."

Lucy's face darkened. "I shouldn't be talkin' as I've been doin' to you, about to marry Mr. Prescott." She got to her sturdy feet. "If you don't mind, I'll go down and give Oliver his dinner. It's almost time for his bed."

William Prescott returned from New York, and went immediately to the large room at the bank which Mr. Bassett reserved for conferences. He found there, waiting for him, Mr. Bassett, Albert Jenkins, ex-Judge Oscar Muehller, Hazlitt Leslie, of the Leslie Carriage Works, former State Senator Kenneth Whiscomb, Dr. Eli Banks, Chauncey Arnold, and a recording clerk, who showed by his expression that he realized the importance of this event.

Prescott entered the conference room, and stood for a moment on the threshold. He was an impressive figure. Some hidden excitement made his lean dark face eloquent; his thin, brutal mouth was compressed tightly. He gave out an emanation of vitality and power.

I've seen them all...
I'll take
TAPPAN
the only range with the ★ TEL·U·SET for Automatic Cooking
7
★ TEL·U·SET includes:
AUTOMATIC CLOCK . . . to time your oven
TIMED APPLIANCE OUTLET. . . times your toaster or percolator
VISIGUIDE . . . time and temperature chart
VISIMINDER . . . signals by light and a bell when cooking's done
"OVEN-ON" SIGNAL...glows when oven is lighted
I'VE SEEN THEM ALL! I'm convinced the Tappan has more automatic features—all at my finger tips—combined in the beautiful Tel-U-Set.
I'll take Tappan because, more than any other range, it saves my time, takes the guesswork out of cooking, is so easy to keep clean, and insures the same good results every time! Tappan models for city or "LP"-Gas and to fit every budget. For illustrated folder, write The Tappan Stove Company, Department 57, Mansfield, Ohio.
CHOOSE WISELY . . . CHOOSE
TAPPAN
Gas Ranges
Your guide to the best in modern automatic cookery.
automatic lighting of all burners — automatic oven heat control — automatic oven time control

Why Squeeze?

SnowCrop fresh frozen orange juice is so good–so easy!

Stop squeezing and join the rush to SNOWCROP. Here's the original frozen orange juice concentrate that gives you the tree-ripened, tree-fresh goodness of luscious oranges at their peak of flavor. Just add back the water, for the finest juice you ever tasted . . . and what a real saving you'll make! Try SNOWCROP juice once—you'll never squeeze again.

Grandest for Flavor!
SNOW CROP'S squeezed-this-minute goodness just can't be beat.

Grandest for Convenience!
No squeezer—no waste—no mess. fresh juice in 45 seconds.

ONE 6 OZ. CAN EQUALS JUICE OF 9 BIG ORANGES

Grandest for Health!
Natural Vitamin "C" content of the fruit is retained.

Makes 1½ pints of juice

40 budget saving SnowCrop varieties

Remember, SNOWCROP gives you a year-round variety of frozen fruits and vegetables always fresh as morning dew . . . fish and poultry that are a joy to cook and eat. To make sure of controlled top quality . . . plus budget-saving prices . . . always demand SNOWCROP Frozen Foods.

Insist on Snow Crop for controlled quality ...lower prices

A SUBSIDIARY OF CLINTON INDUSTRIES INC.

"Gentlemen," said Ezra Bassett with a wave of his hand in a manner suspiciously histrionic, "Mr. Prescott. Mr. Prescott, I believe you know Mr. Arnold, Senator Whiscomb, Mr. Leslie, Judge Muehller, Mr. Jenkins, Doctor Banks."

William bowed, with just a suggestion of irony. He advanced into the room, and took the seat at the banker's right.

The others seated themselves. Then a heavy and oppressive silence fell on the company. Mr. Bassett cleared his throat. "I have told you why we are here, gentlemen. Suppose we allow Mr. Prescott to outline his plans."

Prescott spoke at once in his harsh and emotionless voice: "Let me make a brief resumé." (Several of the men were surprised by his ease and fluency, for they had previously been told of his uncouthness, his lack of formal education, his boorish unawareness of manners.) He let his eyes wander quickly from face to face. "Mr. Bassett held notes in the amount of over forty thousand dollars borrowed from this bank by Mr. Arnold, to expand the American Lumber Company. Unfortunately, Mr. Arnold's plans did not mature. Mr. Bassett held, as collateral, the controlling stock in the American Lumber Company. The stock, as it stands, is practically worthless. I have offered to take over this stock so that the bank will not suffer an irreparable blow. Of course, you understand what such a loss would mean to the bank! And to the community. I will pay the par value of the stock and a premium to compensate for interest due on the loan."

The air became charged with uncertainty and perplexity. No one spoke. Mr. Bassett coughed unctuously, then said, "I had no choice. Moreover, I thought it a generous offer. I have agreed to sell the stock, but first, Mr. Prescott asked that we hold this meeting of stockholders for a new election of officers." He turned majestically to William. "Mr. Prescott, I accept your offer at the terms you have stated and you now hold the majority of stock. I congratulate you. Also, I congratulate these gentlemen, whose personal investments are now secure."

Chauncey Arnold was a huge man whose clothing always seemed about to burst under the pressure of his bulk. His face had turned a pasty color; his black eyes fixed themselves upon William with a look of hatred and despair. But he did not speak. The others were leaning toward William Prescott, every eye intent.

Prescott began to speak, quietly but clearly. "You have heard that I have organized the Prescott Lumber Company. As I now also have controlling interest in the American Lumber Company, it is my plan, with your approval, to merge the American Lumber Company and the Prescott Lumber Company, to issue additional shares to the amount formerly held by the American Lumber Company, and exchange share for share. I am sure you will see the advantages of becoming shareholders in a strong and progressive company, instead of one"—he paused for an instant—"practically defunct."

A few faces changed and darkened. It was bitter to look at this "outsider," and feel so impotent. It was worse to try to avoid looking at Chauncey Arnold.

As for Prescott, he sat there quietly enough, but his brown hands had suddenly tightened into fists on the polished wood of the table. "Gentlemen, you have no choice." He waited. No one spoke. He went on: "I do not intend that the Prescott Lumber Company shall remain a picayune local concern. America is expanding enormously. Lumber will be needed for industry and for construction. I have already bought up options on forests, not only in the Western states, but in the territories. There is no limit to my plans. There is no limit to what the Prescott Lumber Company can do. Gentlemen, you have the opportunity to join me in an enterprise which will make all of us wealthy, or you may continue to hold your stock in the American Lumber Company and suffer tremendous loss."

No one spoke even then. The air was with excitement.

But suddenly Chauncey Arnold strug to his feet. He was leaning his clenched on the table; slowly he swung the mi bulk of his head from one of his erst friends to another. "You will let this destroy me, your friend and neighbo fifty years?" he shouted. "You will d me in my extremity? You will connive him?" His black eyes both glared pleaded. "Judge Muehller! Senator W comb! Leslie! Jenkins! You, Ezra Bas who married my second cousin! How can do this to me?"

No one answered. The sunlit room bec full of shameful silence. But William I cott looked directly at his former empl and smiled. "Well, gentlemen," he "Mr. Arnold is waiting for your answ Still no one spoke.

"My God!" cried Arnold, and sat d suddenly, shielding his face with his clenc fists.

"Now, now, Chauncey," said Mr. Bas uneasily. "One must accept facts. You making matters very hard for us. If you let Mr. Prescott continue you'll see everything isn't lost." He looked at Willi "Go on, Prescott. We are waiting."

William said, "Gentlemen, Mr. Bas has told you that the purpose of this mee is the election of officers of the new Pres Lumber Company. I intend to be presid For vice-president, I gest Mr. Leslie; for se tary, Judge Muehller; treasurer, Senator W comb. For members of board of directors, Bassett, Mr. Jenkins, S ator Whiscomb, Doc Banks, Mr. Leslie."

> To be on the right track is not enough. You must keep moving or you will get run over. —ANON.

paused. Every man listened, suddenly a and electrified. William went on: "A Chauncey Arnold, for executive vice-pre dent at a salary of three thousand dollar year."

Again there was a tense silence. Then, at once, each man found his voice and claimed approvingly. Everyone stood u full of excitement, except Chauncey Arno who sat regarding William with profou hatred and misery.

He watched them surround his form employee, shake William's hand. He s them forgetting him, ignoring him. He h lost more than his company, his prestige a his money. He had lost what had made h whole existence worth while.

He stood up, trembling violently. T scraping of his chair, the shuffle of his f finally drew attention. He stared at Willia Prescott, and William stared at him. Arno said, "Three thousand dollars! You dare offer me —— You liar and blackguard! I w give you the only answer possible—no. N not if I starve."

"Now, Chauncey ——" said Bassett.

But Chauncey Arnold did not look at t banker. He turned away, shuffled slowl ponderously from the room.

That night, while Mr. Bassett entertain the new officers and directors of the Prescot Lumber Company at his home, Chaunce Arnold suffered a heart attack.

Mrs. Templeton had gone to bed with headache. She had been very dignified, thes last few days, with Ursula, because of Lucy and Oliver. She had pointedly refrained from giving any orders to the nursemaid.

Lucy, in the meantime, had become Ur sula's devoted admirer. The two young women found much pleasure in each other company. Lucy had such common sense such a blunt awareness of reality. She was i love with the coachman, John Shaeffer. Each day he brought the carriage around to giv the three women and Oliver their airing. He and Lucy intended to be married in the late summer, and Lucy had gathered together, from her wages, a supply of household linens. Ursula, investigating her own ample store nriched bread (the kind a baker bakes) gives you more energy for less money than any other basic food, and Cinnamon Toast is a delicious way to enjoy it.

(Continued on Page 90)

YOU NEED SOMETHING THAT A BAKER MAKES

to make each meal complete are eating a delicious combination of these d foods when you eat bakery foods. That's why need something that a baker makes to make each l completely satisfying; completely nourishing!

THE BREAD that helps balance your diet helps balance your budget, too!

Penny for penny, it gives you more of the things your body needs—more generously—than any other food you eat at every meal.

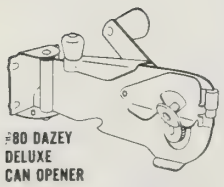
And bread is no more fattening, according to nutritionists, than any other food that gives you equal energy.

So—eat more bread! Eat it for energy. Eat it for economy. Eat it for enjoyment—the enjoyment that you get from all the good things that a baker bakes for you.

Buy it Baked!

THE BAKERS OF AMERICA

. . . who do your baking for you with the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.



Sweet Rolls, Doughnuts and Coffee Cake are other good beginnings for an energetic day. Good ways to pick up energy between-meals, too! Enjoy them often. And to double your enjoyment—to save yourself time and toil and trouble in the kitchen—buy them baked!

The "Corsage of DAZEYS"...

IN DAZEY KITCHEN-TESTED COLORS

#80 DAZEY DELUXE CAN OPENER

#100 DAZEY JUICER

#900 DAZEY SHARPIT
Knife and Scissors Sharpener

Beautifully gift-packaged Dazey Kitchen Helps: Dazey Deluxe Can Opener, Dazey Juicer, and Dazey Sharpit. All fit famous Dazey wall bracket. Made in 4 different Dazey Kitchen-Tested colors and high luster, all Chromium. Other Dazey Kitchen Helps available in 2, 4, and 5-item gift-packaged combinations—or individually packaged. No kitchen helps are more useful or attractive. At your favorite store, or write:

DAZEY CORPORATION • ST. LOUIS 7, MISSOURI

Be sure it's a DAZEY

Form a DAZEY CHAIN of Kitchen products
CAN OPENER • KNIFE SHARPENER • JUICER • ICE CRUSHER • BLEND-R-MIX • NUT CRACKER
FAMOUS DAZEY CHURNS

What's That You're Saying, Don Wilson?

Don Wilson of the Jack Benny Program:

"I've found it, friends, I've really found it, the Raisin-Bran that isn't soggy. My taster tells me Skinner's Raisin-Bran is made crisper than any other Raisin Bran. Two well-known, independent laboratories tested 'em all, and found the same answer. So I said to myself, 'Don, old boy, why eat Raisin Bran that's soggy, soggy, soggy when Skinner's Raisin-Bran is crisper, crisper, crisper?' And, friends, I'm asking you the same question. The best answer is to go get some crisper Skinner's Raisin-Bran, and see for yourself."

(Continued from Page 88)

of sheets, towels, pillowcases and tablecloths, found many which could be spared for Lucy. Lucy, almost overcome with gratitude, exclaimed that she was Ursula's slave forever.

Half past nine struck, and the whole house slept, except Ursula. The gracious little sitting room was filled with the scent of lilacs, freshly cut. The paneled walls gleamed in the lamplight; the portraits smiled down in a friendly fashion at the young woman busy with her needlework.

There was a loud knock on the door, and Ursula started. She listened for the stirring of Mrs. Templeton at this summons, but the house remained silent. It could be no one but William. Ursula went to the door.

It was indeed William, sparkling with moisture from the top of his hard black hat to his handsome black broadcloth coat. And smiling. He said, "Good evening. Is it very late? I arrived home this morning."

"So I heard," replied Ursula, a little tartly. She opened the door wider and let him in. She noticed that there was an air of exhilaration and excitement about him.

He marched ahead of her into the parlor, then abruptly swung about to face her. He said, a little absently, "I had much business to do. That is why I didn't come before."

He did not kiss me, thought Ursula. He has not even called me by my name. She stood before him without speaking.

"It was important business," he said, as if she had challenged him.

"Of course," she murmured.

"I meant to bring you flowers, but I did bring you a present from New York." He glanced at her ring finger, and smiled again to see his extravagant emerald there. "My wedding gift. You shall have it on the day we are married."

"Thank you," she said.

He stared at her again. "You look tired. Has Oliver been too much for you?" Not waiting for her reply, he said, "I must see Oliver."

Ursula drew a deep breath. "He has been asleep since six o'clock."

"What does that matter? I want to see him. I'll go upstairs."

Ursula said clearly, "That would hardly be proper. This is a small house, and Lucy is sleeping in the same room."

He stopped on the threshold, swung upon her and scowled. "That is wrong! I won't have a servant sleeping in the same room! How could you have allowed that? It is unhealthy for the child."

Ursula colored faintly. "I am sorry," she said coldly. "The house is small. I have three bedrooms. I occupy one, Mrs. Templeton another, and my father's room is big enough for Lucy and Oliver." Her heart was beating angrily. She felt deprived.

But he was excited. "Lucy could have slept in a cot in the kitchen, or somewhere," he told her.

"No one shall sleep in the kitchen in my house," said Ursula, and her anger increased. He had not kissed her, had not asked after her health. He was glaring at her with the dull thick look she detested heartily.

She had once believed him subtle. She now that she had not been wrong. He such a capacity for intuition. He was denly smiling again, and very slowly can her. Then he laid his hands on her shoul but he did not bend his head to kiss her. an odd little laugh, she raised her hands, his face in them, and kissed him full upo lips.

"William," she said softly.

The hands on her shoulders tightened. lips had been hard and quiet under her but now they suddenly became eager. pulled her to him, then thrust her a rudely. He went to a chair and sat down said, "You look very pale." His voice indifferent, but his face was heavily flus

"Wedding preparations are very tedio she said. But she felt curiously lighthea She sat down near him. Out of the co of his eyes he looked at her, and in a les igent man she would have thought the shyness. Perhap was.

"Wedding pr rations," he repe disdainfully. But knew he had not h his own words. want to see Oliv he said surlily. " can't keep him me."

"I don't intend She kept her calm, though it t bled percepti "But I think the ought not to be turbed tonight would be very u ting for him, to a him. He would b excited that he m not sleep again, become ill." looked at him st fastly. "William, you remember name?"

"Eh?" He regar her with astoni ment.

"My name," repeated. "I hav name. Have you gotten it? You h not mentioned it.

He still regar her with astoni ment. Then he be to laugh. "Ursul he said. He stop laughing. "Ursula," he repeated more gen Then he stood up, frowning again. "W foolishness."

She stood up also. Her slight figure mo toward him. She put her hand on his a "William, did it ever occur to you wh consented to marry you?"

He did not answer, though his small g eyes began to flicker as if a thousand answ moved behind them.

"It was because I love you." Her v was soft and low and pleading.

He still did not answer. But now he loo away from her.

"Do you understand what I have s William?"

"I heard you." But his words were alm inaudible.

"Don't you believe it?"

He flung off her hand, went a few st away from her. "Love," he said. "Th isn't any love anywhere."

"That is not true," she said clearly. "Y love Oliver."

"Children are different."

For the first time, she was filled wit fierce jealousy. "No, they are not! I l you. You have never said you loved me. W do you want to marry me, William? I m know."

He turned to her. His face was very ti and haggard. "I can't believe in love tween men and women," he said, with hea ness.

(Continued on Page 92)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Return

By Kathleen O'Neill-Bailey

We have been happy where the lark songs rise
Above the cool green fields, where smoke-blue hills
Lie fold on fold beneath these kindly skies,
And orchard grass is gay with daffodils:
In this brief sunlit hour that cannot die
We have been happy here, my love and I.

Within the woodland ways the palest gleam
Of primrose clusters star the mossy banks
Where silver birches sway beyond the stream
That, speaking for all silent things, gives thanks:
And when, some distant spring, the windflowers sigh,
It may be where we pass, my love and I.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Easy trick for Bridge luncheon —this quick, can't-fail coffee!

You play your trump card in the kitchen—when you zip out to make coffee for the crowd. This slick-trick way. With every cup just right.

Yes, magically convenient! Just measure Nescafé* to suit each taste—add piping hot water and stir. Coffee's ready—and right every time! No guesswork for strength preferred. As easy to make for a crowd as to make a single cup.

Yes, magically fresh! With all the flavor, all the "lift" of freshly brewed coffee. Because Nescafé's choice, selected coffees are freshly brewed by experts. Then all the goodness is sealed in by added carbohydrates until you release it in the cup, fresh every time.

Why not serve wonderful, work-saving Nescafé for breakfast, lunch, dinner, or any time between? Always so handy to have in the house. Get Nescafé today—in the regular-size or big economy-size jar.

Time-Saver Luncheon Tips

CHICKEN-A-LA-KING WITH FRENCH PEAS
Use prepared chicken-a-la-king —just heat peas and serve

HOT SPOON BISCUITS
Use biscuit mix

NESCAFÉ
No pot, no grounds— just add piping hot water

If you like good coffee, you'll love Nescafé! Try it—see why more people drink Nescafé than any other instant coffee!

NESCAFÉ makes coffee right— every morning, noon or night!

Nescafé cuts coffee bills, too!

Serve Nescafé as your regular coffee—and save! Even a small jar makes about as many cups as a pound of ordinary ground coffee —yet costs less in actual cash.

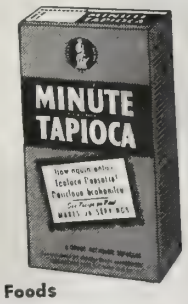
BIG ECONOMY SIZE JAR SAVES EVEN MORE!

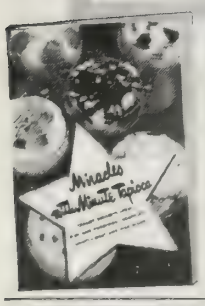
afé (pronounced NES-CAFAY) is the exclusive registered trade-mark of The Nestlé Company, Inc. to designate its soluble coffee product. It is posed of equal parts of pure soluble coffee and added carbohydrates (dextrins, maltose and dextrose) added solely to protect the flavor.

A SPIFFY JIFFY DESSERT!



(IT'S REAL MINUTE TAPIOCA—FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS)

CHOCOLATE DREAM CREAM



1 egg yolk
2 cups milk
2 tablespoons Minute Tapioca
⅓ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 square Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate
1 egg white
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla

Mix egg yolk with a small amount of the milk in saucepan. Add remaining milk, Minute Tapioca, ⅓ cup sugar, salt, and chocolate. Place over medium heat. Cook until mixture comes to a full boil, stirring constantly—this takes 5 to 8 minutes. (Do not overcook . . . mixture thickens as it cools.) Remove from heat. Beat egg white until foamy throughout. Add 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time, and continue beating with rotary egg beater until mixture will stand in very soft peaks. Add hot tapioca mixture, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Cool, stirring after 15 to 20 minutes. Chill. Serve in sherbet glasses. Garnish with whipped cream and pecan halves. Makes 4 or 5 servings of the dreamiest dessert this side of heaven. Looks so party-pretty, tastes so wonderfully good, no one would dare guess it's so quick and easy to fix. Economical, too!

Special for Brides! If you're a brand-new cook—you may never have used real, genuine Minute Tapioca! (It was not available during the war years.) So buy a box today! 'Cause whether you want to be famous for your dazzling desserts—your high, wide, and handsome omelets and soufflés—or your easy-slicing, tender meat loaves—Minute Tapioca is the answer!

A Product of General Foods

FREE! WONDERFUL NEW RECIPE BOOK

MINUTE TAPIOCA, Department S, Battle Creek, Michigan

Please send me a FREE copy of "Miracles with Minute Tapioca," containing over 50 recipes for creamy desserts—fruit pies that don't run—fluffy omelets and soufflés—tender meat loaves that slice without crumbling—rich soups, stews, etc.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Offer expires November 1, 1949. Good only in U.S.A. L59

ALWAYS BUY Aristo-mats

To protect your stove top from heat, scratches, nicks, chips and stains

Demand ARISTO-MATS, the finest! For sale at all Department and Hardware stores.

PHOENIX TABLE MAT CO. CHICAGO 7

GRAVY MASTER

easy thrifty

MASTERS GRAVY MAKING

Look for this Gravy Boat

AFRICAN VIOLETS

Commercial Grower specializing in African Violets with 17 years of experience, 80,000 now in propagation, offers his way of growing, propagating, common ailments, and his own soil formula. Booklet 50¢ Stamps Description of 25 varieties included. Print address.

R. G. BAXTER, BOX 1444, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO

MAKE $25

WRITEWELL CO. 305 Transit Bldg. Boston 15, Mass.

(Continued from Page 90)

"You don't love me?"

He flung out his hands in exasperation. "Why do you keep harping on 'love'? I've asked you to marry me. I want to marry you. Isn't that enough?"

Her first impulse was to say, "No." Then she smiled. "Yes, I suppose it is." She wanted to laugh, to kiss him again, to hold him protectingly in her arms. She only said, "Will you have some tea?"

He was relieved at her change of mood. "No. I had dinner at the home of our friends, the Bassetts." Now he was smiling but the smile was harsh and unpleasant. "There were other 'friends' there also. Muehller, Banks, Leslie, Whiscomb. You know them?"

"Yes." Ursula felt cold. She sat down, but at some distance.

Now he was excited again. He hardly seemed to see her. "I must tell you about it. About everything that happened today. You are a woman and you will not understand all of it. But there is much that you will understand, for you are intelligent."

"Thank you," said Ursula dryly.

He did not appear to grasp this small sarcasm. His whole face became alive, thinner, darker, vital with power. He began to describe the scene in the bank, at the Bassett dinner table. His voice, rising and falling, vivid, strident, but always triumphant, held her like mesmerism. She made no comment, though he sometimes paused for one. She could not look away from him. She was very pale. Her hands lay quietly in her lap.

He hates them, she thought, though she was appalled at such malignance, such vindictiveness. He hates them because they fawned upon him.

Her eyes studied him with sorrow, and with understanding. He would give no one his confidence, except one whom he loved and one against whom he was not on guard. He loved her; there was no longer the faintest reason to doubt.

There are two men, one of whom is very happy and one of whom is very miserable. The essential difference between them is that one loves the beauty of the world, and the other hates its ugliness. —THOMAS DREIER.

"Why are you smiling?" he asked, halting in the midst of a sentence.

"Smiling?" She had not been conscious of this. "Was I smiling? Ought I not to be smiling?" She paused. "Should I be glowering?"

A curious expression glinted in his eyes. "But these people are your friends, are they not?"

"If you had thought them such friends of mine, would you be telling me this story?"

He gave a sudden shout of laughter. "Then you hate them too?"

She said honestly, "No, I don't believe I hate anyone."

Again his expression changed. "I have wondered whether you had the—the power to hate anyone. Or whether you were so egotistic that you did not consider anyone important enough for you to hate."

Within the space of a moment he had the ability to arouse more ire in her than she usually felt in a year. Now she was enraged at him, and her face turned bright with color.

"You certainly have no flattering opinion of me, have you?"

He smiled derisively. "I think I ought to have remembered that genteel females are not supposed to have strong opinions about anything."

"You express yourself engagingly, but please go on with your interesting story."

He scrutinized her in silence. Then he said in that dull tone which could follow so quickly on violence, "That is all, I think." He stood up and began to walk up and down the room restlessly. "You know so little about me," he said, looking down at her watchfully. "You know only what others have told you, and what I have seen fit to tell you. Have you never wanted to know more?"

But I know all about you, my darling, she thought, her rage gone. She said, "It is true that I have not known you long."

He sat down once more, and he leaned toward her, speaking rapidly. "You might as well hear it all. My father worked in a sawmill down the river. He was badly inju and died when I was very young. We ha old house, but a fairly large one, in a poor section. My mother had always t lodgers. She continued to do so. She wo hard, worked herself to death. She w harsh woman, and she considered me a g responsibility. I don't think she ever thou of me in any way but as a burden."

Ursula said, "I imagine keeping lod would have left her little time for anyth else."

William ignored this. "I helped, as soo I was able. Then I met Doctor Cowlesb He was the only friend I have ever had.

His eyes, so ruthless and penetrating, d ened with grief. They met Ursula's, an made an awkward but compelling gesture if denying a plea from her to hear more as if repudiating her sympathy. He said really ought to see Oliver. Does he like y still? He has not fretted?"

"It is almost eleven, William. So, it w be most unwise to disturb the baby. Yes likes me, I think. After all, he is so yo and I am not exactly a brute. No, he has fretted. He is too amiable and sensible."

"I hope you have not taught him to for you more than for me!" The words childish, and he smiled. But it was a jea and suspicious smile.

The clock tinkled eleven, and Ursula "You will ruin my reputation if you re a moment longer, even though I hav chaperon." Then she went on, "I thought that if you have not planne honeymoon, we might spend the time your house is finishe this one." She colored. open comment upon a eymoon suddenly em rassed her.

But William appare did not find her words the least indelicate. looked about him slo and consideringly. At he said, "It is a beaut little house, I admit. it is not so ——"

"So magnificent as the Imperial Hote she finished.

He did not apologize. "I don't like sm houses," he told her. "This is a woma house also."

"My father lived here; my father f nished this house," said Ursula, provok

William studied the room. "No, I th not. I should imagine myself poor ag Smallness reminds me of poverty. I sho stifle here."

"At least, you are frank," said Ursula.

Did he truly not know when he had b rude? Had he never learned that apol is a social grace? Apparently not, thou Ursula, and was amused in spite of her ve tion.

He was taking up his coat and hat gloves now. "You are right. It is very l and I must go. I'll send for Oliver tomorr The carriage will call for him in the mo ing." He put on his coat, went toward vestibule. Then he turned about and loo at her.

She went to him serenely and waited. did not move. She smiled.

"You'll have to remember to kiss me casionally," she said, and felt no shame this bold remark.

To her surprise, he reddened. He brush her cheek unwillingly with his lips.

Then he said, almost inaudibly, "Ursu I have thought of you often, while I w away. You kept coming into my mind wh I least expected it." He spoke accusingly.

"I am glad," she said.

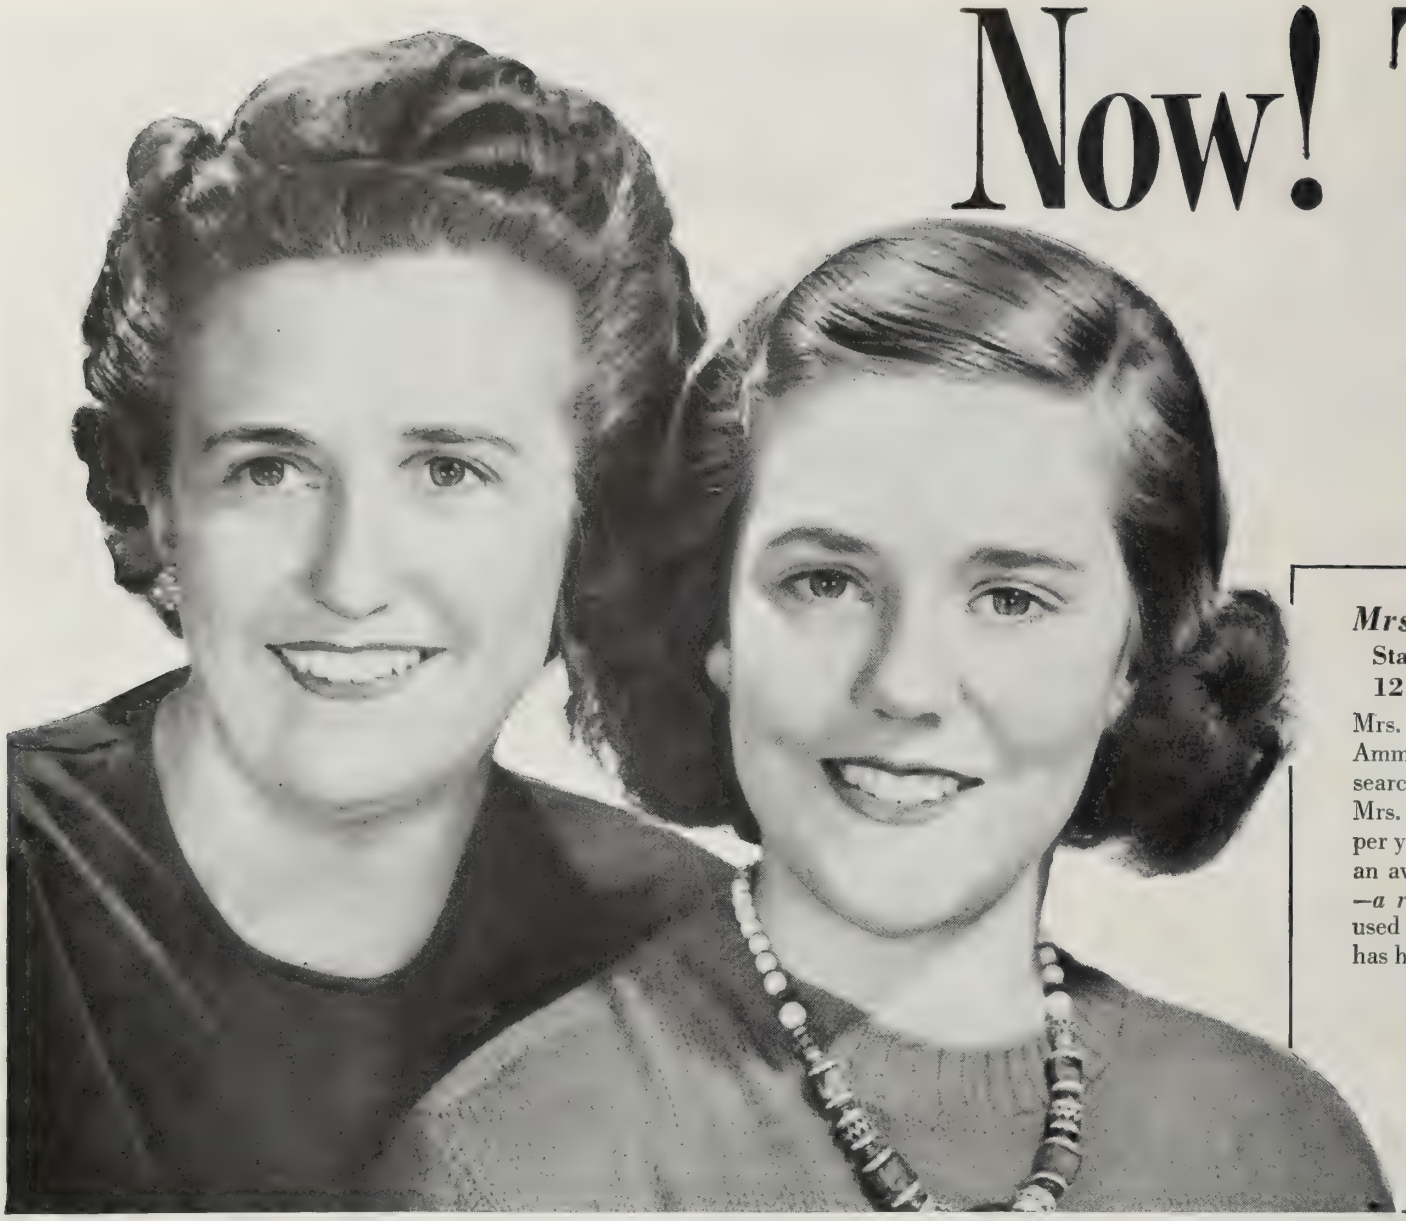
"Good night."

He opened the door and closed it quick behind him, and she heard his footsteps the stone steps outside.

Ursula came slowly back into the par and sat down. It was wrong. Everything w wrong. The man was extraordinary, and was frightening. But she loved him. She su posed, fervently, that this was all that m tered.

(To be Continued)

Designed for hospitality



Good hospitality is the knack of putting everyone at ease—including the hostess. With ice-cold Coca-Cola you have that knack. It's so easy to slip your finger tips into the handle of a six-bottle carton . . . thus it's so easy to keep your refrigerator supplied at all times.

Ask for it either way . . . both trade-marks mean the same thing.

COPYRIGHT 1949, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

Now! Tooth

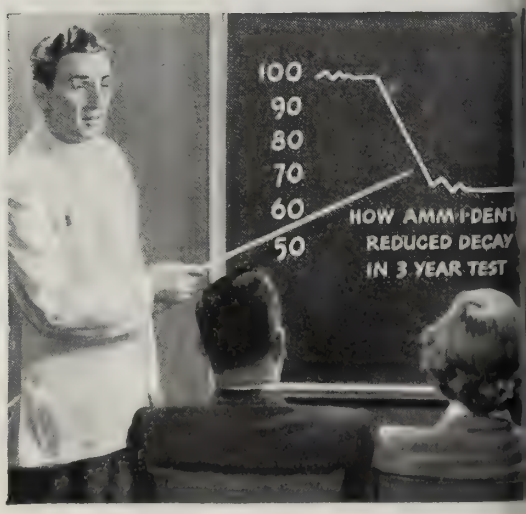
Mrs. Margaret Mallen,
Staten Island, N. Y. and her 12 year old daughter, Pam.

Mrs. Mallen and Pam were early Amm-i-dent users, during test research. Before using Amm-i-dent, Mrs. Mallen averaged 4.2 cavities per year. With Amm-i-dent, she had an average of 1.6 cavities per year —a reduction of 61.9%. Pam has used Amm-i-dent for nearly 4 years, has had only 3 cavities in that time.

Notary Public's Statement:
"I have seen the actual dentist's records of the Mallen family and their dentist's sworn statement that the above is an exact and accurate description."

Evelyn A Roman
Notary Public, State of New York

FIRST AMMONIATED TOOTH POWDE



"Promises To Make History"—Reader's Digest

Ammoniated tooth powder has hit the headlines from coast to coast! Reader's Digest article praised it as "a revolutionary way to help prevent tooth decay." Time Magazine (Medicine, Feb. 14th) told how Amm-i-dent was developed by a non-profit research group. Newsweek cited Amm-i-dent's use by New York high school students. ("Preventive Tooth Powder," Feb. 14th.) It's thrilling news!

"Only Dentifrice I Recommend," Says Dentist

Long before national magazines and newspapers told the great news about Amm-i-dent, thousands of dentists, who were following the research, recommended it to patients. Before Amm-i-dent, toothpastes and powders could brighten teeth but had no specific ingredients to fight decay. Now with Amm-i-dent, your daily brushing helps give active protection against new cavities.

Science Explains How Amm-i-dent Reduces Dec

There are two ingredients in Amm-i-dent not fou in any leading toothpaste or powder: Dibasic A monium Phosphate and Carbamide (Synthe urea). These ingredients eliminate from the mou large numbers of the bacteria (Lactobacillus A dophilus) which can cause decay. (Teachers! F classroom literature, write Amm-i-dent, Inc., Jers City 6, N. J.)

Decay Reduced by Amazing New Discovery

New Hope for Children and Adults!

ou've heard about ammoniated tooth powder from dentists or friends! ou've read about it in Reader's Digest, Time, Newsweek and other magaines and newspapers! Now, it's here, ready for use in your own home, after ree years of clinical testing—a tooth powder that actually helps prevent rmation of new cavities in human teeth.

Amm-i-dent, the first of the ammoniated tooth powders, holds promise of wer cavities, less tooth decay. That's the thrilling news that comes with e announcement of this entirely new and revolutionary dentifrice.

First Anti-Decay* Dentifrice

o to now, dentifrices could help clean and brighten your teeth, but contained effective anti-decay* ingredient. Now, for the first time, with Amm-i-dent, u and your children can help protect your teeth against decay, as you give em their regular daily cleaning. For Amm-i-dent contains two anti-decay* gredients, not used in any leading toothpaste or powder!

Look at your teeth in the mirror. Count the fillings. How much pain and ouble could you have been saved, if Amm-i-dent had been discovered when you were a child? How much can you save your children, by starting them on Amm-i-dent today?

Yes, for adults and children alike, regular daily use of Amm-i-dent works to reduce the rate of new cavities, promote healthier teeth. Everyone will love its clean, minty taste. Amm-i-dent cleans your teeth to gleaming brightness and sweetens breath instantly.

Amm-i-dent No "Cure-All"

No claims are made that Amm-i-dent is a "cure-all." It cannot help cavities that are already formed. Nor in using it are you guaranteed never to have any cavities again. But from all the evidence, the proper use of Amm-i-dent is a simple and effective way to reduce occurrence of new cavities.

The makers of Amm-i-dent also wish to stress that no dentifrice can take the place of the dentist. Consult him twice a year. He is your best safeguard in preserving your mouth health.

Important! Get Amm-i-dent Now!

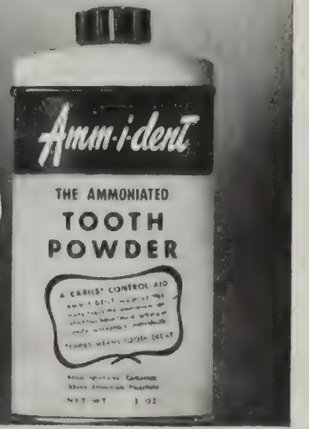
Amm-i-dent may be bought without prescription at all drug counters. Start today to fight decay the Amm-i-dent way.

AMM-I-DENT HELPS PREVENT CAVITIES!

wer Cavities With Amm-i-dent" Says Dental Nurse

n Hughes, Little Neck, N. Y., worked for a den- who was among the first to know of the Amm-i- t formula. "I've used Amm-i-dent myself for e years," she said. "Before I used Amm-i-dent ad a great many cavities. In the first year with m-i-dent, cavities were far less frequent and for last two years I've had none at all. It's my idea he perfect tooth powder."

Amm-i-dent



TRADE MARK

AMMONIATED TOOTH POWDER

*Amm-i-dent contains two ingredients, Carbamide and Dibasic Ammonium Phosphate, which inhibit growth of the acid-forming bacteria, (Lactobacillus acidophilus) considered a major cause of decay.

At all drug counters. No prescription necessary.

TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Amm-i-dent is the Trade Mark of Amm-i-dent, Inc., 12 High St., Jersey City 6, N. J.

Match-mates by the sea in Avondale

Companion Colors

Because Avondale fabrics are dyed-in-the-yarn, you get the exact same colors in solid shades and stripes

Vary your play clothes this attractive way with Avondale chambrays in Companion Colors. Because the colors are dyed to match perfectly, you can have two complete changes with the same sand-and-sun suit. And with Avondale chambray, so easy to drape and sew, you can make striped-and-solid schemes specifically your own. Colors stay bright through washings and wear — Sanforized★, in a range of qualities and prices in ready-to-wear and piece-goods.

Look for the yellow label that identifies these Avondale Carol chambrays in Companion Colors.

AVONDALE

dyed-in-the-yarn fabrics—the stay-fast colors are woven-in
58 Worth Street, New York 13

★Residual shrinkage less than 1%

Choose Avondale Carol chambray for the midriff play suit. . . . Too much sun? . . . Cover up with a Carol awning-stripe coat . . . and for a second outfit, pretty-up with another color-bright Carol stripe in a button-on skirt and knapsack.

McCall patterns — Play suit and skirt 7590, Beach coat 7169, Bag 1470

LOVE

(Continued from Page 44)

ever-decreasing routine activity; and s something which was an important inlient of their original love for each other ly begins to disappear. But the marriage ls fast because this diminishing and disearing thing was not the most important t of their love, but of secondary impor-ce only.

he most important ingredient was affec-, deep affection. It cannot diminish with e—nor can it stand still. It can only inase. And thus,
ly but smoothly,
original ingredi-
s of this love begin lter their propor-
s. Affection in-
ses. Sex attrac-decreases. As the er disappears, the
ner takes its place.
re is no gap. The
centage is still 100.
e love remains ire.

nd now the other
d of love, the
ng one, the bringer divorces. What is t one made of?

he formula here
ies a good deal. It
ld be any of the owing:

0 per cent intense attraction, 30 per t genuine affection respect; or

00 per cent deep
ction and respect,
attraction neglile; or

00 per cent intense attraction, affecn and respect neglile.

The first of these
ee is the most com-
n. If our moral and lesiastical codes
mitted two people
o were in love to e temporarily toher for their own easure and satis-
tion without con-
acting marriage,
en this kind of love
uld form an excel-
t basis for such ac-
ity. It is sincere and ense and causes
ch mutual happi-
ss. But it is tempo-
y. It is bound to be because in it sex traction, which be-mes less intense
th time, predomi-tes too strongly er affection which,
ough genuine, is not cessarily strong ough to increase.
ven if it did, it
uldn't catch up
st enough. It was left behind at the start.
us there would be a gap. The percentage uld not be 100. The love would not remain tire. A marriage contracted on this basis almost certain to fail, although many mane to survive purely through the determina-on, self-sacrifice, give and take, hard work d the consideration for the children. But isn't much fun.

HE second of the three, where love is ade up of 100 per cent deep affection and spect, is bound equally to fail—except, of urse, in the unusual event of both persons' eling the same way. Where one partner periences no strong sex attraction while e other does, then failure is inevitable and e reasons are obvious.

But what of the third type, where love is wholly sex attraction and nothing else? The romantics will argue that this is not love—not true love, anyway. But on the contrary, it is. Those who fall in love in this manner are just as strangely and strongly afflicted as the others, just as irrational and lovelorn, just as vigorous and persistent. Usually more so. Many of them, believing that this is the real thing, proceed in all good faith to get married, only to discover, when it is too late, that their love was built of too flimsy stuff.

THIS kind of love is the most dangerous of them all. It is the quickest coming, the most powerful, the most natural, the most exciting and the quickest going. It is a trap for the young ones, the gentle ones, the virtuous ones, and also for the fools. It is, amongst other things, an exact definition of the phrase 'love at first sight,' which really means nothing more than 'instantaneous powerful sex attraction.' What else could it mean? One cannot, after all, experience a profound affection and respect for someone 'at first sight.' That is impossible. On the other hand, one can experience an instantaneous and powerful sex attraction for that person the moment one sets eyes on him (or her); for sex attraction is dependent primarily upon outward appearances.

'Love at first sight' is a sensation which the average teen-ager, perilously ignorant of its implications, longs fervently to experience. This longing is carefully nurtured by the movies and pandered to by many popular magazines. The average movie story is usually based upon 'total sex-attraction love,' often dished up in the form of 'love at first sight'; and the story ends with happiness and marriage and seldom goes on to reveal the inevitable crash which must result from this type of union. Thus the millions of young boys and girls who gaze in rapture at this curious procedure become convinced that what is good enough for Gable or Power or Hayworth in their celluloid lives is certainly good enough for themselves in their own lives. Their most cherished ambition thereafter is a swift, exciting falling-in-love, a rapid courtship, a sackful of sentimental sloppery and then, then marriage. And so it happens; and in a short while, when the novelty of sexual relations has worn off, both young man and young wife suddenly discover that they are living with someone whom they do not know very well and do not care very much about. I blame the movies first and foremost. And of course the situation is not improved by the fact that the

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Knothole

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

Sometimes the most beautiful comes small;
An inch-wide knothole in an old
barn's wall,
Which was an unintentional
oversight,
Lets not only weather in, but light.

A man would never guess so much of day
Could get into the dark so narrow
a way;
The sun slides through here by the skin of his teeth
And turns dark straw to topazes beneath.

Even plain dust for once takes to bright wings,
Ten thousand tiny planets swim in rings
Along the long and leaning golden bar,
And every speck of dirt becomes a star.

It is as good as lying looking up
When an August night upsets the cup
Of light down over the tallest of the trees
And nebulae are swarming thick
as bees.

A very small but lively boy can slide,
For all his arching ears and arched backside,
Through a narrow opening in a bin
Of apples where scarce squirrel could get in.

It all just goes to show it is a thin
Door that will not let hot life
come in;
The sun and boys will always bring in light,
Even through holes left by an oversight.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

people who make these movies—who are hero-worshiped by the young from one end of the land to the other—do not themselves set an especially fine example in their own much publicized private lives.

The popular magazines are not so bad as the movies, but they too must take some of the blame. Week after week their pages are filled with the same sugary stories based upon the theme of 'love at first sight,' or upon some other form of 'total sex-attraction love.' And like the movie stories, they nearly always end happily and thereby succeed in conveying to the impressionable young reader the thought that he or she will be just as happy as the people in the story.

There isn't much that can be done about that. But young people hoping for love and contemplating matrimony can at any rate arm themselves with the knowledge that the most publicized and glamorized form of 'love' is the very one of which they should beware.

So far, then, I have tried to analyze the different types of 'love' and the results which they bring. I have committed the cynical and unromantic crime of carving up that most tender of all human emotions into a series of formulae, and unless I can show how these formulae can be usefully employed then I shall have achieved little more than to prove that I am an unromantic cynic myself.

The problem resolves itself into this: is a person who is deeply in love capable of making an accurate and impartial analysis of the type of love with which she (or he) is afflicted? Is she capable of giving a true answer to the question, "How much profound affection and how much sex attraction does my love contain?" Personally I doubt it. She could try; and if she were an exceedingly intelligent person, then I think she might even answer herself correctly. Unfortunately, it is a fact that those who suffer from 'total sex-attraction love' are the very ones who will swear that their love is based upon nothing of the sort. They, through no real fault of their own, are the lost ones, the unhappy ones, the bringers of divorces.

